TO THE SECOND LONDON EDITION.

It is some years since the Editor commenced the preparation of this Second Edition. He found that the various and important changes in the Law which had taken place, and the large accumulation of reported cases since the publication of the First Edition, rendered the labour much greater, and increased the bulk of the work much more, than was anticipated. Hence the delay which has occurred in its publication.

The original plan has been closely adhered to. Some divisions, however, have been necessarily left out as obsolete, while many more have been introduced; and it is believed that no material omission, either as regards subjects or cases, will be detected. Throughout the work the names of the cases are now given; there are copious headings to almost all the titles, and a further aid to reference is afforded by a full Index.

The Editor thankfully acknowledges the valuable assistance rendered to him, in the compilation of some of the earlier parts, by P. M'MAHON and H. A. SIMON, Esqs. The portions respectively done by those gentlemen have been continued, down to the time of printing, by STANDISH GROVE GRADY, Esq., to whom the Editor is also indebted for unremitting aid in the completion of the work, including its conduct through the press.

TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THE object of the Author, in the following work, has been to collect and digest the Law relative to Pleading and Evidence into the smallest compass, and under the most convenient arrangement.

The work, consequently, not only contains the general principles of the Law respecting Pleading and Evidence, and the forms of Civil Actions, but also the form of the remedy, the pleadings, and the evidence necessary for the support of every ground of action; likewise, the pleading and evidence necessary to the support of every defence, with the Precedents of most common use in all these cases.

The contents of the work are alphabetically arranged, each title containing such portions of the Law of Pleading and Evidence as are peculiar to it;—this arrangement having been considered the most proper, to compress and simplify the work, as well as to render it more convenient for the purpose of reference.

The arrangement of each separate title is, as nearly as possible, uniformly the same; and, wherever subdivision is required, is explained by the list of contents at the head of each. Whenever the laws of pleading and evidence have been combined, the arrangement of the title is as follows:—As regards the plaintiff,—first, his remedy is described; then the law which governs the form of that remedy; next, the form itself; and, lastly, the evidence required to support that form. As regards the defendant, a similar course is pursued: instructions are first given as to the choice of his plea; next, as to the manner of framing it; and, lastly, the evidence required to support it.

The work, to those who are not familiar with such undertakings, will convey a very inadequate idea of the pains and time employed in composing it: they, however, who have experienced the trouble of such a task, will appreciate the difficulties attendant on it. The Author, therefore, hopes for their indulgence, if, in the multitude of points of which it treats, and of references which it contains, errors may have chanced to occur.

The Author has spared no labour to render the work of extensive practical utility, and has to acknowledge the kind assistance of some of his friends, whose knowledge and experience in the profession have materially aided him in completing it.

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT IN GENERAL.

THESE pleas differ from pleas in bar, inasmuch as they are not addressed to the merits of the claim, but to some matter which tends merely to defeat the present suit. Hence, it is essential to a plea in abatement, that it should not only point out the defect, but that it should show how it may be corrected; or, in technical language, that it should give the plt. a better writ. Formerly, pleas in abatement were arranged in the following order:—

1st. To the jurisdiction of the court.

2nd. To the disability of the person.

1st. Of plt.

2nd. Of deft.

3rd. To the court.

4th. To the writ.

1st. To the form of the writ.

1st. Matter apparent.

2nd. Matter dehors.

2nd. To the action of the writ (1 Ch. Pl. 7th ed. 456).

Pleas in abatement to the court could only be pleaded in actions by original, and upon oyer of the writ (Hole v. Finch, 2 Wils. 394); consequently, when oyer of the writ was prohibited by rule of court (see Tidd, 9th ed. 588), this class of pleas, as well as pleas to the writ itself for matter apparent on the face of it, became obsolete (1 Ch. Pl. 7th ed. 466).

Pleas in abatement may now, therefore, be thus arranged :

(a) Vide for American authorities, 1 U. S. Dig. "Abatement," p. 2. 1 Supp. to U. S. Dig. p. 1. U. S. Annual Dig. 1847, p. 5; 1848, p. 1; 1849, p. 1.

ABATEMENT.

1st. To the jurisdiction of the court.

2nd. Of the disability, or privilege of the person :

1st. Plt.

2nd. Deft.

3rd. To the writ for matter dehors, as nonjoinder, &c.

4th. To the action of the writ ; as, that another action is pending for the same cause, &c.

*In this order all pleas in abatement must be pleaded. The deft. [*2] cannot after pleading, for example, the nonjoinder of a co-contractor, plead to the jurisdiction, or, to the disability of the plt. (Co. Litt. 303; Com. Dig. Abt. C.); but, by pleading according to the above arrangement, he may go through the whole series (Com. Dig. Abt. I, 3, 4; Bac. Ab. Pleas, K, 1).

When to be pleaded.] Pleas in abatement must be pleaded within four days after delivery, or, notice of declaration, and this, though no rule to plead has been entered, or demand of plea given (Anon. Ca. Pr. C. P. 23; Biddleston v. Atcherley, ib. 63). The time is computed as in other cases (Ryland v. Wormald, 2 M. & W. 393); viz. exclusively of the first day and inclusively of the last. And if the last day fall on a Sunday, Christmas-day, or day appointed for a public fast, or thanksgiving, the time is to be reckoned exclusively of that day also (R. G. H. T. 2 Will. IV. r. 8; 2 M. & W. 393, supra). If the time be not expired on the Thursday next before Easter, or on the 10th of Aug. the deft. will in the one case be entitled to the residue of the time counting from the Tuesday in Easter-week, and in the other, he will have the full four days after the 24th of Oct., as if the declaration had been originally delivered on the latter day (R. E. 2 Will. IV. r. 1; Harrison v. Tait, 4 B. & C. 443; R. M. 3 Will. IV. r. 11; see Severin v. Leicester, 2 Dec. 1848, Q. B.). Where oyer has been demanded, the deft. has as much time, or, as many pleading days to plead a plea in abatement as he had when he demanded oyer (Kerfoot v. Edwards, 12 Jur. 440). If the plea be not pleaded in proper time the plt. may treat it as a nullity; and after the full time of pleading is out, sign judgment; semble, not before (Nollekin v. Severn, 2 C. & J. 333; Smith v. Rathbone, 5 Dowl. 401; Macker v. Billing, 1 C. M. & R. 577; Pepperell v. Burrell, ib. 372; Dakins v. Wagner, 3 Dowl. 535; Warne v. Beresford, 4 Dowl. 361); and he need not previously return the plea (see Garratt v. Hooper, 1 Dowl. 28; Haugh v. Bond, 1 M. & W. 314; 1 Arch. Pr. 8th ed. 263). The courts will not in general enlarge the time for pleading in abatement (see Milner v. Milnes, 3 T. R. 632, and note; Sowter v. Dunston, 1 M. & R. 508); nor allow a plea in abatement to be amended (Dockary v. Laurence, Ca. Pr. C. P. 29; Tidd, 9th ed. 298). A plea in abatement for the nonjoinder of a contractor, which prays judgment of the declaration only, is informal; it ought to pray judgment of the writ and declaration (Whitling v. Des Anges, 3 C. B. 910; 4 D. & L. 678). A plea in abatement of the nonjoinder of co-contractors resident within the jurisdiction of the court, alleging that the contract was made with the deft. and such resident co-contractors, and also with other co-contractors resident without the jurisdiction of the court, is bad; the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 8, requiring the deft. to state in his plea that all are resident within the jurisdiction, and to verify the residence of all by affidavit (Joll or Gell v. Curzon (Lord), 4 C. B. 249; 4 D. & L. 810).

Qualities of Pleas in Abatement.

Title.] Pleas in abatement, like all other pleas, must now be entitled of the day of the month and year when pleaded (R. H. 4 Will. IV. r. 1). If the plea be entitled of a different day from that on which it is pleaded, this, which would only be an irregularity in a plea in bar, would, it seems, render a plea in abatement a nullity, since such plea is not amendable (Ca. Pr. C. P. 29; Tidd, 9th ed. 298).

Commencement.] Care must be taken that the deft.'s and plt.'s names be stated properly; if there be a material variance plt. may sign judgment. (Munden v. Brunswick, Duke, C. P., T. T. 1847; 9 Law J. 126). Most pleas in abatement may be pleaded by attorney; a married woman, however, can only plead her coverture in person, as she cannot appoint an attorney (2 Saund. 309 b). An infant must plead by guardian, and not by attorney or prochein amy (2 Saund. 117 f, n. 1; 212 a, n. 4; Sinamarsh v. Chandler, 1 Moore, 250; Bird v. Pegg, 5 B. & A. 418). And all pleas to the jurisdiction must be pleaded in person (2 Saund. 209 c).

Subject-matter of Plea.] The greatest possible precision and certainty* are required in a plea in abatement. It must be certain to [*3] every intent, and be good in omnibus (2 Saund. 299 c, 299 d; Bleakley v. Jay, 13 M. & W. 464. It must not be repugnant (Tallant v. Germyn, Carth. 207; Roberts v. Moon, 5 T. R. 487); nor double, as pleading two outlawries (Trevellian v. Seecomb, Carth. 8, 9; 1 Show. 80; Reed v. Mattern, Hardw. 286; Dacres v. Duncan, 2 Lev. 82); or, the pendency of two actions (Esdaile v. Lund, 3 M. & W. 607). It must be, or, be accompanied by an answer to the whole declaration (see Phillips v. Claggett, 10 M. & W. 102); that is, the whole matter of complaint must be covered by the plea, or, pleas pleaded (Herries v. Jamieson, 5 T. R. 553); for, there may be a plea in abatement to part, and in bar to the residue, or the like (Powell v. Fullerton, 2 B. & P. 420). A plea to an action on a sci. fa. stated, that a writ had been issued by the same plt. against the same public officer of the company, and for the same amount as that now sought to be recovered: it was held not sufficient without averring in terms that the cause of action is the same (Esdaile v. Truswell, 11 Law J. 68, Ex.). The plea must also give the plt. a better writ; for, if it show that plt. could not have any writ at all, the plea should be in bar, and not in abatement (Evans v. Stevens, 4 T. R. 227; Mainwaring v. Newman, 2 B. & P. 224, n.; Haworth v. Spraggs, 8 T. R. 515; Peake v. Davis, 5 Taunt. 653). A plea that disputes and differences had arisen between the plt. and deft. as to whether, or not, the deft. was indebted to the plt. in any, and what sum of money in respect of the causes of action in the declaration, and that thereupon the plt. and deft. had referred the matters in dispute to arbitrators, and that a reasonable time for making their award had not yet elapsed, and that the said matters in dispute were still under their consideration, is not a good plea in bar; and not commencing or concluding in abatement, cannot be treated as a plea in abatement (Harris v. Reynolds, 14 Law J. 241, Q. B.). A variety of cases peculiarly applicable to the subject-matter, in the forms hereafter given, will be found there.

Conclusion, &c.] In pleas in abatement, the court will give no other judgment than that prayed for by the party (King v. Shakspeare, 10 Ea. 87; Attwood v. Davis, 1 B. & A. 172, but see Powel v. Fullerton, 2 B. & P. 420). Great care must therefore be taken in stating a proper conclusion (1 Ch. Pl. 476; Attwood v. Davis, 1 B. & C. 172; Vivian v. Jenkins, 3 At. & El. 748). Where the matter of the plea goes to the writ, or action itself, the conclusion should be by praying judgment that the writ and declaration may be quashed (Davies v. Thompson, 14 M. & W. 161; 3 D. & L. 49;

3 Ch. Pl. 7th ed. 10, 16). Where it is to the disability of the plt. the conclusion is "if the plt. ought to be answered;" when to the jurisdiction, or, the deft.'s privilege, it prays judgment, "if the court ought to take cognizance," &c. (see 3 Ch. Pl. supra, 19).

Affidavit of Truth of Plea.

Affidavit.] Stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 11, enacts "that no dilatory plea (see 3 Dowl. 129) shall be received, unless, the party pleading do, by affidavit, prove the truth thereof, or show some probable matter to the court to induce them to believe that the fact of such plea is true." It must verify the plea as to the whole declaration (Dobbin v. Wilson, 3 N. & M. 260). It is not necessary that the affidavit should be made by the party himself; his attorney, or, even a stranger will do (Lumley v. Foster, Barnes, 344; 2 Saund. 211 f; Anon. 1 Ch. R. 58). When made by the deft. he need not describe himself other than, as the "above-named deft. in this cause," notwithstanding the rule *(H. T. 2 Will. IV. r. 5; 1 Dowl. 693; Shirer [*4] v. Walker, 9 Dowl. 667). It must be positive (Pearce v. Davey, Say, R. 293), and be properly entitled of the cause (Rex v. Jones, 2 Str. 1161; see Prince v. Nicholson, 5 Taunt. 333; Richards v. Setree, 3 Price, 197; Dobbin v. Wilson, supra; Fletcher v. Lechmere, 2 D. N. S. 848; 2 Arch. Pr. 819). If the plea be not filed in due time (ante, p. 2), with such affidavit annexed, or, the affidavit be irregular (Sherman v. Avery, 1 Str. 639; 3 Pri. 197; 3 Tyr. 387; 1 Dowl. 699, S. C.), the plt. may treat the plea as a nullity, and sign judgment (Bray v. Haller, 2 Moore, 213; King v. Cooke, 2 B. & C. 618; Garratt v. Hooper, 1 Dowl. 28; Lush's Pr. 408). If the truth of the plea appear to the court upon an inspection of their own records, an affidavit is not necessary (Cassley v. Sheen, 2 W. Bl. 1088; Gray v. Sidneff, 3 B. & P. 397). A plea in replevin of cepit in alio loco does not require any affidavit (see post, "Replevin"). Pleas of nonjoinder require an additional affidavit (see post, "Nonjoinder"). The affidavit in support of a plea in abatement for the nonjoinder of other co-defts., under 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 8, must state the residences at the time of the plea pleaded; and therefore an affidavit which states the residences of such co-defts. at the time of the commencement of the suit is bad, although the plea gives the residences at the time of the pleading thereof, and the affidavit states the plea to be true in substance and in fact (White v. Gascoyne, 3 Exch. 36; 18 Law J. 110, Exch.). The provision in the 4 Ann. c. 16, s. 11, "that no dilatory plea shall be received," unless verified by affidavit, is introduced for the sole benefit of plts.; and a plt. may therefore waive, if he so chooses, an irregularity in, or the omission of, any such affidavit (Graham v. Ingleby, 5 D. & L. 737, Exch.)

Qualities of Replication and other Proceedings.

When a plea in abatement is regularly put in, the plt. may either reply, or demur, or may by entering, or rather delivering a cassetur breve, thus discontinue, and commence a fresh action (Owens v. Dubois, 7 T. R. 698; Stafford (Mayor) v. Bolton, 1 B. & P. 40; 4 B. & C. 871; Gardner v. Walker, 3 Anst. 935). If the plea be untrue in fact, he should reply, in which case he will have judgment, quod recuperet, and the jury should assess the damages (Gilb. C. P. 53; Medina v. Stoughton, 1 Raym. 594; 2 Saund. 210-1; 3 Wils. 267; 1 Ch. Pl. 480; see post, "Statute of Limitations"). It is necessary to enter the cassetur before bringing the second action (Knight's case, 1 Salk. 329; S. C. 2 Raym. 1014). Plt. is not liable to costs on a cassetur, (Grumble v. Sheppherd, 12 Mod. 145; Barnes, 120; Poiklington v. Peck, 1 Str. 638; 2 Ch. Arch. 7th ed.; Lush's Pr. 410).

Commencement.] When the plea consists of matter of fact which the plt. denies, the replication may begin, without any allegation, that the writ, or bill ought not to be quashed (Sabine v. Johnstone, 1 B. & P. 61). It must not commence, as, to a plea in bar (Carter v. Davis, Carth. 187; Com. Dig. Abt. I, 15), unless the plea commence or conclude improperly (Bac. Ab. Abt. 8). But if a replication, to a plea in abatement, begin, "that the said declaration ought not to be quashed," but conclude properly, it is sufficient, and such words may be rejected as surplusage (Sabine v. Johnstone, 1 B. & P. 60; 1 Ch. Pl. 481).

Conclusion.] It should conclude, "to the country;" and it is not necessary that it should conclude with a verification and formal traverse (Sabine v. Johnstone, 1 B. & P. 60; Owen v. Shapcott, 1 Ea. 542). But, if it do so conclude, it is said, the plt. ought to pray damages (2 Saun. 211, n. 3), unless he confess deft.'s plea, and avoid it by other new matter, when he should not pray damages, but must maintain his writ. (Ib.)

Demurrer.] A general demurrer to a plea in abatement is sufficient (Lloyd v. Williams, 2 M. & S. 485). It was, formerly, thought advisable to demur specially, where the plea was merely informal (Hixon v. Binns, 3 T. R. 186), but this is unnecessary (Esdaile v. Lund, 2 D. & L. 565; 12 M. & W. 607; Davis v. Thompson, 14 Law J., N. S. 384; 9 Jur. 736). And the court will not, in general, allow the defendant to amend (Car. Pr. 29; Tidd, 9th ed. 298). *Judgment will be given against the plea for a defect in it, without regard to any objection to the declaration, for [*5] nothing, but the writ, is in question (Hustrop v. Hastings, Salk. 212; Ballasyse v. Hester, Lut. 1592; Rich v. Pilkington, Carth. 172); except where the plea contains matter which ought to have been pleaded in bar. And then deft. may object to the declaration (Dundalk Railway Comp. v. Preston, 1 Q. B. 667).

Judgment.] If issue be joined on a plea of abatement, a judgment for the plaintiff upon a verdict is final, quod recuperet (Eichorn v. La Maitre, 2 Wils. 368; Garfund v. Extor, 1 Ld. Raym. 992; Tidd, 979; 1 Ch. Pl. 481). But judgment for him upon demurrer to, or arising out of, a plea in abatement, at whatever stage it may arise (Bowen v. Shapcott, 1 Ea. 542), is not final, but merely a respondeat ouster (Ib. Yelv. 112; 1 Vent. 137; Raym. 992; Tidd, 979), upon which judgment, however, the plt. is now entitled to costs (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 34). A judgment for the deft. in all cases, is, that the writ and declaration be quashed, and upon this judgment the deft. is, also, now entitled to costs. (Ib.) After judgment of respondeat ouster signed, the deft. has four days' time to plead (Cantwell v. Stirling (Earl), 8 Bing. 177), and it seems that no new rule to plead is necessary, nor, a fresh demand of plea. The deft. may plead again in abatement, provided the subject-matter pleaded be not of the same, or, of any preceding degree, or class with that before pleaded (Com. Dig. Abt. I, 3; 2 Saun. 40).

1. Pleas to the Jurisdiction.

These pleas, though, technically different from most other pleas in abatement in the following points of form—1. In being always pleaded in person; 2. In concluding "if the court will take cognizance, &c., of the said action," instead of "that the writ and declaration be quashed;" yet, in other respects, are the same, as they have the effect of abating or putting an end to the particular action (Bac. Ab. Pleas, E. 2; 3 Bl. C. 301; Gilb. C. P. 187; 1 Ch. Pl. 457).

The office of pleas of this description is not to show that the superior courts have no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, for that is matter for a plea in bar (see Dundalk Western Railway Comp. v. Tapster, 1 Q. B. 667); therefore, if an action, in its nature local, be brought for a cause of action arising abroad, the defence is open, on general demurrer, if the matter appear on the record, otherwise, on the general issue (Doulson v. Matthews, 4 T. R. 583). So, when a statute creating a court of requests, expressly takes away the jurisdiction of the superior courts, this is matter of defence by special plea, or on the general issue, according as the language of the statute requires the one mode or the other (see Parker v. Elding, 1 Ea. 352; Rex v. Johnson, 6 ib. 583; Reynold v. Talmon, 2 Q. B. 644; Hildyard v. Webster, 1 D. & L. 950; Tidd, 9th ed. 954); but a plea to the jurisdiction is, in substance, a plea of privilege. It ousts the jurisdiction of the superior court by reason of an exclusive privilege in another, and therefore "wherever the deft. can plead to the jurisdiction of the courts at Westr., there the franchise may demand cognizance" (Bac. Ab. Courts, D, 3, p. 393), but not vice versa. A grant habere cognitionem placitorum entitles the lord to claim cognizance, but not the defendant to plead to the jurisdiction. If, however, such a grant be given, with exclusive words, the exemption may be claimed by the lord, or, pleaded by the deft. (Vin. Ab. Cognizance, V. 5, 569; Bac. Ab. Courts, D).

[*6] The essential quality of these pleas is to show "a more proper *and sufficient jurisdiction, for, if there be no other mode of trial that, alone gives the superior courts jurisdiction." (Rex v. Johnson, 6 Ea. 583; Mostyn v. Fabricas, Cowp. 172.)

In transitory actions, it is said, the deft. cannot plead to the jurisdiction, unless, the plt., by his declaration, show that the cause of action accrued within an exclusive jurisdiction (Bac. Ab. Courts, D. 4 Ins. 212; 1 Ch. Pl. 459); but, this must be understood of pleas which are strictly pleas to the jurisdiction, and not to pleas of personal privilege, as, by an attorney of one court sued in another, or, semble, by a scholar of Oxford or Cambridge. These, though formerly, ranked under, are now determined not to be pleas to the jurisdiction (Hunter v. Neck, 3 Sc. N. R. 448; 3 M. & G. 181, S. C.; Groom v. Wortham, 5 Sc. N. R. 799). For the form, and other particulars of pleas to the jurisdiction, see Ch. Pl. 1st and 3d vols. 7 ed.

In ejectment this plea cannot be pleaded without the special leave of the court, inasmuch as, by entering into the consent rule the deft. will have admitted the jurisdiction (Doe v. Roe, 2 Burr. 1046; Doe v. Roe, 10 Ea. 523).

2. Of the Disability or Privilege of the Person:

Outlawry of the plt. his attainder of treason or felony, and alien enemy, may always be pleaded in abatement, and in many cases, either in abatement, or, in bar (Bac. Ab. Abt. N; Com. Dig. Abt. E, K, L, 3; Co. Litt. 128; Bullock v. Dodds, 2 B. & A. 258; 3 Camp. 152), to an action by him in his own right. But when he sues in autre droit these matters cannot be pleaded (Walford v. Masham, Moore, 431; Brocks v. Phillips, Cro. Eliz. 684; Villa v. Dimock, Skin. 370; 3 Buls. 310; Curzon's case, Cro. Car. 9); nor can a deft. plead his own attainder, &c. (Fost. 61). That the plt. being an infant, sues by attorney (2 Saun. 212, n. 5; 1 Ch. Pl. 464); that one of several plt. or defts. was dead at the time of suing out the suit may be pleaded in abatement (Bac. Ab. Abt. F, L; 1 Ch. Pl. 464). Ne unques executor, or administrator, whether of plt. or deft. is a plea in bar (Com. Dig. Pleader, 2 D, 7, E. 2). So, is the bankruptcy or insolvency of plt., or deft. or one of several plts. or defts. (Echeart v. Wilson, 8 T. R. 140); and a plea that plt. is not assignee; but, the nonjoinder of a co-executor, co-assignee, or other person suing in autre droit is pleadable only in abatement (Snelpore v. Hunt, 1 Ch. 71).

Coverture and privilege are pleas belonging to this class, the latter having been held not to be a plea to the jurisdiction (Hunter v. Neck, 3 Sc. N. R. 448; 3 M. & G. 181, S. C.; Groom v. Wortham, 5 Sc. N. R. 799). These require a separate notice (see post "Coverture," "Privilege"). "Infancy" was formerly pleadable by way of suspension of the action where deft. was sued as heir; but this plea is abolished by stat. 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 47, s. 10.

Pleas in Abatement of the Writ are so termed from their effect, as, strictly speaking, the refusal of oyer of the writ prevents an objection to it; but, as the declaration is presumed to agree with the writ, any mistake carried also into it may be the subject of a plea in abatement to the writ, as well as to the declaration or bill (Murray v. Hubbart, 1 B. & P. 648; Gray v. Sidneff, 3 B. & P. 399; Davies v. Thompson, 14 M. & W. 161; 3 D. & L. 49, S. C.) Matter apparent on the face of the writ, such as an omission of the deft.'s addition, and other defects which do not appear in the declaration, are *no longer subjects of abatement (1 Saun. 318; Gray v. Sidneff, 3 [*7] B. & P. 399); but matter dehors, such as misnomer, nonjoinder, &c., which are defects existing at the time of suing out the writ, are (see 1 Ch. Pl. 466). See post, as to these pleas.

Pleas in Abatement to the Action are, that there is another action pending (Sparry's case, 5 Co. 62, a.,) in the same court, or, in another (Boyce v. Bailiffe, 1 Camp. 60-1; see post, "Pendency of another Action,") or, that the action is prematurely brought; but, as the latter is a ground of nonsuit (1 C. & M. 492, 768; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 2,) it is never pleaded in abatement.

COVERTURE.

1. Of Plaintiff.] Wherever a feme covert sues without her husband for a cause of action which would survive to her on her husband's death, her coverture may be pleaded in abatement. And it cannot otherwise be objected to (Bendix v. Wakeman, 12 M. & W. 97; 1 D. & L. 450, S. C.; Guyant v. Sutton, 3 C. B. 153.) So if a feme sole marry pending the action (Morgan v. Panter, 6 T. R. 265; Le Brett v. Papillon, 4 Ea. 502.) But it is no defence, in abatement or otherwise, if she marry after verdict and before the day in banc (Cro. Car. 135; Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Rutland, (Earl), 1 Buls. 5.) Where she sues, having no legal interest, the defence is one of substance, and available on the general issue, or, by plea in bar, or demurrer, as the case may be (Caudell v. Shaw, 4 T. R. 361; Nelthrop v. Anderson, 1 Salk. 114; 1 H. Bl. 108; Abbott v. Blofield, Cro. Jac. 644;) whether she sues alone, or jointly with her husband. If a person, not being her husband, join in the action as husband, this matter may, it is said, be pleaded in abatement (Bac. Ab. Abt. G.) but in an action by husband and wife for slander of the wife, a plea that the female plt. was not the wife of the other, was held a good plea in bar (Chantler v. Lindsay, 16 M. & W. 82.) The court will not permit a deft. to plead at the same time in abatement and in bar to the same matter, as non est factum and coverture of the plt. since making the bond (Holt v. Maberley, Hardw. 135.) But if there be two defts. each may plead distinct matter in abatement of the same suit, or one may plead in abatement, and the others in bar, unless they be husband and wife (Com. Dig. Abt. I., 6; 1 Ch. Pl. 474; Walsh v. Bishop, Cro. Jac. 239.)

2. Of the Defendant.] Where a feme covert is sued without her husband for a cause of action which would survive against her, as upon a contract made before, or a tort committed after marriage (Manby v. Scott, 1 Sid. 109,) the coverture is pleadable in abatement (Milnes v. Milnes, 3 T. R. 627,) and not otherwise (Lovell v. Walker, 9 M. & W. 299.) If the marriage is after action, it cannot be pleaded (King v. Jones, 2 Lord Raym. 1525; S. C. 2 Stra. 811; Barnard. K. B. 70.) When the wife is sued alone upon a contract alleged to have been made by her after marriage, her coverture is pleadable in bar (Ib.; Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 545;) and must now be specially pleaded (R. G. M. T. 4 Will. IV.) Such a plea is an issuable plea (Burch v. Leake, 8 Sc. N. R. 66; 7 M. & G. 377.) Where the coverture is not pleaded, and judgment is given against the wife, the husband may bring error (Latch. 24; Hayward v. Williams, Style, 254; Milnes v. Milnes, 3 T. R. 627.) As to when a wife may sue and be sued, see post, "Husband and Wife."

*The acceptor of a bill of exchange cannot in an action by the [*8] indorsee against him plead the coverture of the drawer at the time of drawing the bill (Smith v. Marsack, 9 Jan. 1849, C. P.)

The plea of deft.'s coverture, when pleaded in abatement, must be verified under stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 11 (Lovell v. Walker, 9 M. & W. 299; 1 D. N. S. 952;) but it does not require an affidavit of the husband's residence under 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 8 (Jones v. Smith, 3 M. & W. 526.) It must be pleaded by the feme in person (2 Saun. 209 b.) Where parties have pleaded in abatement for non-joinder of a deft., the court of B. R. will not set aside the plea or allow the writ to be amended on the ground that the plt. is barred by the Statute of Limitations from bringing a fresh action (Roberts v. Bate, 6 Ad. & E. 778.) be inquired of by the country, &c.

Evidence in Coverture.

Who is to begin.] Where coverture is the only plea, and the plt. has nothing to prove as part of his case, the deft. ought to begin. But where the *essence of the inquiry is the amount of the plt.'s damages, he is entitled to begin. Therefore, on a plea of coverture to assumpsit for [*9] goods sold, &c., Abbott, C. J., "intimated that, as the plt. had to prove the amount of his damages, his counsel was, if he elected to do so, entitled to begin; the deft.'s counsel, however, agreeing to admit that goods had been delivered to the amount claimed, was permitted to open the case for the deft. (Lacon v. Higgins, 3 Star. 178.) And it was so ruled on a plea of nonjoinder in assumpsit, (by Abbott, C. J., in Robey v. Howard, 2 ib. 555-6; and by Alderson, B., in Bonfield v. Smith, 2 M. & R. 519; and by Lord Denman, C. J., in Morris v. Lotam, 1 M. & R. 233; see Mercer v. Whall, 5 Q. B. 447; Chapman v. Rawson, 10 Jur. 287.) And it has been held that the question of damages is a distinct inquiry that never arises until the issue on the plea is determined, and that it ought not therefore, to regulate the right to begin (see Jackson v. Kesketh, 2 Stark. 518; Cotton v. James, M. & M. 278, 281, n.) In an action on a bill of exchange, where the nonjoinder of a joint contractor was pleaded in abatement, Lord Tenterden said, that the most correct rule was, that wherever it appears on the record, or by the statement of the counsel, that there is really no dispute about the sum to be recovered, that the damages are nominal, or mere matter of computation, then, if the affirmative is on the deft. he is entitled to begin (Fowler v. Coster, M. & M. 241.) The order of proof is discretionary with the court, such discretion to be governed by a consideration of convenience in each cause (2 Stark. Ev. 90-1.) But in debt, as the plt., if the plea were not made out, would be entitled to a verdict for the sum demanded, the defendant is entitled to begin (per Parke, B., Trin. Term. 1847.) It was ruled by Abbott, C. J., in Lacon v. Higgins, supra, that plt., if he began, must go into the whole of his case relating to the coverture; but quare; see Stansfield v. Levy, 3 Stark. 8, where it was held that he must confine himself to proof of the damages, and reserve his case in reply to the debt.

Proof for Defendant.] It will be sufficient to prove cohabitation under marriage by repute, which may be established by "general reputation, the acknowledgment of the parties, and reception of their friends as man and wife," &c. (per Lord Kenyon, Leader v. Barry, 1 Esp. Ca. 354; Evans v. Morgan, 2 C. & J. 453; Doe v. Fleming, 4 Bing. 266, 12 Moo. 500; Tracey v. M'Arlton, 7 Dowl. 532). But unless the parties live together, some proof of an actual marriage seems necessary (Wilson v. Mitchell, 3 Camp. 394; Horn v. Noel, 1 Camp. 61). The usual and best proof is the production and proof of register of marriage, or an examined copy of it, with proof of identity of parties; for which, and the best evidence of marriage, whether in England or abroad, see post "Crim. Con." The husband cannot be called to prove the marriage (Bensley v. Cooke, 3 Doug. 422). It must be found that the husband was alive at the commencement of the action. Where a person goes abroad, and has not been heard of for seven years, the law presumes that he is dead (Doe v. Nepean, 5 B. & Ad. 93; 2 N. & M. 225, S. C.; in error, 2 M. & W. 894); but not that he died at any particular period. It may be presumed, from circumstances, within a shorter period (Sillick v. Booth, 1 Y. & C., N. C. 117).

Proof for Plaintiff.] Supposing the coverture to be put in issue, the plt. may prove any facts which make the marriage void; such as that the parties were married since the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 54, and are within the prohibited degrees.

*MISNOMER.

This is no longer the ground of a plea in abatement, but simply of a summons to compel the plt. to amend the declaration (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 11.)

When it may be pleaded.

Of Plaintiffs.] When a joint contractor, parcener, tenant in common, or a party who has received a joint injury, and is jointly interested in the thing which was the subject of the action, is not, when he ought to be, joined as a plaintiff, the deft. may plead such nonjoinder in abatement (Com. Dig. Abt. E. 12; 1 Saun. 291 g; Davis v. Evans, 6 C. & P. 619; and this is the only mode of deft.'s availing himself of the objection in an action for a tort (1 Saun. 291 g; Addison v. Overend, 6 T. R. 766; Sedgeworth v. Overend, 7 T. R. 279; Blossam v. Hubbard, 5 Ea. 407); and so as to detinue (11 A. & E. 209; 3 P. & D. 45; 1 Gale, 128). In an action on a contract, however, unless the party is suing in autre droit, the objection, if it do not appear on the pleadings, is available as a ground of nonsuit at the trial under the general issue (1 Saun. 153, n. 1, 291 f, g; Leglise v. Champante, 2 Str. 820); and for which reason it is best not to plead in abatement. If the plt. claims in autre droit, as executor or administrator, the objection, if it do not appear on the pleadings, can be only taken advantage of by plea in abatement after oyer of probate, or letters of administration (1 Saun. 291 g, h; Brasington v. Ault, 2 Bing. 177); but if, though suing in autre droit, he declare on a cause of action accruing to himself in that character, the objection is open on the general issue (Snellgrove v. Hunt, 1 Ch. Rep. 71). If the objection appear on the pleadings, deft. may demur (Vernon v. Jefferys, 2 Str. 1146; Anderson v. Martindale, 1 Ea. 497; 1 Saund. 153, n. 1, 291 f); or move in arrest of judgment, or bring error (lb.). But, in such case, on account of costs, it is best to demur (Cameron v. Reynolds, Cowp. 407; Tidd, 983). If one of several part-owners of a chattel sue alone for a tort, and the deft. do not plead in abatement, the other part-owners may afterwards sue alone for the injury to their undivided shares, and the deft. cannot plead in abatement to such action (Bloxam v. Hubbard, 7 T. R. 279). As to nonjoinder in cases of marriage, see ante, 7.

Of Defendants.] If a person be omitted as deft. who ought to be joined in any action founded on a joint contract, whether on a specialty or not, the objection can only be taken advantage of by a plea in abatement (1 Saun. 291 b, n. 4; Mitchell v. Tarbutt, 5 T. R. 651; *Wright v. Hunter, 1 Ea. 20; Saville v. Robertson, 4 T. R. 725; Forster v. Taylor, [*11] 3 Camp. 50; Walton v. Granger, 2 Jur. 48, C. P.); and, though, the joint obligation be in writing, and the declaration show it to have been made by the party not joined, it is no variance at the trial (Mountstephen v. Brooke, 1 B. & A. 224; 1 Saun. 291; South v. Tanner, 2 Taun. 254); nor ground of demurrer (Morrison v. Trenchard, 4 M. & S. 709). In actions for torts, the nonjoinder of a party who was jointly concerned in the tort cannot be pleaded in abatement, or otherwise taken advantage of, as the plt. may in such action join all the parties who committed the tort, or not, at his election (1 Saund. 291 e & g, and cases there cited; Sutton v. Clark, 6 Taun. 29, 35, 42); and this though it appear on the pleadings there were other wrong-doers (lb.). In an action against a coach proprietor, or common carrier, for not safely carrying passengers or goods, defendant cannot plead in abatement the nonjoinder of a co-proprietor (1 Will. IV. c. 68, s. 5; see Ansell v. Waterhouse, 2 Ch. R. 1; 6 Moore, 154; 7 Price, 408; Bretherton v. Wood, 3 B. & B. 54); nor can he in any case where even one of the co-contractors is out of the jurisdiction (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 8; Goodson v. Good, 6 Taun. 587; Joll v. Lord Curzon, 11 Jur. 737); nor where one has been discharged by the Statute of Limitations (9 Geo. IV. c. 14, s. 2). But, though plt. change his form of action to tort, he is still liable to a plea of abatement for nonjoinder of any joint contractor, &c., if the action be substantially founded on a breach of contract, and so appear from the declaration, and it is not maintainable without proving a contract between the parties (Powell v. Layton, 2 N. R. 365; Green v. Greenbank, 2 Mars.

485; Theobald v. Long, Carth. 452). Where goods which were delivered to a ship-owner to be carried from A. to B., were lost by negligence, a plea of abatement of nonjoinder lies (Riddle v. Wilson, 6 T. R. 369; Theobald v. Long, Carth. 454). And actions which concern real property materially differ in this respect from mere personal actions of tort; for, if one tenant in common only be sued in trespass, &c., for anything respecting the land held in common, as for not setting out tithe, &c., he may plead the tenancy in common in abatement (1 Saun. 291 e; Mitchell v. Tarbutt, 5 T. R. 651).

Misjoinder.] If persons join as plaintiffs in an action who should not, the deft. may plead the misjoinder in abatement (Cro. E. 143; Worsley v. Worsley, ib. 473; 12 H. IV. 15, 54;) or, if the objection do not appear on the plt.'s pleadings it will be a ground of nonsuit at the trial (Brand v. Boulcott, 3 B. & P. 235; Co. Litt. 197, b.; Lovett v. Badnidge, 3 Ea. 62;) for which reason it is best not to plead in abatement. If the objection appear on the plt.'s pleadings, deft. may demur, or move in arrest in judgment, or bring error (2 Saun. 115-6; Cook v. Batchelor, 3 B. & P. 150; 1 Roll. Ab. 31, pl. 9; Vaux v. Stewart, Sty. 156; Sands v. Child, 3 Lev. 352.) If too many persons be joined as defendants in an action on a contract or specialty, if the objection do not appear on the plt.'s pleadings, the plt. may be nonsuited at the trial (Sherriff v. Wilks, 1 Ea. 52; Porter v. Harris, 1 Lev. 63; Hannay v. Smith, 3 T. R. 662; 1 Ch. Pl. Misjoinder;) but upon a plea of the Statute of Limitations, the plt. may recover against one or more, though he fail as to the rest (9 Geo. IV. c. 14.) If the objection appear on the pleadings, deft. may demur, move in arrest of judgment, or bring error (Mansell v. Burrridge, 7 T. R. 352.) If several persons be made defendants jointly for a tort, where the tort could not, in point of law, be joint, as in slander or the like, they may demur, or, if a verdict be taken against all, move in arrest of judgment or bring error (2 N. R. 454; 2 Saun. 117 a.)

[12] Replication to Plea of Nonjoinder.] If the plea seek to add too many, or too few (Goodson v. Good, 6 Taun. 487;) or, if, as to some the Statute of Limitations (9 Geo. IV. c. 14, s. 2) has barred the action; or, if, the deft. at the time of making the contract represented to the plt. or otherwise induced him to believe that he was dealing with the deft. alone, the plt. may safely take issue on the plea (De Mautort v. Saunders, 1 B. & Ad. 398, overruling Dubois v. Luders, 5 Taun. 609; Bonfield v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 405.) If one, or more have been discharged by bankruptcy and certificate, or under an act for relief of insolvent debtors, that fact may be replied as to such parties (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 9.) So if one is not liable by reason of infancy (Burgess v. Murrell, 4 Taun. 468.) To a plea of nonjoinder of a co-executor as plt. it is no answer that he is an infant, or has not proved, or has refused probate (1 Saun. 291 g; 2 Saun. 209, 221-2.)

Commencing a New Action.] Instead of replying the plt. may deliver a cassetur breve, which does not entitle deft. to costs (Ca. Pr. C. P. 29,) and commence a new action. "In all cases in which, after such plea in abatement, the plt. shall, without having proceeded to trial upon issue thereon, commence another action against the deft. or defts. in the action, in which, such plea in abatement shall have been pleaded, and the person or persons named in such plea in abatement as joint contractors, if it shall appear by the pleadings in such subsequent action, or, on the evidence at the trial thereof, that all the original defts. are liable, but, that, one or more of the persons named in plea in abatement is, or, are not liable, as a contracting party or parties, the plt. shall, nevertheless, be entitled to judgment, or, to a verdict, and judgment, as the case may be, against the other deft. or defts. who shall appear to be liable, and every deft. who is not so liable, shall have judgment, and shall be entitled to his costs as against plt. who shall be allowed the same as costs in the cause against the deft. or defts. who shall have so pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of such person: provided that any such deft. shall have so pleaded in abatement shall be at liberty on the trial to adduce evidence of the liability of the defts. named by him in such plea in abatement." (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 10.)

Where, under this provision, a new action was brought against all the persons named in the plea, and the original deft. proposed to give evidence of the liability of one of the new defts., his counsel was allowed to reserve his address to the jury till this evidence should have been given (Beale v. Moule, 1 C. & K. 1, per Lord Denman.)

"In all cases under 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 10, in which, after a plea in abatement of the nonjoinder of another person, the plt. shall, without having proceeded to trial on an issue thereon, commence another action against the def. or defts. in the action in which such plea in abatement shall have been pleaded, and the persons or person named in such plea in abatement as joint contractors, the commencement of the declaration shall be in the following form:—

"Venue.] A. B. by E. F. his attorney (or in his own proper person, &c.) complains of C. D., and G. H., who have been summoned to answer the said A. B., and which the said C. D. has heretofore pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of the said G. H.," &c. (R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. pl. 20.)

Form of Plea.] "No plea in abatement for the nonjoinder of any person as a co-deft. shall be allowed in any court of common law, unless, it shall be stated in such plea that such person is resident within the jurisdiction of the court, and *unless the place of residence of such person [*13] shall be stated with convenient certainty in an affidavit verifying such plea." (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 48, s. 8.) For the general qualities of pleas in abatement, see ante, p. 2.

Affidavit of Residence.] This may be incorporated into the affidavit, required by statute 3 & 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 11, (ante, p. 3,) or may be made separately. It must state with "convenient certainty," the residence of the party at the time of making the affidavit (Wheatley v. Golney, 9 Dowl. 1019.) By residence is meant "domicile," or "home," and, therefore, where the party had left for a few months for the benefit of his health, intending to let his house furnished till his return, the court held it sufficient, though no one knew where to find him (Lambe v. Smythe, 3 D. & L. 712; 15 M. & W. 433.) But the residence stated must be accurate. Where the residence of one was stated to be "No. 20," Gower Street, Bedford Square, and the other, at "Watling Street," Canterbury, and it appeared that the former resided at "22" instead of "20," and the other in "High Street," which was sworn to be close to Watling Street, the court, without determining whether it would have been sufficient to mention, in the one case the street without the number, and in the other the city without the street, held, that, as the defts. had condescended to particularize, and they were inaccurate, the plea must be set aside (Newton v. Stewart, 4 D. & L. 89; 15 Law J., N. S., 384, Q. B.) The affidavit stated the residence to be 89, Leadenhall Street, in the city of London. A counter affidavit of B. stated that he was the occupier of that house, and that no one of the name of D. had resided there for some time. In answer to B.'s affidavit, there was one by D. who deposed that the party did reside there, and that his name was over the door, and that B. was his nephew, and managed the business at that place for him, but stating that he had another residence elsewhere. Held, that this was an insufficient description of D.'s residence, and the plea was set aside on motion. Held, also, that the truth of the statement of D.'s residence might be tried by affidavit, on a motion to set aside the plea (Maybury v. Mudie, 11 Jur. 80; 17 Law J., N. S., C. P. 895.) The affidavit must state where the parties were at the time of the plea pleaded (White v. Gascoyne, M. T., 24 Nov. 1848, Ex.)

The most advantageous course, where the affidavit is defective in this respect, is to apply to set aside the plea. Where the jurat is defective the plt. may sign judgment, but if, instead of doing so he pleads, he waives the objection and cannot afterwards sign judgment (Graham v. Judly, 10 Law J., 307, Ex.)

Where a feme covert pleads in abatement the nonjoinder of the husband, this affidavit is not necessary (Jones v. Smith, 3 M. & W. 526.)

 George Thompson, in the said writing named, duly sealed and executed the said writing, and thereby became jointly bound with the deft. to the plt., to wit, on the same day and year aforesaid; and that the said George Thompson is still alive, and at the commencement of this suit was and still is resident, &c.; and this he is ready to verify. Wherefore, inasmuch as the said George Thompson is not named in the said writ and declaration, the deft. prays judgment of the said writ and declaration, and that the same may be quashed. (Add affidavit, ante, p. 12. See an instance of a defective plea of nonjoinder by the acceptor of a bill, Bleakley v. Jay, 13 M. & W. 464.)

Replication denying the joint contract.

In the Q. B. (or C. P., or Ex. of P.) On the day of A. D. 1850
John Nokes } And the plt. saith that the said writ and declaration, by reason of any-
 ats. } thing above by the said deft. in his said plea alleged, ought not to be quashed, John Styles. } because he saith that the said [several] promise[s] were not made by the deft. jointly and together with the said Joseph Brown and John Bell, in manner and form as the deft. hath above, in his said plea in that behalf, alleged; and this the plt. prays may be inquired of by the country, &c.

Notes on Form of Pleas, &c.

The preceding notes as to the form of pleas in abatement in general (ante, p. 2.) will be here applicable. This plea may be pleaded by attorney (Lut.

696.) Deft. may plead in abatement to part of a count, and in bar to the residue (2 Saun. 210; see Hill v. White, 6 Bing. N. C. 23; 8 Dowl. P. C. 63.)

The deft. in his plea must name all the joint contractors, for the purpose of giving a better writ, or he will fail, and must show that all are within the jurisdiction (Joll v. Lord Curzon, 11 Jur. 737.) It is sufficient, if it state where such persons are resident at the time of the plea pleaded, without saying that they were within the jurisdiction of the court at the time of bringing the action (Bannister v. Bachelor, 5 Law T. 73.) In an action by drawer against acceptor of a bill, and on an account stated, the deft. pleaded in abatement, that the bill was accepted, and the promise in the declaration mentioned was made, by the deft., jointly with B., who is still living and resident within the jurisdiction. Held bad on demurrer (Bleakley v. Jay, 13 M. & W. 464.) In slander the declaration stated that plt. carried on, together and in copartnership with J. W. S., and G. C., the trade, &c. of a banker, and that deft. spoke and published of and concerning plt., and of and concerning him in the way of his aforesaid trade and business, certain defamatory words. Plea in abatement, that plt. carried on the said trade and business of a banker jointly with the said J. W. S., and G. C., and not otherwise; and that all the damage in the declaration mentioned resulted and accrued to the said J. W. S. and G. C., jointly with plt., and not to plt. alone. Held, no answer to the action (Robinson v. Marchant, 10 Jur. 156.) To assumpsit against six defts. a plea was pleaded in abatement by four, that the promises were made by them jointly with one A. B. *(not a deft.) and not with the other two defts. is bad (Bull v. Taylor, 7 Law T. 257) So, an action for goods sold and delivered, and [*15] on an account stated, plea: "And for a further plea as to the first and second counts of the said declaration, the deft. saith that," &c. alleging that before action brought, disputes had arisen between plt. and deft., whether deft. was indebted to plt. in any and what sum, for the causes of action declared upon, which disputes they submitted themselves to refer, and did refer, to arbitration, and mutually promised to fulfil the award; the arbitrators, before action brought, took upon them the reference; that the matters in dispute are still under their consideration, and that a reasonable time has not elapsed for making the award: conclusion, "and this the deft. is ready to verify, &c." On demurrer: Held, 1. That the plea could not be considered as a plea in abatement informally pleaded; 2. That as a plea in bar it was bad, the pendency of an arbitration being no answer to an action for recovery of a debt (Harris v. Reynolds, 7 Q. B. 71). The plea must expressly state that the party omitted is living. (1 Saun. 291 a.) Also, in debt on a bond, &c. that the party sealed and delivered it. (Ib.) In the case of executors or administrators suing, deft. should craveoyer of probate, or letters of administration, to plead a nonjoinder in abatement (see form, 1 Went. 13, 58). It is not, in such a plea, necessary to state that the will is proved (2 H. V. 8b, 9; Co. 37 b). But it should state that the executor, not named, administered the goods of testator (Bro. Exors. 20, 28; 1 Lev. 161; 1 Saun. 291 g).

If a plea of nonjoinder of plts. is pleaded to several counts, and is bad as to any of them, it is bad altogether, and there must be a general judgment of respondeat ouster (Phillips v. Cloggett, 10 M. & W. 102; 2 Dowl. N. S. 258). To a declaration in case against a bailee of goods containing some counts charging a breach of contract by misuser of the goods, whereby they were lost to the plt. and other counts in trover, a plea in abatement to the whole declaration, that the goods were the goods of the plt. and others, was held bad, as being no answer to the counts on the contract. (Ib.) So, if a plea for nonjoinder of defts. is pleaded to the whole declaration, and is bad, even only, as to part of one count, it is bad altogether; as, where on such a plea to a declaration in assumpsit it appeared that part of the work in one of the counts was done for the defts. only, though the rest was done for them jointly with others, as stated in the plea, it was held, that the plt. was entitled to judgment on the whole declaration for the amount so proved (Hill v. White, 6 Bing. N. C. 26; 8 Dowl. P. C. 13); but if no part of the work had been done for them only, the plea would have been an answer to the action; as, where to assumpsit against A., B., and C., for work done for them, it was pleaded, that it was done for them jointly with D., and the evidence was that part was done for A., another part for A. and B., another for A., B., and D., and another for A., B., and C., and D., but there was not evidence of any having been done for A., B., and C. only (Hill v. White, 6 Bing. N. C. 23; 8 Dowl. P. C. 63).

Quære—Whether a plea is correct in including the names of all the co-contractors, both those within and those without the jurisdiction (Newton v. Stewart, 15 Law J. 384, Q. B.). The 3 & 4 Will. VI. c. 42, s. 2, has not altered the rules of pleading in abatement, but only restricted the occasions on which such a plea may be had recourse to. If, therefore, a plea in abatement for the nonjoinder of joint contractors be pleaded, it must still be for the nonjoinder of all the joint contractors, and if one be abroad, or his residence unknown, the deft. is ousted of his plea (Joll v. Curzon, 11 Jur. 737; 16 Law J., N. S., C. P. 172; 4 C. B. 249). Where the writ was is* [*16] sued against two and the declaration was against a single deft. who pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of a co-contractor, and prayed judgment of the declaration: Held, that the plea was bad; it should have prayed to quash the writ as well as the declaration (Whitling v. Desange, 16 Law J. 159, C. P.; Whitling v. Des Angès, 3 C. B. 910).

Deft. may be estopped from pleading nonjoinder in abatement in consequence of his own acts (3 Stark. 8; Bonner v. Wilkinson, 1 D. & R. 328).

The deft. having pleaded in abatement that four others were jointly liable, the court compelled him to deliver particulars of their residences and additions (Taylor v. Harris, 4 B. & A. 93; 1 Y. & J. 257); but, in another case, the court refused to compel the plt. to deliver to the deft. a copy of an agreement to enable him to plead that the agreement was jointly made by himself and others (1 D. & R. 419).

Evidence in Nonjoinder.

As to which party begins, ante, p. 8.

Proof for Defendant.] If the plea of nonjoinder is traversed, the burden of the evidence lies upon the deft. who will have to prove that the party omitted was partner, or joint contractor. As to proving a partnership, see post, "Partners." The declarations of the party not joined, if made before action brought, are evidence in support of the plea (Clay v. Langslow, 1 M. & M. 45). Quære.

Proof for Plaintiff.] This will depend, of course, on the nature of the replication and the issue raised. On a plea that the action is not brought jointly against a person who ought to have been sued, if the plt. traverses the partnership, he may prove that the deft. held himself out to the plt. as alone, constituting the firm: e. g. of "Bush and Co." (Bonfield v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 405); and the person giving the order cannot be asked, With whom do you deal? the proper inquiry is, as to the acts done (lb.: see, as to the amount of evidence which may be sufficient on such an issue, Crellin

v. Calvert, 14 M. & W. 11; 9 Jur. 810); he may also show that such alleged partner was never an ostensible, but a mere dormant partner (Lloyd v. Archbowl, 2 Taun. 324-5; Skinner v. Stokes, 4 B. & A. 437; 3 Stark. 814; R. & M. 293; Robinson v. Wilkinson, 3 Price, 538; 1 Stark. 338, 341, 272; Mitchell v. Lapage, Holt, 253; Hudson v. Robinson, 4 M. & S. 475; Stracey v. Deey, 7 T. R. 361; Lanchister v. Tricker, 1 Bing. 201); or, a mere nominal partner, having no interest, provided deft.'s interests would not be affected by the nonjoinder (3 Stark. 814; Teed v. Elworthy, 14 Ea. 210; Guidon v. Robson, 2 Camp. 302; Davenport v. Rackstowe, 1 C. & P. 89); or, an infant, or feme covert (3 Stark. 814; 4 Taunt. 468); or, not a partner when the contract was made, or the cause of action accrued (Shirriff v. Wilks, 1 Esp. 180); or, that he did not seal, and refused to seal the deed (Vernon v. Jefferys, 2 Str. 1146; 1 Saun. 291 f, 154, n. 1; Withers v. Bircham, 3 B. & C. 254, 353; Metcalf v. Rycroft, 6 M. & S. 75); or, in the case of an executor or administrator, that he formally renounced before the ordinary (Munt v. Stokes, 4 T. R. 565), but not, that he has not proved the will, or, has even refused before the ordinary, or, is an infant under seventeen (Brookes v. Stroud, 1 Salk. 3; 3 B. & A. 863; 1 Saun. 291 g, n. 2; Ib. 209, 212); or, that the person not joined was dead when the action was brought (Jell v. Douglass, 4 B. & A. 374; Scott v. Godwin, 1 B. & P. 74; 2 Saun. 121, n.; Kemp v. Andrews, Carth. 170-1; S. C. 3 Lev. 290; Smith v. Barrow, *2 T. R. 479); semble, if this were [*17] proved by affidavit the plea would be set aside (see Wheatley v. Golney, 9 Dowd. 1019); or, that the contract was several as well as joint.

Upon a replication traversing a plea of nonjoinder of a co-deft., plt. may, besides giving evidence to disprove the joint liability of all or any of the parties named in the plea, prove that another, or others not named, are also liable (Goodson v. Good, 6 Taun. 587; Crellin v. Calvert, 14 M. & W. 11); or that the claim, as against the parties named in the plea, is barred by the Statute of Limitations (9 Geo. IV. c. 14, s. 2), or that the deft. in making the contract represented, or, otherwise, induced plt. to believe that he was dealing with him alone (Bonfield v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 405).

Whatever the replication may be, when the action is in assumpsit, or covenant, the plt. should be prepared to prove the amount, and should also, it seems, give some evidence to connect the deft. with the contract, so as to identify the demand proved with that admitted by the pleading (see Crellin v. Calvert, 14 M. & W. 11). In debt, it seems that no evidence of amount need be given, inasmuch as, when the plea is disproved, the deft. is in the same position as if he had suffered judgment by default (Ib. and see ante, p. 16).

When it may be Plead.] This plea, claiming a privilege of being sued in a particular court, is, as before stated, strictly a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, except, when pleaded by an officer of a court, in which case it is simply a plea of privilege (Hunter v. Neck, 3 Scott, N. R. 448; 3 Man. & G. 281; Groom v. Wortham, 5 Scott, N. R. 799). There are various privileges which may be thus pleaded: such as that deft. is a baron of the Cinque Ports (Com. Dig. Abt. D, 5), a minister (Ib. D, 8), a tinner (Ib. D, 7), or scholar of the universities (1 Ch. Pl. Privilege); but the only one of any extent in practice is that of being an officer of a court, as an attorney.

By Attorney.] If an attorney be improperly sued in a court of which he is not an attorney, he must plead his privilege (Turton v. Prior, 11 Mo. 168; Benson v. Cartwright, 2 Buls. 207; Baker v. Duncalf, Lut. 195, 639; see Percival v. Cook, 5 M. & W. 293); otherwise, he loses the benefit of it (Crossley v. Shaw, 2 W. Bla. 1088; Horn v. Howard, 1 ib. 231; Unwyn v. Robinson, Barn. 53); and he cannot take advantage of it upon motion only (Snee v. Humphrys, 1 Wils. 306; Lane v. Saltmarsh, 2 Sal. 544, 2 Arch. Pr. 817, sed vide *Tidd, 76), unless, indeed, he be sued in [*18] an inferior court, in which case a writ of privilege may be issued to relieve him (Tidd, 76), or, in the new county courts, a prohibition. Suing a person, who is not an attorney, as an attorney, does not appear to be ground for plea in abatement, but is irregular (5 M. & S. 324; Paul v. Garry, 6 B. & C. 77, n.; Nabb v. —, 2 Ch. R. 396).

In some cases, an attorney cannot plead his privilege; as, where both he and plt. are attorneys of different courts, and the plt. sues him in the court of which plt. is an attorney, for plt.'s privilege prevails (Shorter v. Backhouse, 1 Bla. 19; Danser v. Berryman, 2 ib. 1325; 4 D. & R. 73). And as his privilege extends only to actions in his own right, he cannot plead it when sued in autre droit, as executor, &c. (Newton v. Rowland, 1 Sal. 2; Lawrence v. Martin, 1 Lord Raym. 533), or, when sued jointly with unprivileged persons, even his wife, and though the nature of the action be not absolutely joint (Roberts v. Mason, 1 Taun. 254; 1 Ven. 298; Brathwaite v. Blackerby, 2 Sal. 544; 1 Rol. 580; 4 Bac. Abr. 223), or, with an attorney of the court (Rastrick v. Beckwith, 8 Jur. 1030, C. P.), or when he is in prison for debt (Byles v. Winton, 4 B. & A. 88), or has left off practice (Maynard's case, cited by the court, Goldsmith v. Baynard, 2 Wils. 232; Brooke v. Bryant, 7 T. R. 25); but, the omitting to take out his certificate, unless, for a year, does not deprive him of his privilege (Skirrow v. Tagg, 5 M. & S. 281; Norwich (Mayor) v. Berry, Burr. 2109). If he be arrested and bailed in one suit, he may plead his privilege to another action brought against him in the same court (Bands v. Roddinner, Carth. 377). An attorney in an action at suit of the Queen loses his privilege (2 Rol. Abr. 274); but not, in an action qui tam (Kirkham v. Wheeley, 2 Sal. 543), nor, in an action jointly against him and a privileged person (Ramsbottom v. Harcourt, 4 M. & S. 585), nor, in an action on a bill of exchange (Atkins v. —, 2 Ch. R. 63; Comerford v. Price, 1 Doug. 312).

Other Officers.] These rules also apply to other officers of the courts. Thus, if the filicer (Browne's case, 2 Sal. 544), or prothonotary, or any of his clerks (Payne v. Fry, Str. 546; Onslow v. Booth, 705); or warden of the Fleet (Duncombe v. Church, 1 Sal. 1), or the like, be impleaded out of their own court, they may plead their privilege. So a clerk in the Exchequer, if sued in the K. B. or, C. P., may plead his privilege (Wentworth v. Squibb, Lut. 44; Phipps v. Jackson, 6 Mo. 305). So one of the six clerks, or, of the sixty clerks in Chancery, if sued out of his court, may plead his privilege (20 H. VI. 32 b; Fawkener v. Annis, 1 Ven. 264; Bro. 498; see form, Wilkes v. Williams, 8 T. R. 631). So, if a serjeant-at-law be sued in any other than the courts at Westr., he may plead his privilege (Deakins v. Scroggs, 2 Lev. 129; Humbleton v. Scroggs, 2 Mo. 297; Com. Dig. Abt. D, 6). But quere since the opening of the C. P. to the profession.

Form of Plea of Privilege.

Plea of privilege, by an attorney of the C. P., to an action brought against him in the Q. B. as a common person.

In the Q. B. on the day of _____, in the year of our Lord 1850.
John Hall, gent., one of the attorneys, &c. } And the deft., in his own proper person, (or "by C. D., his
 ats. } attorney," saith, that he, the deft., long before, and at the time Joseph Styles. } of the commencement of this suit, was, and from thence hitherto hath been, and still is, one of the attorneys of the court of our lady *the queen, of the bench, at Westr., in the county of Midx.
 aforesaid, and that he, during all the time aforesaid, hath prosecuted and de- [*19] fended, and still doth prosecute and defend, divers pleas and suits in the said court of the bench at Westr. aforesaid, for many true and faithful subjects of our said lady the queen, as their attorney; and the deft. further saith, that he, and all other the attorneys of the said court of the bench prosecuting and defending suits and pleas therein for their clients, have been, and ought, according to the custom of the said court, and the privilege of such attorneys, to be exempt from being compelled to answer any plea or plaint, in any action personal (pleas of freehold, felony, and appeals only excepted), before any justices or ministers of our lady the queen, or other judge whomsoever, in any court whatsoever, except before the justices of our lady the queen, of the court of the bench at Westr. aforesaid; and the deft. further saith that he is not, nor hath he ever been an attorney, officer, or minister of the said court of our lady the queen, before the queen herself at Westr., and this he is ready to verify. Wherefore he prays judgment, if he ought to be compelled to answer to the plt. in the said plea in the said court of our lady the queen before the queen herself now here.

Notes on Form of Plea, &c.

Plea.] The general notes, as to pleas to the jurisdiction and in abatement, will here apply (ante, p. 5). A plea of privilege in Q. B. will be received after appearance and bail (Upton v. Coward, Bun. 113); but it cannot be pleaded after deft. has been fore-judged (Farrill v. Head, Barn. 41). Formerly it was held that the plea should be pleaded in person, and not by attorney (1 Lut. 7; Sparks v. Wood, 6 Mo. 146); but now it may be pleaded by attorney (Hunter v. Neck, 3 Scott, N. R. 448; 3 Man. & G. 181); and, semble, ought (Groom v. Wortham, 2 D. P. C., N. S. 657; 5 Sc. N. R. 799). Not more than half defence must be made (Co. Litt. 127 b). It is not unusual to commence the plea with a prayer, "that the court ought not to take cognizance," &c.; but this seems unnecessary (Hixon v. Binns, 3 T. R. 186; Gilb. C. P. 209; Wilkes v. Williams, 8 T. R. 631). It must be stated deft. was an attorney of the court at the time of exhibiting bill, or, issuing writ (Duncombe v. Church, 1 Salk. 1; Basingstoke (Mayor) v. Bonner, 2 Str. 864; S. C. 2 Raym. 1567). The allegation as to the custom of the court is usual; but it is sufficient for the deft. to plead that he is an attorney of this court, and as such to claim his privilege, for the court will take notice of it (per Ld. Ellenb., Stokes v. Mason, 9 Ea. 426). Therefore, a mistake in the statement of the custom does not seem material (9 ib. 339; 2 Lut. 1606). No venue need be stated (Scawen v. Garratt, 2 Raym. 1172-3; S. C. 2 Sal. 545). It is not necessary, though it is usual, to negative deft.'s being an attorney of the court in which he is sued (Percival v. Cooke, 5 M.

& W. 293; 7 Dowl. P.C. 500); nor, semble, his having practised there since the passing of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73 (this being a re-enactment of 1 Vict. c. 56, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45) (Prior v. Smith, 6 Dowl. 299; Hunter v. Neck, 3 Scott, N.R. 449, n. 14). It is said to be unnecessary to aver that he has clients there (3 Chit. Plead. 12, n. m, citing Lutw. 1666; Com. Dig. Abt. D, 6), but, it seems to be on principle safer to do so (see Stiles v. Serjeant Mead, 2 Str. 738; Goldsmith v. Baynard, 2 Wils. 228; Dyson v. Birch, 1 B. & P. 4; Brooke v. Bryant, 7 T. R. 26; Anon. 1 Dowl. P.C. 208; Chippendale's case, 1 Tidd's Pr. 77; Chreshop v. Coulthard, ib.; Sand v. Heysham, ib.; Ex parte Sheppard, 2 Cox, 398). The deft. may plead with a profert of his writ of privilege, and the plt. cannot deny the privilege, but must plead nul tiel record (Thomee v. Lloyd, 1 Raym. 336; Com. Dig.

Abt. D, 6.) If he do not plead it *with a profert, the plt. may [*20] reply that he is not an attorney, and then a certiorari issues to certify whether he be an attorney, or, not (Dillon v. Harper, 2 Salk. 545; Stephens v. Squire, Skin. 582.) As under the 37 Geo. III. c. 90, neglecting to take out the annual stamped certificate rendered the admission null and void, and declared him incapable of practising till re-admitted, it was formerly sufficient to state in the plea that the deft. was an attorney, &c. for if he did not take out the certificate, this allegation could not be sustained; but as, by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, this provision of the above statute is repealed, and an attorney is now an attorney and on the roll, notwithstanding his having neglected to take out his certificate, it seems advisable to add to the allegation of his being an attorney that he was also duly qualified to practise. The clause in the late act bearing on this point is the 26th, and is in these words: "Be it enacted, that no person who as an attorney or solicitor shall sue, prosecute, defend, or carry on any action or suit, or any proceedings in any of the courts aforesaid, without having previously obtained a stamped certificate, which shall be then in force, shall be capable of maintaining any action or suit at law or in equity for the recovery of any fee, reward, or disbursement, for or in respect of any business, matter, or thing done by him as an attorney or solicitor as aforesaid, whilst he shall have been without such certificate as last aforesaid." If this clause be construed as a prohibition to practise without a certificate, the plea, it would seem, ought to aver a due qualification; but if it be construed to imply that an attorney may practise without a certificate but shall not recover his fees, and this is the only penalty imposed on him, then he will retain all his other rights and privileges as an attorney, except that of recovering his fees, and the want of a certificate cannot even be replied to this plea.

If the deft. plead that he is on the record and qualified, this being matter of record and not matter in pais, the plea should conclude with a paratus verificare per recordum (King v. Hour, 8 Jur. 1127.) The conclusion of the plea of privilege by an attorney is, in some of the precedents, thus: "Wherefore he prays judgment if the said court of our said lady the queen, before the queen herself, now here, will or, ought to take cognizance of the said plea" (3 Ch. Pl. 896;) but it seems to be good both ways (1 Sal. 293; Bowyer v. Cook, 5 Mo. 145; S. C. Carth. 363; Challand v. Thornley, 12 Ea. 544-5.)

Affidavit.] It is now held necessary to add the usual affidavit (Davidson v. Chilman, 1 Bing. N.C. 297; 5 M. & S. 117.)

Replication.] Plt. may reply to the plea by traversing, or confessing and avoiding it. The plt. cannot traverse the custom, it being matter of law (Kirkman v. Wheeler, 2 Sal. 513; Com. Dig. Abt. D, 6.) A replication to a plea of privilege as an attorney of C.P., that, for five years before, the deft. had not prosecuted or defended any suit, is bad (2 Lut. 1664,) or that he had not practised within a year (per Patteson, J., Spike v. Adams, 3 Ch. Pl. 12, n. m.) As to replication of want of certificate, see ante, "Plca," and Skirrow v. Tagg, 5 M. & S. 281. Plt. may reply that deft. is in custody for debt (Byles v. Winton, 4 B. & A. 88,) (under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 31, an attorney or solicitor in person cannot "sue out any writ or process, or commence, prosecute, or defend any action or suit,") or has left off practising (Goldsmith v. Baynard, 2 Wils. 232,) or has resumed practice, or become an attorney since the commencement of the action (Brook v. Bryant, 7 T. R. 25; Smith v. Bower, 3 ib. 632;) or matter of estoppel.

As to which Party is to begin, see ante, p. 8.

Proof for Defendant.] Deft. may prove himself to be an attorney either by producing the original roll, signed by him on his admission, together with the proof of his signature, or by means of an examined copy; or he may prove it by the entry in the book of the chief clerk, kept in the Master's office, into which the names of all attorneys are copied, by the chief clerk, from the original roll (see 1 Tidd, 61; R. v. Crossley, 2 Esp. 526; Lewis v. Walter, 3 B. & C. 138, n. b.; S. C. 4 D. & R. 810; Jones v. Stevens, 11 Price, 251;) or by the entry in the alphabetical roll kept by the registrar of attorneys and solicitors under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 70, s. 21.

Proof for Plaintiff.] This will depend very much on the nature of the replication.

Want of Certificate.] This must be proved strictly (Pearce v. Whale, 5 B. & C. 38.)

Plt. should be prepared to prove his damages, in case the plea should be found for him (ante, p. 9.)

PENDENCY OF ANOTHER ACTION.

When it may be pleaded.] The pendency of another action against the same parties, for the same cause, may be pleaded in abatement (Com. Dig. Abt. H. 24,) but not in bar (Hurley v. Greenwood, 5 B. & A. 101, per Bayley, J.,) except at the suit of an informer (Baines v. Blackbourne, Say. 216; Tidd, 989;) and it is said, if two suits are brought on the same day for the same cause, their pendency may be pleaded reciprocally the one to the other (Pie v. Coke, Hob. 128; Mo. 864-5; Com. Dig. Abt. H. 24.) It may be pleaded, whether the suit be depending in the same or a different court (Sparry's case, 5 Co. R. 62 a.;) but not so to an action brought in the superior courts at Westr., where the other action is in an inferior court (Ib.; Moyle v. West, Dyer, 92 b.; Fitzg. 313; Laughter v. Taylor, 8 Dowl. P. C. 776.) It may be pleaded, though the actions be of a different nature (Bac. Ab. Abt. M., sed quere.) It is said that this plea is improper where the former suit was a real or personal one; where no certainty of description is required in the suit, and the plt. did not make a plaint or declaration, as it does not appear that it is the same suit; the reasons, however, seem unsatisfactory (see Com. Dig. Abt. H, 24; Bac. Ab. Abt. M; Sperry's case, 5 Co. R. 61 b.; sed vide 3 Ch. Pl. 9, n.; 6 T. R. 307; 1 Saun. 92, n. 2.) It is no plea that another action is depending for the same cause, at the suit of another person (Pechell v. Layton, 2 T. R. 512; Com. Dig. Abt. H, 24;) as *to an action at the suit of assignees of a bankrupt, that a former [*22] action by bankrupt is pending (Biggs v. Cox, 4 B. & C. 920;) or against another person (Bedford (Earl) v. Exeter (Bishop), Hob. 137;) though a joint contractor (Henry v. Goldney, 32 Law Obs. 204; 10 Jur. 439;) or, against deft. jointly with others (Com. Dig. Abt. H, 24; Isam v. Hitchcock, Cro. E. 202; Rawlinson v. Oriett, Carth. 96, sed quere; Bedford (Earl) v. Exeter (Bishop), Hob. 137;) or, to an action at the suit of the king (Th. Dig. l. 11, c. 39, s. 19;) but, it is to an action at the suit of a common informer (Baines v. Blackbourne, Say. 216; Coombe v. Pitt, 3 Bur. 1423, supra.) In an action against one of several joint contractors, the deft. cannot plead in abatement the pending of another action for the same cause against another co-contractor; but, he should plead in abatement the nonjoinder of the joint-contractor; and if a second action be brought against all, the pendency of the former action against the other joint contractor may be pleaded (Henry v. Goldney, 4 D. & L. 6; 15 M. & W. 494.) And it has been held at nisi prius, that where separate actions have been brought against several defts. for the same single act of trespass, the party against whom the last action was commenced may plead the pendency of the first in abatement (Boyce v. Douglas, 1 Camp. 601; 1 Ch. Pl. 76.)

The plt. cannot, after the plea, avoid the effect of it by discontinuing the first action (1 Salk. 329; Knight's case, 2 Raym. 1014.)

Form of Pendency of another Action.

Plea of pendency of another action previously brought for the same cause.

In the Q. B. (or C. P., or Ex. of Pl.) On the day of , in the year of our Lord 1850.

Joseph Styles } And the deft. by ———, his attorney, (or "in person,") prays judgment of the said writ and declaration, because he says that, before the
ats. {
John Hill. } issuing of the said writ, or the plt. declaring thereupon, to wit, on the day of , in the year of our Lord 1850, the plt. issued a certain writ of summons out of the court of our lady the queen, before the queen herself, at Westr., and declared thereon against him, in a plea of debt on demand, of and upon the same identical writing obligatory (or, in a certain plea of promises upon the very same identical promises and undertakings, or, in a certain plea of trespass for and in respect of the very same identical trespasses and causes of action,) in the said declaration, in this present suit mentioned, as by the record and proceedings thereof remaining in the said court of our said lady the queen, before the queen herself, more fully appears. And the deft. further saith, that the parties in this and the said former suit are the same, and not other, or different persons, and that the supposed causes of action in this, and the said former suit are, and each and every of them is and are, the same, and not other, or, different causes of action; and that the said former suit, so brought and prosecuted against him the deft., by the plt. as aforesaid, is still depending in the said court of our said lady the queen, before the queen herself. And this the deft. is ready to verify. Wherefore he prays judgment of the said writ and declaration in the suit, and that the same may be quashed, &c. (Add usual affidavit.)

Notes on Forms of Plea, &c.

Plea, &c.] The notes as to pleas in abatement in general will be here applicable. The plea must show that the cause of action in both suits is the same (Doc. Pl. 10,) whether they are of the same, or, different forms of action, as detinue and trover (London (Mayor) v. D. Freem. 401.) If it appear from the pleadings that it could not *be the same, the plea will be bad (Biggs v. Cox, 7 D. & R. 409; 4 B. & C. 920.) In [*23] some cases the plea must state on what particular day the former action was brought; as, in an action at the suit of an informer, the deft. must show a prior right attached in somebody else, and, if the prior action be brought in the same term, it must be shown on what particular day such prior action was brought, that its priority may be ascertained (Combe v. Pitt, 3 Bur. 1423; S. C. Bla. 437,) and so, in other cases, where the plea is of another action pending of the same term (Hutchinson v. Thomas, 2 Lev. 141; Jackson v. Gisling, 2 Str. 1169.) It does not seem essentially necessary to state the declaration in the prior action, (3 Ch. Pl. 19, n.) nor to aver that such action is still pending, as it is sufficient to abate the second writ to show that it was pending at the time that the second action was commenced (Ferrer's case, 6 Co. R. 7.) A plea setting forth the pendency of several actions against several joint contractors is bad for multiplicity (Esdaile v. Lund, 12 M. & W. 607; 2 D. & L. 565; 8 Jur. 109.) It should seem, it is not necessary to plead a prout patet per recordum, or, to plead the record of another court sub pede sigilli, because, the plea involves a matter of fact whether both actions are for the same cause (3 Ch. Pl. 19, n. ;) see a plea so concluding, and law thereon (Kirby v. Seagers, 2 D. P. C. 639.)

Replication.] The plt. may reply nul tiel record of the former action. If an action pending in the same court be pleaded, plt. may pray oyer, that the record may be inspected by the court, or, demand oyer of it, which, if not given in convenient time, he may sign judgment (Com. Dig. Abt. H. 24.) Where, to debt on a statute, the deft. has pleaded a prior action depending, or, a compromise by rule of court, &c., plt. may traverse the fact, or, reply per fraudem (1 Ch. Pl. 507.)

Evidence in.

For Defendant.] The burden of the evidence lies upon the deft., who must prove the commencement of the former suit, and that it is for the same cause. If the former suit be on record, as, according to some authorities, t ought to be, the record should be produced, or proved, in the usual way post, "RECORD.") If a writ only has been issued, the same should be proved in the usual way (post "PROCESS;") and it is sufficient to satisfy the plea (Kirby v. Siggers, 2 Dowl. P. C. 659.) If there have been any affidavit of debt, or, particulars of demand, or, any other legal document, or, writing, in any way showing the former suit is for the same cause of action, the same should be proved (post, "AFFIDAVIT—PARTICULARS OF DEMAND.")

For Plaintiff.] Plt. should be prepared with evidence in answer; also, to prove his damages, in case the plea should be found for him (ante, p. 9.)

What it is.] Accord is a satisfaction agreed upon between the party injuring and the party injured; which when performed is a bar of all actions upon this account. As, if a man contract to build a house, or, deliver a horse and fail in it, this is an injury, for which the sufferer may have his remedy by action. But if the party injured accept a sum of money, or other thing, as a satisfaction, this is a redress of that injury and entirely takes away the action (3 Bla. Com. 16; Bac. Abr. Accord, A; Com. Dig. ib. B, 4; Lynn v. Bruce, 2 H. Bl. 317; Collingburn v. Mantell, 5 M. & W. 289; Bayley v. Homan, 3 B. N. C. 915.)

This defence must now in all cases be specially pleaded (R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV.)

In what Actions pleadable.] Accord and satisfaction is a good plea in all actions where damages are recoverable for the wrong done, or, the contract broken. It may therefore be pleaded in ejectment, detinue (9 Co. R. 79 a;) debt, as well as in covenant (6 Co. R. 44 b;) trespass, case, and assumpsit, although, in the former, a specific thing or sum is also to be recovered. So to an action of debt on bond for the payment of money, the deft. might, at common law, plead the delivery and acceptance, on or before (5 Co. R. 117 a) the day, of a horse, or other thing, in satisfaction; and such accord saved the forfeiture of the condition (9 Co. R. 79 a.) But it is otherwise of a bond conditioned to do a collateral act, as, to make a feoffment, to yield a true account, &c.; for, in these cases, accord is no satisfaction to *save the forfeiture. Hence, as such bonds are not within the stat.

(A) Vide for American cases, 1 U. S. Dig. Tit. "Accord and Satisfaction," p. 41. 1 Supp. U. S. Dig. p. 21. 1 Ann. Dig. 12. 2 Id. p. 6. 3 Id. p. 9.

4 & 5 Anne, infra, it seems that a plea of accord and satisfaction to [*25] save the forfeiture, must aver it to be in satisfaction of the penalty, and consequently that payment of any sum short of that would be a bad plea (Ib.; see, however, such a plea, 3 N. & P. 226.)

Before the stat. 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, payment of the sum mentioned in the condition, or any other matter in satisfaction of that sum, after the day, was not a good plea; because the forfeiture having attached, nothing less than the penal sum, or its equivalent, could in contemplation of law be deemed a satisfaction. But by the 12th sect. of that act the obligor is enabled to plead payment of principal and interest after the day; and such payment is to be as effectual a bar as if the money had been paid on the day mentioned in the condition. Since which accord and satisfaction, generally, after the day may be pleaded to the sum mentioned in the condition, and need not as formerly be pleaded to the penalty (see post, "Bond," "Payment.")

Accord and satisfaction cannot be pleaded to an action on a record (4 Moo. 165;) nor, it is said, will the court on an accord unexecuted permit it to be pleaded as a sham plea, for the purpose of delay (see Rickley v. Proone, 1 B. & C. 286; 2 D. & R. 661; Blewit v. Marsden, 10 Ea. 237; 3 Ch. Pl. 92; see, also, Phillips v. Bruce, 6 M. & S. 134; Draycote v. Pilkington, 5 M. & S. 518.)

Requisites of Plea.] Accord without performance of satisfaction, or in other words, an accord unexecuted, that is, a mere agreement between the plt. on the one hand and the deft. on the other, to do, or give, and accept something as an equivalent for, on, or in substitution of the claim, cannot be pleaded, for it is no answer to a vested right of action (Crisp v. Griffith, 2 C. M. & R. 649; Allies v. Probyn, ib. 408; Bayley v. Homan, 3 B. N. C. 915; Phillips v. Afflalo, 4 M. & G. 856; Smart v. Chell, 7 D. P. C. 781.) But an accord executed, if it be reasonable in intendment of law, and such as amounts to a valid and binding contract, is a good defence, though it have not produced actual satisfaction. On the other hand, the payment or delivery and acceptance of money or other thing in satisfaction, if reasonable in contemplation of law, is a good bar, though no accord be stated. And where a chattel is taken in satisfaction, it need not be averred that it was of equal value with the debt, for, the party receiving it, is the best judge of matters of uncertain value (Andrew v. Doughey, Dyer, 72, a; Thompson v. Percival, 5 B. & Ad. 932, per Denman, C. J.)

It seems, therefore, convenient to consider this defence in a two-fold aspect. 1st, where actual satisfaction is given; and, 2ndly, where it lies in accord only.

1st. Pleas of Satisfaction.] The following rules will show what is necessary to constitute this plea a defence.

How Defendant may avail himself of it.

The Satisfaction must be a reasonable and complete Satisfaction of the thing demanded, and operate as an extinguishment of the original cause of action. Therefore, acceptance of a less cannot be a satisfaction, in law, of a greater sum, unless, there be a release or some consideration for the relinquishment of the residue (Down v. Hatcher, infra; Wright v. Acres, 6 Ad. & E. 726; see Denton v. Richmond, 1 C. & M. 734; Fitch v. Sutton, 5 Ea.

231; Walker v. Seaborn, 1 Taun. 526;) and this, though an additional security be given, *(1 Str. 426.) "An agreement between a debtor [*26] and creditor, that part of a larger sum due should be paid by the debtor, and accepted by the creditor as a satisfaction for the whole, might, under special circumstances, operate as a discharge of the whole debt. But then the legal effect of such an agreement must be considered to be the same as if the whole debt had been paid, and part had been returned as a gift to the party paying" (per Holroyd, J., Thomas v. Heathorn, 2 B. & C. 481, 482; S. C. 3 D. & R. 647. See infra.) Therefore, a plea of payment of a smaller sum is bad on demurrer (Ib.); and even after verdict (Down v. Hatcher, 10 A. & El. 121; 2 P. & D. 292.) But where a party sued on two bills of exchange, and in his particulars of demand, by mistake, claimed 301*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* instead of 323*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.*, the sum really due, and an order was made by a judge, with the consent of plt. and def., that upon payment of the debt for which the action was brought, and costs, all further proceedings should be stayed, &c., and the plt. accepted the order, and the def. paid the money,—a plea setting forth the action, the order, the acceptance of it in accord and satisfaction, and the payment of the money, was held a good answer in accord and satisfaction to a subsequent action for the sum really due on those bills, though the plt. replied that the def. had known the amount really due, and fraudulently permitted him to consent to the order; that he, before the order had been fully performed by the def., by payment of the entire sum agreed upon, discovered the mistake, and before the commencement of this suit applied to the def. to allow the particulars in the action and order to be amended, which the def. refused, and that he received the balance of the 301*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* under protest,—the court deeming that the replication did not show fraud, or misrepresentation in the def. which should avoid the accord and satisfaction (Atherton v. Ibeard, 8 Jur. 752, Q. B.); and although payment of a part of a liquidated and ascertained sum cannot be satisfaction of the whole, yet, upon a mere simple contract, a negotiable security may be a satisfaction of a claim for the larger amount (Sibree v. Tripp, 15 M. & W. 28.) In an action for taking cattle, it is no plea, that it was agreed that plt. should have his cattle again, and that they were returned, being no satisfaction of the injury sustained for the detention (Peytoe's case, 9 Co. R. 78;) nor an agreement, not under seal, that the parties should be quit of actions against each other (James v. David, 5 T. R. 141; Davis v. Oakham, Sty. 245; Dighton v. Whiting, Lut. 57; 1 Rol. Ab. Accord. 128, J. 40; Com. Dig. Accord, B. 1.)

But payment and acceptance of a part of a debt, before the time it becomes due, or, at a place where it was not payable, in satisfaction of the whole, may be a sufficient satisfaction (Co. Litt. 212 b.) So, if a third person guaranty the payment of the less sum (Steinman v. Magnus, 11 Ea. 390;) so, if the debtor assign all his effects (Heathcote v. Crookshanks, 2 T. R. 24.) So, where the damages are not liquidated, it may, under certain circumstances, be a good plea (see instances in 1 Smith, L. C. 147.) See further, as to composition, post, title "COMPOSITION."

And so, if the debtor give a chose in possession for a chose in action, as a horse, or, other property in specie (Heathcote v. Crookshanks, 2 T. R. 24; Co. Litt. 212 b.) Destroying certain documents upon plt.'s undertaking, in consideration thereof, not to bring an action for slander, is a sufficient consideration (Lane v. Applegate, 1 Star. 97.) Conferring a benefit to a third person, at the debtor's request, is sufficient (9 Skip. 391.) So, where A. owes B. 100*l.*, and B. owes C. 100*l.*, and the three meet, and it is agreed between them A. shall pay C. 100*l.*, the payment of B.'s debt would be sufficient (Tatlock v. Harris, 3 T. R. 180; Wilson v. Copeland, 5 B. & A. 228: Wharton v. Walker*, 4 B. & C. 163.) But, where J. C., being indebted to S., and R. C. being indebted to S. and also to J. [*27] C., it was verbally agreed between the three, that S. should transfer the debt due to him from J. C. to R. C.; and S., in pursuance of such agreement, delivered to R. C. an account, in which he, R. C., was charged with the debt due from J. C. to S., it was held that such rendering of account amounted, at most, to an accord, but not, a satisfaction (Cuxon v. Chadley, 3 B. & C. 591.) And where it was agreed, in an action on a bill, that deft. should renew the bill, and give a warrant of attorney as security, which he did, omitting to pay the costs, it was held not to be a satisfaction, and that plt. might render the bill available (Norris v. Aylett, 2 Camp. 329.) And, so, an acceptance of a smaller sum from one contractor who had been sued alone, as a compromise of the action against him, is not a satisfaction in favour of a joint contractor, though, stated in a receipt to be for debt and costs in that action (Waller v. Smith, 2 B. & Ad. 889;) and, as to co-obligors on a bond of indemnity (Field v. Robins, 3 N. & P. 226,) unless, it is received expressly, in full satisfaction of the entire cause of action (lb. 228.)

To trover for not returning notes, a plea, that after breach the deft. gave the plt., at his request, "for and on account of the notes, and of the promise, and damages in respect thereof, an order on B., who had them to deliver them to the plt.; that the plt. accordingly took it, but, neglected to present it, and get the notes till they were feloniously stolen from B.," was held bad on special demurrer, as not showing any sufficient legal satisfaction for the conversion (Griffiths v. Owen, 13 M. & W. 58; 2 D. & L. 190). So, in trespass for taking goods, an agreement to restore them, and their restoration accordingly, is not a satisfaction for the tort in taking them (Bac. Ab. Trespass, I, 2; and see Com. Dig. Accord, B, 1). So, it is no satisfaction of the right of action for distraining for more than was due, that the distress taken was insufficient to pay the rent really due (Taylor v. Henniker, 4 P. & D. 242; 12 A. & E. 488). So, to an action of assault and false imprisonment against magistrates, for having committed a man for an offence deposed to before them, an agreement between the prosecutor of the charge and the plt., with the consent of the defendants, that the prosecutor should drop the prosecution, and that the plt. should be discharged at the sessions for want of prosecution, and his discharge accordingly, in full satisfaction and discharge of the assault and false imprisonment, is not a satisfaction of the wrong done in committing him (Edgecombe v. Rodd, 5 Ea. 294).

It is said that a release of an equity of redemption is not a sufficient satisfaction (Preston v. Christmas, 2 Wils. 86; see Elliott v. Martin, 2 M. & W. 19; per Parke, B; Skinner's Co. v. Jones, 2 B. N. C. 490). In an action of debt upon two indentures, whereby the deft.'s testator covenanted to pay the plt. the respective sums of 1300*l.* and 700*l.* with interest, the deft. pleaded, in substance, that the plt. was a mortgagee, by two mortgages of an estate which was insufficient, upon an estimate of its value, to pay the mortgage money due from the testator; that three other mortgagees were in the same situation, the estate realized to each being less in estimated value than the charge upon it; that the defts. were devisees of the real estate, and executors of the deceased mortgagor; that they had received assets, which, after deducting the costs and the expenses payable by them, in the first instance, and in preference to the debts from the testator, and also, excepting some furniture, amounted to the deficiency on each mortgage, and thereupon, it was agreed, between the plt. and deft., and each of the mortgagees, as the common *consent of all, and at the request of each, that no suit should be instituted for the [*28] administration of assets, and that the said balance of the assets, after deducting the furniture, which should be given to the widow, should be divided rateably between the mortgagees, and paid to them in satisfaction of the sums due to them over and above the estimated value of the estates; and that all the respective rights and equities of redemption, or, other rights of the defts., as executors and trustees to the mortgaged property, should thenceforth, be wholly barred, extinguished, satisfied, and discharged, and the mortgagees should thenceforth become absolute owners, both at law, and in equity, of the mortgaged estates, and that the covenant in the declaration should be satisfied and discharged in consideration of the premises. The plea then averred payment to each of his share of the assets, and that the several rights and equities of redemption were barred and extinguished. Replication denying the agreement and the payment in the plea mentioned, and issue thereon. The judge at the trial having ruled that the plea could not be proved, except by an agreement in writing; on motion for a new trial, and assuming, for the disposal of that question, that the plea, if proved, would be a good bar: Held, that, though, on agreement to convey an equity of redemption is not binding, unless, in writing, yet this plea would have been held good on demurrer, even, if, it had expressly stated that the contract was by parol; for the agreement by the plaintiff to forego the balance of his mortgage above the value of the estate, on receiving his share of the assets, was obligatory on him, and the receipt of that share a satisfaction for the estate, though, there was no binding agreement on the defendant to convey the equity of redemption, for, the agreement of the other mortgagees to take their shares also, was a good consideration for giving up the claim for the residue of the debt against the defts. Whether the plea, if proved, would be a good bar, quære (Massey v. Johnson, 1 Exch. 241).

An agreement that the parties should give each other a quart of wine in satisfaction of action is a sufficient satisfaction (1 Rol. Ab.); and so if, either party has done any act which would deprive him of his right of action, it would operate as a satisfaction (Lane v. Applegate, 1 Star. 97). It is no plea in debt on bond given to a firm that the claim was assigned, or, transferred to the account of a new firm on the obligors dissolving partnership, and some of them quitting the firm (Parker v. Wise, 6 M. & Sel. 239). "Payment after the day is good, by way of discharge, but not of satisfaction" (per Holroyd, J., Francis v. Crywell, 5 B. & A. 888, citing 4 Mo. 250). The mere fulfilment of an act which a party is bound to, is no satisfaction (Edgecombe v. Rodd, 5 East, 302). A deed before breach cannot be discharged by accord and satisfaction without a deed (Kaye v. Waghorn, 1 Taun. 428; Com. Dig. Ple. 2. v. 8); but it may after breach (Com. Dig. A, 1, &c.; Scholey v. Mearns, 7 Ast. E. 150; 1 Moore, 358, 460). The accord and satisfaction must be before action brought, or, if it be afterwards, it must be in satisfaction of the costs and damages (Francis v. Crywell, 5 B. & A. 886; S. C. 1 D. & R. 546; Corbett v. Swinburne, 3 N. & P. 551; 8 A. & El. 673; Henry v. Earl, 8 M. & W. 228).

A Specialty Security, when co-extensive, operates as a satisfaction, of a simple-contract debt, or security; and is a satisfaction, as the simple-contract is merged in the specialty (Cro. C. 415; Bac. Ab. Debt, G; Winton v. Foster, 2 B. N. C. 692); but not, if the specialty be void, or, be taken merely as a collateral, or, additional security, and reciting a pre-existing [*29]; security (Twopenny v. Young, 3 B. & C. 210-1; *Solly v. Forbes, 2 B. & B. 38). An assignment by deed, of property to secure debts due, or, to be due, with power of sale, on giving six months' notice, is only to be viewed as collateral security, and does not suspend the remedy by action against the debtor, although, no such notice has been given, there being no express stipulation in the deed that the remedy by action should not be adopted (Emes v. Widdowson, 4 C. & P. 151). Judgment recovered is, in itself, no satisfaction, until payment be obtained upon it: and Le Blanc, J., said, "The giving of another security, which, in itself, would not operate as an extinguishment of the original one, cannot operate as such by being pursued to judgment, unless, it produce the fruit of a judgment" (Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East, 259; see post, "JUDGMENT;" as to composition deeds, see post, "COMPOSITION").

A Bill of Exchange, or, Promissory Note, &c., will sometimes operate as an accord and satisfaction. A person, by taking a bill, or, note accepted, made, or indorsed by the debtor, in satisfaction of a former simple-contract debt, or a simple contract debt created at the time, is precluded from afterwards waiving it, and suing the person who gave it him for the original debt before the bill is due: for, the taking a bill, or note, is prima facie evidence of satisfaction, and amounts to an agreement to give the person delivering it credit for the time it has to run (Stedman v. Gooch, 1 Esp. 3; Ch. B. 95; Kerslake v. Morgan, 5 T. R. 513; R. v. Dawson, Wight. 32.) But, pltt. may reply, the bill was not taken in satisfaction (Ib.); and, if the bill be dishonoured, he may sue for the original debt, or, on the bill (Puckford v. Maxwell, 6 T. R. 53; Bishop v. Rowe, 3 M. & S. 362; Owenson v. Morse, 7 T. R. 64.) If a renewed bill be taken for the amount of a former bill, no action can be maintained upon the latter, even, for the recovery of expenses of noting, and postages, whilst, the first bill is current (Kendrick v. Lomax, 2 C. & J. 405.) Or, if the bill be waste paper, as being of no kind of value (Stedman v. Gooch, 1 Esp. 5; Camidge v. Allenby, 6 B. & C. 381; per Bayley, J., Hawse v. Crowe, Ry. & M. 414; Ch. B. 96,) or, drawn on a person who has no effects of drawer's in hand, and refuses to accept (Ib.; 12 Mo. 517,) or be a forgery (Camidge v. Allenby, supra.) The taking a bill, or, note does not prejudice a prior specialty security (2 V. & B. 416.) But, this would not be a good plea to an avowry for a distress for rent (Davis v. Gyde, 2 Ad. & E. 625.) Quere, whether, if, the bill of a third person were given for rent, or, a bill were given on the terms that the landlord was to wait, it would be otherwise (Ib.) Nor, to an action on a specialty debt (Worthington v. Wigley, 3 B. N. C. 454, and see infra.)

An express agreement by a creditor to take a bill, or, note as payment and incur the risk of its being honoured, will amount to a payment, or satisfaction of the debt, whether the bill, or, note be afterwards paid, or not (Owenson v. Morse, 7 T. R. 66; Brown v. Kewley, 2 B. & P. 518; see Ex parte Blackburn, 10 Ves. 206; Camidge v. Allenby, 6 B. & C. 381; Sard v. Rhodes, infra; Lewis v. Lyster, infra; and see Simon v. Lloyd, 2 C. M. & R. 187.) So, the acceptance of a promissory note, in satisfaction and discharge of a bill of exchange, is a good defence, though it is not paid (Sard v. Rhodes, 1 M. & W. 153; 4 D. P. C. 743; and see Lewis v. Lyster, ib. 377.) And a bill, or, note will, in favour of any party to it, who would be entitled to bring an action on paying it, operate as a satisfaction of any debt, or, demand for which it was given, if the receiver, or, holder make it his own by laches (Smith v. Wilson, Andr. 187; Hebden v. Hartsink, 4 Esp. 46; Ch. B. 804; Bay. 171; Bridges v. Berry, 3 Taun. 130;) as, if he do not present it in proper time for acceptance, or, *payment (Bishop v. Rowe, 3 M. & S. 362; Soward v. Palmer, 8 Taun. 279;) or, bind [*30] himself by agreement to allow an extra time for payment (Tindal v. Browne, 1 T. R. 167; Sproat v. Mathews, ib. 186;) or, neglect to give due notice of a failure in the attempt to procure a proper acceptance, or, payment: unless, indeed, in any of these cases the bill, or, note, were on an improper stamp (Bay. 172; see also 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, s. 7.) If a creditor take from his debtor a bill drawn by the latter upon a third person, and after the bill has been accepted, the creditor alter the bill in regard to the time of payment, he makes the bill his own, and it operates as a satisfaction of the original debt, although, it be dishonoured (Anderson v. Langdale, 3 B. & A. 660.) But, it is otherwise, where the debtor is acceptor of the bill, since, he cannot be prejudiced by the alteration (Atkinson v. Hawdon, 2 Ad. & E. 628.) And, if the holder, or, receiver lose the bill, it will, in some cases, be deemed a satisfaction of the debt (Pierson v. Hutchinson, 2 Camp. 211; Dangerfield v. Wilby, 4 Esp. 159; Ch. B. 9th ed. 254; Hansard v. Robinson, 7 B. & C. 90; Rolt v. Watson, 4 Bing. 273; Ramsay v. Crowe, 1 Exch. 167.) But, the remedy is not extinguished, it is only suspended until the bill, or, note be owned (Dent v. Dunn, 3 Campb. 296.) But, it is no answer to an action on a bill, &c., not payable to bearer or order, that the debt. has always been ready to pay the note on its being produced and delivered up to him (Wain v. Bayley, 2 P. & Dav. 507; post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE."*) Where an action is brought upon a bill, or, note, and also for goods sold, and the plt. proves the bill, or, note (without showing the consideration for it,) and also the goods sold, and it appears that the price became due before the bill, or, note was given, a presumption arises, that the instrument was given for the goods (Mutrie v. Harris, Moo. & Mal. 322.) And in an action on a note, and on a count for an attorney's bill for 300*l.*, it appeared that the note, which was for 87*l.* 4*s.*, was given at a time when business to the extent of 17*l.* only, was done; yet as the plt. gave no evidence as to the consideration for the note, Lord Tenterden, C. J., left it to the jury to say, whether the note was given in satisfaction of the bill for business done up to the time of its date, or, whether it was an entirely distinct transaction (King v. Martin, 3 C. & P. 347.)

When a renewed bill is taken and paid, the party cannot sue on the former bill which was left in his hands, although costs incurred on taking a warrant of attorney, as an additional security, were left unpaid contrary to agreement (Dillon v. Remmer, 1 Bing. 100; but see Norris v. Aylett, 2 Camp. 329.) unless the old bill be left as a collateral security; in which case, the plt. was allowed to recover interest due on it, at the time of giving the new bill, though, the latter had been paid (Lumley v. Musgrave, 4 Bing. N. C. 9; Lumley v. Hudson, ib. 15.)

A creditor does not lose his remedy against his original debtor for a precedent debt, by taking for it the bill, or, note (afterwards dishonoured) of an agent of the debtor without his consent, unless, by so doing, and giving the agent a receipt, the principal, the debtor, is induced to treat the demand as satisfied, and is thereby injured by dealing differently with his agent (Robinson v. Reid, 9 B. & C. 449; Ch. Contr. 772;) and where the seller of goods received from the purchaser an order upon his banker for the price, and the latter, with whom money was deposited for the purpose, offered to pay in cash, deducting discount for the period of credit, or, by a bill upon a third person, which the seller elected to take: held, that, although, the bill was afterwards dishonoured he could not sue the purchaser for the price of the goods (Smith v. Ferrand, 7 B. & C. 19; Strong v. Hart, 6 ib. 160.)

The taking the bill, or, note of one of several members of a firm for a *partnership debt, will not necessarily discharge the original claim [*31] against all the partners in the event of the instrument being dishonoured (3 Ch. C. L. 132; but, see David v. Ellice, 5 B. & C. 196; but see, also, Thompson v. Percival, 5 B. & Ad. 925; Kirwan v. Kirwan, 2 C. M. & R. 617; and ante, "PARTNERS."*)

There is a distinction between satisfaction and extinguishment, sometimes essential to be remembered: "as, the holder's claim upon a bill, or, note may be extinguished as to some parties, and remain entire as to others; but, if his claim is satisfied as to any, it is satisfied as to all" (Bay. 267). But a bill, or, note, to be a satisfaction for a debt, must be equivalent to, or, larger than the sum due. Therefore, where in an action for 1000*l.*, the deft. pleaded that, upon an account stated, he was found indebted in 400*l.*, and that he accepted a bill drawn upon him for that sum by the creditor, on account of the several promises, &c., it was held, that the giving a bill for 400*l.* was not, in point of law, a satisfaction for a debt of 1000*l.*, and that plt. might recover the difference (Thomas v. Heathorn, 2 B. & C. 477; Str. 426; Rolt v. Watson, 4 Bing. 273), unless, there be an additional security given, as, an undertaking by a third party (Steinman v. Magnus, 11 Ea. 390).

The debt between the intermediate parties to a bill, or, note which formed the consideration for the instrument may be inquired into, either wholly, or, in part, and the holder shall recover no more than the real amount of the debt due to him from the deft. (Ch. B. 9th ed. 76 to 79; Ch. Contr. 773). But even, between such parties, if the bill, &c. were given upon a special contract, which has not been entirely rescinded, and is not wholly void on account of fraud, the partial failure of consideration will afford no defence whatever, and the full amount of the bill shall be recovered, where the reduction claimed by the deft. from the amount, in respect of the plt.'s partial non-performance of the contract, involves a question of unliquidated damages, which are only recoverable by a cross action (Ch. B. 78; Ch. Contr. 773, 774; Lewis v. Cosgrave, 2 Taunt. 2; Archer v. Bamford, 3 Stark. R. 175). Thus, if a bill be given for the price of a horse delivered, and warranted sound, but, which is not so, and has not been received back by the plt., or, for the price of goods of less value than the price charged (Solomons v. Turner, 1 Stark. R. 51; Morgan v. Richardson, 1 Camp. 40; Tye v. Gwynne, 2 ib. 346; Obbard v. Betham, M. & Mal. 483; Wills v. Hopkins, 5 M. & W. 7; see Mann v. Lent, 10 B. & C. 877; Moggridge v. Jones, 14 East, 486; Spiller v. Westlake, 2 B. & Ad. 155; Day v. Nix, 9 Moore, 159).

Where it is part of the original terms of the contract for the sale of goods, that the price shall be paid by a bill or note, to be due at a future period, and the person who was to give the bill refuse, on request, the remedy during the period thus agreed upon for credit is a special action of assumpsit for not accepting, or, giving the bill, or, note, and the common count for goods sold will not be sustainable (Mussen v. Price, 4 East, 147; Brooke v. White, 1 N. R. 330; Taylor v. Briggs, M. & M. 30, n.). But if the action be brought, after the expiration of such credit, the common count is sufficient, and under it interest on the price of the goods from the time when the bill would have become due may be recovered as part of the estimated value of the goods (Farr v. Ward, 3 M. & W. 25). To a declaration in debt with three counts in 40*l.* each, for goods, work, and on an account stated, the deft. pleaded to the first and last counts, except as to 10*l.* and 9*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, parcel, &c., that the said debts except so far as they related to 9*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* accrued to the plt. for the delivery of clothes, and that it was afterwards agreed, that in consideration that the deft. would deliver to the plt. an acceptance of the Earl of M. for 25*l.*, with a blank space for the signature of the drawer, the plt. would discharge the deft. from all claim for clothes, if the acceptance should be paid in six months; and if it should not be paid in that time the deft. should be liable to pay to the plt. the sum of 10*l.* only on account of the clothes, and that the acceptance should be a full discharge of so much of the claim as should exceed 10*l.*; that the deft. delivered the acceptance, and that the same was not paid: held good (Curlewis v. Clark, 18 Law J. 144, Exch.).

2ndly. Pleas of Accord.

The Accord must be certain.] An accord that the deft. shall employ workmen in two, or, three days is bad (4 Mo. 88). An accord to pay a less sum on the same, or, at a subsequent day is bad (Fitch v. *Sutton, 5 [*32] Ea. 230); and performance of an uncertain accord will not aid the defect for deft. (3 Lev. 189; Yelv. 184).

When deft. pleaded that B. was indebted to him in a larger sum, and that, B. being in prison in Scotland as a debtor, defendant authorised plaintiff to receive from B. the said sum so due to him from defendant, and that plaintiff, instead of receiving the said sum from B., received from B. a bill of exchange "for and on account of the said sum," and that he appropriated and retained the said bill for and in liquidation and discharge of the said debt, and that he discharged B. from the debt, according to the law of Scotland:—Held, that the plea did not import either satisfaction, or, payment (Baillie v. Moore, 10 Jur. 592, Q. B.; 8 Q. B. 489.)

A plea in trespass that the plt. and deft. had agreed to settle all matters in dispute, and to bind themselves in a penalty not to sue each other, is bad (James v. David, 5 T. R. 141.) When certain stock of the plt.'s was transferred under a forged power of attorney, the Bank of England offered to replace the stock if the plt. would first prove the amount under a commission of bankruptcy, issued against the firm in which the forger of the power had been a partner. After this offer the plts. received a dividend, and engaged to tender proof of their demands under a commission of bankruptcy: held, that they could not sue the bank in respect of the stock, till, they had fulfilled their engagement to tender the proof under the commission (Stracey v. Bank of England, 6 Bing. 754;) observed on, in Allies v. Probyn, supra. In case for wrongfully causing a ca. sa. to be indorsed to levy more than was due, it appeared the deft. was discharged out of custody, by virtue of a judge's order, upon terms, constituting a new and mutual agreement embodied in the order. Parke, J. said, in considering the terms of this order, "I am inclined to think that there is evidence of a mutual agreement between the parties, upon good consideration to forego the action, for charging plt. in execution for too much, and an agreement, giving the plt. a remedy for the breach of it, or, an accord executed, where there was no remedy by action upon the accord itself, is a bar to an action for unliquidated damages" (Wentworth v. Bullen, 9 B. & C. 840.)

An action by indorsee against maker of a note, plea, that the note was made by deft. and one A. B., his partner, and that, whilst the plt. held the note, the deft. and A. B. delivered to the plt. nineteen signed bills of costs, &c., which were referred to taxation; that it was agreed that the balance found to be due from the plt. to the deft. and A. B. should be applied in part payment of the note; and the balance of the note, with interest, should be secured by a judgment, payable at certain periods, which had elapsed before the commencement of the suit; that the taxation had not been completed, and that the balance was not ascertained; that the deft. and A. B. had always been ready and willing to apply the balance due to the deft. towards the payment of the note, and to secure the balance due on the note by a judgment, in accordance with the agreement. Held, that the plea was bad on general demurrer (Carter v. Wormald, 1 Exch. 81; 5 D. & L. 131, Ex.)

The Accord must be executed.] An accord must be completely executed before it can produce any legal obligation, or, effect to extinguish the first debt, or, to create a new one (Reeves v. Hearne, 1 M. & W. 323; Lynn v.

Bruce, 2 H. Bl. 317;) and part execution of an accord and tender of the residue is insufficient (5 Co. R. 79 b; 2 H. Bl. 319; Walker v. Seaborne, 1 Taun. 526; Fitch v. Sutton, 5 Ea. 230.) An accord to do a thing at a future day is good, but it must be executed before action brought (1 Rol. Ab. 129, l. 14; Com. *Dig. Acc. B. 4.) But, if the accord be not founded on a new consideration, and be not so far binding on the debtor as [*33] to afford a fresh right of action to the creditor for its non-performance, an action lies on the original demand, even, before the time prescribed for rendering satisfaction (see Case v. Barber, T. Raym. 450; Wickham v. Taylor, Jones, 168; Peytoe's case, 9 Co. R. 79; Brown v. Wade, 2 Keb. 851.) An agreement subsequent to, and inconsistent with that declared on, is a good defence, if made before breach of the latter, and on a new consideration (Rippengale v. Lloyd, 5 B. & Ad. 742; Taylor v. Hilary, 16 M. & W. 741; Pearson v. Pearson, 5 B. & Ad. 864; Collingburne v. Mantell, 5 M. & W. 289.) And an agreement for a compensation with creditors is an answer to an action by a creditor who is party to it, for, it operates as a new agreement substituted by consent, and on good consideration for the original one, and not as accord and satisfaction (Good v. Chaseman, 2 B. & Ad. 335; Alchin v. Hopkins, 1 B. N. C. 102.) And, where there is an agreement to pay money, or, deliver goods in satisfaction, it is not sufficient to plead that he has always been ready to pay the money, or deliver the goods, or, even, a tender and refusal; but, there must be an actual acceptance thereof by plt. (Peytoe's case, 9 Co. R. 79; Allan v. Harris, Raym. 122; 2 N. R. 148; Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East, 251. If a party agree that the debtor shall pay a sum of money, or, perform some act at a future day as a satisfaction, this agreement is not available as a satisfaction before that period; so, where the agreement is to execute a mortgage (Allies v. Probyn, 5 Tyr. 1079,) or, to repair (Batley v. Homan, 3 Bing. N. C. 915; 5 Scott, 94; 3 Hodges, 184,) an averment of constant readiness to perform his part, &c., is not sufficient (Brown v. Wade, 2 Keb. 851; Com. Dig. Acc. B. 4.) The performance of one of two things stipulated for by an accord is insufficient; and, where it was agreed that plt. and deft. should deliver up respectively their parts of an indenture to be cancelled, it was held no satisfaction, though, deft. had delivered up his part (Russell v. Russell, 3 Lev. 189.) A plea to an indebitatus count, which stated that plt. was to pay himself out of some of deft.'s moneys which he was to receive, and that, through his own default he received nothing; was held bad, as being neither in accord, nor, satisfaction (Gifford v. Whittaker, 13 L. J. 325, Q. B.; 6 Q. B. 249; Griffith v. Owen, 13 M. & W. 58.)

By and to whom.] Satisfaction should proceed from the deft. (Edgecombe v. Rodd, 5 East, 294); for, if it be executed by a total stranger, the deft. cannot avail himself of it (Ib.; per two Js., Cro. E. 541; 1 Str. 24.) Accord and satisfaction by a co-partner is a bar to an action against the others (Peytoe's case, 9 Co. R. 79 b; 12 East, 317;) and though, part of the satisfaction is the setting off of a debt due to that co-partner from the plaintiff (Wallace v. Kelsal, 7 M. & W. 264;) and acceptance of satisfaction from one joint tort-feasor discharges the rest (Dufresne v. Hutchinson, 3 Taunt. 117; Thurman v. Wild, 11 A. & El. 453; 3 P. & Dav. 289.) As to satisfaction by an agent, see Hills v. Mesnard, 11 Jur. 795; 16 L. J. 306, Q. B.

The satisfaction must be to the party having the legal interest in the debt, and must be so pleaded (Scholey v. Mearns, 7 East, 148.) Accord and satisfaction to one of several co-plts. will be so to all (5 Co. R. 117 b.; 13 East, 4, 6,) and may be pleaded as made to him puis darrein continuance (Wallace v. Kelsal, 7 M. & W. 264, 8 Dowl. P. C. 841; 4 Jur. 1064.)

*Evidence for Defendant.

This will depend much on the state of the pleadings. If the deft. take issue directly on the plea, the affirmative of the issue lies on the deft. Where the replication denies the payment, or, delivery and acceptance, or, the acceptance only (Ridley v. Tindal, ante,) in satisfaction, the deft. must prove both, and that the article, &c., was so paid and received as a satisfaction, and prove expressly the actual acceptance by the plt. Where on an issue as to the acceptance of a bill of exchange in satisfaction, the judge directed the jury, that if, the bill were such an one as, by the course of dealing between the parties, the plts. were bound to take, that was an acceptance in full satisfaction: it was held a misdirection, for acceptance in satisfaction must be an act of the will in the party receiving (Hardman v. Bellhouse, 9 M. & W. 596.) So, where, to a declaration on an agreement signed more than 20 years back, the deft. pleads a new contract and performance in satisfaction, he must prove the plea, and it will not be left to the jury to presume satisfaction of the original contract from lapse of time (Siboni v. Kirkman, 1 M. & W. 418.) A plea that the plt. drew and the deft. accepted a bill for 60*l.* in satisfaction, &c., is not supported by proof that the deft. remitted to the plt. a blank acceptance, with the words "nine months after date," written in the body, and 60*l.* in the margin, and that it was subsequently filled up by the plt. for 46*l.* only (Baker v. Jubber, 8 Dowl. P. C. 538; 1 M. & G. 212; 1 Scott, N. R. 26.) So, a plea, by acceptor of a bill for 100*l.* 6*s.*, of payment by the drawer to the plts. (the indorsees) is not supported by proof that the plts., who were bankers, on the bill being returned unpaid, entered it on the debit side of the drawer's (a customer of theirs) account thus: "B.'s (deft.'s) return, 100*l.* 6*s.*;" that the state of the account was then, and up to the commencement of the action against the drawer, to the amount of 400*l.*, and that the bankers had, on former occasions, allowed him to overdraw to the extent of 500*l.* or, 600*l.*, but, there was no agreement that they should do so (Ryder v. Willett, 7 C. & P. 609; see Belcher v. Lloyd, 3 M. & Scott, 822; 10 Bing. 310.) It seems, that on taking from a debtor the bill of a third person the omission to require the debtor's indorsement is not per se sufficient proof that he was not to be liable for the precedent debt, if, the bill were dishonoured (Gross v. Blackburn, 10 Ves. 206.) It is a question for a jury whether a bill has been taken on account, or, in satisfaction of a debt claimed; if the latter, the deft. cannot be sued, in any event, for the original debt; if the former, he may in general be sued when the bill has become due and is unpaid (Goldshede v. Cottrel, 2 M. & W. 20.) Though, whatever amounts to accord and satisfaction must be pleaded, and cannot be given in evidence under the general issue (Alexander v. Strong, 9 M. & W. 733; 2 Dowl. N. S. 256; Weston v. Foster, 3 Scott, 155; 2 Bing. N. C. 693; 2 Hodges, 59;) yet where an agreement to accept a certain sum in full discharge was received without objection, under the plea of nunquam indebitatus, and the plt. recovered only nominal damages, the court would not disturb the verdict (Wright v. Skinner, 4 Dowl. P. C. 741.) Assumpsit; plea, that plts. in E. T. 1827, impleaded defts. for same cause of action, and in T. T. pleaded thereto the general issue, and paid 5*l.* 15*s.* into court; that plts.'s costs were taxed at 8*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, and that they agreed with him to take the sum of 5*l.* 15*s.* out of court; that defts. paid the costs to the plts., and that they accepted, &c. the 5*l.* 15*s.* together with those costs in satisfaction and discharge,

&c. Replication, that plts. did not agree with defts, to take and receive the 5*l.* 15*s.* out of court, and did not accept, &c. the same together with *the costs in satisfaction and discharge, &c. It appeared [*35] the plts. received their taxed costs, but gave notice to the defts.'s that they would not receive the 5*l.* 15*s.* out of court, and that they should take out a rule to discharge the action on payment of costs; the 5*l.* 15*s.* remained in court; the latter costs were taxed and paid. Held, that the plts. in having received the amount of their costs could not be considered as having accepted the 5*l.* 15*s.*, together with those costs in satisfaction, &c., and that if in point of law it could have been so considered, the defts. ought to have pleaded that matter specially, and that the deft. having received his costs had assented to the discontinuance of the action upon the terms of the rule to discontinue (Power v. Barham, W. B. & C. 399.)

In trespass q. c. f. defts. pleaded that they acted as servants of B., who was no party to the suit, that they delivered up possession of the close to him; that afterwards, with the consent of the defts., they made satisfaction to the plt., which was accepted: it was held, that whether, or, not satisfaction by a stranger could be pleaded, it appeared, by the plea in this case, that B. was a co-trespasser, so as to be able to make a satisfaction which should enure to the benefit of all the defts. (Thurman v. Wilde, 3 P. & D. 289; Edgcombe v. Rodd, 5 East, 294; Grymes v. Blofield, Cro. E. 541; Com. Dig. Acc. A, 2, 5).

Evidence for the Plaintiff.

This also will depend entirely on the state of the pleadings. The nature of the evidence, generally, with which the plt. should be prepared, may be collected from the foregoing observations on the "Evidence for the Defendant."

The taking a bill, &c., for a debt is prima facie, or, presumptive discharge, or, payment of the demand, and it becomes necessary for the creditor to rebut the inference (1 Ch. Contr. 770). To constitute an acceptance, there must be an act of the will. Every receipt is not an acceptance; but if the party accepts the bill, though, but, for a moment, for that, for which the other pays it, he cannot afterwards by his subsequent dissatisfaction get rid of the effect of it (Hardman v. Bellhouse, 9 M. & W. 680). The acceptance must be clearly proved; the jury cannot infer it from the course of dealing between the parties (Ib.). Where a creditor has taken a bill, or, note of a third party for the former debt, and upon its dishonour, brings an action for such original debt, and the debtor shows, at the trial, that a bill, or, note was taken on account thereof, it is incumbent on the creditor to prove those circumstances which obviate the effect of taking the bill and revive the original demand; as, that reasonable diligence was used to obtain payment from the acceptor, or, maker (3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, s. 7; Bridges v. Berry, 3 Taunt. 130); unless, indeed, the debtor is not a party to the bill, or, note, in which case, he cannot, it seems, require strict proof of presentment for payment, or, that he had formal notice of dishonour; indeed, he cannot defend even, where no presentment has been made, or notice given, if it appear he was not thereby prejudiced (Holbrow v. Wilkins, 1 B. & C. 10; Van Wert v. Woolley, 3 B. & C. 439; Murray v. King, 5 B. & Ad. 165; Swinyard v. Bowes, 5 M. & Sel. 52; see Goodwin v. Coates, 1 M. & R. 21); and where a note, not negotiable, is indorsed by a debtor to his creditor on account of a debt, which is dishonoured by the maker, the right to sue for the original debt revives, though, no notice of dishonour has been given to the debtor (Plimley v. Westley, 2 B. N. C. 249). If the debtor were the acceptor, or, maker of the bill, or, note, although, he is not entitled to presentment, &c., yet, if, the creditor sue him for the original demand, and it appear [*36] that the bill was given *on account thereof, the plt. must produce it to show its dishonour, and that it is not held by a third person, or, that it was upon a wrong stamp (see Cundy v. Marriot, 1 B. & Ad. 696; Wilson v. Vysart, 4 Taunt. 288); or, must show that it was dishonoured, and has been destroyed, or that it is within his control, as, that it lies protested for dishonour in the hands of his foreign agents (see Hadwell v. Mendizabell, 10 Moore, 477; Barden v. Halton, 4 Bigh. 454). In this case the action was for the price of the goods, for which the bills had been given by deft.; plt. produced the bills overdue and dishonoured at the trial, but, it appeared, that when the action was brought the bills were in the hands of third parties who sent them before the trial to the plt., without any money passing, but, there was no evidence that those parties held the bills for value. Held, that the action was maintainable. Seemle, that if it had appeared that the third parties held the bills for value, when the action was brought, it could not have been maintained (Ib.).

Form of Pleadings.

Plea.] The plea must be specially pleaded (R. G. H. T. 1834). Where the bond is taken in satisfaction it must be specially pleaded, if, given after the original debt has been contracted (see Weston v. Forster, 2 B. N. C. 693). Aliter, when the bond is given at the time such debt accrues, in the latter instance the specialty excludes the implied promise, and the general issue suffices (Ib.; see Yates v. Aston, 4 Q. B. 182; 3 M. & G. 213), and an averment in the plea of payment of the bond, or, bill would render it bad for duplicity (Wright v. Watts, 3 Q. B. 89). The plea must be framed so as to afford a complete answer to the whole of the demand it professes to answer (Thomas v. Heathorn, 2 B. & C. 477; 2 Chit. R. 303). The safest way is to plead it as a satisfaction, and not to state the accord and agreement (Com. Dig. Acc. C); the plea must allege the delivery (Step. Pl. 331), and set out what the deft. gave in satisfaction. It seems unnecessary to allege the satisfaction to be reasonable, according to the dictum in 1 Stra. 426, which was overruled, Heathcote v. Crookshank, 2 T. R. 26, a; nor does it seem generally necessary or advisable to allege the whole of the satisfaction (Step. Pl. supra; 3 Ch. Pl. 925, n. a). It must be expressly averred that the goods were accepted in satisfaction and discharge; and an averment that they were given in payment and satisfaction is insufficient (Drake v. Mitchel, 3 Ea. 256-8; 1 Str. 573). So, where a tenant had covenanted to pay 25*l.* rent and 5*l.* additional rent for every acre newly brought into tillage, a plea of acceptance of 25*l.* "as and for all rent due without demanding or requiring payment of such penalty or additional rent," was held bad on demurrer (Denton v. Richmond, 1 C. & M. 734). If the plea profess to answer the whole demand, but apply to part only, it will be fatal on demurrer (1 Saun. 28, n. 3); therefore if, in assumpsit on several promises, defendant allege satisfaction "of the cause of action," it is bad, "being only an answer to one of the causes of action" (Hopkinson v. Tahourdin, 2 Chit. R. 303; Willes, 55; Thomas v. Heathorn, 2 B. & C. 477; S. C. 3 D. & R. 647). It is necessary to mention the kind of goods (Morley v. Culverwell, 7 M. & W. 180; see Siboni v. Kirkman, 1 M. & W. 418). It is not required that the chattels should be of equal value with the debt (Andrew v. Boughey, Dyer 72, a; Thompson v. Percival, 5 B. & Ad. 932, per Lord Denman, C. J.; and see Mitchell v. Craig, 10 M. & W. 367). A plea of composition with creditors is bad, even after verdict, for not stating that the payments were made at the times provided for by the accord; or, at least, a tender made of them (Evans v. Powis, 11 Jur. 1043, Ex.).

*Action by the drawer against the acceptor of two bills of exchange for 30*l.*, and 41*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* respectively; plea as to 13*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*, parcel of the first count, and to all the second count, that deft. being indebted to the plt. in respect to the causes of action in the first and second counts mentioned, and to one E. B. in certain other large sums of money, and unable to pay them their debts in full, agreed with them to pay to the plt. 11*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, in part of the debts in the first and second counts mentioned, and to pay to them 10*s.* in the pound as a composition, in full satisfaction and discharge of the residue of the plts.' debt and of the debt of E. B., by certain payments at certain times mentioned in the plea, concluding with an averment of readiness and willingness to pay, with a tender of the amount of the composition, and a subsequent payment of it into court, held bad. Semble, per curiam, that if, the plea had been, that a new mutual agreement between the plt., the deft., and E. B., binding on each at the time when it was made, was given as a substitution for, or, in satisfaction of the debt due from the deft. to the plt., it would have been good; and in that case, it would be a question for a jury to decide whether the plt. agreed to accept the agreement itself, not the performance of it, as a satisfaction for his debt (Evans v. Powis, 11 Jur. 1043, Ex.)

A plea of accord and satisfaction after action brought should allege a payment in discharge, not only, of the promises and undertakings in the declaration, but, of all costs and damages accrued by reason of the non-performance of those promises and undertakings (per Abbott, C. J., 5 B. & A. 886; 1 D. & R. 546.) Therefore, a plea in satisfaction "of the promises and undertakings in the declaration mentioned" is bad on demurrer, as, not answering the costs (Francis v. Crywell, ib.; but a plea "in full satisfaction and discharge of all damages sustained" is good on general demurrer (Corbell v. Swinburne, 3 N. & P. 551; 8 Ad. & E. 673. Semble, as "damages" include costs, per Ellenborough, C. J., Phillips v. Bacon, 9 Ea. 304; and per Abinger, C. B., in Henry v. Earl, 8 M. & W. 233.) In the latter case it was held that a plea "in full satisfaction and discharge of all the causes of action in the declaration mentioned" was good as to so much as it covered, and that the plt. might sign judgment for the part unanswered and for costs as part of the damages (Ib. and 5 Jur. 528; 8 Dowl. P. C. 725.)

A plea of satisfaction to one of three plts. need not aver authority from the other plts. to make the settlement, nor need it be proved (Wallace v. Kelsall, 7 M. & W. 264.)

If the plea be of a bill, a note, or security, it may be pleaded as "given in satisfaction, or, on account or "in discharge" (see Emblin v. Dartnell, 1 D. & L. 591;) but it should be pleaded only, to the amount of the sum contained in such bill, note, or security, or allege that deft. was found indebted in that sum and "no more" (Thomas v. Heathorn, 2 B. & C. 481.) The correct way of pleading is to say, "as to all the sums of money except £—, non assumpsit;" and then, as to that sum, that the bill was accepted, &c. The plea should show that the bill was accepted as well as given on account, or, in satisfaction (Crisp v. Griffiths, 2 C. M. & R. 124; Senior v. Lloyd, 3 D. P. C. 752.) A plea to an action on a simple-contract debt, that the deft., who was the payee of a note, &c., indorsed it to the plt. for, and on account of, the debt, should negative that the note is overdue and unpaid, but, it is otherwise where the bill, &c. is pleaded as having been given in satisfaction (Sard v. Rhodes, 1 M. & W. 153; Senior v. Lloyd, 3 D. P. C. 814.) A plea averring the acceptance of one bill of exchange in satisfaction and discharge of another, which appeared from the declaration to be negotiable, and payment of the amount *to the holder (a third [*38] party) at maturity is good on special demurrer, without averring that the second or substituted bill was negotiable (Lewis v. Lyster, 4 Dowl. P. C. 377.) Accord and satisfaction by one deft. is in general a bar for all (Com. Dig. Acc.; Hillman v. Ancles, Skin. 391; Thompson v. Percival, 5 B. & Ad. 932;) but, in an action against one of two obligors severally and jointly liable, an acceptance of a smaller sum in compromise of the action is no bar to a future action, against the other obligor (Field v. Robins, 8 Ad. & E. 91.) Action against acceptors of a bill for 419*l.* 2*s.*: damages 500*l.*; plea, first, as to 4*l.* 18*s.* parcel, &c., payment of 5*l.* into court; and, secondly, "as to the residue of the sum mentioned in the declaration," that the plts. were the brokers of C. I. H., and sold certain property for him for 415*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, payable on a day which would arrive before the bill would become due, and that he applied to the plts. to advance him the amount, which they agreed to do, if C. I. H. would procure the defts. to accept a bill for 419*l.* 2*s.*, and that the plts. agreed to appropriate the purchase-money, when received by them, towards the payment of the bill; and that, thereupon, the defts. for the accommodation of C. I. H., and without consideration, accepted the bill, and the plts. advanced C. I. H. 415*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, and afterwards, and before the bill became due, they received the purchase-money, viz., the 415*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, which was sufficient to satisfy the residue of the sum in the declaration mentioned, and all damages, &c. Held, that these facts being proved, were a good answer to the action; secondly, that they were evidence of a payment to the plts. by the defts., through the agency of C. I. H., of 415*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*; thirdly, that the defts. were, as between the plts. and themselves, entitled to credit for the full sum of 415*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, without reference to a claim which the plts. had on C. I. H. for a sum of 3*l.* 15*s.*, which was admitted to be due by him to them, by virtue of an agreement respecting the mode of paying the brokerage; lastly, that the pleas, though informally pleaded to the sum mentioned in the declaration, yet, must be taken after verdict to apply to the sum mentioned in the bill (Hills v. Mesnard, 16 Law J. 306, Q. B.; 11 Jur. 795.)

A plea of accord without satisfaction is bad on general demurrer (Cannan v. Read, 10 Law J. 242, C. P.) To assumpsit for money lent, &c., a plea that deft. at plt.'s request entrusted and authorized the plt. to collect several sums of money then due to the deft. exceeding the sum due to the plt. and out of those moneys to pay himself, and that plt. afterwards neglected to collect those moneys, and that they thereby became lost to the deft. is a bad plea in accord and satisfaction (Gifford v. Whittaker, 8 Jur. 1134, Q. B.; Bailey v. Moore, 10 Jur. 592.) A plea of delivery of goods to a third party at plt.'s request and an agreement, "then, to wit on the day and year aforesaid," (the day of delivery,) by the plt. to accept such delivery in satisfaction and discharge is bad on a special demurrer, as not showing with sufficient certainty that the agreement was contemporaneous with the delivery (Stead v. Poyer, 9 Jur. 856; 1 C. B. 782.)

Replication.] Formerly the mode of replying was to deny the delivery or payment in satisfaction, and protest against the acceptance, or vice versa (Steph. Pl.; per Pattenon, J., 7 Ad. & El. 135; Hob. 178; Young v. Rudd, 5 Mod. 86;) but protestations are no longer allowed (R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 2, pl. 12.) Where the receipt is confessed the acceptance should not be traversed (1 T. Ray. 60.) The replication may take issue on either allegation (Pinnel's case, 5 Rep. 117, a; per Tindal, C. J., 1 Scott, 479; or on both, Webb v. Weatherby, ib. 477;) and a replication alleging that the plt. did not

action for use and occupation, the deft. pleaded, first, that the plt. seized goods of the deft. sufficient to pay the rent and costs, and detained them for two years, and it was then agreed between them that the plt. should retain the goods in satisfaction of the debt, and that he did so accordingly: secondly, that after a wrongful seizure of goods of sufficient value, &c. the plt. and the deft. agreed that the plt. should retain the goods, and that they should relinquish their claims on each other: thirdly, that they agreed that the plt. should retain the goods so seized, and that they should relinquish their claims, and the deft. should give up possession. Replications, traversing the seizure of goods of sufficient value, &c. Demurrer: Held, that the pleas were good, and that the replications were bad for putting in issue matter which was only inducement to the acceptance in satisfaction, such acceptance being the material part of the pleas (Jones v. Sawkins, 17 Law J. 92, C. P.) If the deft. plead that he delivered a bill or note in payment, plt. may traverse the plea; or, admitting it, show that the bill or note has been dishonoured (Kearslake v. Morgan, 5 T. R. 513.) The plt. replied, that when the bill became payable the party who had endorsed it to the deft. did not pay, of which the deft. afterwards, &c., to wit, on the 3d of December, &c., "had notice." Held, good on demurrer, it not being necessary to say "due notice" (Cook v. Gell, 10 Law T. 205, Q. B.) So, in debt for money had and received, &c., the deft. pleaded, that, after the accruing of the debts and causes of action, the deft. executed a deed, securing to the plt. a certain annuity, which he accepted and received in full satisfaction and discharge of all the said several debts, and causes of action. Replication, that no memorial of the annuity deed was inrolled pursuant to the statute; that the annuity being in arrear, the plt. brought an action to recover the amount of the arrears; that the deft. pleaded in bar of that action the non-inrolment of the memorial; and that thereupon, the plt. elected and agreed that the indenture should be null and void, as pleaded by the deft. and, discontinued the action. Held, a good answer to the plea, inasmuch, as, it showed that the accord and satisfaction, thereby set up, had been rendered nugatory and unavailing by the act of the deft. himself (Turner v. Browne, 3 C. B. 157; 4 D. & L. 201.) Where the plea states an acceptance of the bill or note "for and on account of," as in the common form, or "in discharge of" the debt, if the replication traverse that the acceptance was "in satisfaction and discharge," it is bad on special demurrer, as traversing what is not alleged (Emblin v. Dartnell, 1 Dowl. & L. 591.) Where the plea alleged an agreement to re-deliver brandy in satisfaction of a bill and a re-delivery, and acceptance of the brandy in pursuance of the agreement, a replication traversing the agreement and its performance by the re-delivery of the brandy was held bad for duplicity (De Wolf v. Beavan, 2 D. & L. 345; 13 M. & W. 160.) When a plea averred a set-off on account of a debt due from plt. to deft. and then alleged, that an account and settlement of that debt, and of the debts in declaration, was accepted by plt. in accord and satisfaction; held, sufficient in the replication to allege merely, that plt. was not indebted in manner and form, &c. (Scarmoretti v. Grandine, 5 M. & W. 658.)

If the deft. plead a payment or delivery, C., after action brought in satisfaction "of the causes of action in the declaration," the plt. may sign judgment for costs and damages (Henry v. Earl, ante, p. 37.) So, if he plead in satisfaction of the "damages," and the payment did not include costs, the plt. may take issue (Ib., and *Corbett v. Swinburne, [*40] supra.) In replying to a plea of accord and satisfaction in trespass, plt. may deny the accord, or state it to be for another trespass, and traverse the acceptance in satisfaction; or he may reply, that deft. was guilty after the accord (Com. Dig. M, 13;) or, if necessary, new assign. As to when it is unnecessary to new assign in assumpsit, see James v. Lingham, 5 Bing. N. C. 553; in debt, Freeman v. Crofts, 4 M. & W. 4; Monkman v. Shepherdson, 11 Ad. & El. 411; in trover, Branker v. Molyneux, 1 M. & G. 710.

A replication denying the delivery, or, receipt, &c., in satisfaction must conclude to the country (1 Saund. 103 c, n.)

Precedents.

Plea of accord and satisfaction, in assumpsit, by delivery of goods.

The deft. by A. B., his attorney [or if a second plea, "and for a further plea the deft.] says that, after the making of the said several promises [or if in debt, after the accruing of the several causes of action] in the declaration mentioned, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c., the deft. delivered to the plt. one ton of Riga hemp, and one hundredweight of Russian tallow, in full satisfaction and discharge of the several promises [or causes of action] in the declaration mentioned, and of each and every of them: and which said ton of Riga hemp, and said hundredweight of Russian tallow, he, the said plt., then accepted and received, of and from the deft., in full satisfaction and discharge of the said several promises [or causes of action] in the declaration mentioned, and of each and every of them. And this, &c. (Usual verification.)

Same, and delivery of bill of exchange, which is in the hands of a third party.

[Copy to the Asterisk]* An account was had and stated, by and between the plt. and deft., of and concerning the said several sums of money in the declaration mentioned, and upon that occasion the deft. was found in arrear and indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £—, for which said sum of £—, the plt. made his bill of exchange, in writing, and directed the same to the deft., and thereby required the deft. to pay to the plt.'s order the said sum of £—, for value received, two months after the date thereof, and the defendant at the request of the plt., then accepted the said bill, and delivered the same to the plt., who then accepted and received the same in discharge of the said sum of £—, and then indorsed and delivered the same to a certain person, to the deft. unknown, who from thence hitherto has been, and still is the holder thereof, and entitled to sue the defendant upon the same. And this, &c.

The like in covenant or debt.

[Commencement as usual] says that he, the deft., before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c., paid to the plt. the sum of £—, in full satisfaction and discharge of the said sum of £—, in the said breach of covenant mentioned, and of all the damages by the plt. sustained, by reason of the nonpayment thereof, which said sum of £— the plt. then accepted and received of and from the said deft., in full satisfaction and discharge of the said sum of £—, in the said breach of covenant mentioned, and of the damages of the plt. by him sustained, by reason thereof. And this, &c.

Plea of accord and satisfaction in trespass.

[If necessary, actio non, as usual, see "Trespass."] Because he says, that, after the committing of the said trespasses, as aforesaid, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c., he, the deft., paid to the plt. the sum of £— for, and in full satisfaction and discharge of the said trespasses in the said declaration mentioned; and which said sum of £—, he, the plt., then accepted and received of and from the deft., in full satisfaction and discharge of the said trespasses, and each and every of them, &c. (Usual conclusion: see "Trespass;" for the general issue, see ib.)

Plea of payment after action brought.

And for a further plea in this behalf, the deft. says that the plt. ought not further to maintain his aforesaid action thereof against him, because he saith, that [*41] after the making of the said promises in the said declaration mentioned, *and after the issuing of the writ in this cause against the deft. to wit, on, &c., [day of payment or about] he the deft. paid to the plt. a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of £—, in full satisfaction and discharge of the said several promises, in the said declaration mentioned, and also of all damages sustained by the plt. by reason of the non-performance of such promises, and also of all the costs then incurred and sustained by the plt. in this suit, and which said sum of £—, he the plt. then accepted and received of and from the deft. in full satisfaction of the said promises, damages and costs. And this the deft. is ready to verify, wherefore he prays judgment if the plt. ought further to maintain his aforesaid action against him.

Replication to a plea of satisfaction in assumpsit.

And the plt. "as to the plea of the deft. by him above pleaded," [or if the replication is in maintenance of part only of the count, "as to the plea of the deft. by him above pleaded, as to the said sum of £—, parcel," &c.] [or if the plea commence with actionem non, the plt. says that, by reason of any thing in the said plea alleged, he ought not to be barred from having and maintaining his aforesaid action against the deft., because he says] that he, the plt., did not accept [or, if there has been no delivery whatever, that he, the deft., did not deliver] the said one ton of Rigi hemp and the said one hundredweight of Russia tal. low, in full satisfaction and discharge of the said promises and undertakings and causes of action, and of all the sums of money in the said declaration mentioned, in manner and form as the deft. hath above alleged. And this the plt. prays may be inquired of by the country, &c.

Replication to plea of delivery of promissory note, denying the delivery.

And the plt. [precludi non, if necessary.] Because he says, that the deft. did not make and deliver to him, the plt., the said promissory note in the said plea mentioned, for and on account of the said sum of £—, parcel of the said several sums of money in the said declaration mentioned, and the said several promises and undertakings relating thereto; nor did the plt. take or receive of and from the deft. the said promissory note, for and on account of the same sum of £—, and the said promise and undertakings relating thereto, in manner and form as the plt. hath above, in his said plea in that behalf, alleged. And this the plt. prays may be inquired of by the country, &c. (If a good note or bill has in fact been given, plt. should then reply the non-payment as follows:—)

Replication to a plea of delivery of a bill of exchange accepted on account, that the bill was dishonoured.

Says, that the said bill of exchange in the said plea mentioned bore date on a certain day and year therein, in that behalf mentioned, to wit, &c., and that the same became due and payable long before the commencement of this suit. And the plt. further says that after the said bill became due and payable according to the tenor and effect thereof, and before the commencement of the suit, to wit, &c., the said bill was shown and presented to the defendant for payment thereof, but that he the defendant did not, nor would when he was so requested as aforesaid, or at any other time before the commencement of this suit, pay the said sum of money in the said bill specified, or any part thereof, but wholly neglected and refused so to do, and the said sum of money in this bill mentioned at the time of the commencement of this suit was, and still is wholly due and unpaid, and the plt. at the time of the commencement of this suit was, and still is the holder of the said bill. And this the plt. is ready to verify, &c.

See a form of plea bad on special demurrer as being a plea of accord without satisfaction as to part of the declaration, and as to the other amounting to the general issue, Collingbourne v. Mantell, 5 M. & W. 289; 7 Dowl. 518; 3 Jur. 847; and also a form which was held to be a plea of a substituted agreement, and not of accord and satisfaction, Taylor v. Hilary, 1 C. M. & R. 741. See other forms of pleas and replications, 3 Ch. Pl.; 3 Wentw. Prec. 135, and index to vol. 6. A form of plea of delivery of one bill of exchange in satisfaction of another, 4 Dowl. P. C. 377.

*ACCOUNT—ACTION OF.

[*42]

This form of action is now seldom used. See, as to it, Bac. Ab. Accompt; Vin. Ab. Account; Baxter v. Hosier, 7 Scott, 233; 5 Bing. N. C. 288; Sturton v. Richardson, 2 D. & L. 182; 13 M. & W. 17; Eason v. Henderson, Q. B., 18 Dec. 1848. See a form of declaration, 3 Ch. Pl. 565.

Action of Account.] A. being the clerk and manager of B., the sheriff of Montreal, received and paid in that capacity various sums of money on B.'s account, in the course of the business of the office. B. brought an action against the representatives of A. for an account of the receipts and application of the moneys which passed through A.'s hands while in B.'s office: held, in such circumstances, by the Judicial Committee, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal of Lower Canada, that such action would not lie against A.'s representatives (Ermantinger v. Gugsy, 5 E. F. Moo. 1).

A tenant in common who occupies and takes the whole produce derived from the culture of the common property, the whole expense of which is sustained by himself, but receives no rent or any other profit in respect of the property, is liable to account to his co-tenant under 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 27 (Eason v. Henderson, 13 Jur. 150; 18 Law J., Q. B. 69).

The receipt by one co-tenant of the whole profits is prima facie a receipt of more than his just share, and will render him liable to render an account to his co-tenant as bailiff, though on taking such account it may turn out that he is a creditor, not a debtor (Ib.).

Therefore in an action of account by a tenant in common against the executor of his co-tenant, the declaration stated that testator had the care and management of the whole to receive and take the rents and profits, to the use and profit of plt. and testator, and as bailiff of plt. of what he should receive more than his just share and proportion to render a reasonable account to plt. The testator was in the sole occupation, and received the whole profits, but no part was underlet; he received no rents, issues, or profits, other than the produce and profits derived from the culture of the lands to the expense of which plt. in no way contributed: held, that deft.'s testator was properly charged under sect. 27 of stat. 4 Anne, c. 16, as bailiff (Ib.).

Amount Stated.] In an action on an attorney's bill, if plt. fail on the count for work and labour, because no bill has been delivered, he cannot recover under a count upon an account stated, though he prove that the charges were assented to by the client (Brooks v. Bockett, 9 Q. B. 847); and to the latter count it is a good plea that the account was stated solely of and concerning charges for work done as an attorney, and that no bill was delivered (Scadding v. Eyles, 9 Q. B. 858).

Form of Remedy.] The form of Remedy to recover money due upon an account stated is by an action of debt or assumpsit (Cro. E. 654). The difficulty and intricacy of the account makes no difference (5 Taunt. 431).

Form of Pleadings, &c.

Declaration.] It is advisable in declarations in assumpsit, and in debt (except in actions against infants) to insert an account on an account stated, and by the R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. this count may be joined with any other count for a money demand, although, it may not be intended to establish a distinct subject-matter of complaint in respect of each of such counts; but then his failure to establish it will subject the plt. to the costs of the issue (R. G. H. T. 2 Will. IV.). The acknowledgment by the deft. that a certain sum is due creates an implied promise to pay the amount, and it is not necessary to set forth the subject-matter of the original debt (Milward v. Ingram, 2 Mod. 44; Foster v. Allanson, 2 T. R. 480); the sum in the count alleged to be due is not material (Rolls v. Barns, 1 Bl. R. 65; Roades v. Barnes, 1 Burr. 9); it suffices to state that the deft. was found indebted in any sum large enough to cover the demand (2 Saund. 122, n. 3). In an action against A., B., and C. the wife of B., in order to give in evidence a promise by A. before the marriage of B. & C. to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, a count on such promise before marriage must be added (Pittam v. Forster, 1 B. & C. 248).

Care must be taken that it meets the evidence. Therefore in actions by or against executors, &c., if it be material for the plt. to avail himself of a promise or acknowledgment since the death of the testator, &c., a count should be added, on an account stated to or by the executor, &c., in that character; otherwise *such promise or acknowledgment [*43] cannot be given in evidence (Sarell v. Wine, 3 Ea. 409; Willes 29; 1 Ch. Pl. 186, 308). An account stated by the deft. as executor or administrator of moneys due from the testator, &c., may be supported and joined with counts upon promises by the testator or intestate (2 Saun. 117 e); and a count on an account stated by an executor, as such, of moneys due and owing from him in that character, may be joined with counts on promises by the testator (Powell v. Graham, 7 Taun. 580; S. C. 1 Moore, 305).

Plea.] There is nothing peculiar relating to the plea, which is usually non assumpsit, or, nunquam indebitatus. See "ASSUMPSIT," "DEBT." If the account be stated and agreed of what is due for growing crops not previously severed, it is a valid plea that there was no contract in writing signed within the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3, s. 4), but, if, this account has been stated after the severance that fact might be replied (Falmouth (Earl) v. Thomas, 3 Tyrw. 26.) Nil debet is not pleadable (1 Ch. Pl.)

A plea that the plt. and deft. were partners, and that their accounts were not adjusted, is bad, as amounting to the general issue (Worrall v. Grayson, 1 M. & W. 166; see "PARTNERS.") Nor can the deft. plead the general issue by statute (Calvert v. Moggs, 10 Ad. & E. 632; but see Hankey v. Cobb, 1 Q. B. 494.) If the account is stated of a debt due of a third person to the plt., and which deft. promised to pay without any consideration, this is a defence on the general issue (French v. French, 2 M. & Gr. 644.)

Where the plt.'s particulars do not show that he intends to proceed on a distinct cause of action on the account stated, it is usual, and it seems, sufficient to plead non assumpsit to that count, and the special plea to the count on the original debt (see Eike v. Nokes, 4 M. & Sc. 585.) But, if the par-particulars are so framed as to enable the plt. to recover for them, independently of the other claim, then the defence should be specially pleaded to those items which form the consideration for the account stated to that count specially (see Arthur v. Dutch, 2 Jur. 118, Ex.; Ch. Pl. by Pearson, 241.) Where a plea pleaded to a count for work, and also, to another count on an account stated, averred matter of defence applicable only to the work: held bad, for want of an averment that the account was stated concerning the work mentioned in the first count (Rayner v. Wright, 3 Q. B. 922.) A plea pleaded to 20*l.* parcel of the first count, and also to 20*l.* parcel of the count on the account stated, averring that they were the same debt, and then answering 20*l.* only, is good (Mee v. Tomlinson, 4 Ad. & E. 262.) But a plea as to 4*l.* parcel of the sums in the first count mentioned, averring that, that was the same debt as a sum of 4*l.* parcel of the count on the account stated, and then answering 4*l.*, was held bad, as answering in the body of it two sums, while professing in its commencement to answer only one (Shand v. Rawlinson, 5 M. & W. 468; but see Foot v. Baker, 5 M. & G. 335, n. b.) It is observed that as the plt. claims two sums in the two counts, the account stated must be understood as alleged by the plt. to have been stated of sums other than that separately demanded in the first count, whether it be so expressed in the count or not, and so the plea would be bad for duplicity, for the plea, besides the special answer, operates as a plea of nunquam indebtedatus to the last count, and to an undivided moiety of both counts, but quare. See Hopkins v. Logan, where deft. pleaded that the account was stated of and concerning a specialty debt not then due (7 Dowl. 361;) but this would seem to amount to non assumpsit. See a plea that the debts stated in the indebtedatus count, and on the account stated, are one and the [*44] same *sum and payment, or other defence to that sum (Guttie v. Field, H. T. 1846, Q. B.; Hammond v. Dayson, April 1846, Ex.).

Precedents.

This count is now usually joined with other counts, and generally runs thus: "And for money found to be due from the deft. to the plt. on an account stated between them." If however there be no other count, the usual commencement must be inserted, and the conclusion will be as in the ordinary cases of assumpsit or debt. The word "then" is unnecessary (Bingham v. Stanley, 8 Ad. & El. 778; Leaf v. Lees, 4 M. & W. 579; Lane v. Thelwall, 1 Tyrw. & G. 334; Bayley v. Durham, 1 P. & D. 58.) The count need not run "by and between them" (Debenham v. Chambers, 3 M. & W. 128; Robinson v. May, 6 D. P. C. 306.)

As to particulars of demand, see Ch. Pl. by Pearson, 50, n.; Roberts v. Elworth, 2 D., N. S. 456. Where there is evidence of an admission amounting to an actual account stated between the parties, it may be given in evidence under particulars asserting that the same was due on the considerations to which the admission related (Simmons v. Wood, 5 Q. B. 170.)

Evidence for Plaintiff.

Mode of Accounting.] An admission of a balance or acknowledgment made by one party to another, that a sum of money is due to the latter, is sufficient prima facie evidence to entitle the plt. to recover that sum on an account stated (2 Mod. 44; Truman v. Hurst, 1 T. R. 42; Knox v. Whalley, 1 Esp. 159; Dawson v. Remnant, 6 Esp. 24.) But an acknowledgment by a deft. after action brought, of money being due to the plt. when there is no debt or account between them, proved to have existed before action brought, is not evidence of an account stated (Allen v. Cook, 2 D. P. C. 546), nor is a compulsive admission (Tucker v. Burrow, 7 B. & C. 623). The admission should be clear and unqualified (Evans v. Verity, 1 R. & M. 239; Calvert v. Baker, 4 M. & W. 417). It is evidence, although it refer to the subject of a written agreement (Newell v. Hall, 6 M. & W. 662). But not if made for the purchase of peace (Wayman v. Hilliard, 7 Bingh. 101). An entry in a bankrupt's examination of a certain sum being due to A. is evidence of an account stated (Eicke v. Nokes, 1 M. & Rob. 359). There must be an acknowledgment of a subsisting debt; therefore where a party examined before commissioners of bankrupts admitted that he had received a sum of money on account of the bankrupt after an act of bankruptcy, but not that it was a subsisting debt, held, that this would not support a count on an account stated with the assignees (Tucker v. Barron, 7 B. & C. 623). An agreement by a member of a company to pay the plt.'s bill is evidence of an account stated, though the debt. become a member after the debt was incurred (Barker v. Birt, 10 M. & W. 61). Semble, that a compulsory admission made before commissioners of bankrupts is not evidence of an account stated (Ib.).

Proof that debt. stated that he would call and settle the amount of the debt sent in, is sufficient (Clarke v. Glennie, 3 Star. 10). So, is proof of his sending 5*l.* on account, and stating that he would pay the remainder next week (Peacock v. Harris, 10 Ea. 104). But proof of a mere qualified acknowledgment is not sufficient (Evans v. Verity, 1 R. & M. 239; Green v. Davis, 4 B. & C. 235; 6 D. & R. 306; see Calvert v. Baker, supra.) The following memorandum, signed by the debt.:—"Mr. C.; I beg you will not proceed against *me, for A. B., for the 100*l.* which I owe [*45] her, and I will pay her as soon as I am able," though it might be prima facie evidence on an account stated, was held not sufficient to render the debt. liable on such a count, when it appeared that the debt in respect of which the memorandum was written was due from the deceased husband of the debt. to the former husband of the plt. (Petch v. Lyon, 15 Law J. 398, Q. B.).

An acceptance of the bill is evidence of an account stated by the acceptor with the holder (1 H. Bl. 239; sed vide Taylor v. Higgins, 3 Ea. 169; Whitwell v. Bennett, 3 B. & P. 559; Johnson v. Collings, 1 Ea. 98;) at all events, it is so, in an action at the suit of the drawer (Highmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S. 65,) or at the suit of a payee, who is also drawer (Rhodes v. Gent, 5 B. & A. 245.) A promissory note is evidence as an account stated, in an action by the payee against the maker (Story v. Atkins, 2 Str. 719; ante, "BILLS," &c.,) especially if it be expressed to be for value received (Clayton v. Gosling, 5 B. & C. 360;) Highmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S. 65;) but not if payable on a contingency (Morgan v. Jones, 1 C. & J. 162;) nor, if, improperly stamped (Green v. Davis, 4 B. & C. 235.) But, if admitted, it will be evidence of an account stated at the time of the date, and in answer to a plea of the Statute of Limitations will show that the cause of action did not accrue until the time at which it is payable (Wheatley v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 533.) A promise by the drawer to pay the indorsee and holder of bills overdue is evidence of an account stated in an action by the indorsee against the maker (Oliver v. Dovatt, 2 M. & Rob. 230.) In an action by indorsee against indorser the bill, or, note will not be evidence unless, there be an admission of the money being due (Bird v. Legge, 5 M. & W. 418.) A promissory note dated August 8th, 1844, from the debt. to the plt. for 23*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* "being the amount of interest due on a promissory note from the undersigned to the late W. N. (the plt.'s testator) for 117*l.* 4*s.*, dated 6th July, 1838, up to the 6th July, 1844." Held, an admission that 117*l.* 4*s.* was due to the plt. as executor on the 8th August, and evidence of an account stated with him as executor to that amount (Penny v. Slade, 10 Jur. 31; 1 D. P. C., N. S. 322; nom. Perry v. Slade, 8 Q. B. 115.)

A company having contracted a debt with the plt. and the debt not being paid, he laid an attachment on money of theirs in the hands of bankers; while the attachment was in force, the deft. representing himself to be a director of the company, called on the plt.'s attorney for the purpose of making an arrangement about the debt, when it was agreed that the following letter should be written by the deft. to the plt., which was accordingly done: "As director of the B. W. company I have to request that you will accept the sum of 50*l.* on account of your claim of 116*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* against the company and in consideration of your withdrawing the attachment against the funds of the company, I agree, on behalf of myself and the other directors, to pay you the balance of 66*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* on 27th August next." Held, that this letter, coupled with the above facts, was evidence of an account stated, and that it was no answer to show that the deft. was not a member of the company when the original debt was contracted (Baker v. Birt, 10 M. & W. 61.)

An I O U is evidence of an account stated (Highmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S. 65; Fesenmeyer v. Adcock, 2 N. Pr. C. 128:) even where it was not addressed, and there was no explanation how it came into plt.'s hands, it is prima facie evidence, (Curtis v. Rickard, 1 M. & G. 46; Douglas v. Holme, 12 Ad. & E. 641.) Where accounts are submitted to an arbitrator, not by bond, his award may be given in evidence under an account stated (Kean v.

Batshore, 1 Esp. 194.) *Where an incoming tenant agrees to take [*46] fixtures at a valuation to be made by two brokers, which is done, and the tenant enters, the value of the fixtures may be recovered on this count (Salmon v. Watson, 4 Moore, 73.)

The declaration stated that the deft. accounted with the plt., and was found indebted in £—, and in consideration thereof promised to pay by instalments according to an agreement, which was as follows: "I agree to pay the plt. or order, the sum of 695*l.*, at four instalments, viz., the 1st on, &c., being 200*l.*; the 2nd on, &c., being 150*l.*; the 3rd on, &c., being 150*l.*; the 4th on, &c., being 100*l.*; the remainder 95*l.* to go as a set-off for an order of R. to J., and the remainder of his debt from C. D. to him." The plt. proved at the trial that he had lent money to the deft. Held, that the agreement was evidence of the accounting (Davies v. Wilkinson, 10 Ad. & E. 98.) A letter offering to pay a certain sum of money in discharge of a disputed account followed by a tender of the sum, which is refused, is not evidence of an account stated (Frude v. Powell, 1 D. P. C., N. S. 278.)

In an action of debt, containing counts for goods sold and delivered, interest, and on an account stated, the plt. proved that he was a shopkeeper, and that the deft., on being served with the writ, indorsed with the amount sought to be recovered, said that, "he would call and pay the bill." The following paper, without date, and in the handwriting of the deft., was also given in evidence:—"I send you 4*l.* and will pay the balance in the book in a week." The jury having found for the plaintiff:—Held, first, that the paper was rightly received in evidence; secondly, that there was no evidence to support the count for interest, or, the account stated; thirdly, that, although the judge at nisi prius had done wrong in telling the jury that the conversation with the sheriff's officer was evidence of an account stated, a new trial ought not to be granted, as the first count was proved, and the deft.'s counsel had not required the several counts to be put separately to the jury (Moseley v. Reade, 10 Jur. 18.)

If the account was stated verbally, a witness present should be subpœnaed; if in writing, then the same should be produced, and deft.'s signature proved. If the writing be in the opposite party's possession, a notice should be served on him to produce it, and the service of such notice proved; after which, parol evidence of the contents of the writing would be admissible (post "NOTICES.") An acknowledgment of the correctness of an account need not be stamped (Wellard v. Moss, 1 Bing. 134; S. C. 7 Moore, 583; Jacob v. Lindsay, 1 Ea. 460.)

The account must be stated before the commencement of the action. Therefore an acknowledgment after action of money being due is no evidence of an account stated (Allen v. Cook, 2 Dowl. 546,) unless, a debtor account be proved to have existed before action brought (Ib.) and the offer of a cognovit after that time is not evidence of an account stated (Spencer v. Parry, 3 Ad. & E. 331.)

Evidence of an account stated whereby deft. admitted a certain balance due to the plt. is not done away, but confirmed in support of an assumpsit by evidence of a foreign judgment recovered by the plt. for the same sum, with a stay of execution for six months to enable the deft. to prove a counter demand if he had any: and the plt. not having declared till after that period, it was held no objection, that the writ was sued out and the deft. arrested before (Hall v. Odder, 11 East, 118.)

The averment of an account stated can only refer to a single occasion. Thus, when in an action for use and occupation 4*l.* were paid into court *on the account stated, the plts. proved that the deft. was indebted to them as surviving executors of T., and having no other account with [*47] them, was called upon for payment, and refused, saying that he had a cross demand on the funds of the testator. The plts. gave evidence of a debt exceeding 4*l.*, and contended that this with the admission implied by payment into court entitled them to recover the larger sum on the account stated, the other counts being inapplicable. Held, that they could not recover, for the averment of an account stated could only refer to a single occasion, and the above-mentioned answer of the deft., with the subsequent payment into court, merely showed that upon that accounting, which alone was in question, the deft. was found indebted 4*l.* (Kennedy v. Withers, 3 B. & Ad. 467.) An award is not evidence to support a count on an account stated (Bates v. Townley, 4 Law T. 376, Ex.).

With whom stated.] Proof of an account stated with plt.'s agent is sufficient (Hughes v. Thorp, 5 M. & W. 667;) proving the party to be such agent. So, plt. may recover on an account stated by the deft. with plt.'s wife, or, on an account stated by the deft.'s wife (B. N. P. 129;) if, indeed, she be proved to be the party's agent. An admission by the deft. in a conversation with a third person that he was indebted to the plt. in a named sum, is not evidence of an account stated, unless, the third person was the plt.'s agent (Breckon v. Smith, 1 Ad. & E. 488; see Rigley v. Jeffereys, 4 M. & W. 417.)

Whether a conversation between the deft. and a witness is sufficient to entitle deft. to recover on an account stated is a question of law, and not of fact (Bishop v. Chambre, 3 C. & P. 55.)

Where there were accounts between A. and B., and C. became a partner with B., and dealings continued between B. and C. as partners, and A., who afterwards settled an account with B. and C., wherein was included the money due from A. to B. alone, it was held the whole might be proved on an account stated in an action by B. and C. (Pea. Ev. 273; Gough v. Davies, 4 Price, 214; David v. Ellice, 5 B. & C. 196.)

To connect A. with B. as a co-promiser, it was shown that they were the trustees of an insolvent estate, in respect of which the debt arose; that A. and B. were at the counting house of the plts. on several occasions together, and at a meeting of the creditors of the insolvent estate, the amount of the plt.'s debt was stated by one of the defts. in the presence of the other, and and that B. had admitted in a letter that there was a debt due to the Held, that the jury were justified in coming to the conclusion that A., in stating the account with the plts., had the authority of B. (Chisman v. Count, 2 M. & G. 317.)

If a partnership have been dissolved, and an account stated between the partners, and one partner expressly promise to pay the balance struck, he may be sued at law, even by his partners (Smith v. Barrow, 2 T. R. 476-8; Foster v. Allanson, ib. 482; Brierley v. Cripps, 7 C. & P. 709;) and it is maintainable even without any express promise (Wray v. Milestone, 5 M. & W. 21.) Where one of two partners who have duly accounted between themselves, on being applied to for a debt due from the partnership, stated, that in the account with his partner, he, the deft., had taken that debt upon himself, and would pay it: held, sufficient to support a count upon account stated with one partner alone (Harrison v. Marsh, Exch. Jan. 16, 1849.)

But this only holds where there is a final balance of all the partnership concerns, and an express promise to pay such balance, and not during the continuance of the partnership (Fromont v. Coupland, *2 Bing. [*48] 170; Goddard v. Hodges, 1 C. & M. 37; Wilson v. Cutting, 10 Bigh. 436;) and evidence of this must be adduced accordingly.

An infant cannot state an account, even though the items consist of necessities (Bartlett v. Emery, 1 T. R. 42, n.; Ingledon v. Douglas, 2 Stark. N. P. 36; Hedgely v. Holt, 4 C. & P. 104; Harrison v. Fane, 1 M. & Gr. 551, n.;) though, he may ratify one after full age (Williams v. Moor, 11 M. & W. 256.) If the deft. account with the plt. in a particular character, he will be taken to have admitted that character (Peacock v. Harris, 10 East. 104.)

Subject-matter of Account.] With respect to the subject-matter of the account, it must be proved to have been of money and a debt (see 5 Moore, 114, 116.) It is sufficient, however, to prove an account stated, without giving evidence of the several items constituting the account (Trueman v. Hurst, 1 T. R. 42; Bartlett v. Emery, ib. n.; Prouting v. Hammond, 8 Taun. 688;) proof of one item is sufficient to maintain the count (Highmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S. 65.) It is not necessary that there should be cross demands between the parties, or that the deft.'s admission should relate to more than one item, or, transaction (Knowles v. Mitchell, 13 East, 249; Highmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S. 65; Pinchen v. Chilcot, 3 C. & P. 336; Perry v. Slade, 8 Q. B. 115.) The rule is, that if a fixed and certain sum is admitted to be due to the plt., for which an action would lie, that will be evidence to support a count upon an account stated (Porter v. Cooper, 4 Tyrw. 264, 265, per Parke and Alderson, Barons.) An admission by the deft. that so much was agreed to be paid to plt. for the sale of standing trees, made after the trees had been felled and taken away by the deft. will support it (Knowles v. Mitchell, 13 East, 249.) It is most usual to prove some existing antecedent debt or demand between the parties, respecting which an account was stated, and a balance struck (5 Moore, 105; Green v. Davis, 4 B. & C. 235, 242; S. C. 6 D. & R. 306; Trueman v. Hurst, 1 T. R. 42, n.; Teal v. Atty, 4 Moore, 542; 2 B. & B. 101; Knowles v. Mitchell, 13 Ea. 249.) But it seems without such evidence, he would be entitled to nominal damages; if he seek more, it will be necessary for him to prove the amount by other means (Dixon v. Deveridge, 2 C. & P. 109; Teeson v. Smith, 4 N. & M. 304; Whitehead v. Howard, infra; see however Barnasconi v. Anderson, Moo. & Mal. 183, where it was held that an acknowledgment of a debt without specifying any amount is not sufficient to entitle the creditor to nominal damages upon this count :) if deft. had admitted a sum certain to be due, the plt. would be entitled to recover; still, however, there must have been an existing debt between the parties to render the account available (Whitehead v. Howard, 5 Moore, 114, per Burrough, J.) The precise sum must be proved (Kirton v. Wood, 1 M. & Rob. 253.)

Where the deft., on being applied to for payment of interest, stated he would bring plt., who was an executrix, some money on the following Sunday; it was held, that though, this was an admission that something was due; still, as it did not appear what the nature of the debt was, or, that it was due to plt. as executrix, or in her own right, nor that it was one for which assumpsit would lie, plt. was not entitled to recover even nominal damages (Green v. Davies, 4 B. & C. 235.)

Where a debt is actually in existence and a prior transaction, it may be shown by other evidence than the plt.'s admission that the sum to which he referred was of a precise and stipulated amount.

But it lies only where an account has been stated with reference to former transactions. It does not lie therefore to recover a single sum under an express contract (Clarke v. Webb, 1 C. M. & R. 29; see Allan v. Cross, 2 Dowl. 546; Eike v. Nokes, 3 C. & P. 170.) *Thus, when the assignees of an insolvent tenant, in consideration of being allowed [*49] to remove certain fixtures, agreed to pay to the landlord 7*l.* for the last quarter's rent; held, that this sum could not be recovered on this count (Clarke v. Webb, 3 C. & P. 170.)

An attorney's bill cannot be recovered under this count without due proof of delivery of a signed bill (Eicke v. Nokes, 1 M. & Rob. 359,) and a plea of no signed bill, &c. is an answer to the count (Brooks v. Bocket, 2 N. P. C. 60; 11 Jur. 284.) Where there is a moral obligation to pay, the law will convert it into a legal one, and enable plt. to recover on this count;—thus, when A. agreed with B., by parol, that if B. would take of him a lease for twenty-one years of certain premises, he would give 20*l.* towards putting them into repair; B. accepted the lease, and A. refused to pay the money: held, that an admission by A. that the money was due entitled B. to recover on an account stated (Seageo v. Dean, 3 C. & P. 170). A promise to pay plt. the expenses he had been put to by deft.'s not performing an agreement, is evidence under the count on the account stated when plt. failed on the special count, the agreement being void under the Statute of Frauds (Remington v. Baker, 1 Jur. 56).

When A., one of the defts., was shown an account by the clerk of the plt. at their counting-house, and he objected to one of the items, but, made no remark with respect to the rest; held, evidence of an account stated by A. of those items to which he made no objection (Chisman v. Count, 2 M. & G. 317).

In support of this count plt. offered an account signed by the deft. showing a balance of 321*l.* 5*s.* to be due, the first item in which was "To principal and interest of old account which Dr. J. F. transferred as per letter, 146*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*" The letter was as follows:—"I hereby acknowledge to have received from J. M. F., esq., the sum of 321*l.* 5*s.*, and should I die during my absence from England, or, at any time before the said debt is liquidated, it is my desire that it should be paid out of whatever property I possess at the time of my death with legal interest on the same." Held, not entitled to recover the 146*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, the evidence showing a mere promise without consideration to pay the debt of a third person (French v. French, 2 M. & G. 644).

The plt. was the commercial agent of the East India Company at Amboyna. It was his duty to send his account to Jones, the company's agent at Banda, to examine and transmit to the governor of Madras. On the plt.'s accounts there appeared a balance of 1325 dollars against him, but on reference to the account kept by Jones of the same transactions, instead of a deficiency, 4771 dollars appeared due to the plt. The company then allowed the 1325 only. Held, that this was not a sufficient admission and recognition of the correctness of Jones's account as to entitle the plaintiff, without further evidence, to the 4771 dollars (Farquhar v. The East India Company, 8 Beav. 260).

An account stated in some cases will amount to an admission of the title of the party to receive the money (4 Moore, 73; post, 49). Accounting with plt. in a particular character admits that character (Peacock v. Harris, 10 East, 104; post, 46). An account stated does not alter the nature of the original debt (Aleyn, 72-3).

Evidence for Defendant.

Non assumpsit denies, that the parties came to an account, and that the deft. was indebted to the plt. thereon (Jacobs v. Fisher, 1 C. B. [*50] 178); the deft. may, under the general issue, show a gross *error, or mistake in the accounts, or, that he made the account under a misapprehension of facts, for the account stated is not conclusive evidence against him (Thomas v. Hawkes, 8 M. & W. 140; S. C. 9 Dowl. 802). Yet the stating an account in many cases amounts to a conclusive admission of the plt.'s title (see Peacock v. Harris, 10 Ea. 104; Salmon v. Watson, 4 Moo. 73); and where the parties, having cross demands, settled and balanced their accounts, the deft. was precluded from showing at the trial that many items in the plt.'s account were for spirituous liquors, and irrecoverable (Dawson v. Remnant, 6 Esp. 24; see also Barker v. Burt, 6 Jur. 736; ante, p. 44). The deft. may show that the items were such that he was not primarily liable upon them, but collaterally only (Gould v. Coombs, 14 L. J. 175, C. P.). But he cannot show fraud, or, illegality of consideration, or, that a subsequent account was in his favour (Bridget v. Penny, 16 M. & R. 108). There an account was stated on the 5th of February in plt.'s favour; another was stated on the 20th of March in deft.'s favour in consequence of including fresh items. The plt. afterwards sued upon the first account and deft. pleaded the general issue. Held, that he could not give evidence in this action of the second account stated. In law the second account must be taken to be either a payment (see Sinclair v. Baggaley, 4 M. & W. 314), or, a set-off, neither of which are available under the general issue (Alderson, B.) If, however, the second accounting were the correction of a mistake it would be otherwise (supra). Nor can deft. on the general issue give in evidence an admission by the plt. before action brought that the balance of accounts was in deft.'s favour (Evans v. Downes, 2 Jur. 1066, C. P.).

To support an account stated, a statement of accounts was put in, containing a number of bills of exchange, and showing a balance in favour of the plaintiff. Held, that this document was capable of explanation, and that the defendant, having shown that some of the bills to a larger amount than the balance were outstanding and unpaid, was entitled to a verdict (Barker v. Alexandre, 9 Law T. 53, C. P.).

II. PRIVATE ACTS, WHAT ARE, p. 52.

how construed, p. 52.
when and how pleaded, p. 52.

Public Acts.

Public Acts are those which relate to all the subjects of the realm (Holland's case, 4 Co. R. 76), as, those which concern the king, or all lords of manors, or all officers in general, or all spiritual persons, or all trades (B. N. P. 223; 1 T. R. 115; Samuel v. Evans, 2 ib. 569), and are presumed to be known to all men as the general law of the land. Some acts are made public acts by an express provision in their enactment. A recital in a public act is evidence of the fact recited (R. v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 532). Neither the Metropolitan Buildings Act, nor, the Metropolitan Police Acts are local and personal acts within the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97 (Richard v. Easto, 15 M. & W. 244; Barnett v. Cox, 16 Law J. 27, Mag. Cas.).

When and how pleaded.] As the courts take notice of all public acts, it is never necessary to set them out in pleading. It is only necessary for the party availing himself of them to state those facts which bring his case within them (Spieries v. Parker, 1 T. R. 145; Allen v. Kimpton (Inhabitants), 3 Wils. 318; Clarke v. Harvey, 1 Star. 92); and, in general, referring to the act. It is not advisable to recite any part of a public statute, for a misrecital will sometimes be fatal (Platt v. Hill, 1 Ld. Raym. 382; Boyce v. Whitaker, Doug. 97; King v. Marsack, 6 T. R. 776). If a statute be recited, the whole of its title must be stated, though it comprise several other subject-matters besides that to which the pleading relates (Beck v. Beverley, 11 M. & W. 845). Where facts have occurred recently after the passing of the act, it is usual to allege them to have taken place subsequently to its enactment (1 Saun. 309, n. 5). But it is unnecessary to allege the time of holding every parliament, and its prorogations and sessions, or where any parliament, sat, as they will be taken notice of judicially (Birt v. Rothwell, 1 Ld. Raym. 343; Plowd. 77; King v. Wilde, 1 Lev. 296); and therefore they should not be stated in pleading, as a misrecital may be a ground of demurrer, nonsuit, or arrest of judgment (Rann v. Green, Cowp. 474; King v. Wilde, 1 Lev. 296; Rex v. Biers, 1 Ad. & El. 327), as describing a statute to be made on a certain day in the 1st and 2d year, &c., as the same day could not be in two different years (Langley v. Haynes, Moo. 302), or to be made in the 4th year of Ph. & Ma., when the record of it appeared to be in the 4th and 5th Ph. & Ma. (Rann v. Green, Cowp. 474), or describing it as passed in both years (Gibbs v. Parke, 8 M. & W. 223; 9 Dowl. P. C. 731; Rex v. Biers, 1 Ad. & El. 327; 3 Nev. & M. 475; Ex parte Williams, 4 Jur. 171), even though recited in a later statute as passed "in the 2d and 3d years," &c. (Rex v. Biers, supra). It should be described as passed in a session holden in both years (Gibbs v. Pike, supra). It is not a ground of objection to describe it as passed in the 25th year, when, in fact, the [*52] parliament in which it was passed was prorogued from the 24th to the 25th year (R. v. Windsor, 2 Chit. R. 513); for every meeting of parliament after a prorogation is a new session, and a statute can never relate further back than to the first day of the session in which it was made (Partridge v. Strange, Plowd. 79). But where the parliament was only adjourned from one year to the other, the statute must be described as of the first year, for it relates back to the first day of the parliament (Bryant v. Withers, 2 M. & S. 123; Rumsey v. Turfnell, 2 Bing. 257; 9 Moo. 425; Savage v. Smith, 2 W. Bl. 1102; Anon. 12 Mod. 602; Spring v. Eve, 2 Mod. 242; Bart (q. z.) v. Rotheram, Ltd. Raym. 343; and see 4 Inst. 25; Patten v. Holmes, 4 T. R. 660; 6 Bro. P. C. 486; and 33 Geo. III. c. 13). It is said that a misrecital which would be fatal in a declaration is not so, in a plea in bar (Woolsey v. Sheppard, 1 Brownl. 196). And see further, as to the pleadings on a penal statute, post, "PENAL STATUTE."

Proof of Public Acts.] As the courts take judicial notice of public acts, and as they are presumed to be known to all men, they require no proof; and the printed books are used as hints of that which is supposed to be in every man's mind (Gilb. Ev. 10); however, if the books differ, the mistake may be shown by one examined with the original roll (Rex v. Jeffries, 1 Str. 446).

By 41 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 9, copies of the statutes of Great Britain and Ireland, prior to the Union, printed by the printer duly authorized, shall be received as evidence of the several statutes in the respective courts of either kingdom.

Private Acts.

Private acts are such as relate to a particular class of men: as to particular officers (Holland's case, 4 Co. R. 76; 2 Saun. 155, n.; Samuel v. Evans, 2 T. R. 569); or to particular persons; or particular counties, parishes, or places; or particular trades, as dyers, butchers, grocers (B. N. P. 223). Public acts bind all the queen's subjects, but, private acts do not bind strangers, unless, by express words, or, necessary implication the intention of the legislature to affect the rights of strangers is apparent in the act; and whether an act is public, or, private does not depend upon any technical considerations (such as having a clause, or, declaration that the act shall be deemed a public act), but upon the nature and substance of the case (Dawson v. Paver, 11 Jur. 766, Ch.: 16 Law J. 274, Ch.; 5 Hare, 415.) A canal act is not rendered a public act by empowering the company to take tolls from all persons using the canal (Brett v. Beales, M. & M. 421).

How construed.] Private acts are construed in analogy to private deeds (Eton College v. Bishop of Winchester, Lofft. 401), and therefore most strongly against the company (Parker v. Great Western Railway Company, 7 Scott, N. R. 831), and in favour of the public (Barrett v. Stockton and Darlington Railway Company, 2 Scott, N. R. 337; 3 ib. 803; 2 M. & G. 134; 2 Rail. Cas. 443, 466); or of private property (Scales v. Pickering, 1 Bing. 448; 1 M. & P. 195; and see Anon. Lofft. 438; R. v. Croker, Cowp. 26).

When and how pleaded.] As the court will not take judicial notice of private acts, such parts of them as are essential to the party's action or defence must be specially recited in pleading (Bac. Ab. Stat. l. 2; 2 Mod. 57; The King v. Larwood, Carth. 306).

*In reciting or pleading the act, the day, year, and place of [*53]; making it must be shown; and any misstatement in this respect will be bad on the plea of nul tiel record, or any other plea putting in issue the whole of the facts stated in the declaration (Rann v. Green, Cowp. 474; King v. Wilde, 1 Lev. 296; Cro. C. 202); but the mistake may be aided by verdict (Spring v. Eve, 2 Mod. 240). It is not necessary to recite the title (Chance v. Adams, 1 Raym. 77), or preamble (Mills v. Wilkinson, 6 Mod. 62; 8 Mod. 144), as they do not constitute a part of the statute (Bac. Ab. Stat. l. 3). Yet, if the party undertake to recite the title or preamble of an act, and if it be misrecited, it is fatal (Mills v. Wilkinson, 6 Mod. 62; Mills v. Wilkins, 2 Salk. 609, expressly over-ruling Adams v. Chance, Ld. Raym. 77; Att.-Gen. v. Hutchison, Hard. 324). As to the setting out of the act, it is sufficient to recite so much of it as relates to the subject-matter in dispute (Plowd. 106, &c.; Read v. Patter, Cro. J. 140; Doct. Pl. 332). And if the party recite so much of a statute as makes for him, it is sufficient, though he omit a proviso containing an exemption, provided it is not incorporated with the enacting clause by any words of reference (Steele v. Smith, 1 B. & A. 94; Newis v. Lark, Plowd. 410; Jones v. Axen, Raym. 120). But the opposite party may avail himself of such proviso in his pleadings (Read v. Patter, Cro. J. 140, and see post, "PENAL STATUTE"). In reciting a statute, a material variance will vitiate the pleading, as if the act be recited in conjunctive words, where it is disjunctive (Knaresburgh's case, Cro. E. 96; Eden's case, ib. 697; King v. Marsack, 6 T. R. 771; Rann v. Green, Cowp. 474). Not, however, if the word which precedes, and the word which follows, the disjunctive part will be of the same import (Crosse v. Stanhope, 2 Buls. 47; Godb. 246). But a trifling or immaterial variance will not prejudice (Crosse v. Stanhope, 2 Buls. 47, 51), as where the statute is "by the said justices, or the more part of them," and the recital is "the better part of them" (S. C. 2 Buls. 47); or where the statute is merely in the plural, and the recital in the singular (Goodwin v. West, Cro. C. 523). See further, post, "PENAL STATUTE."

Proof of Private Acts.] The regular proof of a private act, like that of other records, was to substantiate it upon oath, by means of an examined copy compared with the original in the Parliament Office at Westminster (Gilb. Ev. 12, 13; B. N. P. 225); or by means of an exemplification under the great seal (ib.); but by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 103, s. 4, "all copies of private and local and personal acts of parliament, not public acts, purporting to be printed by the queen's printers, shall be admitted as evidence thereof by all courts," &c., "without any proof being given that such copies were so printed." It is usual, in most acts of this nature, to insert a clause, with a view to evidence, directing that the act shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, or that a copy by the queen's printer shall be admitted in evidence; and, in such a case, it requires no proof, though it has not the effect of a public act (Woodward v. Cotton, 1 C. M. & R. 44). But, though an act contains no clause of this description, if it be of a general and public nature, it has been ruled at the assizes, that a printed copy may be given in evidence; thus, acts relating to public highways (Gilb. Ev. 10, 13); the Act of the Bedford Levels; the Act for Rebuilding Tiverton; and that concerning the College of Physicians (ib.; B. N. P. 225; Dupays v. Shepherd, 12 Mod. 216). When copies of a private act are made evidence, it is not "judicially noticed," and is not before the court, except when given in evidence, and, therefore, if a plt. do not give it in evidence, the deft. cannot avail himself of an objection founded upon it without making *it [*54] part of his evidence (Greswolde v. Kemp, 1 C. & M. 635, per Erskine, J.). As to effect of acts of parliament, see "PARLIAMENT."

ADMIRALTY, SENTENCES OF COURTS OF.

Effect of, in Evidence.] The final judgment, sentence, or decree of a Court of Admiralty in this country, in questions of prize, being a proceeding in rem, is conclusive evidence in all courts and with reference to all persons (B. N. P. 244; 11 St. Tr. 262; Kindersley v. Chase, Park, Ins. 490; Oddy v. Bovill, 2 East, 473; Geyer v. Aguilar, 7 T. R. 681). It was held evidence of condemnation without producing the libel and answer, at least, if not found, or usually filed with it (Wheeler v. South, Com. Dig. Ev. C, 1). And so, all sentences of foreign courts of admiralty of competent jurisdiction to decide questions on prize, will be received as conclusive evidence of every subject immediately and properly within the jurisdiction of such foreign courts, and upon which they professed to decide judicially (Hughes v. Cornelius, 2 Show. 232; Bolton v. Gladstone, 5 East, 160; Baring v. Clagett, 3 B. & P. 214). Such judgments, &c., whether domestic or foreign, are also conclusive, whether they involve questions as to the right of property, as in trover, or questions arising as to warranty in actions on policies of insurance (Baring v. R. Ex. Ass. Comp., 5 East, 99; Bolton v. Gladstone, ib. 155; S. C. 2 Taun. 85; Lothian v. Henderson, 3 B. & P. 513; 2 Show. 232; 2 Doug. 575). And such judgments will be received in evidence, though [*55] it appear, from the judgment itself, that the *court acted on rules of evidence established by its own particular ordinances, and not arising out of general principals (ib.). Thus, a sentence condemning goods as captured from the enemy, is conclusive evidence that they were so captured; and such sentence is conclusive of the facts it establishes, not only against those concerned in interest and persons claiming under them, but also against strangers (Stirling v. Vaughan, 2 Camp. 228). And, where property is condemned on the ground of not being neutral, the sentence is conclusive evidence of that fact (Barzillay v. Lewis, Park, Ins. 469; Doug. 554; Calvert v. Bovill, 7 T. R. 523). So, a sentence of a French court, condemning a ship during a war between England and France, is conclusive that she was not Swedish (Baring v. R. Ex. Ass. Comp. 5 East, 99; Bolton v. Gladstone, ib. 155; S. C. 2 Taun. 85). The condemnation of a ship at Malaga, that she was English, is conclusive that she was not neutral (Oddy v. Bovill, 2 East, 473). And where a ship is condemned generally as lawful prize, and no special ground assigned, it will be presumed that the sentence proceeded on the ground of the property belonging to an enemy, and the sentence will be conclusive evidence of that fact (Saloucci v. Woodmass, Park, Ins. 471).

But the sentence of a foreign court is evidence only of what it positively and specifically affirms in the adjudicative part of it, not, of what may be gathered from it by way of inference (Fisher v. Ogle, 1 Camp. 418); and is not conclusive unless the fact upon which the condemnation proceeded, appear on the face of the sentence, free from doubt and ambiguity (Dalglish v. Hodgson, 5 M. & P. 407; 7 Bing. 495; see Naylor v. Taylor, 9 B. & C. 718); though where there is an ambiguity in the sentence, the court will look into the proceedings to ascertain the precise ground of the determination (Lothian v. Henderson, 3 B. & P. 525; Bernardi v. Mottram, 2 Doug. 574). If the facts disclosed in the sentence do not warrant the sentence, it will not be conclusive as to such facts (Calvert v. Bovill, 7 T. R. 523). If the condemnation do not plainly proceed upon the ground, of its being the property of enemies, or, of the ship not having complied with subsisting treaties between her own country and that of the capturing power, but on the ground of regulations arbitrarily imposed by the latter, to which neither the government of the captured ship nor the other powers of Europe have been made parties, such a condemnation will not be admitted as conclusive of a breach of warranty of neutrality (8 T. R. 444; Doug. 574; Bolton v. Gladstone, 5 East, 155). The sentence of a court of admiralty, sitting under a commission from a belligerent power in a neutral country, will not be recognized in our courts (Havelock v. Rockwood, 8 T. R. 268; Donaldson v. Thompson, 1 Camp. 429).

Proof of Sentences in English Courts.] The libel, answer, depositions, and sentences in the Admiralty Court must be proved by examined copies (Com. Dig. Ev. C, 1; vide post, "CHANCERY," "RECORD.")

Proof of, in Foreign Courts.] The decisions of a foreign court are proved by exemplification under the seal of the court, and it must be proved that the seal affixed to the exemplification is the seal of the court; it is not sufficient merely to prove the judge's signature (Henry v. Adey, 3 East, 221; see further, post, "RECORD"); nor is a copy by an officer of the court sufficient (1 Star. 297). The record must be sealed, though the seal be so worn out as not to make an impression (1 Star. Ev. 294.) If there be no seal of the court, then, indeed, an examined copy will suffice, proving the court has no *seal (6 M. & S. 36). So, if the court verify its judgments by the signature of the judge, proof of that fact and the judge's signature [*56] suffices (4 Camp. 28). Before the sentence of a foreign court of admiralty, condemning a ship as a prize, can be given in evidence, a foundation for it should be laid by proving the capture of the vessel ; the sentence will then be evidence of the facts on which the condemnation proceeded (Marshall v. Parker, 2 Camp. 69). See "ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS."

By Pleading.—1. Direct Admissions.*

It is a fundamental rule of pleading that every material allegation in a declaration, plea, or other pleading, which is not traversed, or, denied by the opposite party, is admitted, so that the party is precluded at the trial from asserting, and the jury from finding the contrary (Steph. Plead. 5th ed. 248; Com. Dig. Pl. 17; Wimbish v. Tuilbois, Plow. 48, Tomkins v. Croker, 2 Lutw. 1215.) Thus, if, in trespass with cattle, &c., where the deft. pleads a right of common, which right the plt. traverses, the jury cannot inquire whether the deft. put his cattle there, that being a fact admitted, and such finding would be void (2 Roll. 692, 6, 5). So, if the deft. in replevin avow the taking of cattle, damage feasant in the locus in quo as parcel of the manor of K. which is his freehold, and the plt. make title to the manor of K. and traverse that the manor is the freehold of the deft. he cannot afterwards prove that K. is no manor, and therefore the locus in quo no parcel; for that is admitted by the traverse (B. N. P. 298). If plt. traverse a customary right of common in respect of an ancient messuage pleaded by deft. he will be allowed to disprove the antiquity of the messuage, it being involved in the custom (Dunstan v. Tresider, 5 T. R. 2). In trover deft. pleaded that dock warrants for the goods were entrusted by plt. to his factor, to whom deft., not knowing the real owner, advanced money on the security of the warrants. The replication traversed this latter allegation. Held, that the warrants had been so entrusted was thereby admitted and that deft. was estopped from showing their non-existence for the purpose of disproving the advance of money upon them (Bonzi v. Steward, 4 M. & Gr. 295).

In an action for negligence in not properly securing a cow of the deft. in a slaughter-house, the declaration stated that by means thereof the cow ran at, butted at, gored, killed, &c., a cow of the plt. Plea, payment of 30s. into court, and that plt. had sustained no greater damages. Replication that plt. had sustained greater damages. Held, that deft. could not go into evidence to show that his cow had not killed deft.'s, as the contrary was admitted by deft.'s plea (Lloyd v. Walkey, 9 C. & P. 77). So, in libel imputing that plt.'s house was opened as a gaming-house, under the leadership of a woman of notorious character, deft. pleaded several pleas; but none of them at all referring to plt.'s wife. Held, that plt. could not go into evidence to show that his wife was a respectable person, as the pleadings admitted her to be so (Gray v. Gregory, 9 C. & P. 584). Where in covenant on a charter party, a plea took issue on an immaterial part of a breach, held, that by so doing the deft. admitted the material part as stated in the declaration (Diffield v. Brocklebank (in error), 3 Bligh, 56).

Where in trespass the deft. pleads an entry to abate a nuisance and the plt. new assigns unnecessary violence, the nuisance is admitted and plt. cannot go into evidence to negative it (Pickering v. Rudd, 1 Stark. 56). But it seems a new assignment amounts sometimes only to an assertion that the deft. has mistaken the grievance complained of (Bruncker v. Molyneux, 1 M. & Gr. 710.)

The R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. require a special denial of the plt.'s character in an action by an executor, or, administrator in a cause of action arising in the lifetime of the testator, or, intestate. But even before these rules the general issue admitted such character (Marsfield v. Marsh, 2 Ld. Raym. 824; Thynne v. Protheroe, 2 M. & Sel. 553; see Hunt v. Stevens, 3 Taunt. 113; Watson v. King, 4 Campb. 272; Adams v. Savage, 6 Mod. 134). A plea of set-off stated that the *plt. made his promissory note payable to A. C., that A. C.'s administrator indorsed it to the deft. Replica- [*58]

tion, the Statute of Limitations. Held, that the replication admitted the making of the note and the indorsement, and that the deft. might avail himself of a memorandum of the payment of interest written on the note by A. C. (before Lord Tenterden's Act) to bar the statute (Gale v. Capern, 1 Ad. & E. 182). In an action by husband and wife the general issue admits the marriage (B. N. P. 20).

The title, or character to sue, or, be sued is frequently admitted by the opposite party, and though, not strictly an estoppel, is, in some cases, conclusive. Thus, in an action for slandering an attorney importing that the deft. would have the plt. struck off the rolls, held, that this admitted the plt.'s character of attorney (Berryman v. Wise, 4 T. R. 366; Pearce v. Whale, 5 B. & C. 39).

Where a replication avers several facts in answer to a plea, and the rejoinder traverses an immaterial one which is found for the deft., yet, the others are not so admitted as to entitle the plt. to judgment non obstante veredicto (Gwynne v. Burnell, 6 B. N. C. 453). So, in covenant the plea of release admits the execution of the indenture (Steph. Pl. supra). So, the traversing the want of repair is an admission of the indenture of demise (Ib.). For the effect of the general issue in certain actions, and of a payment into court, see the various titles. See also "TENDER."

But matters not material, though alleged, are not admitted by thus passing them over. Hence, where, in an action against ship-owners for damage done to guns, the declaration stated that the defts. were the owners of the ship, that the plt. caused the guns to be put on board, and that in consideration thereof and of certain freight they promised to take due and proper care of them; to which the defts. pleaded—1st, non assumpsit; and 2ndly, that they did take due and proper care: it was held incumbent on the plt. to prove, in the absence of an express contract with the defts., their ownership of the vessel, and for want of so doing he was nonsuited. The court held that the declaration would have been good without any allegation of ownership, and consequently that such allegation was not admitted (Bennion v. Davison, 3 M. & W. 179).

If a plea to an indebitatus count be pleaded as to a precise sum, that, though laid under a videlicet, is admitted to be due, so that such sum must be covered by either the plea by which it is admitted to be due, or, some other plea (Cousins v. Padden, 2 C. M. & R. 547), and for this purpose the plea is divisible and may be found in part for the plt. and in part for the deft. (Ib.; see post, "PLEAS"). And where in debt for sums amounting together to 37*l.* 16*s.*, the deft. pleaded a set-off as to 10*l.* 3*s.*, goods returned as to 8*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, and as to the residue 4*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* payment into court, making in all 22*l.* 15*s.* the deft. proved the plea except as to the set-off, which he failed to prove by 2*l.* short of the sum alleged in the plea. Held, that the plt. was entitled to judgment for 2*l.* at all events, although, his particulars claimed but 20*l.* 15*s.* (Green v. Marsh, 5 D. P. C. 669; see Roche v. Champion, 1 Ex. 11.)

In an action on a written instrument the deft., by not denying it, admits so much as is set out in the declaration, but no more, and if the plt. wish to avail himself of any other part he must, it is said, prove it in the common way (per Ld. Ellenb. in Williams v. Sills, 2 Camp. 519.) Where plt. sued on a bond to which deft. pleaded an usurious agreement, and that the bond was given in pursuance of it: replication that it was not given in pursuance of the bond: held, that the agreement was not in issue, and that plt. could not disprove *the alleged usury (Carter v. James, 13 M. & W. 145, n.

[*59] a). But this incidental admission will not estop the plt. in a subsequent action from denying the usury (Ib. 137). A notice by deft. to produce a bill accepted by deft. is evidence of acceptance as against him (Holt v. Squire, R. & M. 282).

Effect of Admission by Pleading.] Whether such an admission amounts merely to a waiver of proof of the allegation so admitted, or, whether it is equivalent to a confession of the fact before the jury, is a question of great importance, and one upon which a difference of opinion seems to exist. In Edmunds v. Groves, 2 M. & W. 642, an action by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, the deft. pleaded that the consideration for the note was money lost by gaming, and that it was indorsed to the plt. with notice and without value, to which the plt. replied that it was indorsed without notice and for value. No evidence was given on either side, and it was contended that as the replication admitted the illegality of the consideration, the plt. was bound to show that he was the holder for value. But the court held that the admission merely dispensed with proof, that the issues only were before the jury, and that if any inferences were to be drawn by them they must have the facts proved. This doctrine, however, has been repudiated by the Court of Queen's Bench, and it has been there laid down that "an admission made in the course of pleading, whether in express terms or by omitting to traverse what has been before alleged, must be taken as an admission for all the purposes of the cause, whether the facts relate to the parties, or, to third persons, provided the allegation so made be material" (Bingham v. Stanley, 1 Gale & Dav. 237), and consequently that the plt. in a similar case was bound to prove consideration by reason of his having admitted by pleading the original infirmity of title. In a subsequent case the court of Exchequer upheld their decision in Edmunds v. Groves (Smith v. Martin, 9 M. & W. 304; see Fearn v. Filica, 7 M. & Gr. 513), and in a still later case the Court of Queen's Bench explained their decision in Bingham v. Stanley, and there laid down the rule that admissions made in pleading of material allegations are to be taken as made for all purposes in the cause, regarding the issue arising from that pleading (Robins v. Maidstone, 4 Q. B. 815).—In trespass by A. and B. his wife against C. for a false imprisonment of B., C. justified under an execution against the plts. for costs in a former action brought by them against C., alleging the recovery of the judgment, the issuing of the ca. sa., its delivery to the sheriff, and the arrest of B. thereunder. The plts. replied, confessing the recovery of the judgment and the issuing of the ca. sa., de injuriâ suâ propriâ absque residuo causæ: held, that, as the judgment and writ were admitted on the record, upon the warrant and the arrest of B. under it, being proved by the plts., the justification was made out without any evidence on the part of the deft. (Newton v. Boodle, 3 C. B. 795; 13 Jur. 253; 18 Law J. 53, Q. B.). Debt on a joint and several bond for 500*l.* The condition, set out on oyer by the deft., recited, that one S. had been appointed collector of taxes, and that the plt. had become surety for the payment of such sums as S. should receive; that the plt. consented to become surety on the condition that the deft. and S. would indemnify him from all charges, &c., which he should incur as surety. Plea, that the plt. had not at any time since been in anywise damnified by reason of anything in the condition specified. Replication, that S. received, as collector, divers sums of money, amounting in the whole to a large sum, exceeding 500*l.*, to wit, 2000*l.*; that S. did not duly pay the said sums so received, nor any of them, but made default, by reason of which plt. afterwards was forced to pay to the receiver-general a large sum, to wit, the sum of 500*l.*, and thereby sustained damage to a large amount, to wit, 500*l.* Rejoinder, that the plt. was not forced to pay the said sum in the replication mentioned, or any part thereof. At the trial no proof was given of the receipt of any money by S. as collector, but it was proved that S. had not paid any over to the receiver-general, and that the plt. had been called on as a surety to pay the 500*l.*, and, having been sued, had submitted to a judgment: held, that the receipt of the 500*l.* by S. was not admitted on the pleadings, and that the plt., in default of proof of the receipt, was only entitled to nominal damages (King v. Norman, 4 C. B. 884; 17 Law J. 23, C. P.): held, also, that the deft. having been no party to the judgment obtained against the plt., the judgment was only evidence to show that the plt. had been sued, or had been subjected to a bona fide pressure, but not evidence that he was legally liable to the extent for which the judgment was signed (Ib.).

Where several Pleas.] It is quite settled, however, that where there are several pleas or counts, one count or plea cannot be used by the opposite party as an admission of a fact denied by another, but each issue must be tried as though it were the only issue on the record. Thus, where to an action of trespass the deft. pleads not guilty, and a justification, the plt. cannot call in aid the second, to prove that the deft. committed the trespass, whether issue be joined on that plea, or whether there be a demurrer and judgment thereon against the deft. (Montgomery v. Richardson, 5 C. & P. 247; Stracey v. Blake, 1 M. & W. 168; Firmin v. Crucifix, 5 C. & P. 98). But where it appears from the whole conduct of a cause that a particular fact is admitted between the parties, the jury have a right to draw the same conclusion as to that fact, as if it had been proved in evidence, and to draw such conclusion as to all the issues on the record (Stracey v. Blake, supra): 1st plea in bar to an avowry for rent arrear, tender of the rent claimed in the avowry; 2nd plea non tenuit; held, that proof of tender as pleaded did not support the issue on non tenuit without calling in aid the allegation of the 1st plea, which cannot be done, (Knight v. McDowall, 12 Ad. & E. 438). And as a plea of set-off cannot be used by the [*60] plt. to prove his claim *under the general issue, neither can a particular of set-off delivered under a judge's order be so used, though it contain a distinct admission of the plt.'s claim (Harrington v. Macmorris, 5 Taun. 328). In Gould v. Oliver, 2 Sc. N. R. 241, one count claimed damages for improperly loading the plt.'s guns on deck, by reason of which part had been lost; a second count claimed a sum of money as general average, and to this count the deft. paid a sum of money into court, which the plt. took out in satisfaction. At the trial the deft. offered in evidence the second count, and pleadings thereon, as a conclusive admission against the plt. that the deck cargo had been properly stowed, and thus to secure a verdict on the first count, but the court held it inadmissible. The statements in a plea held bad on demurrer are not evidence for plt. on another issue, though, the venire be tam quam (Ingram v. Lawson, 2 M. & R. 253; see Montgomery v. Richardson, supra).

Effect of Admission in another Action.] Before the pleading rules, when the declaration, or, other pleading alleged any matter upon which the opposite party could not take issue, it was necessary that he should commence his plea, replication, &c., with a protestation that such matter was not true, otherwise, he would be precluded from denying such matter in any subsequent action at the suit of the same party, though the issue joined were found for him (2 Saun. 103, n.). To prevent the necessity of this, which had become almost an idle formula, the rule of H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 12, orders that "no protestation shall hereafter be made in any pleading, but either party shall be entitled to the same advantage in that or other actions, as if a protestation had been made."

^a Where the protestation was properly taken the party was not concluded in a subsequent suit whether the issue was found for, or, against him; but if it were not properly taken, that is, if it were of a matter which he might have traversed or pleaded, and the issue were found against him, he was concluded of all that was material in the record (2 Saun. 103, n. 1). It follows, therefore, that in a second action between the same parties, or their privies (see post, "ESTOPPEL"), allegations in the former pleadings, which were not traversable, cannot be used against the opposite party as an admission; but that where the issue in the former action was found against him, and judgment given thereon (see Allen v. Hartley, 4 Doug. 20; Holt v. Miers, 9 C. & P. 196), he is concluded not only as to the fact in issue, but also, as to every traversable allegation in the pleading upon which such issue was taken, provided the matter be pleaded by way of estoppel (see Outram v. Morewood, 3 Ea. 346; Steph. Plead. 5th ed. 227, and post, "ESTOPPEL"); contra as to a demurrer to a bill in Chancery (Tomkins v. Ashley, M. & M. 32). Where a party in his pleading makes an admission, the admission so made is not only for that purpose, but for every purpose, and he will be estopped afterwards, although in another action between the same parties, from pleading the same matter (Rutt v. Morell, Ex., 27 Jan. 1849). A declaration in case against a witness for disobedience to a subpœna alleged a good cause of action, and that the plt. could not proceed to trial, and was obliged to withdraw the record. Pleas, not guilty, and that plt. might have proceeded to trial. Issue. Held, that the goodness of the cause was admitted, and that the deft. could not show that the declaration in the former action was bad (Needham v. Fraser, 1 C. B. 815). An admission made before an arbitrator may be used as evidence on the trial of another cause (Doe v. Evans, 3 C. & P. 21; Westlake v. Collard, B. N. P. 236; Gregory v. Howard, 3 Esp. 113). An answer in Chancery filed by a solicitor for a client cannot *be used as evidence of any fact stated in the [*61] answer against the solicitor filing it (Wilkins v. Nokes, 7 Law T. 112).

Admissions made for the purpose of the Suit.] Where a party, or, his attorney, or town agent (Truslove v. Burton, 9 Moo. 64), agrees to admit a certain fact on the trial of the cause, he will be conclusively bound by such admission. Where in an action on a bond to which non est factum was pleaded, a paper was produced, signed by the deft.'s attorney, by which he agreed to admit the signatures of the deft. and of the attesting witness, Ld. Ellenb. ruled that this must be taken as a presumptive admission of all which the latter would have been required to prove, and therefore, that the plt. could not be called on to show the delivery of the bond (Milward v. Temple, 1 Camp. 374).

An admission thus made, like a notice to produce, &c., enures not only for this trial, but for any subsequent trial of the same cause, or upon an arbitration (Elton v. Larkins, 5 C. & P. 385; 1 Moo. & Rob. 196); and the party cannot retract it, without previous leave of the court, or a judge, upon summons (Ib.; Doe d. Wetherell v. Bird, 7 C. & P. 6).

If the admission be in writing, it will be advisable to be prepared with proof of the handwriting (see, however, Truslove v. Burton, sup.); but it is sufficient to show it to be that of the attorney on record, or, town agent without showing authority from his client to make it (see Young v. Wright, 1 Camp. 140; Gainsford v. Grammar, 2 Camp. 9.) The preferable course, however, is to have the admissions embodied in a judge's order, which saves the necessity of any proof at the trial.

Pleadings in Equity.] Semble, that pleadings in equity as well as at common law are not to be treated as positive allegations of the truth of the facts therein, for all purposes, but only as statements of the case of the party to be admitted or denied by the opposite side, and if denied, to be proved, and ultimately submitted for judicial decision (Boileau v. Rutlin, 2 Exch. 665.) The facts actually decided by an issue in any suit cannot be again litigated between the same parties, and are conclusive evidence between them; so are the material facts alleged by one party which are directly admitted by the opposite party, or indirectly admitted by taking a traverse on some other facts, if the traverse is found against the party making it. But the statements of a party in a declaration or plea, though for the purposes of the cause he is bound by those that are material, ought not, it should seem, to be treated as confessions of the truth of the facts stated (Ib.). In an action to recover goods supplied to a mine, in order to show that the deft. was a shareholder a document was produced by which A. B. certified that he had, transferred certain shares to the deft., who on his part agreed to accept them. The purser of the mine stated that those persons only were considered shareholders whose names were entered in a certain book; that the usual mode of transferring shares was by documents similar to the above; and that on receiving it from the deft. he had entered his name in the book as a shareholder: held, that this document was receivable in evidence as an admission by the deft. that he was a shareholder in the company, and did not require a stamp (Toll v. Lee, 13 Jur. 614; 18 Law J. 364, Exch.). In an action for use and occupation, to recover 42*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*, the balance of an account of 64*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, the plt. in her bill of particulars admitted to have received 21*l.* 12*s.* It appeared that the deft. had taken the premises from the husband of the plt., and continued in possession for some time after his death: held, that the plt. was not concluded from showing that a portion of the sum for which credit was given in the bill of particulars was paid to her husband in his lifetime, and that another portion was paid so recently after his decease, that it could not possibly have been in respect of a debt due to herself (Mercy v. Galot, 14 Jur. 412).

By Judge's Order.] By the rules of H. T. 2 Will. IV. r. 6, 7, the expense of proving the copy of any judgment, writ, or other public document, is not to be allowed in costs, unless, the opposite party have been called on a reasonable time before the trial to admit such copy; nor, the expense of proving the handwriting to, or execution of any written instrument stated in the pleadings, unless, such notice and the name and abode of the intended witness have been previously given. These rules appear to have been superseded by the rule of H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 20, which requires each party to give forty-eight hours' notice of every written, or, printed document which he intends to adduce in evidence, and to require the other party, by summons, to admit them at the peril of losing all the costs of proof (see Lush's Pr. 442; 1 Ch. Arch. 7th ed.). If he consent, a judge's order is thereupon to be drawn up, by which the documents specified in the notice are to be admitted on the trial.

Such admission, it will be observed on reference to the rule, is of a qualified nature; for, 1st. It relates only to such documents as are specified in the notice. Hence it is important that each should be there fully and accurately described (see Byers v. Southwell, 9 C. & P. 322); and that such notice should be identified by the judge's initials. Where, however, the objection was taken that the notice was not identified either by the judge's initials, or otherwise, and the plt. was consequently nonsuited, the court granted a new rule, with costs, as against the deft., and if the attorney cannot clear himself from blame the court will make him pay the costs (Doe d. Tindal v. Roe, 5 Dowl. 420; see Clay v. Thackray, 9 C. & P. 53).

And where in an action on a promissory note payable on the 10th of Nov., the notice described it as payable on the 10th of Oct., but in other respects the description was correct, it appearing that the deft.'s attorney had inspected the notice before he made the *admission, it was ruled that the admission must be taken to refer to the note declared on, and a ver- [*62] dict having passed for the plt. the court refused to disturb it (Field v. Fleming, 7 C. & P. 619; see Bittlestone v. Cooper, 14 M. & W. 399.) An order to admit an acceptance "by B. for the defts. A. & Co." operates as an admission of B.'s authority to accept for A. and Co. (Wilkes v. Hopkins, 1 C. B. 737.)

2nd. The admission is, "subject to all just exceptions as to the admissibility of the document as evidence." So that the party is not precluded from objecting to the want of a stamp, or any other matter which would have been open had the document been presented for proof at the trial (Sharpe v. Lamb, 3 P. & D. 454; S. C. 11 Ad. & E. 805.) And the objection is equally open though these words were omitted in the notice delivered (Ib.). But where the notice described as a "counterpart" a document which was in fact executed by both lessor and lessee, but which bore only a "counterpart stamp," and was indorsed with the word "counterpart," it was held that by making the admission the deft. was precluded from objecting that the instrument was not a counterpart, but a lease, and therefore improperly stamped, though it appeared that he had consented to the admission without inspecting the deed (Doe d. Wright v. Smith, 8 Ad. & E. 255; S. C. 4 Jur. 557; see Paul v. Meek, 2 Y. & J. 116). An admission, under a judge's order, of a newspaper containing an advertisement is no admission of that advertisement being inserted by the direction of the company to which it refers (Sykes v. Cooper, D. N. C. 507).

An order to admit, once made, may be used on a second, or subsequent trial, or before an arbitrator if the cause be referred, and the party cannot get rid of it without another order (see supra, Langley v. Oxford, 1 M. & W. 508).

Under Judge's Order.] The admissibility of a document described in the usual notice to admit, is not the admission of a fact stated in the description; it may be some evidence of the fact, which may be rebutted by evidence to the contrary (Pilgrim v. Southampton and Dorchester Railway Company, 18 Law J. 330, C. P.) A deed given in evidence by plt. under a judge's order had an interlineation in a material part, which was not noticed in the attestation: held, that the deft. was precluded from objecting that the interlineation should be shown to have been made before the execution of the deed (Freeman v. Steggel, 13 Jur. 1030, Q. B.)

2. Collateral Admissions.

Of these the highest species are those which operate by way of estoppel. An estoppel is when a man is concluded by his own act, or, acceptance to say the truth (Co. Lit. 352 a.), and is of three kinds; 1st, by record; 2nd, by writing; 3rd, by act (Co. Lit. 352 a; Com. Dig. Estop.)

1. Estoppel by Record.] Whatever a person has admitted, or confessed on record, or, whatever has been found by verdict against him, whether in the same, or, any other court of concurrent, or exclusive jurisdiction on the point (Duchess of Kingston's case, 11 St. Tr. 261,) he is afterwards precluded from denying. Whatever is admitted on the record need not be proved, and cannot be disproved (B. N. P. 298; Evans v. Ogilvie, 2 Y. & J. 79.) Thus, if deft. acknowledged a deed to be enrolled in court, he cannot afterwards plead non est factum (1 Roll. 862, l. 12). If in an action by one he plead in abatement the nonjoinder of another who ought to be a co-plt., he cannot afterwards in an action by both plead the title of one only (1 Roll. 8 a, l. 10). Where, in an action of trespass for taking coals, the deft. pleaded that the mine, from which the coals were taken, was parcel of a mine bargained and sold to a person from whom he derived title, which was traversed by the replication, and the jury found for the plt., it was held that the deft., was estopped from pleading the same plea in a second action (Outram v. Morewood, 3 Ea. 346). So, where a deft. failing to support his plea of set-off, upon which, therefore, a verdict was recorded against him, brought an action for the debt so attempted to be set off; he was holden concluded by the former verdict (Eastmure v. Lawes, 7 Sc. 461; *7 Dowl. 431; [*63] 5 Bing. N. C. 444, S. C.). And it is no answer to such a plea that a writ of error is pending on the former judgment (Doe v. Wright, 2 P. & Dav. 672). A person may also be estopped by not denying a matter alleged upon record. As, if A. be seised in fee, and B. brings waste against him, supposing him in of his demise: though A. pleads no waste done, and it be found for him, he shall be estopped to say that he is not in of the demise of B. (Com. Dig. Estop. A). So, if a deft. demur to the plt.'s declaration, he is afterwards concluded from denying any matter alleged in the count (lb.), for a demurrer admits facts well pleaded, and on a writ of inquiry the amount of damages is the only question (De Guillon v. L'Aigle, 1 B. & P. 368; Stephens v. Pell, 2 D. P. C. 629). Quare, whether deft. by demurring to a declaration for libel stated to have been published with intent to cause certain matters to be believed admits particular words in the libel to have been published with that intent (Digby v. Thompson, 4 B. & Ad. 621). Setting out a judge's order in pleading is not upon demurrer to be taken as an admission of the facts stated in the order (McCormick v. Milton, 1 C. M. & R. 525). Demurring to a bad plea of justification of slander is no admission of the truth of all the slanders contained therein, as it confesses nothing but what is well pleaded (Jones v. Stephens, 11 Price, 278). Non assumpsit admits no immaterial allegation in the inducement (Bennion v. Denison, 3 M. & W. 179).

But we have seen that the estoppel in such cases goes only to allegations which are material, and which the deft. might have traversed (see ante, p. 59), and it does not embrace matter alleged by way of argument, inference, or recital, for an estoppel must be certain to every intent (Co. Lit. 352 b. 303 a).

Nor is a party estopped from averring anything, not inconsistent, with the record. As, if a deed, release, &c., be revoked, though he cannot plead non est factum, he may plead that nothing passed by the deed, or, not seised at the time, &c. (1 Rol. 862, l. 35).

Again, a party is not estopped by a record coram non judice (Com. Dig. Estop. E.); nor, when the truth appears by the same record. As, if a fine be levied upon an original, upon which a retraxit is entered, though the parties are estopped to say, when the fine is pleaded, that it was not upon an original, yet, if, by the same record it appears that a retraxit was entered, they are not estopped (Co. Lit. 352 b).

In order to avail himself of the benefit of an estoppel of this kind, the party must plead it as such, unless, the matter appear on record, and then, he may demur. If he does not, but joins issue on the fact, and gives the record in evidence, the jury are at liberty to find the contrary (Vooght v. Winch, 2 B. & A. 662; Outram v. Morewood, 3 Ea. 346; Magrath v. Hardy, 6 Sc. 627; Wilson v. Wilson, 6 Sc. 540; S. C. nom. Wilson v. Butler, 4 Bing. N. C. 748).

Again, the suffering a judgment by default is an admission on the record of the cause of action. Therefore, the suffering judgment by default in an action against the acceptor of a bill admits the cause of action to the amount of the bill, unless, part payment be indorsed (Greene v. Hearne, 3 T. R. 301). But where the action is removed from an inferior court by habeas corpus, after judgment by default, such judgment is not evidence against the deft. in the superior court (Bottings v. Firby, 9 B. & C. 762). The deft. cannot, after judgment by default, insist on the fraud of the plt. (E. I. Co. v. Glover, 1 Stra. 612).

2. By Deed.] A party is also estopped from averring the contrary *to what he has expressly alleged in an instrument under [*64] his seal, whether it be an indenture, or, a deed poll (Co. Lit. 352 a); thus, if he have entered into a bond conditioned to perform the covenants in an indenture, he cannot plead to an action thereon, that the indenture was never executed (Hosier v. Searle, 2 B. & P. 299). If it be to pay all sums which T. is bound to pay, &c., he cannot say that T. is not bound to pay; or, to release all the right which he has in B., he is estopped from averring that he had no right in B. (Com. Dig. Estop. A 2). A party is equally estopped by the recital of a particular fact, if properly pleaded and relied upon, but not if the parties, in their pleading voluntarily submit the fact recited to a jury (Bowman v. Taylor, 2 Ad. & E. 278; Same v. Reston, ib. 298). If the condition of a bond recite that an action is pending, when sued on the bond the obligor is precluded from saying the contrary (Ib.; see Burleigh v. Stiles, 5 T. R. 465).

A recital in a deed is evidence against the party executing it, or one claiming under him (Com. Dig. Evid. B 5; see Rees v. Lloyd, Wightw. 123). The recital in a lease of a release is evidence of the lease against the releasor, and those claiming under him (Ford v. Grey, 1 Salk. 286; Crease v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R. 919), so is the recital of an ancient in a modern one (Gervis v. Gt. West. Can. Co. 5 M. & Sel. 78). Where a deed reciting the bankruptcy of A. conveys an estate to B., and B., being no party to that deed, conveys the estate to another by a deed, having no such recital, the former deeds are no evidence of the bankruptcy as against B. in an action relating to other lands (Doe v. Shelton, 3 Ad. & E. 265). The effect of admissions in a deed may be confined by its recitals (Lampon v. Corke, 5 B. & A. 607). But see Ingleby v. Swift, 10 Bing. 84, where it was held that the recital in a bond that the parties had agreed to execute a bond in 500*l.*, will not confine the bond to that sum if actually executed in the penal sum of 1000*l.* Although the deed be cancelled, the recital must be proved by an attesting witness (Breton v. Cope, Pea. Ca. 44). A recited instrument is only evidence of so much as is recited; if any other portion of the deed be required in evidence, it must be produced and proved in the usual way (Gillett v. Abbott, 7 A. & E. 783). In trespass against a sheriff, a bill of sale reciting the writ, the taking, and the sale of the goods is evidence against him of those facts (Woodward v. Larking, 3 Esp. 286).

In a recent case a lessee holding under a lease in which the rent reserved was 140*l.* per year, gave a bond which, after reciting the lease as reserving 170*l.* instead of 140*l.*, was conditioned for paying the sum of 170*l.* a year on the days mentioned in the lease. In an action on the bond the court held him estopped from showing what was the amount reserved by the lease, as being in effect a denial that such lease, as the bond described, had been executed (Lainson v. Tremere, 3 N. & M. 603; S. C. 1 Ad. & E. 792). And where a purchase deed contains the usual unqualified (see Lampon v. Corke, 5 B. & A. 606; Brottrill v. Somers, 2 Y. & J. 407) acknowledgment that the money has been paid, the vendor cannot show the contrary (Rowntree v. Jacob, 2 Taun. 141), though, it seems, he may show that it was paid by a cheque, or, bill which was dishonoured, or that part of the money was returned (Baker v. Dewey, 1 B. & C. 704). Nor is the receipt on the back of the deed conclusive (Straton v. Rastal, 2 T. R. 366).

The matter, however, must be expressly alleged in order to operate as an estoppel. Thus, a bond conditioned to perform all agreements [*65] made by A., to carry away all the marl in such a close; to release all his right in B., &c., does not estop the obligor from *averring that no agreement was set down by A.; that no marl was in the close; that he had no right in B., &c., for this is not inconsistent with the deed (Ib.).

Again, it is only in an action founded on the deed, or arising out of it, that the matter can be set up as an estoppel. In Carpenter v. Buller, 8 M. & W. 209, which was an action to try the right to a piece of land, the deft. put in a deed made for a collateral purpose, between the plt. and the deft. and a third person, in which was a recital, to the effect, that the land in question belonged to the deft., and contended that the plt. was thereby estopped. But the court, after taking time to consider, held that the recital was only evidence, and that the plt. might show that it was made upon a misrepresentation, and, referring to the case of Lainson v. Tremere, supra, observed that in another suit, though between the same parties, where a question should arise whether the plt. held at a rent of 170*l.* or 140*l.* the recital in the bond could not be held conclusive evidence.

Where the covenantor and covenantee submitted the amount of damages, on a breach of covenant, to arbitration, in an action on a covenant the award was held a conclusive admission of the amount of damages (Whitehead v. Tattersall, 1 Ad. & E. 491).

The deft. signed an instrument, addressed to the plt., in the following terms:—"In consideration of your having, by indenture, agreed to accept payment of the debt owing to you by A. B., the following instalments (that is to say), 10*s.* in the pound on the 18th day of August next, &c., I promise to guarantee the payment of the instalments;" and delivered it to the plt. in exchange for an indenture executed by the plt.; held, that the true construction of the instrument was, that the deft. make his promise in consideration that the plt. would execute an indenture and release A. B., and, consequently, that the execution of the instrument was not an admission by the deft. that the plt. had released A. B., and furnished no evidence in support of an issue taken on an allegation in the declaration that the plt. had released A. B. (King v. Cole, 17 Law J. 283, Exch.). At the trial of a cause, it was admitted that a document "was signed, sealed, and executed, as it purports to be." The document which was produced by the party who was to take a benefit under it, concluded, "as witness the hands and seals of" (the parties), and the attestation was to the signing and sealing only: held, that it was to be inferred that the document was delivered, and amounted in law to a deed (Hall v. Bainbridge, 12 Jur. 795; 17 Law J. 317, Q. B.) In ejectment under stat. 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 17, for a parish house, on the demise of A. and B., stated, in the declaration to be churchwardens and overseers of a parish, the fact that they acted as churchwardens and overseers at the time of the alleged demise, is sufficient prima facie proof for the purposes of the action, that they held the offices at the time (Doe d. Bowley v. Baines, 8 Q. B. 1037).

Who bound by an Estoppel.] Not only the party himself, but every person who claims by, or, under him, is bound, whether he comes in by act of law, or, in the post, as the heir, tenant in dower or by curtesy, lord by escheat, vendee, &c., &c. (Co. Lit. 352 a; Com. Dig. Estop. B.; Doe d. Leeming v. Skirrow, 7 Ad. & E. 157); but no person who is in the situation of a stranger to the act which creates the estoppel is bound thereby.

On the other hand, no person who would not, if the matter were against him, be bound by the estoppel can take advantage of it. Hence, where the deft. purchased, of the assignees of G., certain lands which were described in the conveyance as freehold, it was held, that he was not estopped, as against the widow of G., in an action of dower, from averring that the lands were not freehold, but, leasehold, and, therefore, not chargeable with dower; because, if the deed had described them as leasehold, the widow would not have been estopped from saying they were freehold (Gaunt v. Wainman, 3 Sc. 413).

3. Estoppel by Matter in Pais.] This class is, by far, the most important, and comprehends every act, representation, and course of conduct, upon the faith of which one party has induced the other to act, or by means of which he has acquired an advantage to himself. As far as regards the transaction which has originated from such act, representation, or course of conduct, the party doing, making, or, purchasing it is concluded, as against the other, from averring the contrary (see Hearne v. Rogers, 9 B. & C. 586).

Thus, if a husband, seised in right of his wife, enfeoffs A. who afterwards demises to the husband and wife for life, though the wife be in her remitter, and A. has not any reversion, yet, in waste against the husband and wife, the husband is estopped to show such remitter against his feoffment, and acceptance of an estate from A., though it was not in writing (Litt. ss. 666, 667). So, if a wife bring dower, and recover, she shall be estopped afterwards to claim land settled upon her for her jointure (Com. Dig. Estop. A 3).

So a person between whom, and another, the relation of tenant and landlord has been created, is estopped from saying, in any action for rent, for obtaining possession of, or, otherwise, concerning the right to the premises, that the person whom he so acknowledged, as *landlord, had no title, whether such relation were created by the execution of a lease [*66] by indenture (Wood v. Day, Moo. 387; S. C. 7 Taunt. 646); or, by writing not under seal (Fleming v. Gooding, 4 M. & Sc. 455; S. C. 10 Bing. 549); or, whether by taking possession under a verbal contract (see Cornish v. Searell, 8 B. & C. 471); by payment of rent (Doe d. Bristowe v. Pegge, 1 T. R. 760, n.; Doe d. Knight v. Smythe, 4 M. & Sc. 347; Hall v. Butler, 2 P. & D. 374); by attornment, or otherwise.

And even though it appear on the plt.'s own case that he had no title, still the tenant will not be permitted to avail himself of the defect (Fleming v. Gooding, 4 M. & S. 455; Cooper v. Blundy, 1 Bing. N. C. 45; Francis v. Doe d. Harvey, 4 M. & W. 331).

The lessor, on his part, is equally concluded; and the assignee of either party stands in the same position as the party himself. Hence, where a person who had built a house on a piece of waste land, gave up possession of it to the tenant of the adjoining land, who held the same as parcel of his demise; the latter having let the house in question to the deft., it was held, in an ejectment by the landlord of the adjoining land, that the deft. could not dispute the title of the tenant, or, the tenant that of the lessor of the plt. (Doe d. Wheble v. Fuller, 1 Tyr. & G. 17). And where a person let a house which was vested in a trustee for the separate use of his wife, to the deft. as yearly tenant, and pending his occupation executed an indenture, purporting to be made by him and his wife, and to demise the premises to A. for a term, but which indenture the wife refused to execute, and gave the deft. notice to pay his rent to A.; it was held, in an action by A. for the rent, that, as the deft. could not before have disputed the title of the husband, he could not impeach that of the plt., who claimed under him (Rennie v. Robinson, 7 Moo. 539; S. C. 1 Bing. 147; and see Doe d. Martin v. Austin, 2 M. & Sc. 107; Barwick d. Richmond Corp. v. Thompson, 7 T. R. 488; Taylor v. Needham, 2 Taun. 278; Doe d. Bullen v. Mills, 1 N. & M. 25; S. C. 2 Ad. & E. 17; Hall v. Butler, 10 Ad. & E. 204; S. C. 2 P. & D. 374; Bringloe v. Godson, 8 Sc. 71).

But where a person, let into possession of parish property, paid rent to the churchwardens, and during the tenancy the latter demised the premises for a term to the plt., and gave notice to the deft. to pay the rent to him, it was held competent for the defendant to object that the churchwardens alone had no title to the land, and that, consequently, the lease to the plt. was void, though, when the rent was demanded by the plt. he had made no objection to their title, and had afterwards promised to pay them (Phillips v. Pearce, 5 B. & C. 433; see Doe d. Grundy v. Clarke, 14 Ea. 488).

So, if a person borrow the keys, and thus get possession of his own house from another who claims it adversely, he will not be allowed to set up his own title in an ejectment brought by the other, but must himself bring an ejectment (Doe d. Johnson v. Baytup, 4 N. & M. 837; 3 Ad. & E. 188).

Where the relationship has not been perfected between the parties, this species of estoppel does not arise. Hence a party who has entered into an agreement for a lease, and who is sued for not accepting it, is not precluded from showing, in such action, that the intended lessor had no title. So where, the only evidence of such relationship is the payment of rent, or an attornment, the alleged tenant is at liberty to show, that such payment, or attornment was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, or, made under a misapprehension of the facts, or, for a particular purpose, other than that, of becoming tenant (Cornish v. Scarell, 8 B. & C. 471; S. C. 1 M. & R. 703; Rogers v. Pitcher, 6 Taun. 202; S. C. 1 Marsh. 541; Gravenor* [*67] v. Woodhouse, 1 Bing. 38; Fenner v. Duplock, 9 Moo. 38; S. C. 2 Bing. 10; Gregory v. Dorage, 11 Moo. 394; S. C. 3 Bing. 474).

And in all cases a tenant is at liberty to show that his landlord has, since the demise, conveyed away his interest, or that his estate has determined, or, any other matter which does not amount to nil habuit in tenementis (Sylliban v. Stradling, 2 Wils. 208; England d. Syburn v. Slade, 4 T. R. 682; Doe d. Strobe v. Seaton, 2 C. M. & R. 728; S. C. 1 Tyr. & G. 19; Doe d. Jackson v. Ramsbottom, 3 M. & S. 516; Reave v. Moss, 1 Bing. 360; S. C. 8 Moo. 389; Pope v. Biggs, 2 Bing. N. C. 572).

And where the estate was in mortgage at the time of the demise, and the mortgagor subsequently requires the tenant to pay him the rent, the latter may do so, and thus discharge himself on the ground of riens in arrear (Taylor v. Zanuri, 6 Taun. 524; Pope v. Bigg, 9 B. & C. 245; Waddilove v. Barnett, 2 Bing. N. C. 538); or, if a new tenancy be created between him and the mortgagee, he may, to any subsequent action by the mortgagor, set up this defence as the determination of a defeasible estate (see Rogers v. Humphrey, 4 Ad. & E. 299; S. C. 5 N. & M. 511; Evans v. Elliott, 1 P. & D. 256), though, not by way of nil habuit in tenementis (Alchorne v. Gomme, 2 Bing. 54).

Where, in an action of debt for tolls, the plt. proved the counterpart lease executed by the deft., and duly stamped as a counterpart, the deft. was holden estopped from showing that the original was not properly stamped (Paul v. Meek, 2 Y. & J. 116).

The acceptor of a bill is estopped from disputing, as against a bona fide holder, the handwriting of the drawer, or, his authority or, legal ability to draw, or, from impeaching in any way the validity of the bill on this ground (Smith v. Chester, 1 T. R. 655; Bass v. Clive, 4 M. & S. 15; Robinson v. Yarrow, 7 Taun. 455; Porthouse v. Parker, 1 Camp. 82); though it were accepted in blank, and afterwards filled up by a different person from the one intended, and for a different amount.

But, the acceptance of a bill does not admit the indorsement, though it were on the bill at the time when the acceptance was written (Smith v. Chester, 1 T. R. 655). Hence, when a bill, drawn by A., by procuration for B., was indorsed by A. in the same way, it was held that the acceptor was not precluded from objecting that A. had no authority to indorse (Robinson v. Yarrow, supra).

So, if any party to a bill, on being asked whether the name on it is in his handwriting, answer, that it is, and on the faith of such admission the bill is negotiated, he cannot afterwards say that the writing is a forgery (Leach v. Buchanan, 4 Esp. 226). So, a person who attends another in the character of a physician cannot afterwards make a charge on the ground that he is only an apothecary (Lipscombe v. Holmes, 2 Camp. 441; Chorley v. Bobcot, 4 T. R. 317).

A party who executes a deed, or, enters into a contract in a feigned name, cannot, in any action thereon, avail himself of the misnomer (Walker v. Willoughby, 6 Taun. 530; Bonner v. Wilkinson, 5 B. & A. 682; Newton v. Maxwell, 2 C. & J. 215). Where the plt., on being applied to for the purpose, stated that his name was John, and execution in consequence issued against him by that name, he was held concluded in an action of trespass from saying that his name was William (Price v. Harwood, 4 Camp. 108). So, where a deft. suffers judgment in an action in which his name is misdescribed, he cannot resist an execution against him by that name, and the sheriff is bound to execute it (Reeves v. Slater, 7 B. & C. 486; Crawford v. Satchwell, 2 Str. 1218).

*A person who holds himself out, or, suffers his name to be used, [*68] as member of a partnership, is, on this principle, liable as partner for the debts of the firm.

So, where a person permits a woman to appear, and treats her as his wife, he thereby incurs a liability for her debts to the same extent, as, if he were her husband (Watson v. Threlkeld, 2 Esp. 637; Robinson v. Nation, 1 Camp. 245; Munroe v. De Chamant, 4 Camp. 215). If the owner of goods stand by and see another person sell them as his, he is estopped from afterwards claiming them from the purchaser.

And, if a wharfinger transfer goods to the account of A., or, acknowledge to hold them on his account, he cannot afterwards dispute A.'s title thereto (Hawes v. Watson, 2 B. & C. 540). Where the captain of a vessel stated in his bill of lading that the freight had been paid, the owner was held estopped from saying that it had not as against a bona fide indorsee (Howard v. Tucker, 1 B. & Ad. 712). But, it is otherwise as between the original parties (Bates v. Todd, 1 M. & R. 106). A party claiming to have been the owner of lands, by virtue of a cession to him from A., since deceased, offered evidence, before any other proof of the cession, that A. actually managed the property, and while so managing, declared that he did so in the name of the now claimant. Held, admissible evidence (Baron de Bode's case, 8 Q. B. 208).

Admissions generally as Evidence.

We now come to those species of admission which are available as evidence against the party, more, or, less cogent according to circumstances, but which are not in their nature conclusive.

This inquiry naturally divides itself into two branches: 1. By whom the admission must be made; and, 2. Its nature and effect.

1. By whom to be made.] "The general rule is, that every material fact must be proved by testimony on oath. There is an exception to that rule, viz., that the acts and declarations of a party on the record, or, of one identified in interest with him, are, as against such party, admissible in evidence" (per Bayley, J., in Spargo v. Brown, 9 B. & C. 938). But he may show that such admissions were mistaken, or, untrue, except in cases of estoppel (ante, p. 62, Herne v. Rogers, 9 B. & C. 586, per Bayley, J.).

We shall presently see that the admissions of a party on record are receivable, though he sues, or, is sued as a trustee only; also, that in such cases, the admissions of the real plt. or deft. are receivable too. So, the admissions of a person equally interested as partner, co-contractor, &c., may be given in evidence (see post, "ADMISSION BY PARTNERS").

But, beyond these, there is another class of cases, which show that if the party making the admission had, at the time, the same amount of interest the other way, as the party against whom the admission is sought to be used, and the latter derives his title from him, then whatever the former said in derogation of his interest is evidence against the latter. Thus, upon a question whether a particular close was part of the plt.'s estate, or, part of a common, a declaration by a former owner of the estate, at the time he held it, that he had no right to inclose it, was held receivable against the plt., though such former owner was in court and might have been called (Woolway v. Rowe, 1 Ad. & E. 114). So, where it is shown that A. B. was formerly in receipt of the rents and profits, a statement by him, that he held under another, as it is in derogation of his own apparent right to be considered the [*69] owner of the fee, is evidence in favour of *a person deriving title from that other, against the tenant in possession (Doe d. Daniel v. Coulthard, 7 Ad. & E. 235). So, as actual possession is also prima facie evidence of seisin, the declarations of the tenant in possession, as to, who was his landlord, are admissible in favour of a person claiming under the latter (Carne v. Nicoll, 1 Sc. 466; S. C. 1 B. N. C. 430; Hollaway v. Raikes, 2 T. R. 55; Peaceable v. Watson, 4 Taun. 16; Doe d. Stansbury v. Arkwright, 5 C. & P. 575).

Whether the admission of a tenant for life upon questions in which his interest must be considered commensurate with that of the reversioner, such as boundary, rights of way, &c., &c., are receivable against the latter, seems to be doubtful. Also, whether the admission of a cestui que trust having a partial interest can be received as evidence against the trustees when suing for other parties. In Doe d. Rowlandson v. Wainwright, 8 Ad. & E. 691, which was an action by trustees, the deft. tendered a mortgage deed executed by a cestui que trust for life, with a view to show, by the description of the premises conveyed thereby, that a yard and outhouses which the plt. claimed. had passed under the general words of a former deed, the court considered the question, whether the declaration of such party was admissible against the trustees as one of serious difficulty, but held, that though, by saying that the premises had passed under a former mortgage the tenant for life had divested herself of the beneficial occupation thereof, she had, at the same time, procured to herself thereby an advance of money; and, therefore, the court could not see that it was a declaration clearly and unambiguously against her interest, and on that account held the evidence properly rejected. The declaration of the plt.'s son, under whom the plt. claims by an assignment to secure a debt alleged to be due from him, as to his being so indebted is not admissible in evidence, though made before the date of the assignment (Coble v. Graham, Exch. Dec. 5, 1848).

The indorsee of a negotiable instrument, for valuable consideration, takes by a new and superior title of his own, and therefore, the declarations of a payee, or, prior holder that it was an accommodation note, &c., are not receivable against a subsequent holder, unless, it be first shown that the latter gave no consideration, or, that he took it after it was due (Barough v. White, 4 B. & C. 325; Beauchamp v. Parry, 1 B. & Ad. 89; Phillips v. Cole, 10 Ad. & E. 106). But, what is said, or, done by the payee at the time the note is made, is evidence to show its original infirmity, as being the best evidence of what the contract was (Kent v. Lowen, 1 Camp. 177).

So, in an action by the assignees of a bankrupt, against the sheriff for taking the bankrupt's goods, the acts and declarations of the bankrupt are not receivable as against the deft. to prove the validity of the commission (Bernasconi v. Farebrother, 3 B. & Ad. 372). In an action by the assignees of a bankrupt, to try the right to the property in goods, which have been delivered before the bankruptcy to a bailee for a specific purpose, the declarations made by the bankrupt subsequent to the delivery of the goods are admissible in evidence, though offered with a view to show the property in the bankrupt himself (Sharpe v. Nurholme, 8 Sc. 23).

So, where an auctioneer advertised for sale the property of J. S., a bankrupt, held evidence of bankruptcy in an action, by the assignees against the auctioneer, for the proceeds of sale (Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 340); and on a plea denying the title of the assignees (Ingles v. Spence, 1 C. M. & R. 432). So, when deft., in an affidavit to obtain a commission, swore that the party had *become bankrupt (Ledbetter v. Salt, 4 Bingh. 623). So, a bankrupt who has petitioned for his discharge cannot dispute the [*70] validity of the commission in an action against his assignees (Watson v. Wace, 5 B. & C. 153). But, if the admission that he has become bankrupt be made in the course of a dealing with third parties the bankrupt may show in an action against his assignees that he has not become bankrupt (Heane v. Rogers, 9 B. & C. 577). So, he may dispute the commission, although, he has surrendered, or, petitioned for enlargement of the time for so doing (Mercer v. Wise, 3 Esp. 219); and although, he has applied to a commissioner to appoint an official assignee to investigate the petitioning creditor's debt (Munk v. Clark, 2 N. C. 299). As against a creditor the merely proving a debt under the commission will not dispense with the regular proof of bankruptcy when disputed (Rankerd v. Horner, 16 East, 19). So, if B. have dealt with A. as farmer of post-horse duties, this is evidence in an action between them, that A. is such farmer (Badford v. McIntosh, 3 T. R. 632; see Peacock v. Harris, 10 East, 104); and proof that the deft. collected taxes is sufficient proof of his being a collector, although he was appointed by warrant (Lister v. Priestly, Wright, 67). So, the payment of tithes to the plt. by a parishioner precludes him from disputing the plt.'s title to the living (Chapman v. Beard, 3 Anstr. 942). But, the mere attestation of a paper as witness is not of itself proof of the contents of it (Harding v. Crethorn, 1 Esp. 58).

What is said by a private member of a corporation has been ruled not to be evidence against the corporate body (Mayor of London v. Long, 1 Camp. 22; but see R. v. Hardwick, 11 Ea. 584); but where a corporation sues for a disturbance in exercising a corporate office, what is said by a corporate officer respecting the exercise of it, is evidence against the corporation (Ib. 25); and in an action by a member of an incorporated company, against the company, entries in the company's books have been holden inadmissible against the plt., on the ground that he had no control over them, and must be regarded as a stranger, though, the act of incorporation gave each member a right to inspect them (Hill v. Manchester Water Works Company, 5 B. & Ad. 866). The admission of a surveyor to a corporation respecting a house of the corporation, is evidence against the latter in an action for an injury to the plt.'s house by work done to the deft.'s premises (Payton v. St. Thomas's Hospital (Governors), 4 M. & R. 625).

It seems that the acts, or, declarations of the principal, which would be clearly admissible against himself, are not admissible in an action against the surety. In Evans v. Beattie, 5 Esp. 27, Lord Ellenborough ruled that the deft. who had guaranteed the payment of goods supplied to A., had a right to insist on strict proof of delivery, and rejected evidence of an admission by A. that he had received them (Bacon v. Chisnie, 1 Stark. 192; and in Smith v. Whittingham, 6 C. & P. 78, Gurney, B., ruled the same way. And see, per Tindal, C. J., in Ward v. Suffield, 5 B. N. C. 383). In Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317; Whitmash v. George, 3 M. & R. 42; and Goss v. Watlington, 6 Moo. 355, the court forbore to decide the point, holding the evidence tendered receivable on another ground. Yet, in actions against the sheriff, for an escape on mesne process, it is held that whatever would be admissible evidence of the debt, as between the plt. and the original deft., is receivable against the sheriff (see Sloman v. Herne, 2 Esp. 695; Williams v. Bridges, 2 Stark. 42; Gibbon v. Coggon, 2 Camp. 188; Rogers v. Jones, 7 B. & C. 86).

[71] Admissions by Parties on the Record.] The declarations, or admissions of a party on the record, whether made by a trustee or nominal party, are receivable in evidence for the opposite party, though, the former have no interest in the suit (Bauerman v. Radenius, infra; Gibson v. Winter, 5 B. & Ad. 96). Thus, where in an action brought against a shipowner for damages to goods on board, it appeared that the plts. had shipped the goods as agents, and that they were indemnified by the owners of the goods, for whose benefit the action was brought, a letter written by them, exonerating the deft. from all blame, was held admissible; and Lawrence, J., said, "I have looked into the books to see if I could find any case in which it has been held that the admission of a plt. on record is not evidence, but have found none" (Bauerman v. Radenius, 7 T. R. 664). And Grose, J., said, "As long as Bauerman and Co. are the plts. on record, they must be taken to be so in all the consequences."

And where the plt., after an assignment of his effects, for the benefit of his creditors, gave the deft. a receipt in full, such act was holden a bar to a subsequent action by the assignees in the debtor's name, though there was no assignment in fact (Bristow v. Eastman, 1 Esp. 172; Alner v. George, 1 Camp. 392; and see Gibson v. Winter, 5 B. & Ad. 96). An amount given under such circumstances, seems in fact to be equivalent to an executed gift of the money (see Bramston v. Roberts, 4 Bingh. 11). As between the underwriter and assured, the acknowledgment in the policy of the amount of the premium by the broker is undeniable (Dalzell v. Mair, 1 Camp. 532). A receipt not under seal is only prima facie evidence of payment, and may be contradicted and explained (Graves v. Key, 3 B. & Ad. 318). If an agent employed to receive money, and bound by his duty to his principal to communicate to him whether the money is received or not, render an account from time to time, continuing an intentional mis-statement that the money had been received, he is so far bound by the account that he cannot make his principal refund money paid upon it (Shaw v. Picton, 4 B. & C. 729; Skyring v. Greenwood, ib. 281).

In Alner v. George, supra, the receipt was held conclusive, unless, it were shown that it had been obtained by fraud or misrepresentation practised on the plt. So, in an action on a policy, unless, there was fraud practised by the assured to induce the broker to give credit to him (Foy v. Bell, 3 Taunt. 493). Where, however, there are several plts., and a receipt by one is put in, it is competent for the others to show that it was fraudulent as to them, and thus, to defeat its effect (Scaife v. Jackson, 3 B. & C. 421; Farrar v. Hutchinson, 1 P. & D. 437); thus, qualifying the general rule that whatever is an answer to one co-plt. is an answer to all (Jones v. Yates, 9 B. & C. 539; Wallace v. Kelsall, 7 M. & W. 264).

But the declarations of a guardian or prochein ami are not admissible against the infant (Cowling v. Ely, 2 Stark. 366; Webb v. Smith, R. & M. 106; 3 Mo. 258; but see James v. Hatfield, 1 Stra. 548); though, it seems, he is so far a party on record, that he cannot be compelled to give evidence (see Fenn v. Grainger, 3 Camp. 177); nor, on the other hand, can he be a witness for the infant (see R. v. St. Mary Magdalene, 3 Ea. 7). And, in an action by a special administrator, under 38 Geo. III. c. 87, the declarations of the executor named in the will, made while he was the acting executor, were held inadmissible against the plt. (Rush v. Peacock, 2 M. & Rob. 162; but see Smith v. Morgan, 2 M. & Rob. 257). So, the declarations of an assignee suing as such, made before he became so, are not admissible against him (Fenwick v. Thornton, M. & M. 51; *see contra, [*72] Smith v. Morgan, M. & Rob. 257). The principle upon which such declarations are evidence, is that when accompanying the act done, and tending to explain it, they are part of the res gesta, and therefore admissible (Wilson v. Kinnaird (Lord), 6 East, 188). But such declarations are not admissible unless the act itself which they accompany are admissible (Wright v. Latham, 5 Cl. & Fin. 676; 2 Jur. 461). In assumpsit against several defts. a statement made by one is receivable in evidence, as the plt. may proceed by steps to fix each of the defendants separately (Whitford v. Tutin, 10 Bing. 395). If one is seen felling timber in a wood, it is a prima facie evidence that he is owner of it, and anything that he says as to any one else being the owner of it, is evidence (Doe v. Arkwright, 5 C. & P. 575).

Admission in Petition and Schedule.] Where the defendant has applied for relief to a commissioner of bankruptcy under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 105, and filed a schedule and petition, including a debt due to the plt., but the proceedings were abandoned on its appearing that the debts exceeded 300*l.*; held, on action brought to recover a debt included in the schedule, that a copy thereof was evidence to prove an admission of that debt by the deft.; that the proceedings were not coram non judice by reason of the debts exceeding the jurisdiction of the commissioner, and that they were therefore recoverable; and, semble, that the schedule and petition were admissible, though the rest of the proceedings were not produced (Green v. Balls, 11 Law, T. 48).

Admission by Parties interested, though not on Record.] The declarations, or admissions of the party interested, are in all cases receivable, and the attorney, conducting the cause in court, may be called by the other side and asked who employs him, in order to let in admissions of such party (Levy v. Pope, M. & M. 410). Thus, in an action on a policy, averring the interest in A. B., the declaration of A. B. is admissible against the plt. (Bell. v. Ansley, 16 Ea. 141). In actions by the master of a ship for freight, the admissions of the owner are evidence for the deft. (Smith v. Lyon, 3 Camp. 465; Hart v. Horn, 2 Camp. 92). So, in an action on a bond conditioned for payment of money to a third person, the admission of that person, that nothing was due, was holden conclusive against the plt. (Hanson v. Parker, 1 Wils. 257). And in trover, for a deed detained at the instance, and, on behalf of W. R., his declaration in favour of the plt.'s right to it, was holden properly received (Harrison v. Vallance, 1 Bing. 45; and see Robson v. Cinarader, 1 Stark. 372). So, the admission of a party proved to be a co-contractor with the deft., though, not joined in the action, is evidence for the plt. (Grant v. Jackson, Pea. 203; Wood v. Braddick, 1 Taun. 104). The declarations of a party for whose benefit the plt. sues on a bill are admissible (Wildstead v. Levy, 1 M. & Rob. 138). So, of a party, from whom he received the bill or note when overdue (Beauchamp v. Parry, 1 B. & Ad. 89). Admissions by one of several trustees will not affect his co-trustees, where they are not all personally liable (Davies v. Ridge, 3 Esp. 102). Nor, it is said, will those of a trustee, be evidence against a cestui que trust (B. N. P. 237).

In replevin, where deft. makes cognizance under A. B., and non tenuit pleaded, A. B. is not a competent witness, and therefore, his admission is receivable for the plt. (Golding v. Nias, 5 Esp. 272; King v. Baker, 2 Ad. & E. 333; contra, Sturt v. Horn, 2 Camp. 92; but where there are several cognizances making title under different persons, if the deft. at the [*73] trial consent to a verdict on one *of them, that person for whom the verdict is taken may be called as witness in support of any of the other cognizances (King v. Baker, supra); and, of course, his declarations are no longer admissible.

So, in ejectment, the admission of the lessor of the plt. is evidence, for the deft., since he cannot be compelled to give evidence against, and will not be permitted to be a witness for, himself (Penn v. Granger, 3 Camp. 177); and where there are several demises, the admission of any one of them, unless, the plt. abandon that at the trial, and then as he may examine that lessor on behalf of the others his admission is not evidence (King v. Baker, supra). Where an action of ejectment was brought by a trustee having the legal estate, and the deft. offered evidence of an admission made by the cestui que trust of the particular estate, it was considered doubtful, for the interest of the cestui que trust was not co-extensive with that of the lessor of the plt., and the declarations were prejudicial to the remainderman (Doe d. Rowlandson v. Wainwright, 8 Ad. & El. 691). The interest of the cestui que trust ought to be identical with that of the trustee, and it is not enough to prove a trust without showing the nature of it, or that the cestui que trust is the real party to the action, and the nominal party a mere agent (May v. Taylor, 6 M. & G. 261).

On this ground, the declaration of a rated (see R. v. Lumley, 6 T. R. 157) parishioner was, at common law, receivable in evidence against the parish, since, being considered a party in interest, he was privileged from being called by the other side (R. v. Woburn, 10 Ea. 395; R. v. Hardwick, 11 Ea. 578; R. v. Whitley, 1 M. & S. 636). On the other hand, he was not a competent witness for the parish. The statute 54 Geo. III. c. 170, enacted that no inhabitant rated, or, liable to be rated, or, holding any office in the parish, shall be deemed, by reason thereof, an incompetent witness for, or, against the parish in certain matters specified; but, as this still left the overseers and churchwardens incompetent, as being parties to the record (Reg. v. Rec. of Bath, 9 Ad. & E. 719), the statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 26, enacts "That no person called as a witness on any trial in any court shall be disabled, or, prevented from giving evidence by reason only of his being rated, or, liable to be rated;" and "that no churchwarden, overseer, or, officer of a parish, or, any person rated, or, liable to be rated, shall be disabled, or, prevented from giving evidence on any trial, appeal, or, other proceeding, by reason only of his being a party to such trial, &c., or, liable to costs in respect thereof, when he shall be only a nominal party, and only liable to contribute to such costs in common with the other rate-payers." These enactments do not render a rated inhabitant compellable to give evidence against his parish, and do not therefore, as it should seem, make any alteration in the law, as to the admissibility of his declaration. He was always at liberty to appear as a witness against his parish; but it was never necessary, in order to let in an admission by him, that he should be called to give evidence, and should refuse (R. v. Whitley Lower, 1 M. & S. 637).

In actions against the sheriff to try the validity of a commission, any admission, or, declaration by the petitioning creditor, as to the amount of his debt, is evidence for the plt., if, it appear that the sheriff is indemnified by the assignees, or, that they defend the action (Dowden v. Fowle, 4 Camp. 38; Dyke v. Aldridge, cited 7 T. R. 665); semble, not otherwise (but, see contra, Young v. Smith, 5 Esp. 121). So, in an action against the sheriff for an escape, an admission by the sheriff of the fact is evidence for the plt., since it is notorious that the under-sheriff is the party interested by reason of his bond to save harmless (Yabsley v. Doble, 1 Ld. *Raym. 190). And, in an action on a guaranty, an admission by the prin- [*74] cipal as to the debt is evidence against the debt. (see Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317, sed quære). So, in an action by the indorsee of a bill, against the acceptor, the declaration of the payee, as to the illegality of consideration, is admissible against the plt., if, it be shown that he gave no value for it, or, that he took it after it was due, but, not otherwise (Beauchamp v. Parry, 1 B. & Ad. 89).

[Admission by Partners.] The admission of a person proved to be partner with another as to matters relating to their joint concern, whether made in an answer to a bill filed against himself (Grant v. Jackson, Pea. 203), or, in a voluntary affidavit (Vicrey's case, Bac. Ab. Evid. 623), or, otherwise, is evidence against that other (Nicholls v. Dowding, 1 Stark. 81), though no party to the suit (Wood v. Braddick, infra; but see Booth v. Quinn, 7 Price, 198), whether made during the partnership, or, after its dissolution (Wood v. Braddick, 1 Taun. 104), and even, if, after the admission he have become bankrupt (Grant v. Jackson, Peake, 203). In an action by partners for a breach of contract, a declaration by one of them, that the subject-matter of the contract was his private property, was holden admissible to defeat the action (Lucas v. De La Cour, 1 M. & S. 249). A notice signed by partners, stating that the partnership has been dissolved, is evidence of such fact, although the partnership was by deed (Doe v. Miles, 1 Stark. 181).

The fact of the partnership must first appear, or, be proved aliunde, in order to let in the admission of one as evidence against the other. But, where two out of three defts. were outlawed in an action, and the third pleaded non assumpsit, a letter written by him, in which he admitted the partnership, was, for an obvious reason, holden receivable (Sangster v. Mazaredo, 1 Stark. 161).

The admission need not be made during the partnership; though in a case where one had become bankrupt, Lord Kenyon considered that if, at the time of making the admission the bankrupt had obtained his certificate, and thus, become discharged, the evidence would not have been receivable against the others (Grant v. Jackson, Pea. 203). Admissions made by one of several partners, after a dissolution of partnership, are admissible to prove payment, after the dissolution, of a debt due to the partnership (Pritchard v. Draper, 1 Russ. & M. 191). But, it must relate to the partnership concern. The declaration of one partner as to a matter which occurred before the partnership commenced, or, after its dissolution, is not evidence against the other, unless, a joint responsibility be proved as a foundation for the evidence (Catt v. Howard, 3 Stark. 5; Pritchard v. Draper, 1 Russ. & M. 191; France v. White, 8 Sc. 257; 8 Dowl. 53; 6 Bing. N.C. 33, S.C.).

In an action for work and labour by A. and B., who were partners at the time the cause of action accrued, the deft. put in evidence a letter written by C., who had since the transaction become a partner with B., in the room of A., admitting that the plts. had given credit to another party. Held, inadmissible, without proof that C. had authority from B. to make the statement. (Tunley v. Evans, 2 D. & L. 747).

It is sufficient that the parties have a community of interest in the matter to which the admission refers, though, they may not be general partners (see 11 Ea. 589). Hence the admission of one of two makers of a promissory note that it has not been paid, is evidence against all (Whitcomb v. Whiting, Doug. 652), and an admission by one executor as to assets, or, as to the liability of the testator, is evidence against his co-executors, but, not as to collateral* matter (see Fox v. Waters, 12 Ad. & E. 43). An [*75] admission by a partner as to a subject not of co-partnership, but of joint ownership in a vessel, is not binding on his co-partner (Jagers v. Bennings, 1 Stark. 64); and where a proprietor of an incorporated company sued the company on a bond, it was held, that entries in the company's books were not receivable against the plt.; that the principle applicable to partners did not apply, for the plt. had no control over the books, though, by the act of incorporation every proprietor was at liberty to inspect them (Hill v. Manchester Water Works Company, 5 B. & Ad. 866; see post, "PARTNERS," "STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS." In an action against two co-partners on a deed executed by one of them for self and partner, a subsequent acknowledgment of the deed by the other deft. is not evidence to prove the actual execution by him, without producing the authority under seal (Steiglitz v. Egginton, Holt, 141).

Admissions by Co-trespassers.] Where parties are established to be co-trespassers, or, wrong-doers, or, to have entered into the same criminal design, with a view to its accomplishment, the admissions of the one, as to the motives and circumstances of the trespass, will be evidence against all who are proved to have combined together for the common object (per Ld. Ellenb., Rex v. Inhabitants of Hardwicke, 11 Ea. 585; Daniels v. Potter, M. & M. 505), and this, though such admissions be made by one in the absence of the others. Thus, if three defts. have jointly imprisoned the plt., the declarations of one of the defts., made some weeks after, in the absence of the others, tending to show that the imprisonment arose from malice, are admissible evidence in an action for false imprisonment brought against all three (Wright v. Court, 2 C. & P. 233). And such admissions are not evidence in actions ex contractu, unless, they relate to a matter in which there is a community of interest. Thus, where the plt. in covenant alleged an eviction by two defts., under a prior lawful title, an admission by one of the defts. after eviction, was held no evidence of such title, although the defts. were co-executors of the covenantor, and had joined in the eviction (Fox v. Waters, 12 Ad. & E. 43).

Admissions by Party represented, as Bankrupts, &c.] An admission by the party represented is usually receivable in evidence against his representative (Bateman v. Bailey, 5 T. R. 513; Smith v. Simmes, 1 Esp. 330, 389). An admission made by a bankrupt before the act of bankruptcy is evidence to charge his estate with a debt (Bateman v. Bayley, 5 T. R. 513); but, an admission made afterwards is not receivable for that purpose. Admissions made by an insolvent subsequent to his insolvency are not admissible against the trustees of his estate (Smith v. Simms, 1 Esp. 330). As to the admissions of bankrupts to prove petitioning creditor's debt, post, "BANKRUPT." In an action by assignees of bankrupt, Tindall, C. J., admitted declarations made by them before their appointment (Smith v. Morgan, 2 M. & Rob. 257; see contra, Fenwick v. Thornton, M. & M. 51, per Ld. Denman, C. J.). In an action by a bankrupt against his assignees to try the validity of his commission, depositions of deceased persons taken under the commission and enrolled by the assignees are not evidence against them in consequence of such enrolment (Chambers v. Bernasconi, 1 C. M. & R. 347).

Admissions by Agents.] In all cases, before the admission of an agent can be given in evidence, the fact of his agency must be established, and evidence that the party has acted as agent in other like instances, in which the principal has recognised his acts, will be evidence of a [*76] general authority (Neal v. Irving, 1 Esp. 6; Watkins v. Vince, 2 Stark. 368). A receipt for debt and costs indorsed by the plt.'s attorney's town agent, on a writ of summons, is evidence of payment against the plt., without further proof of agency (Weary v. Alderson, 2 M. & Rob. 127).

Admissions by agents are divisible into three classes.—1. Those which are made by an agent in the course of, and, with reference to his employment. 2. Declarations made by a party to whom the principal refers another for information as to the particular subject; and, 3. Declarations which the principal adopts, and, uses for his own purpose.

1. Declarations, &c. made by an Agent in the course of his Employment.] As, if A. employs B. to enter into a contract, whatever B. does, or, says, or writes in the making of that contract respecting it, is admissible in evidence, because, it is a part of the contract which he makes for A. (see Fairlee v. Hastings, 10 Ves. 128, and per Gibbs, J., in Langhorn v. Allnutt, 4 Taun. 519). It is on this ground alone, that such evidence is receivable, and, therefore, when an agent writes to his employer by way of narrative, of what he has done, it cannot be used in evidence against the employer (Ib.; see Moesters v. Abraham, 1 Esp. 375). For the same reason, what an agent says before, or, after the particular transaction is not evidence (see Helyear v. Hawke, 5 Esp. 72; see Irving v. Motley, 7 Bing. 543). Where the principal, through the medium of an agent, chartered a ship, and warranted it sea-worthy, a letter previously written by the agent to a third person, offering the ship for hire, was holden inadmissible against the principal, as not forming part of the contract, and it was held, that the agent himself must be called (Betham v. Benson, Gow. 45). Letters of an agent to his principal, containing a narrative of the transaction in which he has been engaged, are not admissible against the principal (Kath v. Janson, 4 Taunt. 565; Fairlee v. Hastings, 10 Ves. 128). So, in a qui tam action for selling coals short of measure, what was said by the deft.'s manager as to the disposition of the coals then lying at the wharf, was held admissible, but not what he said respecting by-gone sales (Peto v. Hague, 4 Esp. 134).

If a person agree to admit a claim, provided J. S. will make an affidavit in support of it, such affidavit is proof against him (Lloyd v. Willan, 1 Esp. 178; Stevens v. Thacker, Pea. 187); but not conclusive (Garnett v. Ball, 2 Stark. 160); except in an action on the special agreement (Amy v. Andrews, 1 Freem. 132). So, where a vendee of goods says, "If the carrier's servant says he delivered the goods I will pay you," the answer of the servant is evidence (Daniell v. Pitt, 1 Camp. 366, n.); Williams v. Innes, ib. 364). So, where in an action for the loss of a horse, through deft.'s negligence in not fencing a shaft, deft. promised to pay compensation if a mining jury said that the shaft was his; held, that their finding was admissible, but not conclusive (Sybray v. White, 1 M. & W. 435).

In an action against the sheriff for an escape, a subsequent admission of the fact by the under-sheriff is evidence; but, this is on the ground of the latter being the party liable (Yabsley v. Doble, 1 Ld. Ray. 190). Hence, where the sheriff was sued for extortion by his bailiff, declarations by the under-sheriff tending to show that the person who executed the writ was the officer of the sheriff, was holden properly rejected, it not appearing that the under-sheriff himself was the party to be charged, nor that they accompanied an act done (Snowball v. Goodriche, 1 N. & M. 234; S. C. 4 B. & Ad. 542). But the declaration of either when contemporaneous [*77] with, and, forming part of the instruction is admissible (ib.; North v. Miles, 1 Camp. 389).

Again, to make the statements of the agent admissible, they must be made with reference to the subject-matter of his employment. In detinue against a pawnbroker for plate which had been pledged for 200*l.*, the plt., in order to prove the deft.'s possession of the plate, tendered a declaration by his shopman to this effect, and this the court held, was properly rejected. And Tindal, C. J.; observed, in giving judgment, "If the transaction out of which this suit arises had been one in the ordinary trade, or, business of the deft. as a pawnbroker, in which trade the shopman was agent, or, servant to the deft. a declaration of such agent that his master had received the goods might probably have been evidence against the master, as it might be held within the scope of such agent's authority to give an answer to such an inquiry made by any person interested in the goods deposited with the pawnbroker. But the transaction with deft. appears to us not a transaction in his business as a pawnbroker, but, was a loan by him, as by any other lender of money, at five per cent.; and there is no evidence to show the agency of the shopman, in private transactions, unconnected with the business of the shop." The learned judge further observed that it was dangerous to open the door to declarations of agents beyond what the cases had already done (Garth v. Howard, 1 M. & Sc. 628; S. C. 8 Bing. 451; see also Lawrence v. Thatcher, 6 C. & P. 671; Price v. Marsh, 1 C. & P. 60; Schumack v. Lock, 10 Moo. 39).

2. Declarations, &c., by Party referred to.] Where a party agrees to be bound by what another says, he makes the expressions of the other evidence against himself. Thus, if on being applied to for a debt, he says, "I'll pay you if A. B. says it is due," and A. B. says it is due, his answer is evidence, and A. B. need not be called as a witness. So, if he refers the party generally to another for information on a particular subject, what that party says is admissible without calling him (Williams v. Innes, 1 Camp. 364; Daniel v. Pitt, ib. 365, n.; Brock v. Kent, ib. 366, n.). So, where the deft. had referred the plt. to his attorney for payment, an admission by the attorney of the debt, made some years afterwards, was held receivable (Burt v. Palmer, 5 Esp. 145); and it is said to have been decided by the twelve judges, at Hastings's trial, that where a person is referred to, to settle and adjust any account, or, business, what he says, if it is connected with the business referred to him, is evidence (Ib. per Ld. Ellenb. ; see also Hood v. Reeve, 3 C. & P. 532). Where a letter written by the plt. to the deft. was answered by A., who stated that the deft. had handed the plt.'s letter to him, it appearing aliunde that A. had been acting for the deft. in that transaction, an admission in A.'s letter was holden receivable against the deft. (Morel v. Ld. Harborough, 1 Gale, 146 ; and see Roberts v. Gressley, 3 C. & P. 380).

So, though, the calling a witness on his behalf at a trial, or, in a suit in equity, does not render all which the witness says evidence, in a subsequent trial, against the party calling him, yet, when a party calls a witness to prove a particular fact, and the witness proves the contrary, the statement of such witness is evidence in another trial as an admission (Cole v. Hadley, 3 P. & D. 458).

3. Declarations, &c., adopted by the Principal.] Where a party adopts the acts, or, expressions of another, or, makes use of what another asserts, he thereby gives it all the force of an admission by *himself. As where the deft. procured another to make an affidavit of certain [*78] facts in order to put off the trial, such affidavit was held admissible evidence against the deft. of the facts stated therein (Johnson v. Ward, 6 Esp. 47 ; Buckell v. Hulse, 7 Ad. & E. 454). So, where a petitioning creditor procured another to depose to an act of bankruptcy, and an action was subsequently brought against him by the assignees of such bankruptcy, in which the deft. denied the act of bankruptcy, the deposition was held admissible against him (Gardner v. Moulton, 10 Ad. & E. 464). In these cases, the party had made use, on his own behalf, of the particular document, the contents of which he knew. But a deposition made on the party's behalf, in a suit in Chancery, cannot on that account be used against him afterwards, as an admission, because, he does not know beforehand what the witness will depose to (Rushworth v. Countess of Pembroke, Hardr. 472). For the same reason, a party is not bound, in an after proceeding, by all which his witness at nisi prius might have said (Buckell v. Hulse, Gardner v. Moulton, supra). Yet, where a person summoned another before the magistrates for a malicious trespass, and having stated that he should prove a certain fact by calling Mr. D., and Mr. D. when called proved the contrary, the Court of Q. B. held, on the authority of Gardner v. Moulton, supra, that what Mr. D. then stated was evidence against the plt. on a subsequent trial between the same parties (Cole v. Hadley, 3 P. & D. 458).

Admissions by Counsel.] It seems, that a statement made by a counsel in his address to the jury is not receivable in another action as an admission by the client. At all events, it must appear that the client was within hearing, and some evidence be given that the statement was authorized (Colledge v. Horn, 3 Bing. 119). Where the counsel so conducts a cause as to lead to an inference that a certain fact is admitted by him, the jury may take it as proved (Stracy v. Blake, 1 M. & W. 168) ; and if a fact be assumed at nisi prius for the purpose of proving one issue, it is admitted also for the purpose of disproving another semble (Bolton v. Sherman, 2 ib. 403) ; and if plt.'s counsel open a fact from which his client's possession of a document may be presumed (thus, the payment of a cheque), though he offer no proof of it, yet defendant may give secondary evidence of it after notice to proceed without further evidence of plt.'s possession (Duncombe v. Daniel, 8 C. & P. 222). But a special case, signed by counsel, is admissible evidence of the facts therein stated, in another trial of the cause (Van Wart v. Woolley, R.

& M. 4). Where the statement of counsel as to the limitations of a deed on a former trial was tendered as secondary evidence of its contents, the court questioned the admissibility of it, even, if the parties had been the same, but ultimately rejected it, on the ground that the deft., against whom it was offered, was different (Ove v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102).

Admissions by Attorneys.] We have seen that an admission made by the attorney in the cause, for the express purpose of having proof on the trial, is binding and conclusive on the client, both in that, and any subsequent trial (Wright v. Young, 1 Camp. 139; Milwood v. Temple, ib. 375; and see Truslove v. Burton, 9 Moore, 64, ante, p. 61). Any statement, or, admission of the attorney made, not for this purpose, but, with a view to the other party acting on it, is also evidence of the fact, as against his client. Hence, where before the action was commenced, the attorney wrote an undertaking to appear for the defts., whom he therein described as joint owners of the vessel respecting which the action was brought, *this was held sufficient evidence of the fact that the defts. were joint owners (Marshall v. Cliff, 4 Camp. 133). So, where the deft.'s attorney proved that, before action, he had carried certain propositions to the plt., which he refused to disclose on the ground of privity; it was ruled, that what he said on that occasion might be proved aliunde, and was evidence against the deft. (Gainsford v. Grammar, 2 Camp. 8). And the receipt on the back of a writ by the agent who issued it, is admissible evidence of the payment without calling him (Weary v. Alderson, 2 M. & Rob. 127). The agreement of an attorney "to admit on the trial of this cause the execution of," &c., may be used on a new trial (Elton v. Sarkins, 1 M. & Rob. 196), although it be retracted before such new trial (Doe v. Bird, 7 C. & P. 6).

But nothing that is said, or, done by the attorney on other occasions, or, for other purposes than those of the particular suit, can be given in evidence as an admission against the client. Hence, in an action on a bill of exchange, Lord Ellenborough rejected proof of a statement by the deft.'s attorney to one of the witnesses, that the bill was an accommodation bill (Young v. Wright, 1 Camp. 139; Parkins v. Hawkshaw, 2 Stra. 239). So, where, in an action for use and occupation, the plaintiff proved his case in the ordinary way, but it was elicited, in cross-examination by deft.'s counsel, that the plt.'s attorney had stated to a witness that the premises were let under a written agreement; held, that such a statement was not admissible in evidence, and that the plt. was entitled to recover (Watson v. King, 1 New Pract. Cas. 534, C. P.; 3 C. B. 608). So, where a statement was made by the plt.'s attorney to the deft.'s attorney, in conversation, during the assizes, with respect to the nature of the claim in the action, such statement not being expressly made for the purpose of being used as evidence; held, that it was not admissible (Petch v. Lyon, 15 L. J. 398, Q. B.). In an action for malicious arrest, where it appeared that the deft.'s attorney went to the prison where the plt. was confined, and told an officer there, that, if the plt. would exchange receipts with his client he would give him a discharge, the Court of C. P. held this inadmissible as not being accompanied by any act done in the cause. But Mansfield, C. J., said, that had it been made as a proposal to the plt. he should have received it (Wilson v. Turner, 1 Taun. 398). In a recent case of trover for a horse, in order to show the taking by the deft. the plt. proved that his attorney had written two letters to the deft., each charging him with the fact, to which the deft. returned no answer, and then proposed to put in a letter by the attorney defending on the record, in which he stated that the deft. had handed him the letters in question, and that he was prepared to prove that the horse was legally distrained. There being no proof that this had been written with the debt.'s sanction, Parke, J., rejected the evidence, and the Court of Q. B. held he was right (Wagstaff v. Wilson, 4 B. & Ad. 339; see also Pope v. Andrews, 9 C. & P. 564). And a fortiori an offer to pay so much in the pound, made by the attorney on behalf of another person, as the debt.'s father, the debt. being an infant, is no evidence of the existence of the debt as against the debt., though the same attorney defends the action (Burghart v. Angerstein, 6 C. & P. 695).

Admissions by Wife.] The admissions of a wife, in cases where she can be considered the agent of her husband, are evidence against him (Emerson v. Blonden, 1 Esp. 142; Barker v. Vaughan, 4 Jur. 222). Therefore, where the wife has acted for the husband, and with his consent, in the transaction of his affairs, he will be bound *by admissions made [*80] by her respecting those affairs (Plimmer v. Sells, 3 N. & M. 423). Thus, where she has been suffered to transact the business at home, and purchase the articles used in the business, her admission as to the state of the accounts between her husband and the plt. who supplied her with the goods, are evidence against the husband (Anderson v. Sanderson, 2 Stark. 204; S. C. 1 Holt, 591). And where the wife has been accustomed to serve in the shop, and to transact the business in her husband's absence, an offer made by her to settle the demand is admissible in evidence in actions for goods sold against the husband (Clifford v. Burton, 1 Bing. 199). And where the wife pays for goods, and manages the business generally, her admission will take a case out of the Statute of Limitations (Palethorp v. Furnish, 2 Esp. 511, n.). So she will be deemed his agent with reference to admissions by her for goods (necessaries) furnished her (Gregory v. Parker, 1 Camp. 394). So, the declarations of the wife that she agreed to pay 4s. a week for nursing a child were admitted to charge the husband, for women usually transact such matters (Anon. 1 Stra. 527). In an action for necessities supplied to the wife, the defence being that the husband had turned her out of doors for adultery, her declarations as to the adultery made previously to her expulsion are evidence (Walton v. Green, 1 C. & P. 621). So, declarations of debt.'s wife tending to show that she aided and colluded with her husband in seducing the plt.'s daughter, are evidence in aggravation in an action for the seduction (Knowles v. Compigne, Taunton Sum. As. 1835, per Gurney, B.).

But, the general rule is, that a wife's admissions will not bind the husband, "as breaking in upon the confidence subsisting between man and wife" (Aveson v. Lord Kinnaid, 6 Ea. 196). Therefore, in an action by the husband for wages due to the wife, her admission of the receipt of the money is no evidence against him (Hall v. Hill, 2 Stra. 1094; Carey v. Adkins, 4 Camp. 92). So, in an action by husband and wife for a loan by the wife dum sola, her admissions after coverture were refused as against the plt. (Kelly v. Small, 2 Esp. 716). But, in an action against debt. as administrator of his wife for money lent to her before marriage, admissions of the debt made by her during coverture are evidence (Humphreys v. Boyce, 1 M. & Rob. 140). Even, in an action by the husband and wife, in right of the wife, as executrix, her declarations will not be evidence (Alban v. Pritchett, 6 T. R. 680). An admission by the wife of a trespass cannot bind the husband (Den v. White, 7 T. R. 112); nor, can the answer of the wife in equity be read against the husband (Wrottesley v. Bendish, 3 P. Wms. 238). But their joint answer is admissible against the husband, but not the wife (Elston v. Wood, 2 Myl. & K. 678). When husband and wife are incompetent witnesses for, or, against each other, see post, "WITNESS."

See as to admissions by payment of money into court, "MONEY PAYMENT INTO COURT."

Admissions, Nature and Effect of.

This is a most comprehensive, and important branch of evidence, embracing whatever a person writes, or, says, or, does, which affords any presumption against him. For, it is to be presumed that he acted, spoke, or, wrote consistently with his knowledge of the truth (see 2 Stark. 17).

Where the existence of a debt, or, of a particular right, has been asserted in the presence of a party, and he has not contradicted it, such acquiescence, and silence amount to an admission of the debt or, right. But the [*81] deposition of a witness taken in a judicial *proceeding against a party is not evidence in another proceeding against that party merely on the ground that he was present and did not cross-examine the witness (Melen v. Andrews, M. & M. 336). So, an acquiescence and endurance, when acts are done by another, which, if wrongly done, are encroachments, and call for resistance, and opposition, are evidence as a tacit admission that such acts could not be legally resisted (Jarrett v. Leonard, 2 M. & S. 265; Morris v. Burdett, 1 Camp. 218; Steel v. Prickett, 2 Stark. 471; 2 Stark. Ev. 37). If A., having title to premises in the possession of B., suffer B. to make alterations inconsistent with such title, it is evidence for the jury that A. has recognised the right of B., and has done such acts as are necessary to confirm it (Doe v. Pye, 1 Esp. 364; see Neale v. Parkin, 1 Esp. 229). Where a notice to quit is served personally on a tenant, and he makes no objection to the time specified in the notice, it is prima facie evidence of the correctness of such notice, if the party read, or, understand the tenor of it at the time of the service (Doe d. Baker v. Wombwell, 2 Camp. 559; Doe d. Clarges v. Forster, 13 Ea. 405; Doe d. Leicester, 2 Taun. 109). If the occupier of a house submit to a distress for rent, described in the notice of distress to be due from him as tenant of the distrainor, it is an admission of the tenancy (Panton v. Jones, 3 Camp. 372; 1 H. Bl. 311). If a party, holding goods as a lien, claim them on another ground when they are demanded, and do not make mention of the lien, he is precluded from afterwards setting it up (Boardman v. Sill, 1 Camp. 410, n.; Martini v. Coles, 1 M. & S. 147; post, "LIEN").

The omission to insert in an insolvent's schedule a debt, is an admission against him that the debt is not due (Nicholls v. Downs, 1 M. & Rob. 13).

A receipt for rent up to a given period affords a presumption that all the previous rent has been paid. A promise to pay a bill of exchange admits the handwriting (Helmesley v. Loader, 2 Camp. 450; Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 Esp. 43), and the notice of dishonour.

The not having an attorney's bill taxed, is an admission that the charges therein are reasonable (Pea. Ev. 262, 264; Anderson v. May, 2 B. & P. 237; 1 Doug. 198; Lee v. Jones, 2 Camp. 496).

The general rule is, that whatever is said, or, done, by any person who is a party to the record, is admissible in evidence against him, even, though, it go to the contents of a written paper or deed which is directly in issue in the suit. Thus, in covenant on a composition deed, by which the deft. engaged to indemnify the plt. against the debts of every person mentioned in a schedule annexed, who had not executed the deed, the question was whether a debt due to one Thomas was, or, was not included in the schedule. The schedule itself was rejected for want of a stamp; whereupon the plt. tendered evidence of a verbal admission by the deft. that such debt was included in the schedule, and the Court of Exchequer held that such evidence was receivable, and that, without notice to produce, or, accounting for the absence of the written instrument. The reason is, as stated by Parke, B., in giving judgment, "that such statements are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources, where the written evidence might have been produced; for such evidence is excluded from the presumption of its untruth, arising from the very nature of the case where better evidence is withheld; whereas, what a party himself admits to be true, may reasonably be presumed to be so." And Lord Abinger, C. B., said, that he had always considered it as clear law, that a party's own statements were in all cases admissible against himself, whether they corroborate the contents of a written instrument, or, not (Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664; see Fox v. Waters, 12 Ad. & E. 43; see also Newhall v. Holt, ib. 662; Howard v. Smith, 3 Sc. N. R. 574; Doe d. Watson, 2 Stark. 230). So, if a party [*82] go over the items of an account with the debtor, and he acknowledge their correctness, he may be held liable on such acknowledgment though the account be inadmissible for want of a stamp (Jacob v. Lindsay, 1 East, 460). Plt. gave in evidence an admission by deft. that he owed 147*l.* on a bill of exchange which had been dishonoured: held admissible, though no notice to produce the bill had been given (Fryer v. Brown, R. & M. 145). An admission of a party in an answer in chancery, of the execution of a deed, is only secondary evidence, and does not supersede the necessity of proving it in the regular way (Call v. Dunning, 4 East, 53; Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 ib. 187).

The weight and value of evidence of this kind, as observed by Parke, B., in the case above cited, is quite another question. Where in an action of trover the deft. proved a statement by the plt. that he had been discharged under the Lords' Act, the court held this insufficient to warrant a nonsuit, as the fact, if true, could have been easily proved by the records of the court (Summersett v. Adamson, 1 Bing. 73; Scott v. Clare, 3 Camp. 236; see also Rees d. Howell v. Bowen, M'Cle. & Yo. 391).

Need not be voluntary.] It is immaterial whether the admission have been made by the party spontaneously, or, whether it have been extorted in the course of a legal investigation. The examination of a witness in court in another cause may be used against him in an action wherein he is party, though he were prevented from entering into an explanation of the circumstances (Collett v. Lord Keith, 4 Esp. 213), or, though, the questions be improper and might have been objected to (see Jackson v. Benson, 1 Y. & J. 32; Stockfleth v. De Tastes, 4 Camp. 10; Smith v. Beadnell, 1 Camp. 30). So, an answer in chancery to a bill filed by other parties (Grant v. Jackson, Peake, 103; Ewer v. Ambrose, 6 D. & R. 127; Ashmore v. Hardy, 7 C. & P. 503; Slack v. Buchanan, Peake 5); an examination before commissioners of bankruptcy (Stockfleth v. De Tastes, supra; Robson v. Alexander, 1 M. & P. 448; R. v. Wheeler, 2 Moo. C. C. 45), though part only of the deposition was noted down (Milward v. Forbes, Esp. 172, n.); or, before a committee of the House of Commons (Rex v. Mercer, 2 Stark. 366; see Gilham's case, 1 Moo. C. C. 203), wherein the party has admitted, or, confessed a fact, is evidence against him to prove such fact for any purpose. But, admissions in a joint answer by husband and wife are not receivable against the wife, such answer being considered as that of the husband alone (Elston v. Wood, 2 Myl. and K. 678). The compulsion must not be illegal (Garbett's case, Den. C. C. 236). A compulsive admission is no evidence of an account stated (Tucker v. Barrow, 7 B. & C. 623). The admissions of a deft. against himself in examinations before a commissioner of bankrupts are evidence against him, but his statements in his favour are not evidence for him (Groom v. Richardson, 5 Jur. 1061). Quære, whether an admission obtained by compulsory examination before commissioners of bankrupts can be used as evidence in an action by the assignees on an account stated (Tucker v. Barrow, 7 B. & C. 622); even in a criminal case (Wheeter's case, 2 Lew. C. C. 157; see R. v. Britton, 1 M. & Rob. 247).

Admissions "without Prejudice."] Admissions made expressly "without prejudice," or by way of concession, with a view to a compromise which has gone off, are not receivable in evidence (Thomson v. Austin, 2 D. & R. 358; Gregory v. Howard, 3 Esp. 113; Cory v. Bretton, 4 C. & P. 462; Doe d. Curzon v. Edmonds, 6 M. & W. 295; Wallace v. Small, M. & M. 446; Healey v. Fletcher*, 8 C. & P. 388). And where a letter [*83] containing an offer was held inadmissible, by reason of its being "without prejudice," the answer to it was also rejected, though it was not in terms so guarded (Paddock v. Forrester, 3 Sc. N. R. 734).

Where, however, the parties have come to a definitive arrangement, evidence of that arrangement is admissible (9 Price, 122). And where an arbitration turns out to be ineffectual, and the parties proceed to trial, any admissions, or, statements made before the arbitrator may be used as evidence on the trial, and the arbitrator may be called to prove them (Slack v. Buchanan, Peake, 5; Gregory v. Howard, 3 Esp. 113; Westlake v. Collard, B. N. P. 236; Doe d. Lloyd v. Evans, 3 C. & P. 219).

So, if it appear that the admission, though made pending a treaty for compromise, was not made on the faith of, or, simply with a view to it, such admission is receivable. Thus, where the plt., in an interview between him and the deft.'s attorney respecting the settlement of their accounts, said he was anxious to get out of law, and would refer the question to the witness as an arbitrator, and upon this being declined by the witness, added that he had received 800*l.* on the deft.'s account, the latter statement was held receivable in support of a set-off, though the witness was desired to communicate it to the deft. for the purpose of inducing him to agree to a compromise (Thomson v. Austin, 2 D. & R. 358). And where, after the record had been withdrawn on the faith of an arrangement which afterwards went off, the deft. was asked whether the acceptance of the bill for which the action was brought was in his handwriting, and answered that it was, this was held receivable on a subsequent trial (Waldridge v. Kennison, 1 Esp. 143).

Admission—Extent of, and how construed.] The whole admission must be taken together, in order to show the meaning of the party, and the extent to which he is bound (see Thomson v. Austin, 2 D. & R. 358; Smith v. Blandy, R. & M. 257). Hence, if part of a conversation be proved, the other party is entitled to elicit, and the court is bound to receive, the whole, so far as it relates to the particular subject (Thomson v. Austin, supra; Glyn v. Houston, 2 Sc. N. R. 548; S. C. 2 M. & G. 337; see p. 84). If an answer in chancery be put in, to prove an admission in it, and any document be annexed to it (see Long v. Champion, 2 B. & Ad. 284), the whole is made evidence (Lynch v. Clarke, 3 Salk. 154; 5 Mod. 9; Roe d. Pellatt v. Ferrars, 2 B. & P. 542); and if, upon exceptions taken, a second answer have been filed, the party is entitled to have that read also (Ib.; B. N. P. 237; R. v. Carr, 1 Sid. 418); and, in strictness, he is entitled to have the whole of the bill read as introductory to the answer (Pennell v. Meyer, 8 C. & P. 470). But the judge will caution the jury not to take the allegations as true (Ib.). Where an answer in chancery by a witness is put in only to prove his competency, the adverse party cannot thereupon read the whole in order to prove the issue (B. N. P. 238). If an examination (before commissioners of bankruptcy) was over two days, the party cannot use one day's examination without putting in the other (Smith v. Biggs, 5 Sim. 39), nor the cross-examination without the examination in chief (Ib.). The assertion of a party in a conversation, given in evidence against him, of facts in his favour, is evidence of those facts (Smith v. Blandy, supra).

So, if, in making an admission, the party refers to a written document, without which the admission is not complete, that must be put in (Smith v. Young, 1 Camp. 439); but otherwise, if the verbal admission be complete without it (Ib.; and see Jacob v. Lindsay, 1 *East, 460). [*84] Where a person, on his examination before commissioners of bankruptcy, not having his books with him, consented that the accountant should go and examine them, Lord Tenterden, C. J., would not allow the accountant to prove, from his inspection of the books, what the dealings between such party and the bankrupt had been without putting in the examination (Yates v. Carnsew, 3 C. & P. 99; and see Long v. Champion, 2 B. & A. 285).

But where, in answer to a written application for payment of a debt, the deft. writes a letter promising payment, the latter may be put in without the former (Lord Barrymore v. Taylor, 1 Esp. 325; Mortimer v. Wright, 4 Jur. 465; Sturge v. Buchanan, 2 M. & Rob. 90). But such letters are not evidence in favour of the writer except in proof of a notice, or, demand (Richards v. Frankam, 9 C. & P. 221). Where the plt. called for the production of the deft.'s books, and read an entry from one of them, it was ruled that though the deft. was entitled to have the whole of the particular entry read, he could not insist on reading distinct entries in other parts of the book (Catt v. Howard, 3 Stark. 3). And where, in his answer to a bill in chancery, the deft. referred to a certain letter of his, which, in consequence of its being altered, had not been filed with the answer, but a copy of which had been inspected by consent at the office of the defendant's solicitor, the court, declining to determine whether, if the letter had been filed, it could have been read alone, held that, as it had not, in fact, been made parcel of the answer, the plt. might give such copy in evidence as an admission without putting in the answer (Long v. Champion, 2 B. & Ad. 284; see Hewitt v. Piggott, 5 C. & P. 75; Prince v. Samo, 3 N. & P. 139; S. C. 2 Jur. 323). So, where a particular portion of a conversation is given in evidence against the party, plt., or deft., as an admission, he is entitled to elicit the whole of what he said on the subject which tends to explain, or qualify the former, but nothing else. Where, therefore, in an action for a malicious arrest, the question was whether a sum of 60*l.*, which the plt. had received from the deft., was a gift, or, a loan, and one of the plt.'s witnesses on cross-examination proved that the plt. had stated that he had been insolvent, it was held that the plt. had no right to ask the witness on re-examination whether he had not also stated in the same conversation that the money was given, and not lent (Prince v. Samo, 3 P. & D. 139; S. C. 7 Ad. & E. 627; overruling the opinion of the judges in the Queen's case, 2 B. & B. 297). Where the plt. called for the production of deft.'s letter-book, and read letters of the deft. from it, the deft. cannot read from it on his own behalf other letters not referred to in those read by plt. (Sturge v. Buchannon, 10 Ad. & E. 598).

It follows from this rule, that if a party admits a debt claimed, but says also at the same time that he has paid it, this declaration is evidence to go to the jury of the fact of payment, as well as of the existence of the debt. Hence, where, in proof of his demand, the plt. put in an account rendered by the deft., which contained all the items claimed by the plt., but which stated also a counter claim as due to the deft., it was held that the jury were right in taking the whole account together, and giving a verdict for the balance only, though the deft. offered no evidence in support of his counter claim (Randle v. Blackburne, 5 Taun. 245). And where the drawer of a bill for 200*l.*, who had received no notice of dishonour, said that "he did not mean to insist on the want of notice, but, that he was only bound to pay 70*l.*," Abbott, C. J., directed the jury to find a verdict for 70*l.* only (Fletcher v. Froggart, 2 C. & P. 569). In an action for money lent evidence was given of an admission by the deft. that he had had the money, accompanied with a statement "that it had been allowed in the rent." The rent was [*85] due *from plt.'s brother to the deft.'s mother-in-law. The plt. then tendered the mother-in-law's rent-book produced by the defendant in obedience to a notice, in order to show that no allowance was made in the rent. Held, admissible evidence for that purpose (Hill v. Haywood, 7 L. T. 82). But where the plt.'s case was clearly supported by a qualified admission made by the deft.: held, no mis-direction that the judge did not distinctly tell the jury that the whole admission must be taken together (Beckham v. Osborne, 6 M. & G. 771). If a deft. be arrested for 20*l.* 10*s.*, and after the arrest, and before declaration, call on the attorney, and say that if no further proceedings are taken he will pay the debt, and also write to him, saying he has applied to a friend to assist him "in paying the debt you have sued me for," it will be for the jury to consider whether by this the deft. merely recognises a debt, or that indorsed on the writ (Rainbow v. Bishop, 7 C. & P. 591; see Batcheler v. Bradley, 2 M. & Gr. 339).

The jury, however, are not bound by such statements of a party in his own favour: and as, on the one hand, the other party may disprove them (Rose v. Savory, 2 Bing. N. C. 145), so, if, from circumstances, they appear undeserving of credit, the jury may reject them, and act on the admission only (Smith v. Blandy, R. & M. 257).

AFFIDAVIT.

Affidavits, as we have seen, are evidence against the parties making, or using them, by way of admission as to the facts therein stated.

An affidavit, though filed, is not considered for all purposes as a record, so as, to be capable of proof in the same way as an answer in Chancery, &c.; but the mode of proving it depends on the purpose for which it is used. In order to show merely the fact that such an affidavit was made and filed, it suffices to produce a copy and prove it to have been examined with the original at the office of the court (Cashburn v. Reid, 2 Moo. 60; Crook v. Dowling, 3 Doug. 75; see Scott v. Lewis, 7 C. & P. 347). If, as an admission only, no proof need be given that it was sworn to, but the original itself must be produced, and the handwriting of the party must be verified in the usual way, or, proof be given, that he used, or, adopted it (Rees d. Howell v. Bowen, McCl. & Yo. 391; see B. N. P. 238; Cameron v. Lightfoot, 2 W. Bl. 1190; Rex v. James, Show. 97). An office, or examined copy will not suffice (Ib.). If wanted in proof of the fact that the party made such an affidavit, then, besides this proof (see Cashburn v. Reid, supra; B. N. P. 235,) if it purport to have been sworn before a commissioner, or, other inferior functionary, his handwriting must be proved, and his authority to administer an oath, but, this may be done even upon an indictment for perjury, by proof of his acting generally, or, in other instances, in such capacity. The commissioner himself need not be called, nor his commission produced (R. v. Howard, 1 M. & Rob. 187; R. v. Verelst, 3 Camp. 432; R. v. James, Show. 397). Nor need it be shown that the party was actually sworn (R. v. Benson, 2 Camp. 508; R. v. Morris, 2 Burr. 1189). If sworn before a judge of one of the superior courts, no such evidence is required. If sworn abroad, it must be by the certificate of the principal British authority there (which proves itself), or the handwriting and authority of the party administering the oath must be proved as above described (see French v. Bellew, 1 M. & S. 302; Dalmer v. Barnard, 7 T. R. 251). Affidavits taken by a commissioner of the Q. B. are admissible without proving the commission; acting as such is enough (R. v. Howard, supra).

Wherever a copy is receivable, the party should be prepared [*86] to *prove its correctness. It does not appear safe, in any case, to rely on an office copy as being admissible, without proof of its having been examined (but see Dean v. Fulford, Burr. 1177; Wightwick v. Banks, Forr. 153). A witness may refresh his memory from an affidavit made by him shortly after the fact to be proved on examination before commissioners of bankrupts (Smith v. Morgan, 2 M. & Rob. 257). Where the deft., a sheriff, had used an affidavit of his officer on an interpleader rule, such affidavit was read in evidence against him, though the officer was present in court and was not called (Brickell v. Bulse, 7 Ad. & E. 455).

broker is not a sworn broker within the London regulations as to brokers (see Gibbons v. Rule, 4 Bing. 301; 6 Anne, c. 16, s. 4).

The form of remedy by an agent against his principal, for commission, or, money paid, is usually in assumpsit, or, debt; and there is nothing peculiar in the form of the pleadings. Assumpsit, or, case lies against the principal, if he employ the agent to dispose of goods of which the principal had no right to dispose, whereby the agent was damnified (Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66). Indebitatus assumpsit lies for commission on a del credere commission, though, the transaction in which the plt. is employed is not complete; especially after verdict (Solly v. Weiss, 2 Moo. 420; [87] S. C. 8 Taun. 371; Caruthers v. Graham, 14 East, 578). See further, "WORK AND LABOUR." See a special form of declaration in assumpsit, by an agent employed to buy goods and draw a bill on his principal for the amount, against the principal for not indemnifying him against the bill (Huntley v. Sanderson, 1 C. & M. 467).

Indebitatus for commission.

[Commencement and conclusion; see "ASSUMPSIT,"—"DEBT,"] for the work and labour, care, diligence, journeys, and attendance of the plt., by him before that time done, performed, given, and bestowed, as the agent [factor or broker] of, and, for the debt; and on his retainer and request, and for certain commission, and reward due, and of right payable, from the debt, to the plt., in respect thereof, and the debt afterwards, &c.

The general form of count "for work then done, and material for the same provided by the plt. for the debt, at his request, and for commission due and payable from the debt, to the plt. in respect thereof," would suffice (see Clark v. Mumford, 3 Camp. 37), and is the form usually adopted in practice; although generally sufficient, the full form, as above, is retained, as it is still applicable, and may in some cases be expedient.

Since the new rules an indebitatus quantum meruit count is never used. The general issue, by putting in issue the facts from which the promise is implied, has given the effect of a quantum meruit count to the general count on work and labour. (Cousens v. Paden, 2 C. M. & R. 547.)

Indebitatus for del credere commission.

[Commencement and conclusion, see "ASSUMPSIT,"—"DEBT,"] for certain commissions before that time, and then due, and, payable from the debt, to the plt., for and on account of the plt. having before then guaranteed the payment of divers large sums to the debt., upon certain insurances before then effected by the plt., as the broker and agent of, and for the debt., and at his special instance and request, &c.

See precedent of an action by agent, on a policy, 2 Ch. Pl. by Pearson.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

In Action for Commission, &c.] The plt. should prove the retainer, and the work done (see "WORK AND LABOUR"). He must prove a privity of contract between him and debt. (Schmaling v. Thomlinson, 6 Taun. 147; S. C. 1 Marsh. 500). If there be any specific commission agreed on, the same should be proved: if not, and there be any custom, or usage as to the amount, the same shall be proved: if there be neither of these, plt. should adduce general evidence of the reasonableness of his charges, and on which it will be for a jury to decide. In some cases the amount is regulated by statute (Payl. 89). Amongst auctioneers, the usage is, that after an auctioneer is employed, and the property advertised for sale, he is entitled to full commission on a sale being effected, although not through his direct agency (Rainy v. Vernon, 9 C. & P. 559). Where an estate was put up for sale on these terms: if not sold the owner was to pay 200*l.*, and the expenses of advertising; if it should be sold, then all expenses were to fall into the commission, which varied according to the value of the estate; the estate was put up to auction, but not sold. The owner afterwards employed another agent (of which he informed the auctioneer) through whom the estate was sold. Held, that the first auctioneer was only entitled to the 200*l.* and expenses, and was not entitled to the commission on the sale of the estate (Green v. Hall, Exch. 7 Nov. 1848).

So amongst ship-brokers, the usage is that when a broker has introduced the purchaser, and the seller of a ship, or the captain, and a freighter together, and they, by his means, enter into a negotiation, he is entitled to commission (semble, 5*l.* per cent. Brown v. Nairne, 9 ib. 204; Cohen v. Paget, 4 Camp. 96) if a sale, *or, charter-party be effected between them, though, it be completed without his instrumentality, or, even, [*88] through another broker (Wilkinson v. Martine, 8 C. & P. 1; Burnett v. Bouch, 9 ib. 620). But, if, the negotiation goes off on account of any fault in him, he is not entitled to recover any thing for remuneration, or, ordinary expenses (Dalton v. Irwin, 4 ib. 289); and by the usage of the city of London, he is not entitled to commission, unless, the contract is perfected (Read v. Rann, 10 B. & C. 438); even, where the negotiation goes off by the act of the owner (Broad v. Thomas, 4 ib. 338; 7 Bing. 99; 4 M. & P. 732; Hill v. Kitching, C. B., T. T. 1846). Where A. employs B. to get a charter for a ship, and B. employs another broker, it would seem, that evidence of a custom of trade is admissible to show which broker is entitled to be paid the commission by A. (Smith v. Butcher, 1 C. & K. 573; per Cresswell, J.).

Among land-agents a somewhat similar usage prevails (Murray v. Currie, 7 C. & P. 584); but the jury are not bound under all circumstances to give the full commission (Ib.). If the agent, not being able to sell, procures a loan, he cannot under 12 Car. II. c. 13, s. 3, and 12 Anne, c. 16, s. 2, recover more than 5*s.* per cent. (Price v. Wilkinson, 2 Bing. 470; 10 Moore, 177). If the agreement be for a commission on all sales effected, or orders executed, the principal to be responsible for bad debts, and the agent to draw his commission monthly, he is entitled to commission on bad debts, though the usage of the trade is not to allow commission on sales producing bad debts (Bower v. Jones, 8 Bing. 65; 1 M. & Sc. 140). Where a surveyor was employed to negotiate for the sale of certain lands, and was to receive a commission of 2*l.* per cent. "on the sum which might be obtained either by private treaty, arbitration, or trial by jury," it was held that he could not recover the commission till the money was actually received by the deft. (Bull v. Price, 5 M. & P. 2; 7 Bing. 237). The plt. cannot charge in addition to his commission for attendances as agent; but he may, if the attendances are matter beyond his duty as agent—and whether they are so, or, not, is a question for the jury (Marshall v. Parsons, 9 C. & P. 656.) It would be as well to prove deft. derived a benefit from plt.'s acts, though, not absolutely necessary, if a clear case of agency be made out (see Brown v. Millner, 1 Moore, 65). See further, "WORK AND LABOUR," "MASTER AND SERVANT."

In Action for Money paid by Agent.] He should prove the payment was made, and that it was so, by the express directions of the deft.; or, else, that it was payment incidental to the employment, and made in the regular course of it, as a payment for duties, tolls, customs, warehouse-room, &c.; or, a payment made to preserve, or, to recover the property from loss, &c. (Payl.

79; 2 Bro. P. C. 323; Curtis v. Barclay, 5 B. & C. 141; 7 D. & R. 539). If the payment be not warranted by the deft.'s original directions, or, by the nature of the employment, proof of a subsequent acquiescence of the deft. would render him liable (5 Burr. 2727; Clayton v. Dilly, 4 Taun. 165). But the plt. cannot recover a loss sustained in consequence of giving a guaranty which he was not authorized to give, as the quality of certain goods which he sold for his principal, but in his own name (Johnson v. Osborne, 1 Jur. 943). See further, "MONEY PAID."

Evidence for Defendant.

In Action for Commission, &c.] Deft. should endeavour to disprove plt.'s case. He may show that plt. merely trusted to deft.'s honour whether any thing was to be paid (1 M. & S. 290); or, that he derived no benefit whatever from the plt.'s acts, proving the plt.'s misconduct, or, negligence, and its consequences *(Com. Con. 271; Hamond v. Holiday, 1 [*89] C. & P. 384; Stewart v. Kayle, 3 Stark. 161; Hurst v. Holding, 3 Taun. 32; White v. Chapman, 1 Stark. 113; Jones v. Nanney, McCle. R. 25; Denew v. Daverell, 3 Camp. 451; 7 Moo. 237), or hiring himself to another (Thompson v. Havlock, 1 Camp. 527.) But an agent who acts bona fide on the best advice he is able to obtain in the affairs of his principal, is not liable for the consequences (see Miles v. Bernard, Pea. Ad. Ca. 61); or, he may show that the plt.'s employment was in an illegal transaction (2 Wils. 133; Josephs v. Pebrer, 3 B. & C. 639; 5 D. & R. 542; Fomin v. Oswel, 3 Camp. 357; Haines v. Busk, 5 Taun. 521). A sworn London broker can charge his principal only the cost price of articles purchased for him, and his commission (Proctor v. Brain, 2 M. & P. 284; see further, "WORK AND LABOUR"); or, he may show plt. and himself were partners in the transaction (post "PARTNERS"); or, that plt. was to be paid on a contingency not yet happened (5 Taun. 531). But the plt. is entitled to recover for defeating a contract which may be void if it be not clearly illegal (Wells v. Porter, 3 B. N. C. 722). Deft. may show that although the plt. acts in London as a sworn broker, yet he is not qualified to act as such pursuant to 6 Anne, c. 16, in which case he cannot recover his commission (Gibbons v. Rule, 4 Bingh. 301; Cope v. Rowlands, 2 M. & W. 149).

In an action at the suit of a clerk of a company for wages, it is no defence to show that there is an act of parliament, directing that the company shall be sued in the name of their clerk (the plt.), for the plt. cannot sue himself (Radenhurst v. Bates, 3 Bing. 471).

Commission.] The following letter was addressed to an African captain and supercargo by his employers: "Your commissions are 6*l.* per cent. on the net proceeds of your homeward cargo, after deducting the usual charges as arranged by the African Association, viz., 4*l.* per ton from the gross sales of the oil when taken from the quay, and 4*l.* 15*s.* when warehoused:" Held, that the commission was payable only on the sums actually realised after deducting bad debts as well as other charges (Caine v. Horsfall, 1 Ex. 519; 17 Law J., Eq. 25).

Where a custom-house agent entered into a custom-house bond with respect to goods consigned to him by the plt., and claimed a per centage on the sum mentioned in the bond, and no contract or usage for the payment of such was proved: held, that the plt. was not entitled to any such percentage; and that, therefore, no question as to the reasonableness of the amount claimed could be put to a witness (Hall v. Gurney, 2 Car. & K. 644, Cresswell).

Upon a negotiation between A. and B. for an exchange of advowsons, A.

agrees to pay to the agent C. 100%, "one-third down, and the remaining two-thirds when the abstract of conveyance is drawn out." The one-third is paid. A. delivers an abstract of his title, but no abstract is delivered on the part of B., and the negotiation drops. C. cannot maintain an action against A. for the remaining two-thirds of his commission, the event on the happening of which his right to it was to arise not having occurred (Alder v. Boyle, 4 C. B. 635).

A., a supercargo, sailed to Calabar in charge of a ship called the "Magistrate," his commission being 5% per cent. Some time after his departure, the principals despatched another ship, called the "Windermere" to Calabar, with instructions to A. to find a cargo for her, and to consider her "in one turn" with the "Magistrate," and offering him, in respect of this second ship, a commission of 2½ per cent. A. wrote to his principals rejecting the 2½ per cent. commission; but, notwithstanding this, he proceeded to load the "Windermere," that course being in his view the best for his principals; held, that, as he had acted on the instructions of his principals in loading the "Windermere," he was bound by their offer as to commission, and could not recover more than 2½ per cent. in respect of the cargo of that ship (Moore v. Maxwell, 2 Car. & K. 554, Rolfe).

In an action by an auctioneer on a contract for payment of commission upon the sale of an estate, if the sale should be within two months after an auction; held, that evidence of the conduct of the parties to the contract would not alone withdraw the construction of the word "months" from the judge, but that evidence of that word, meaning in the trade of auctioneers calendar months, was to be left to the jury (Simpson v. Margetson, 12 Jur. 155; 17 Law J., Q. B. 81).

In Action for Money Paid, &c.] Deft. should endeavour to disprove plt.'s case. He may prove that the payment was a mere voluntary, and officious one, not warranted, as being against deft.'s express directions, or, against his interest, and not necessarily incidental to plt.'s employment (Edmiston v. Wright, 1 Camp. 88; 8 T. R. 610; Grove v. Dubois, 1 T. R. 112); or, that the payment was made by reason of plt.'s unskillfulness, or misconduct (Cap v. Topham, 6 Ea. 392); or in an illegal transaction (Steers v. Lashley, 6 T. R. 61; Clayton v. Dilly, 4 Taun. 165). If A. advance money to another, being the natural son of a brother of B., and when B. is applied to for payment he pays half, and by letter promises the remainder, this is not sufficient for the jury to draw an inference that A. acted as the agent of B., and that B. afterwards sanctioned the agency so as to render B. liable (Ellaby v. Saunders, 8 Law T. 367, Exch). See further "MONEY PAID."

Evidence for Plaintiff, p. 89.

Plaintiff's Interest, p. 90.

Evidence for Defendant, p. 91.

Plaintiff's Interest, p. 91.

Form of Remedy, Pleadings, and Precedents.

The form of the remedy, pleadings, and precedents depends upon the subject-matter of the cause of action; and no observation, as may peculiarly relating to this action, need be made. The declaration state the contract to be made with plt. generally, though it appear from it, it was made by him as agent (Atkins v. Amber, 2 Esp. 493).

Evidence for Plaintiff.

The evidence, as to the subject-matter of complaint, is the same as in other cases.

Plaintiff's Interest.]* In an action on a contract, it will suffice to [90] prove that the contract was in terms made with the plt. (Sargent v. Morris, 3 B. & A. 281; Joseph v. Knox, 3 Camp. 321; Gardiner v. Davis, 2 C. & P. 49; Schack v. Anthony, 1 M. & S. 575; Jesson v. Solly, 4 Taun. 53; Garratt v. Handley, 4 B. & C. 666; Dancer v. Hastings, 4 Bing. 2); or, that plt. has a beneficial interest in the performance of it, as, in his lien for commission, &c. (Grove v. Dubois, 1 T. R. 112; Martini v. Coles, 1 M. & S. 147; 1 H. Bl. 81; Farebrother v. Simmons, 5 B. & A. 333; 1 Ch. P. 5); or, that his nominal principal has repudiated the contract, which plt. had no authority to make (Langstroth v. Toulmain, 3 Stark. 145); and in which latter case plt. should prove he gave notice to deflt., before action brought, of the facts (Bickerton v. Burrell, 5 M. & S. 383; Rayner v. Grote, 15 M. & W. 359). A. contracted with B., who appeared on the face of the contract to be an agent for C. for whom B. had sold the goods, but B. was in fact the principal. Evidence was adduced to show A.'s knowledge that B. was the principal and not the agent: held, that such evidence was rightly received, and that the jury might infer from the facts that A. knew he was dealing with B. as principal and not as agent (Rayner v. Grote, 8 Law T. 471, Exch.; 15 M. & W. 359; 16 Law J. 79, Exch.); or, that he has a special property or interest in the subject-matter of the agreement, as that he is a factor, broker, carrier, warehouseman, auctioneer, or, other agent acting for reward (Sadler v. Leigh, 4 Camp. 195; Morris v. Cleasby, 1 M. & Sel. 581; Atkinson v. Hamber, 2 Esp. 493; Rayner v. Linthorn, R. & M. 325; Martini v. Coles, 1 M. & Sel. 147). If, at the time of a contract which the agent has authority to make, the deflt. is told that there is an unnamed principal, and if that principal afterwards renounce the contract, and the agent acquiesce in that renunciation, yet the agent may recover (Short v. Spackman, 2 B. & Ad. 962). If the contract be under seal, and made with the agent, although expressed to be on behalf of another, the agent only can sue (Berkley v. Hardy, 5 B. & C. 355; Schack v. Anthony, supra; Dancer v. Hastings, supra; Appleton v. Binks, 5 East, 148; see Handcock v. Hodgson, 12 Moo. 504); and there is no difference between a deed and parol agreement (Norton v. Herron, 1 R. & M. 229; Spilett v. Lavender, supra). Where A., a merchant at Newcastle, having overdrawn his account with his agents (the plts.), advises them that he will ship goods to cover his draft, and does accordingly ship them, and receives from the wharfingers' servant (the captain of the ship) a boat receipt to the effect that they were to be delivered to the plts., the wharfingers are estopped from denying the plt.'s title in the goods upon their arrival in port, and no bill of lading is requisite to vest the property in the plts., as, between them and A. the relation was not of principal and factor, but, pawnor and pawnee, in which case the property vests in the pawnee without actual delivery, as, in that of vendor and vendee (Evans v. Nichol, 5 Jur. 1110, C. P.). Where bankers are employed to obtain payment of a bill drawn on a person resident at Calcutta, and they forward it to their agents in India, and these receive the amount, and the bankers announce the fact of the payment to their principal, but, do not credit him in their books with the amount—yet, they are liable to him for the amount, though their sub-agents in India fail before payment to them (Mackersy v. Ramsays, 9 Cl. & Fin. 818). In an action for a tort, he should prove he has a beneficial interest, or, a special property in the property injured (see 1 Ch. P. 71, 169). When plt. sues as a clerk, &c., under an act of parliament, the act should be proved (see "ACT OF PARLIAMENT").

*The evidence for deft. relative to the subject-matter of complaint will be the same as in other cases.

Plaintiff's Interest.] Deft. may, on the other hand, show that the plt. was, in fact, a mere agent, entering into the contract, or, possessing the property assigned as such, without any beneficial interest (Piggot v. Thompson, 3 B. & P. 147; Williams v. Millington, 1 H. Bla. 84; Rayner v. Linthore, R. & M. 325; Bowen v. Morris, 2 Taun. 374; Evans v. Evans, Har. & Wol. 239). Deft. may show that the true owner of the goods sold by the agent, has required, or obtained a completion of the contract with himself personally (Dickinson v. Naul, 4 B. & Ad. 638; Coppin v. Walker, 7 Taunt. 237; see Hornby v. Lacy, 6 M. & Sel. 166; Paley, 243). It seems that the mortgagor, or, assignor of a ship contracting in his own behalf with a third person to let it, &c., cannot be regarded by the mortgagee, or, assignee as his agent, so as to enable the latter to sue for the freight, &c., in his own name, for the mortgagee, or assignee, is no party to the contract that is made after the transfer, and it is not material that he is entitled to the ship's earnings (Chinnery v. Blackman, 3 Dougl. 391; Morrison v. Parsons, 2 Taunt. 407; Case v. Davidson, 5 M. & Sel. 79; Dean v. M'Ghie, 4 Bingh. 45).

Form of Remedy.

Form of Remedy.] The remedy for a principal against his agent for breach of his duties, is, either, by an action on the case, or, by [*92] *assumpsit; but in general, the latter is the more advisable form of remedy, especially if there has been a receipt of money by the agent (post, "ASSUMPSIT," "CASE"). For not accounting for the proceeds of sales, or, receipt of money by the agent, whether upon his express, or, implied undertaking, it is usual to declare against him in a special action of assumpsit, and which is a more convenient remedy than a bill in equity, or, action of account (Wilkin v. Wilkin, Carth. 89; S. G. 1 Salk. 9; Topham v. Braddick, 1 Taun. 572). The law will imply a promise to account for such goods as are not sold, and to return them to plt. (Ib.). If the declaration allege that the goods have been sold, if traversed, it will require to be proved (Elbourn v. Upjohn, 1 C. & P. 572); but, after a reasonable time a sale will be presumed (Hunter v. Welsh, 1 Stark. 224). And this form of action may be adopted, however long, and complicated the account may be (Tomkins v. Willshear, 5 Taun. 431; S. C. Marsh. 115, over-ruling Scott v. McIntosh, 2 Camp. 238). Where there is evidence of receipt of money, the same may be recovered under the count for money had and received. On misapplication of money received by the agent for his principal, whether for a particular purpose (Willes, 404), or otherwise, or, at all events, where a refusal to account renders the debt absolute, debt, or indebitatus assumpsit lies (11 Moo. 92; 12 ib. 521; Sty. 287); and, even though, paid for an illegal purpose, if not so applied (Tenant v. Elliott, 1 B. & P. 3; Farmer v. Russel, ib. 296, 7 Ves. 473; Taylor v. Lendey, 9 Ea. 49). Assumpsit lies in all cases against a del credere agent (Foster v. Allanson, 2 T. R. 479). Assumpsit does not lie, however, where there is a covenant to account (Bulstrode v. Gilburn, 2 Str. 1027), the remedy being on the deed (Ib.); unless a balance be agreed to and deft. promise to pay it, (Foster v. Allanson, 2 T. R. 479). Case lies for selling at an inferior price, or, on credit where the deft. was desired to sell at a particular price, or, for ready money only (Dufresne v. Hutchinson, 3 Taun. 117; Ferrars (Earl) v. Robins, 2 C. M. & R. 152.) Case lies against accountants hired by a firm to make out the accounts of the firm, and the separate balance of each partner, at the suit of one of the partners, for making out the account so erroneously, and negligently, that, he relying on their statement, was a considerable loser thereby, and it is not a variance to aver that he hired them (Story v. Richardson, 6 Bing. N. C. 123; 8 Sc. 291).

Form of Pleading.

Form of Pleading.] When a party declares specially, whether, he proceed in case, or, assumpsit, the contract must be stated to raise the duty and employment; therefore, in an action for not insuring, an undertaking for a conditional voyage to a place under certain contingencies will not support an undertaking for an absolute voyage to that place (Lopes v. De Tastet, 15 B. & B. 544). And, where the deft. acts under a del credere commission, the fact of such a commission being contracted to be paid must be stated in the declaration; and, where it was merely alleged that the deft. was indebted to the plt. in respect of goods delivered by him to the deft. to be sold and disposed of, and it appeared in the evidence that the deft. acted under a del credere commission, on guarantying the solvency of the purchasers, it was held, that the declaration was insufficient, by reason of its omitting to state that the deft. was to receive a del credere commission (Gill v. Comber, 1 Moo. 279); but, in Grove v. Dubois, 1 T. R. 112; Bise v. Dickason, ib. 285, it was considered that the amount of the value of the goods might be *recovered from an agent of this nature under the count [*93] for goods sold and delivered.

A declaration against a broker has been held bad in arrest of judgment for averring that it was his duty, as broker, not to deliver goods entrusted to him for delivery on payment, without the price thereof being first paid to him (Boorman v. Brown, 4 P. & D. 401; 6 Jur. 165). But, see the declaration sustained on error, on the ground of its disclosing an express contract from which this duty resulted, Brown v. Boorman, 3 Ad. & E., N. S. 516; 11 Cl. & Fin. 1. In an action against an agent, with a special count for not paying over the proceeds of goods sold by him, the receipts of the proceeds should be averred (Serra v. Wright, 6 Taun. 45; Varden v. Parker, 2 Esp. 710). But the moneys received are recoverable under the common count for money had and received (p. 92).

In an action for not accounting, non assumpsit "will operate as a denial of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, and of such bailment, or, employment as would raise a promise in law to the effect alleged, but not of the breach." In every species of assumpsit the deft. must plead specially set-off, mutual credit, and all other matters in confession and avoidance (R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 2; see post, "ASSUMPSIT"). Where an agent, employed to recover a sum of money, was entitled to retain a just allowance for his labour, and service, as such allowance was not in the nature of a cross demand, or, mutual debt, he might formerly give it in evidence, under the general issue, in an action for money had and received (Dale v. Sollet, 4 Burr. 2133), and when the plt. sues in indebitatus assumpsit for an alleged balance in the agent's hands, this, still, appears to be the law, notwithstanding the new rules (Rosc. Evid. 344).

Precedents.

Declaration in assumpsit against agent employed to sell goods, &c., for not accounting for them.

For that whereas, heretofore, to wit, on, &c. [any day about time of delivery], in consideration that the plt., at the request of the deft., had delivered to the deft. (if the goods were not delivered, say, that in consideration that plt. had employed deft. to sell, &c.) divers goods and chattels; to wit [here describe the goods, as in trover, &c.]. It does not appear necessary to describe them with exact number, &c., of the plt., of great value, to wit, of the value of £100 [state a sufficient sum], to be sold and disposed of, by the deft., for, and on account of the plt., for reward, to the deft. in that behalf, he, the deft., then promised the plt., that he would, on being thereunto requested, render to him a just and true account of the sale of the said goods and chattels, and of the moneys arising from such sale, and would deliver up to the plt. such of the said goods as should remain unsold by the deft. after a reasonable time in that behalf should have elapsed from the time of the sale of the said goods and chattels, and the plt. avers that the deft. did afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, sell and dispose of the same, for, and on account of, the plt. (if this cannot be proved then, say, that the deft. then promised to account for the said goods, &c., on request, and let the breach be for not accounting for the goods on being requested,) for divers large sums of money, and that, although the plt. afterwards, and after a reasonable time for that purpose had elapsed from the time of the said sale, to wit, on, &c., requested the deft. to render a true and particular account of the sale, and of the moneys arising therefrom, to the plt., and to deliver up to him, the plt., such of the said goods as then remained unsold by him, the deft., yet the deft. not regarding his said promise hath not rendered to the plt. a just and true, or, any other account of the said sale of the said goods and chattels, or of any part thereof, or of the moneys arising from such sale, or of any part thereof, nor hath the deft. delivered up to him the plt., any goods unsold, as aforesaid, but hath hitherto wholly neglected and refused, and still [94] doth neglect and refuse, so to do. (Add the common counts for money had and received, and account stated, and breach.)

The like for not taking due care of the goods.

For that whereas, heretofore, to wit, on, &c., in consideration that the plt., at the, &c., of the deft., had delivered to the deft. divers goods and chattels, to wit, &c., of great value, to wit, of the value of £50, he, the deft., undertook, and then promised the plt., to take due and proper care thereof. Yet the deft., not regarding his said last-mentioned promise, &c., but contriving, &c., did not, nor would take due and proper care of the said last-mentioned goods and chattels, but, wholly neglected so to do, and took such bad care thereof, that afterwards, to wit, on, &c., the said last-mentioned goods, &c., became and were wholly lost to the plt. (See directions in preceding precedent.)

Against an agent on a promise not to sell under a fixed price, and to account for sale, &c.

For that whereas, heretofore, to wit, on, &c., in consideration that the plt., at the request of the deft., had then retained and employed him, for commission and reward, in that behalf, to sell and dispose of divers chaises, gigs, and other carriages, of, and for him, the plt., at, and for certain prices respectively, to be therefore stated to the deft., by the plt., he, the deft., then promised the plt., not to sell the said chaises, &c., under the said prices, and to render a just and true account of the sales by him made, as agent as aforesaid, and to deliver up to the plt., such of the said chaises, &c., as should remain unsold by him, the deft., when he should be thereunto afterwards requested; and, although he, the deft., as such agent, afterwards, to wit on, &c., had and received divers, to wit, fifty chaises, fifty gigs, and fifty other carriages, of, and from the plt., as such agent, as aforesaid, upon the terms aforesaid, and he, the plt., then stated the prices of the same, respectively, to the deft.; yet the deft., disregarding his said promise in this, to wit, that he, after the making of his said promise, to wit, on, &c., as such agent, without the knowledge and against the will of him, the plt., sold and disposed of divers, to wit, thirty of the said chaises, &c., at much smaller prices, to wit, to the amount of £— less than the said prices so stated to him, the said deft., by the plt., in respect thereof, as aforesaid; and also in this, to wit, that the deft. hath not as yet rendered to the plt. a just and true, or, other account of the said sales, or, delivered up to him, the plt., the residue of the said chaises, &c., being of great value, to wit, £—, which remained unsold by him, the deft., as aforesaid, but, hath wholly neglected and refused, and still doth neglect and refuse, so to do, although he, the deft., was afterwards, and before the commencement of this suit, and after the lapse of a reasonable time in that behalf, from the delivery of the said goods to the deft. as such agent, as aforesaid, and the times of the said sales, to wit, on, &c., requested by plt. to do so. (Add money count to recover what deft. received, if not paid over, and account stated, and breach.)

Count against agent for not selling at the best price.

For that whereas, heretofore, to wit, on, &c., in consideration that the plt., at the &c., of the deft., had delivered to the deft., to sell and dispose of, for the plt., divers large quantities, to wit, &c., of cloth and kerseymere, of great value, to wit, &c., he, the deft., undertook, &c., to perform his duty in, and about the sale and disposal of the same cloth and kerseymere; and, although the deft. then accepted and received the said last-mentioned cloth and kerseymere for the purpose aforesaid, and it thereupon then became, and was, the duty of the deft. to use due endeavours to sell and dispose of the same for the best prices that could have been obtained for the same; yet the deft., not regarding, &c., did not, nor would, use due endeavours to sell and dispose of the said last-mentioned cloth, and kerseymere, for the plt., for the best prices that could have been obtained for the same, but wholly neglected so to do; and afterwards, to wit, on, &c., aforesaid, and on divers, &c., contrary to the said last-mentioned promise and undertaking of the deft., so improperly conducted himself with respect to the said last-mentioned cloth, and kerseymere, that the same has produced much less, to wit, the sum of £200 less, for the use of the plt., than the same would have produced if it had been duly sold by the deft. for the plt.

Against an agent for not taking due care of goods delivered to him at different times, and selling them under value, and by bartering them, &c.

*For that whereas, heretofore, to wit, on, &c., at &c., in consideration that the plt., at the request of the deft., would [from time to time] retain and employ him, [*95]. the deft., for commission and reward in that behalf, to sell and dispose of cloth and kerseymere of the plt., to be delivered by the plt., to the said deft.; he, the deft., undertook, and then promised the plt., to take and use due and proper care and diligence in, and about the selling and disposing of such cloth and kerseymere, and the plt., in fact, says, that he, confiding in the said promise and undertaking of the deft., afterwards, to wit, on, &c., aforesaid, and on divers other days and times afterwards, and before the commencement of this suit, did retain and employ him, the deft., for commission and reward in that behalf, to sell and dispose of divers large quantities of cloth, and kerseymere for the plt., and during that time, to wit, on, &c., first aforesaid, and on divers, &c., delivered to the deft. divers large quantities, to wit, fifty pieces of cloth, and five hundred pieces of kerseymere, of the said plt. of great value, to wit, of the value of £—, for the purpose aforesaid, and the deft., on those several days and times, accepted and received the said quantities of cloth and kerseymere for the purpose aforesaid; and, although it thereupon became, and was the duty of the deft., to use and exercise care and diligence, in, and about the endeavouring to sell and dispose of the said cloth and kerseymere, for good and sufficient prices, and although the deft. could and might, and ought to have sold the said cloth and kerseymere for good and sufficient prices, whereof he, during all the time aforesaid, had notice, to wit, on, &c. yet the deft., not regarding his said promise and undertaking, so by him, in manner and form aforesaid, made, but contriving and fraudulently intending craftily and subtly to deceive and defraud the plt. in this behalf, did not, nor would, use due and proper care and diligence, in and about the endeavouring to sell and dispose of the said cloth and kerseymere for good and sufficient prices, but wholly neglected so to do, and also afterwards, to wit, on the said several days and times, wrongfully and injuriously bartered and exchanged divers large quantities of the said cloth and kerseymere, for other goods, wares, and merchandises, of much less value than the said cloth and kerseymere, contrary to the said promise, and undertaking of the deft., and his duty in that behalf.

For selling to persons unfit to be trusted.

For that whereas, heretofore, to wit, on, &c., in consideration that the plt., at the, &c., would retain and employ the deft. to sell, and dispose of divers quantities of cloth and kerseymere of the plt., on commission, he, the deft., undertook, &c., not to sell, or dispose of the said last-mentioned cloth, or, kerseymere to any person or persons unworthy of credit, in the way of trade and dealing, and unfit to be trusted with goods on credit; and the plt., in fact, saith, that he, confiding, &c., did afterwards, to wit, on, &c., last aforesaid, and on divers, &c., retain and employ the deft. to sell and dispose of such cloth and kerseymere for the plt., and during that time, and on divers, &c., and before the commencement, &c., delivered to the deft. divers large quantities, to wit, &c., of great value, &c., for the purpose last aforesaid, and the deft., on the several days and times last aforesaid, accepted and received the said last-mentioned cloth and kerseymere for the same purpose; yet the said deft., not regarding, &c., afterwards, to wit, on, &c., last aforesaid, and on divers, &c., wrongfully sold and disposed of the said last-mentioned cloth and kerseymere, for divers sums of money, to divers persons respectively, to wit, to Messrs. T., B., and D., and divers other persons respectively, unworthy of credit in the way of trade and dealing, and unfit to be trusted with goods on credit, by means whereof, the price of the said mentioned cloth and kerseymere remains, and is, wholly in arrear and unpaid to the plt., and he is likely wholly to lose the same. (Add money counts and account stated, &c.)

Against an agent employed to sell goods on his promise to use due endeavours to obtain payment of proceeds.

For that whereas, heretofore, to wit, on, &c., aforesaid, in consideration that the plt., at the, &c., of the deft., had retained and employed him, the deft., for reward to him in that behalf, to sell and dispose of certain goods, wares, and merchandises of the plt., of great value, to wit, of the value of 100*l.*, of lawful money, in certain parts beyond the seas, for the plt., he, the deft., undertook, and then promised the plt., to use due endeavours to obtain *payment of the money for which the said goods, wares, and merchandises should be sold, for the plt., and, although the deft. afterwards, to wit, on, [*96] &c., aforesaid, sold the said last-mentioned goods, wares, and merchandises, for, and on account of the plt., for a large sum of money, to wit, for the sum of £—; yet deft., not regarding his said promise and undertaking, so by him, in manner and form aforesaid, made, but contriving and fraudulently intending craftily and subtly to deceive and defraud the plt. in this behalf, did not use due endeavours to obtain payment of the said moneys for which the said last-mentioned goods, wares, and merchandises were so sold as aforesaid, but wholly neglected and refused so to do; and by means and in consequence thereof, the plt. hath not as yet received the proceeds of the said last-mentioned good, wares, and merchandises, and is likely to lose the same.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

In General.] In actions against carriers and other bailees for not delivering, or, not keeping goods safe, or, not returning them on request, and in actions against agents for not accounting, non assumpsit will operate as a denial of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, and of such bailment, or, employment as would raise a promise in law to the effect alleged, but not of the breach (R. G. H. T. 4 W. IV.). Plt. should, in the first place, prove the deft.'s retainer and employment as stated in the declaration (Lopez v. De Tastet, 1 B. & B. 544). If, the same was by any written document between them, it should be produced and proved in the usual way. If, the damage resulted from a deviation from specific orders, such orders should be proved (Bexwell v. Christie, Cowp. 395); and so, if it resulted from not following the usage of trade and dealing, the usage should be proved (Smith v. Lascelles, 2 T. R. 188; 4 Burr. 2061; Russell v. Hankey, 6 T. R. 12). In general, in order to render an agent liable, plt. may show that he did not exert the same vigilance, care, and diligence, as a prudent person would exert, and which is a question for a jury (see Kilsby v. Williams, 5 B. & A. 820; Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 Ea. 62). Even, though, the agent is bound to adopt the usual course of trade, plt. may still, to prove deft.'s liability, show that he adhered more closely to it, than a prudent and skilful agent would have done, and thereby occasioned a loss (2 Wils. 325; Smith v. Lascelles, 2 T. R. 188; Yelv. 202). And, where there are specific instructions, or, in the absence of them, an usage of trade, and plt. sustains a loss by deft.'s departure from them, the circumstance of deft.'s intending a benefit to his principal by such departure will not avail him (Catlin v. Bell, 4 Camp. 183; Dyer, 161; 1 H. Bla. 159; Bexwell v. Christie, Cowp. 395); though, on the other hand, he will, in general, be safe, if, he pursue the instructions of his principal (Moll. 329). Any admission made by deft. of his liability should be proved (ante, "ADMISSIONS").

In an Action for not accounting for Goods, non assumpsit denies that the deft. ever was such agent as alleged, also the retainer and the promise, but would admit the request to account and the neglect to do so; plt. must, in addition to the foregoing evidence as to retainer, prove the delivery of the goods to deft., in the character of agent, as alleged in the declaration; post, title "PRINCIPAL AND AGENT"). Proof of the delivery or consignment of goods will vary according to the fact. If there be an invoice, it should be proved (post, "SECONDARY EVIDENCE"). The value of the goods should be proved: if the deft. have sold the goods, or, any part of them, the sale *should be proved, although no money may have been received so [*97] as to charge the deft. with the proceeds, he will be liable for refusing to render an account of the sale under this special count. An auctioneer, who delivered goods without receiving the price from the purchaser, was held liable in this form for the full produce of the goods (Brown v. Staton, 2 Ch. R. 353). If seller consent to the goods being sold on credit, no action will lie against the agent for not paying over the produce, unless, the delay in the payment have been occasioned by the agent's neglect, or, the transaction be closed (Vardeer v. Parker, infra): the plt. should prove a request to account, though it may be presumed after a reasonable time (Topham v. Braddick, 1 Taun. 572; 12 Mod. 444), and also, if possible, the receipt of the proceeds of sale: the purchaser will be a good witness for this.

In an Action to recover the proceeds of Sales, or, Moneys received by the deft., which would be recoverable under the count for money had and received, it will, in addition to proof of the receipt of the money, in general, be necessary to prove the transaction is closed (Vardeer v. Parker, 2 Esp. 710; Lucas v. Groning, 1 Stark. 392), or else, show that it is the fault of the agent, that it is not (Ib.). Letters written by the agent to the principal will be evidence against him; and, if, he has rendered an account, he will be bound by it (Shaw v. Picton, 4 B. & C. 729; 7 D. & R. 201; Shaw v. Woodcock, 7 B. & C. 73; Shaw v. Dartnell, 6 B. & C. 56; 9 D. & R. 54). A sale of the goods, and actual receipt of the money for them, will be presumed, when a reasonable time has elapsed after deft.'s refusal to account (per Ld. Ellenb. Hunter v. Welsh, 1 Stark. 224); and plt. will recover on proving their value (Ib.). Proof of deft. being an agent under a del credere commission supersedes the necessity of proving the receipts of the proceeds (Paley, 76; Grove v. Dubois, 1 T. R. 112; Bise v. Dickason, ib. 285). See further, as to the proof against an agent for money had and received, post, "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED." If the deft. has been guilty of misconduct, and, he seeks to deduct the amount of his commission on the sales from plt.'s claim, plt. should prove such misconduct (White v. Chapman, 1 Stark. 113; ante).

In an Action for selling at an Under-price, if the deft. received any specific instructions as to price, they should be proved (Dufresne v. Hutchinson, 3 Taun. 117; Scott v. Surman, Willes, 407; 3 B. & P. 489). So, if, there was any custom, or, usage of trade. If there were no specific instructions, plt. should prove the value of the goods and the sale of them. Prove retainer of deft. and delivery of goods.

In an Action for selling on Credit, if deft. has received specific instructions, they should be proved; otherwise it should be proved that the usage of trade was against selling on credit (12 Mod. 514; Scott v. Surman, Willes, 407). As, an usage of this kind in the sale of stock (Wiltshire v. Sims, 1 Camp. 258; Lefevre v. Lloyd, 5 Taun. 749; 12 Mod. 514), or, in a sale by an auctioneer, by auction (Brown v. Staton, 2 Ch. R. 353; Ferrars (Earl) v. Robins, 2 C. M. & R. 152). See a declaration in case against a broker, where it was held that the duty alleged in the declaration resulted from the express contract therein described, and did not arise simply from the deft.'s character of broker (Boorman v. Brown, 3 Q. B. 511). Proving deft. bartered the goods would make him liable (Guerriero v. Peile, 3 B. & A. 616). In such an action, if it appear that the deft. sold the goods upon getting a bill of exchange drawn *by the vendee upon, and accepted [*98] by one D.; that the plaintiff, at first, refused to take it, but, that an agent of his, ultimately took it, in order to get it discounted; that the bill was never presented, nor, was any notice of dishonour given to the drawer, or, the deft. until 10 days after the bill had become due, and if, the jury find that the plt. had not accepted it, in satisfaction for the goods, his negligence in not presenting it, and giving notice of dishonour, by which the drawer was discharged from liability, is not an answer to the action (Ferrars (Earl) v. Robins, 2 C. M. & R. 152; 1 Gale, 70; 5 Tyrw. 705). Though, there be no specific instructions, or, usage against selling on credit, plt. will render deft. liable by proving the credit given was unreasonable, and not customary (Buls. 183). Prove the retainer and delivery of the goods.

If the agent have taken a security, instead of cash, plt. may show the security was such as would give him unnecessary trouble, or, risk (Yelv. 202). If a broker employed to sell goods, sell them for a bill at a given date, and draw on the buyer for the amount, he is answerable on the bill to his principal (Lefevre v. Lloyd, 5 Taunt. 749); or, if, he take a security payable to himself from the purchaser, and give his own security to the principal for the net proceeds, he will be liable (Simpson v. Swan, 3 Camp. 291); and he will be liable for a loss arising from mixing up the proceeds of the sale with his own, at his banker's (11 Ves. 382; R. & M. 382).

In an Action for selling to a Person unfit to be trusted, plt. should show the party was in reputed bad circumstances at the time of the sale (12 Mod. 514; Wiltshire v. Sims, 1 Camp. 258), or, that such was known to deft.: the circumstance of deft.'s selling his own goods for ready money would be a strong inference against him (Ib.). Prove the retainer and delivery of goods.

In an Action for the Loss of Goods, non assumpsit operates as a denial of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, and of such bailment or employment as would raise a promise in law to the effect alleged, but not of the breach (R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV.); if the agent did all that by his industry he could for their preservation (Vere v. Smith, 1 Vent. 121), and kept them with the same care he did his own (Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Raym. 917; Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 341), he will not be liable, and proof must be adduced accordingly against this. An agent is not liable in cases of fire (2 Mod. 100), robbery (Co. Litt. 88, b.), or, any other accidental damage happening without his default (Ib. and Roll. Abr. 124). However, if the plt. can prove the loss happened by previous neglect, though, not the immediate fault of the agent, he will render the deft. liable; as, if goods be burned in a warehouse, in the removal of which there has been an improper delay (6 Ves. 496). Prove the retainer and delivery of goods.

In an Action for not using due Care in selling, non assumpsit denies the receipt of the goods for the purpose alleged, the retainer, and the promise, but, not the sale, or, the want of due care in selling.

In Action for Misconduct when employed to purchase.] The retainer must be proved: it is the duty of an agent to buy for his principal in the most beneficial manner, and, as in all other cases, to exercise proper skill, &c.; and he will be liable whenever he deviates from his orders in price, quality, or kind (Paley, 28-36); plt. should, therefore, adduce his stating it to be of the best quality (Ib.). Plt. may show he sustained a loss in consequence of deft. himself being the seller (3 Ch. Com. L. 217).
 [*99] proof accordingly. Where an *agent grossly misstates the quantity of goods purchased by him, and such misstatement be productive of loss to his employer, he would be liable, though the agent thereby derived no additional pecuniary benefit (Lord Mayor of London v. Brandon, Holt, 438, 441, n.). Where plt. ordered tobacco of the best quality, and the agent purchased it of so inferior a description that a person to whom it was shipped brought an action against plt. and recovered, it was held, that plt. could recover from his agent the whole damage that he had suffered by his neglect (Mainwaring v. Brandon, 8 Taun. 202); and it will be no waiver of principal's right, though, he may have received a bought note not

In Action for not Insuring, after proof of the retainer, plt. should prove his interest in the property to be insured (Park. Ins. 4; Delaney v. Stoddart, 1 T. R. 24). The agent must insure where it has been the course of dealing to do so; or, where the principal, having effects in the agent's hands, orders him to insure, or, where bills of lading are sent to the agent conjointly with orders to insure, he must do so, though, his principal have mortgaged to him the subject of insurance, and the mortgage have become absolute. But, he is not bound to insure at all events, but only to do his utmost to effect it (Smith v. Lascelles, 2 T. R. 187). If, he cannot effect it, it is part of his implied duty to give notice to his principal, and an actual promise to that effect, though averred, need not be proved (Callender v. Olericks, 5 Bing. N. C. 58; 6 Sc. 761). 'And, in all cases where he makes an ineffectual insurance, or neglects to insure, he will be liable in the same manner as if he had been the insurer himself (Mal. Lex Mer. 86; Delaney v. Stoddart, 1 T. R. 24; Wallace v. Telfair, 2 T. R. 188, n.). Therefore, if an agent omit to insert a clause usual in the policy, and loss ensue by the omission, he will be liable for the sum directed to be insured, deducting the premium (Mallough v. Barker, 4 Camp. 150). But, he will not be liable to an action for neglecting to insert in a policy a liberty to carry simulated papers not mentioned in his written instructions, though, it may have been verbally communicated to him that simulated papers were to be used in the voyage (Fomin v. Oswell, 3 Campb. 357); or, wording the clause so as not to include certain goods intended to be insured, he will be liable (Park v. Hammond, 2 Marsh. 189; S. C. 6 Taunt. 495). See a form of declaration for effecting a different insurance than that required, Callender v. Olericks, supra; and one in case, Turpin v. Bolton, 5 M. & Gr. 455.

In Action for not giving Plaintiff Notice of a fact known by the deft., and which ought to have been communicated to plt., and for the want of which a loss is sustained to plt., he should prove deft.'s knowledge of that fact, and that it was a material one: such as proving a sale by deft. without information to plt. (13 Vin. Ab. 4); or, a bill of exchange remitted to deft. (Beawes, 431); or, a notice of insolvency of an underwriter (2 Camp. 546, n.). As to attorney not giving notice, post. The retainer should be proved.

In an Action against a gratuitous Agent, as, he is not liable for a mere nonfeasance, plt. must prove he has been guilty of misfeasance (2 Raym. 909; Elsee v. Gatwaed, 5 T. R. 143; Wilkinson v. Coverdale, 1 Esp. 74). As, if, an attorney should undertake gratuitously to conduct a cause, and he did so conduct it, plt. should show he did it in such a gross manner as to create the loss. And, in all cases, in *order to render a gratuitous agent liable, plt. should show he did not pay the same attention to the [*100] trust as he reasonably would for himself in his own affairs (3 Ch. Com. L. 215). Mixing money of a principal with his own at bankers, and they fail, he is liable for the loss (1 J. & W. 241; Robinson v. Ward, R. & M. 274; Maud v. Waterhouse, 2 C. & P. 579). The retainer should be proved.

Damage.] The plt.'s damage must be proved. In general, it is not necessary to prove special damage, and, if plt. makes out his case, he will be entitled to nominal damages at all events (Van Wort v. Wolley, M. & M. 520; per Tenterden, C. J.). If plt. seek to prove an actual damage, a loss of some legal benefit should be proved: proof of the loss of a probable advantage is not sufficient (Webster v. De Tastet, 7 T. R. 157; Park, Ins. 303, ante). The plt. will be entitled to recover the amount of any direct loss by the goods (Moll. 327; Cro. J. 265), as well as any sums expended by him in reparation to others, and the measure of damages ought to be the damages and costs recovered in the action against the plt. (Mainwaring v. Brandon, 8 Taun. 208). But, the debt to be recovered from the agent is the balance only of money received by him after deducting all just allowances, though not pleaded by way of set-off (Dale v. Sollett, 4 Burr. 2133); but he will be liable for interest if he applies the money to his own use, or, even, mixes it up with his own at his banker's (Rogers v. Taylor, 2 Esp. 704; Robinson v. Ward, R. & M. 274): secus, if he suffer it to lie dead in his hands (Ib.). And, where the goods are forfeited by the agent's making improper entries at the Custom House, the extent of his liability, is said, to be the cost price of the goods, if to be exported, and the sale price, if, they are to be imported, with reference to the country where the seizure is made (Mal. Lex. Mr. 83; 13 Vin. Ab. 4). In actions against agents for not insuring (ante, p. 99), plt. can only recover according to his interest, which, as well as the loss, he must establish in proof (Park, Ins. 4; Delaney v. Stoddart, 1 T. R. 24; post, "POLICY"). The amount of the damages which the plt. will be entitled to recover, will be the sum directed to be insured, deducting the premiums paid (Mallough v. Barker, 4 Camp. 150). As to what deft. may deduct, see post, p. 103.

Evidence for Defendant.

In general, deft. should be prepared to disprove plt.'s case. A variance in the declaration, in stating the retainer as an absolute, when it was only a conditional, one, would be ground of nonsuit, (Lopes v. De Tastet, 1 B. & B. 544). Deft. may show in defence, that he performed his employment; and, if the terms of the employment are in dispute, he should be prepared to prove the nature of them. In an action for misconduct, he may show he pursued the express orders of his principal, or, in the absence of them, that he pursued the usual and accustomed course of trade and dealing, proving the same. Proving his good intentions towards his principal forms no defence (ante, p. 96).

"It is a settled rule of law that an agent shall not be allowed to dispute the title of his principal, and that, therefore, he shall not, after accounting with his principal and receiving money in that capacity, afterwards say that he did not do so, and did not receive it for the benefit of his principal, but, for that of some third person" (per Abbott, C. J., Dixon v. Hamond, 2 B. & A. 313).

Factors having made advances to their principals in respect of consignments already made, have no right to sell contrary to the *princi-[*101] pal's orders, even after demand of payment, and notice that in default they will sell to pay themselves. And in such case, if they do sell, it is no defence that they believed the sale to be, and that it was also for the principal's benefit (Smart v. Sandars, 11 Law T. 178, C. P.).

An agent employed to recover a sum of money is entitled to retain a just allowance for his labour and service therein, which, not being in the nature of a consideration, or, mutual debt, he may prove under the general issue in an action for money had and received (Dale v. Sollett, 4 Burr. 2133); semble, notwithstanding the New Rules.

Fraud.] Deft., in an action for misconduct, may also show that the transaction in which he was employed was fraudulent, but, he must show that it was part of the employment to defraud; as in the case of defrauding by the non-payment of duties, for, if he merely show that the duties were not paid, it will be insufficient (Catlin v. Bell, 4 Camp. 184; see Wilkinson v. Loudonsack, 3 M. & S. 117; Gross v. La Page, Holt, 105-7). He may also, show that his compliance with his instructions would have been a fraud upon others: as, where an agent was employed to sell certain articles, and the condition of sale purported that the highest bidder should be the purchaser, but the agent had private instructions not to sell under a certain sum, in which case it is sufficient if he sold to the highest bidder, though, for less than the sum to which he was secretly limited (Bezwel v. Christie, Cowp. 395).

The agent of a party to an illegal contract, who receives money under it to the use of his principal, cannot set up the illegality of the transaction to an action brought against him by his principal (Tenant v. Elliott, 1 B. & P. 3; Farmer v. Russell, ib. 296); semble, it is otherwise, where the agent is also particeps criminis (McGregor v. Lowe, R. & M. 57).

A., a merchant, employed B. as his agent to sell goods; B. employed as his sub-agent C., with whom he had a running account; B. became bankrupt, and his assignees claimed from a balance due for the sale of goods, which afterwards appeared to be the property of A., who also claimed the amount; C. interpleaded: held, that A., the owner of the goods, had a right to recover the price from the sub-agent, and the mere fact of entering the amount by C. in his books, to the account of B., was not such an appropriation of the money so received in payment of the debt of B. to C., within the principle laid down in George v. Claggett, 7 T. R. 359, as to bar A.'s right (Frith v. Cazenove, Exch., 17 Nov. 1848).

That Principal has adopted his Acts.] Though deft. has not complied with plt.'s instructions, he may show plt. has adopted his acts, as where deft. has put out plt.'s money on interest, and he receives it for any time with knowledge, it will be an affirmance of the transaction, and will exempt the agent from liability; if, the security fail (2 Free. R. 48; Eq. Ca. Abr. 708; Ward v. West, 2 Salk. 442; Wilson v. Poulter, 2 Stra. 859; Macleane v. Dunn, 4 Bingh. 722; Robinson v. Gleadow, 2 B. N. C. 161). But, quære, wherever satisfaction after action brought and plea pleaded is sufficient (Taylorson v. Peters, 2 Nev. & P. 625). When an agent deviates from his instructions, the principal has a right, as soon as he knows of the deviation, to repudiate what he has done; but, if he does not mean to accede to what has been done, he is bound immediately to take steps to notify his dissent (per Bayley, J., Prince v. Clark, 2 D. & R. 270). Deft. may also show that plt. did not disclose to him facts within his (principal's) knowledge, and whereby the loss occurred (Mayhew v. Eams, 3 B. & [*102] C. 603).

In an Action for not Accounting (ante, 67), he should be prepared to disprove plt.'s case, and show he has duly accounted.

In an Action to recover the Proceeds of Goods, or, moneys received by him, he should disprove, if possible, the plt.'s case as to the receipt of such moneys. He may prove the transaction is not closed (ante, p. 97); he may show that he has paid over the money to another person, and that he had authority to do so; the onus lies upon him to show that he had such authority (Smith v. Watson, 2 B. & C. 407; 3 D. & R. 751); or, he may show a balance due to him, even, though, he agreed to pay over the whole proceeds without setting off a debt then due to him from his principal, as such an agreement is not binding upon him (M'Gillivray v. Simpson, 9 D. & R. 35; 2 C. & P. 320). Deft. may also prove that he remitted the money received by him for his principal in the usual way, and it will be a sufficient defence; therefore, where plt. engaged deft. to receive money for him, and remit a bill for it by post, which the agent did, but the letter was suppressed, and the money upon the bill received at the banker's by some unknown person, the agent is discharged (Warwick v. Noakes, Pea. 68). And, where a steward, in receiving rents, takes bills from persons of reputed credit, yet he will be excused, though, the bills be dishonoured, and the money lost (Knight v. Plymouth, 3 Atk. 480). And, where a banker, who had received bills of exchange for the purpose of procuring payment, took the acceptor's check instead of money, yet, he was held discharged, though the check was dishonoured, as it appeared that the banker only pursued the usual course of business (Russell v. Hankey, 6 T. R. 12). Where an agent takes securities, they must be such as the principal can avail himself of, by reasonable diligence, and without risk, or trouble (1 Buls. 104; Yelv. 202; Winch. 53). And an agent residing abroad may show that money was subsequently depreciated by edict, &c. (Moll. 424). As to fraud, see ante, p. 101.

In an Action for purchasing damaged Goods, he may show that the goods were damaged after, and not before, he bought them (Moll. 84).

In Actions for selling on Credit, or, to a Person unfit to be trusted, or, for the Loss of Goods, the evidence for deft. may be collected from ante, 67-8. When customary to sell on credit, an agent has implied authority to sell on such terms (Scott v. Surman, Willes, 406; Houghton v. Matthews, 3 B. & P. 489).

In an Action for not Insuring, it will be no defence to him to show that he was directed to insure against British capture, for that will not render the whole insurance void, but only pro tanto (Glaser v. Cowie, 1 M. & S. 52). Deft. may show that his promise to insure was merely gratuitous: and that he never acted on such promise; for, if, he once actually interfered, he would be liable for gross neglect (Wilkinson v. Coverdale, 1 Esp. 74; Marsh. 208); or, that he had no effects in his hands, and declined from the first (Smith v. Lascelles, 2 T. R. 189); and, if bills of lading were consigned to him, that he refused at the same time to accept them (Ib.). In an action against an agent for a failure in making assurance, as, it is a principle that he stands in the place of an insurer, he is entitled to *any [*103] defence which an insurer could have made (Park, Ins. 4; Delaney v. Stodart, 1 T. R. 24); he may, therefore, avail himself of a deviation in the voyage (Ib. 22); or, the illegality of the intended insurance (Webster v. De Tastet, 7 T. R. 157). And, if the neglect complained of be, that by the non-communication of a material fact to the underwriters in making the insurance, the policy was avoided, the agent may make it appear, by way of defence, that the fact, if communicated, would have made it impossible to get the insurance effected (Anon., coram, Chamber, J., York. Sum. Assizes, 1808).

In an Action against a gratuitous Agent, he should be prepared to show, he was one, and that he acted to the best of his knowledge, and was not guilty of gross negligence, but, took the same care of plt.'s goods as of his own; and, where a general merchant entered goods of his own, and another person's at the Custom House, under a wrong entry, whereby they were forfeited, it was held that he was not liable as he received no reward, and was not of a profession that implied skill (Shields v. Blackburne, 1 H. Bl. 158).

To reduce Damages, deft. is entitled to deduct all just allowances, which he has a right to retain out of the sum demanded, without pleading, or, giving notice of set-off (Dale v. Sollet, 4 Burr. 2133; see ante, p. 100). As to such charges, see ante, p. 100. Deft. may as well prove, if possible, he acted with an intention of benefitting the principal, but this will not afford a ground for defence (ante, p. 96).

Form of Remedy, Pleadings and Precedents.

There is no peculiar form of remedy in an action at the suit of third persons against an agent, he being liable only as a principal, and not, as agent: consequently, there are no forms of pleading, or, precedents. For those relative to attorneys, auctioneers, bailees, carriers, and other such particular agents, see those titles.

An action in form ex contractu will not lie against an agent for money had and received, unless, there is some privity of contract between himself, and the plt., and therefore, where an attorney was accustomed to receive certain dues for the plt., and his clerk, in his absence, received money on account of those dues (having authority *to do so), and on the [*104] master's not returning home refused to pay it over to the plt., it was held, that he was not liable in assumpsit to the plt. as he was accountable for it to his master, who was accountable over to the plt., and that between the clerk and the plt. there was no privity of contract (Stephens v. Badcock, 3 B. & Ad. 354). So, where the agent of the managing owner of a ship in the service of the East India Company has received money on account of the ship from the company, upon a receipt signed by the managing owner, and one of the other owners, and has placed it in his books to his principal's credit as managing owner, he is not liable to the other part-owners, as, there is no privity of contract between him and them (Sims v. Brittain, 1 N. & M. 594; 4 B. & Ad. 375; and see Sims v. Bond, 2 N. & M. 608; and Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & S. 259). But, where M. & Co. abroad, through the agency of A. and Co., procure B. to consign goods to them, and remit to A. and Co. bills, specifically appropriating them to pay B., and also, to B. to say they have done so, and before payment A. and Co. become bankrupt, as the original transaction was through their agency, they must be considered as agents throughout the transaction, and there is therefore sufficient privity between them and B. to enable him to recover the bills from them, although, M. and Co. were indebted to them at the time (Ex parte Thompson, 2 Jur. 734; 1 Mont. & Chit. 1).

Evidence for Plaintiff.

In Action against Agent contracting on his own Account.] The proofs relative to the subject-matter of the action in this, as well as, the other following actions against agents, will be similar to those against other parties in general. Plt. should show that the deft. personally contracted, either by parol, or, under seal, for the performance of the agreements in his own name; and deft. will, in general, be responsible, though, he describe himself as agent, and though the principal be known; particularly if he so far exceed his powers as to render his principal irresponsible (Ch. Contr. 227; Paley, 251, et seq.; Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 East, 62; Smith's Lead. Cas.; Spittle v. Lavender, 5 Moo. 276; McBraine v. Fortune, 3 Campb. 317). Where an agent employed to wind up the concerns of a person deceased, gave an undertaking to a creditor of the deceased to furnish money to meet an acceptance which such creditor had given, in furtherance of an arrangement for delaying payment, in hope that funds might be forthcoming, he was held liable on such undertaking, though, he was merely a clerk, and had no interest in the goods sold by the creditor, nor, had received any funds (Maud v. Waterhouse, 2 C. & P. 579).

If an agent, employed to wind up the business of a firm, draw a bill in the name of the firm upon a debtor to the firm, who accepts it, the agent is not liable on the bill, without some proof that he had no authority to draw it for his employer, or, that he had not acted bona fide. And it is doubtful if he had not such authority, whether he would be liable in an action upon the bill (Wilson v. Barthorp, 2 M. & W. 863; Mur. & H. 811). But if an agent contract in writing on behalf of his principal, as, thus: "I undertake on behalf of E. to pay," he is not personally liable on the contract, unless, he had no authority to make it, or, exceeded the authority (Downman v. Jones, 14 Law J., N. S. 226, Q. B.); and the other contracting party did not know of the want of authority (Jones v. Downman, 4 Q. B. 23, n.; 9 Jur. 454). Where deft. wrote the following letter to plt. "Your bill of charges in this matter, amounting to 527l. 5s. the sum claimed in the action, I also [*105] undertake on behalf of Messrs. Esdaile *and Co. to pay; and will arrange with you the time and mode;" an earlier part of the letter contained an unqualified promise to deft. to pay plt. another sum; and, in letters written shortly before, the plt. and deft. named E. and Co. as the parties to the negotiations, and mentioned the debt now claimed as "to be settled and paid by E. and C.," but spoke of the negotiations as to other debts with reference merely to plt. and deft.: held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, that the first-mentioned letter, upon the face of it, and especially when connected with the other passages above-mentioned, imported as to the sum claimed only an undertaking by deft. as agent for E. & Co., and that in the absence of evidence directly showing a want of authority in deft. to give such undertaking, or any excess of his authority in giving it, deft. was entitled to judgment (Downman v. Williams (in error), 7 Q. B. 103, reversing in part the judgment of the Queen's Bench, 4 Q. B. 235). Where a mortgagor was sued for principal and interest, and D., an attorney, and a friend of his, but, not employed by him as attorney, wrote to the plts., promising if, they would not issue execution for two months, that certain steps would be taken, and further, "I shall pay all the principal, interest, and costs through a friend of mine in London, to whom a transfer of all the securities you have will have to be made. The cash will be ready, if the securities will, on the 16th;" D. was held personally liable on this undertaking (Harper v. Williams, 4 Ad. & El. N. S. 219).

Where A. employs B. to sell goods for him, and C., as B.'s broker, procures a purchaser, and draws a bill for the amount, payable to A., which is accepted by the purchaser, but dishonoured: it was held that C. is answerable to A., as drawer of the bill (Lefevre v. Lloyd, 1 Marsh. 318; S. C. 5 Taun. 749). An agent to a country bank, to whom plt. sent a sum of money, in order to procure a bill upon London, drew, in his own name, for the amount, upon the firm in London, the two firms being the same: held, that the agent was liable, as drawer, although, plt. knew that he was agent, and supposed that the bill was drawn by him as such, and on account of the country bank to which the agent paid over the money (Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 M. & S. 345). When a British merchant buys goods for a foreigner, the credit is given to the former (1 Ch. Contr. 225, 230).

So, if an agent sign a written agreement for the sale and delivery of goods, it is not open to him on non assumpsit to show that the agreement was made by him as agent, and that the plt. knew the fact at the time (Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 834). So, if he deliver an invoice in his own name, he is bound by the representation in it, and cannot prove that he acted as agent, and that the plt. knew it (Jones v. Littledale, 1 N. & P. 677; 6 Ad. & E. 486). So, if he, a broker, and known to be such, sign a contract for the sale of shares in his own name, he cannot set up that he acted merely as broker (Magee v. Atkinson, 2 M. & W. 440; Mur. & H. 151).

And if an agent expressly stipulate by a written agreement, or, under seal, though, he describes himself as an agent, and acting on behalf of another, whom he mentions, he will be liable. Therefore, where an agent, by a written agreement, expressed to be made by himself, on behalf of A. B. of the one part, and the plt. of the other, stipulated to execute a lease of certain premises to the plt., he was held to be personally liable; and it was said by Best, C. J., that there was no distinction between agreements of this nature by parol, or, by deed (Norton v. Herron, R. & M. 229; 5 Moo. 278; 1 C. & P. 643). And so, where the deft., who described himself as agent and consignee of a ship chartered for a specific voyage, signed an agreement in his own name, "witnessing that the said parties had *agreed to vary the voyage," and it appeared that he gave instructions and conducted himself [*106] throughout, as principal, he was held personally responsible (Kennedy v. Gouveia, 3 D. & R. 503). Where A. and B., merchants in London, receive orders from G., St. Petersburg, for a quantity of Havannah sugars, for the amount of which they are to draw on L., G.'s agent at Hamburg, by a bill at three months, and he accepts the bill, and writes to G. for instructions as to what account to apply the amount, because A. and B. had been accredited for Havannah sugars and not Brazil, and then, writes to them to say that he had accepted the bill under their guarantee, for the present, as, he had not received the accreditiv (i. e. semble, the order to execute the contract for Brazil sugars, instead of that, for Havannah sugars), and G. then writes to him giving him credit for the Brazil sugar, and requesting him to release A. and B. from their guarantee; and G. fails before the acceptance becomes due; L. is liable to A. and B. on this acceptance, notwithstanding that they, after G.'s failure, wrote to L., "We have received from G. the assurance that he has arranged with you the needful for the protection of the draft; we reserve to ourselves any advantage from the insurance of the goods, if, you have written to G. that you have not honoured the draft we cannot consider your acceptance as valid in any other way than on account of G. (Lohmam v. Rougemont, 6 Bing. N. C. 253).

And where attorneys gave the following written undertaking: "We, as solicitors to the assignees, &c., undertake to pay the landlord his rent, provided it does not exceed the value of the effects distrained," they were held personally liable (Burrell v. Jones, 3 B. & A. 47). And, if, an attorney personally undertake to withdraw a record, he will be liable (Iveson v. Conington, 1 B. & C. 160; 2 D. & R. 307; Prosser v. Allen, Gow. R. 307; Redhead v. Cater, Stark. 14; post, "ATTORNEYS"). And where, by deed, an agent covenants, "for himself, his heirs," &c., for the act of another, he is personally liable, although, he describe himself as agent (Appleton v. Bincks, 5 Ea. 148). But, the liability must clearly appear from the whole context of the instrument; therefore, where A., an auctioneer, being employed to sell an estate of B.'s, signed an agreement with C. for the purchase, in his own name, as agent of B., and B. himself shortly afterwards signed it, adding, "I hereby sanction this agreement, and approve of A.'s having signed it on my behalf," it was held that A. was not personally liable, as the agreement by A. and ratification by B. formed but one transaction, and showed that it was the understanding of all parties that A. should not be liable (Spittle v. Lavender, 5 Moo. 270). Where the seller of goods, with the assent of the agent, chooses to give a distinct credit to such agent, knowing him to be such, the agent alone can be sued (Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 Ea. 62; Leggatt v. Reed, 1 C. & P. 16). As to evidence in defence, post, p. 109. So, on the following agreement: "Mr. B. (the deft.) agrees to hire a phaeton, &c., for Capt. W.; provided Capt. W., should be disposed to buy it, the price is 50*l*. for the lot, as per agreement between Mr. B. and Mr. L. (the plt.): held, that B. was liable as principal (Lyell v. Brown, Q. B., 9 Nov. 1848).

Where a servant is supplied beforehand, by his master, with money to pay over to a tradesman with whom the dealings have always been on ready-money terms, the master is not liable if the servant do not pay the tradesman (Fleming v. Hector, 2 M. & W. 181, per Lord Abinger, C. B.). Where the latter invariably had paid when the articles amounted to a certain small sum, if the tradesman allow the account to remain undischarged until it amount to a large sum, the master is not liable, for, by so doing [*107] the latter is presumed to give credit *to the servant (Stubbing v.

Heintz, Pea. R. 47). So, where the master was in the habit of paying ready money for articles furnished in certain quantities to his family, if the tradesmen obtain additional goods of the same sort, to be delivered without informing the master, or, satisfying himself that they were for his use, when in fact they were not, the master is not liable (Pearce v. Rogers, 2 Esp. 214). And where the mistress of a servant authorized a tailor to make for her servant two suits of livery a year, and the tailor supplies one suit, and at the servant's request a suit of plain clothes instead of the other, the mistress is not liable for the latter (Hunter v. Berkeley (Countess) 7 C. & P. 413). But, the master would be liable if he once authorized the servant to pledge his credit, although he subsequently give him money to settle the demand, which the servant omits to do (Wayland's case, 3 Salk. 234; Bolton v. Hillersden, 1 Ld. Raym. 225; Rusly v. Scarlett, 5 Esp. 76). But a domestic servant never employed in any other capacity cannot bind his master by purchasing goods unconnected with domestic use, or by accepting bills of exchange in his master's name (Paley, 139; Fenn v. Harrison, 3 T. R. 757; Nickson v. Brohan, 10 Mod. 109). But, the master will not be liable where a servant, employed to sell a horse, warrants him, after the master has particularly ordered him not to do so (Hilyar v. Hanke, 5 Esp. 72; Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 552).

In an action where the Principal was unknown.] The plt. may show the deft.'s liability on a contract, by reason of his having entered into it without disclosing his principal, and though, it be known that the agent acts in a representative character. Therefore, where an auctioneer does not disclose the name of his principal at the time of sale, he is liable for the non-completion of the contract (Hanson v. Roberdeau, Pea. 163; Mitchison v. Hewson, 7 T. R. 350; M'Brain v. Fortune, 3 Camp. 317; 15 Ea. 62; Paley, 293; Spittle v. Lavender, 5 Moore, 270; Franklyn v. Lamond, 4 C.B. 637). And, where an agent residing in this country enters into a contract for another residing abroad, he will be personally liable (De Gaillon v. L'Aigle, 1 B. & P. 368; 15 Ea. 69). A master of a ship is generally liable for necessities furnished abroad (Rich v. Coe, Cowp. 639; Westerdell v. Dale, 7 T. R. 312); and in this country, unless they were furnished upon the credit of the owner, either he, or, the owners may be sued.

If brokers in selling goods send in invoices, or, bought and sold notes in their own names, as sellers, they are personally liable, and parol evidence would be admissible on their part to show that they sold as agents for third parties (Jones v. Littledale, 1 N. & P. 677; Moore v. Atkinson, 2 M. & W. 440).

In an Action where there was no responsible, or, apparent Principal, the agent is liable. Thus, where the acting commissioners under a navigation act entered into an engagement with an engineer to complete a certain work, it was held, that they were liable, though they had no funds (Ambl. 769, 772). But, where, by a private act of parliament, the expenses attending its passing were directed to be paid out of tolls raised, or to be levied under it, and the attorney who prepared the bill, sued the commissioners in the name of the clerk for the amount of his bill: held, that he must show that there were sufficient funds in the hands of the commissioners in respect of the tolls to satisfy the demand (Andrews v. Dally, 4 Bing. 566). So, where A. agreed with B. and C. to pave certain streets, and they, on behalf of the parish, agreed to pay, they were held liable (Hard. 205; 1 Bro. C. C. 101; Paley, 293). So, where commissioners* under an in- [*108] closure act drew drafts on their bankers, it was held that they were personally responsible to the bankers for the sums paid by them on such drafts (Eaton v. Bell, 5 B. & A. 35; Burrell v. Jones, 3 B. & A. 47). So, where parishioners at a vestry make an order, authorizing the churchwardens to repair a church, the churchwardens are alone responsible (Lanchester v. Tricker, 1 Bing. 201; Same v. Frewer, 2 Bing. 361). Commissioners, and churchwardens, or others, the agents, who employ, or, enter into a contract with another, or, for whom an agent acts, are in general liable when they have a power of reimbursing themselves at the time of the contract; and on this principle the cases in 1 Bro. C. C. 101; Eaton v. Bell, 5 B. & A. 34; and Brooke v. Guest, cited in 3 Bing. 481, were decided. And on the same principle, in Higgins v. Longton, there also cited, it was held, that commissioners of a turnpike were personally liable to persons employed about the construction, and repairs of a road; and in Brooke v. Guest, a churchwarden was held personally liable to a person whom he had employed to draw plans for a church; and, as, we have before seen, it is clear such agents are liable, if they personally contract (ante, p. 104). In Sprot v. Powel, 3 Bing. 478, it was held that vestrymen, who signed a resolution, ordering the parish surveyor to take steps for defending an indictment for not repairing a road, were not liable to the attorney employed by the surveyor; they having no power at that time to reimburse themselves, the surveyor should have been sued. But the agents of government, acting for the public, are not liable to be sued upon contracts made with them on behalf of government. So, the governor of a colony has been held not to be liable (McBeath v. Haldimand, 1 T. R. 172; Unwin v. Wolsey, ib. 674). And an action does not lie against a public officer (as the secretary at war), by individuals, for sums which, as a public officer, he is authorized to pay them, although, he may have received the money applicable to that purpose (Gidley v. Lord Palmerston, 3 B. & P. 275). Where the party making the contract had not a shadow of authority to contract for the third person, and did not profess at the time to act for him, it seems that the subsequent assent of such third party to be bound as a principal has no operation (see Fenn v. Harrison, 3 T. R. 757; Sanderson v. Griffiths, 5 B. & C. 909; Vere v. Ashby, 10 B. & C. 298, per Parke, J.).

In an action where the Agent has exceeded his Authority, so that the Principal is not liable, or, acted under an Authority which he knows the Principal has no right to give, he will be liable; as, where an agent sells property under a notice that it does not belong to his principal, and in which case the plt. should prove such notice (Cowp. 566; 4 Bur. 1984; B. N. P. 133; Fenn v. Harrison, 3 T. R. 757; Greenway v. Hurd, 4 ib. 553). The plt. should, in an action against an agent for exceeding his authority, be prepared to prove the agency. See "PRINCIPAL AND AGENT."

In Action for Money had and received.] The proofs in this action will, for the most part, be found, post, "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED." The plt. must, as a general rule, prove the receipt of the money, for the purpose of being paid over to the plt., and the deft.'s engagement so to pay it over (Williams v. Everett, 14 Ea. 590; 2 Roll. R. 441; Firbank v. Bell, 1 B. & A. 36; 1 Moo. 74). Where the action is to recover money received by an agent for another, who has no right to it, plt. must prove the payment of the money, and the purpose for which it was paid; and he should also [*109] prove it has not been paid over (Cox v. Prentice, 3 M. & S. 344; Cowp. 565); *or, else, that the receipt of the money was obviously illegal, or, that the agent's authority was wholly void (Townson v. Wilson, 1 Camp. 396, 564; Lovell v. Simpson, 3 Esp. 153). As to stakeholders, post, "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED."

In Actions for Torts, an agent is considered liable for all torts, and wilful trespasses, though, done by the authority of his master, and in the assertion of his master's rights (12 Mod. 448; 6 ib. 212; 2 ib. 242; 1 Wils. 328; 6 Ea. 450); trover lies against him (ib.; Stephens v. Elwell, 4 M. & S. 261); post). The plt. should, therefore, prove that the tort was done wilfully; proof of a mere neglect, or, nonfeasance will not suffice (1 Ch. Pl. 72). He need not adduce any proof as to the agency. And where a coachman loses a parcel, the master is the proper person to be sued (6 Moo. 47). An agent is never liable for the negligence of sub-agents, but, recourse must be had against the principal, or, the person actually committing the injury (Stone v. Cartwright, 6 T. R. 411; Bush v. Steinman, 1 B. & P. 405; Bromley v. Coxwell, 2 ib. 438; Matthews v. West London Waterworks Company, 3 Camp. 403). But see Humphreys v. Mears, 1 M. & R. 187).

Evidence for Defendant.

In an Action against an Agent contracting on his own Account, he should endeavour to prove the contrary, and that he contracted in the capacity of an agent, which was known to the plt. at the time of the contract, and that the deft. had authority from his principal to make the contract, and that he named his principal as the person to be responsible (Ex parte Harlop, 12 Ves. 352; Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 Ea. 62, 66; 3 P. Wms. 277, 279; 3 Ch. Com. L. 194, 211; Paley, Prin. and Ag. 251).

In an Action against an Agent where the Principal was unknown at the time of making the contract, the deft. should endeavour to disprove the fact, either from reputation, or, which is preferable, from the plt.'s own knowledge.

In an Action against an Agent for exceeding his Authority, so that the Principal was not liable, or for acting under an Authority which he knows the Principal had no right to give, deft. should be prepared to show the contrary, and prove the authority he had from his principal, or, that the principal had such right.

Where a bill was presented at the drawee's for acceptance when he was absent, Walter, who lived in the same house with the drawee, being assured by one of the payees that the bill was perfectly regular, accepted it, by procuration of the drawee; the bill was dishonoured, and the drawee was sued, but upon proof of these facts the plt. was nonsuited; the indorsee sued Walter for falsely representing that he was authorised to accept by procuration, and on the trial, the jury negatived all fraud in fact, yet, he was held liable, because the making of a representation which a party knows to be untrue, and calculated to induce another to act upon it, so that he may incur damage, is a fraud in law, but that W. was not liable as an acceptor, for no one can be but the person to whom the bill is addressed, unless, an acceptor for honour (Polhill v. Walter, 3 B. & Ad. 114).

In Action for Money had and received.] If the action be for not paying over the money paid to the agent for the plt., deft. may show that the plt., by his conduct, did not consider the deft. as holding the money on plt.'s account; and that deft. appropriated the money *properly to other purposes before the plt. called on him for it (Stewart v. Fry, Holt, 372). In [*110] an action to recover money received by an agent for another, who had no right to it, he may prove in answer that he has paid it over to his principal (1 Stra. 480; Cowp. 69; 1 Vern. 136; Greenway v. Hurd, 4 T. R. 553). The payment, however, must be an actual payment; therefore the mere passing of such money in account with his principal, or making a rest without any new credit given, fresh bills accepted, or a further sum advanced, is insufficient (Cox v. Prentice, 3 M. & S. 344; Buller v. Harrison, Cowp. 565; 1 Moo. 74; 1 Stra. 480). See the case as to stakeholders, and when an agent is liable for money had and received, to be paid over to a third person, post, "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED."

In Actions for Torts, deft. should be prepared to show that the tort was done through mere negligence, and as the mere agent of another, and by his authority: he should strictly prove the agency.

ALIENS.(a)

An alien cannot purchase, or, inherit any lands in this country, and cannot be inherited (Bac. Ab., Alien, C, and authorities there collected), and could not, therefore, have a real action when that action was in use (Ib.). But, he may join his wife, a British subject, as lessor of the plt. in ejectment, she making out title in her own right (per Coleridge, J., in Doe d. Miller v. Rogers, 1 C. & K. 390). He may have personal actions (Co. Litt. 119, b; And. 25), though, resident abroad (Dyer, 2, b; 1 T. R. 267, 362; 4 ib. 697; 2 H. Bl. 118), even, for a libel published concerning him in England, (Pisani v. Lawson, 8 Dowl. P. C. 57; 6 Bing. N. C. 30; 8 Scott, 180), or, slander (Tuerlotti v. Morrison, Buls. 134; Yelv. 198). If, residing abroad, he publish a book first abroad, he has no copyright in it here (Chappell v. Purday, 9 Jur. 495; 14 Law J., N. S., 258, Ex.). Though, he could not, at common law, hold or inherit lands, yet, if a merchant, he might upon a statute extend lands, for the design of the statute staple and statute merchant was to encourage trade. (11 Edw. III.; Roll. 87; Dyer, 2, b). So, he might, suing in a corporate capacity, have any form of action, real, personal, or, mixed (Bac. Ab., Aliens, D). He could not, at common law, purchase a lease for years of lands; but he might, if a merchant, take a lease of a house for his habitation (Poph. 36; Co. Litt. 2, b; Roll. Ab. 194; Dyer, 2, b); and by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, s. 5, "alien friends may take and hold any lands, houses, or other tenements, for the purpose of residence, or, occupation, or for the purpose of any business, trade, or manufacture, for any term of years not exceeding twenty-one years." This act is not a declaratory act (Count De Wall's case, 12 Jur. 145). This statute does not expressly notice the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 16, s. 13, which enacted that "all leases of any dwelling-house, or, shop within this realm," &c., "made to any stranger, artificer, or, handicraftsman, born out of the king's obeisance, not being denizen, [*111] *shall be void." Under this act not only a lease, but an agreement for a lease, was void (Lapierre v. Macintosh, 9 Ad. & E. 857; 1 P. & D. 629), and therefore the artificer might be ejected at any moment (Ib.); or, if he occupied under a lease, having given, also, a bond as a collateral security, the lessor could not recover on one, or, the other (Sid. 308; 2 Keb. 102, 116), or, even, in assumpsit for use and occupation (Pilkington and Peach, 2 Show. 135); but, if, under an agreement not amounting to a lease, the lessor could have assumpsit (Ib.). An assignment of a lease, however, was not void (Wootton v. Steffenoni, 12 M. & W. 129). A vintner has been held not to be an artificer within this statute, as his "mystery consists chiefly in making wines, and that is not properly an art, but, a cheat" (Bridgham v. Frontee, 3 Mod. 94). A British subject married a French woman, and became domiciled in France; they resided in France until the revolution of 1792, the wife never came within the territory of Great Britain, and died in the lifetime of her husband; held, that by the common law of England, she was not a British subject (Count De Wall's case, 12 Jur. 145).

To an action for money paid, it would seem that a plea that deft. is an alien, and that she requested the plt. to purchase an estate for her, and to take a lease thereof for her benefit; that he bought it, and paid the money in his own name, in order to enable the deft. to obtain the benefit of the lease, but had himself retained possession of the estate, is bad on demurrer (Bailey v. Cathrey, 1 Dowl. P. C., N. S. 456).

Aliens' Goods.] The rights of the city of London, as to the unshipping and portorage of aliens' goods, are abolished by the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 66, whether they are consigned to subjects, or, aliens (Collyer v. Stennet, 4 M. & G. 676; 5 Sc. N. R. 34).

No action can be maintained by an alien enemy—except, perhaps, as executor (see Bac. Ab. Alien, D)—or, by another suing in his behalf, where his interest appears on the record (Brandon v. Nesbit, 6 T. R. 23).

How Defendant may avail himself of Defence of Plaintiff's being one.] This defence must be now pleaded specially in all cases. Where the disability existed at the time of the cause of the action arising, the contract cannot be enforced, even, after restoration of peace (Willison v. Patteson, 7 Taunt. 439); and the deft. might formerly take advantage of it under the general issue (Anthon v. Fisher, Doug. 649, n., 132; Brandon v. Nesbit, 6 T. R. 24, 133), but, when it rose after the cause of action accrued, it should be pleaded specially (Harman v. Kingston, 3 Camp. 151-153; Flind v. Waters, 15 Ea. 260; and see Casseres v. Bell, 8 T. R. 166); and when, after declaration, as it only suspends the remedy till the return of peace, it should be pleaded in abatement (3 Camp. 153; Ex parte Boussmaker, 13 Ves. J. 71; see also Bac. Ab. Aliens, E). If, in such a case, on demurrer to the plea, it appears upon the record that the plt. now is an alien enemy, the court will ex officio notice it, and give judgment to bar him from the further maintenance of his action (Le Brett v. Papillon, 4 Ea. 502); but, where the disability arose after verdict, refused to stay judgment and execution (Vaulrynen v. Wilson, 9 Ea. 321). As this plea is not favoured by the courts, it has been for a long time the practice not to allow it to be pleaded with any other plea (Truckenbutt v. Payne, 12 Ea. 206; Schornbeck v. De la Cour, 10 Ea. 326; Thyatt v. Young, 2 B. & P. 27; Angerstein v. Vaughan, 1 ib. 222, n.); and it is, therefore, advisable to plead it in abatement when it can be so. It cannot be pleaded to scire facias on a judgment, *if, the objection existed at the time of obtaining judgment (West v. Sutton, [*112] 2 Lord Raym. 853). As to the defence of husband, or, wife being an alien, ante "ABATEMENT," "COVERTURE."

Form of Plea, &c.] As this plea is not favoured in law, the greatest degree of certainty is requisite in framing it; and deft. must state that plt. not only was, or, is an alien, but that he came to England without letters of safe conduct from the king (Casseres v. Bell, 8 T. R. 167). To this plea the plt. may either deny the fact, or, if true, may reply a license, &c., to reside in this country (7 Geo. IV. c. 54). See "PLEAS," "REPLICATIONS."

Precedents.] Pleas of this nature are so rare, that it is not considered requisite to give the form of one. (See a form of plea, 3 Ch. Pl. 11; of a replication of license, ib. 427; of plea in abatement, 1 Went. 7, 42, 51)

Lil. Ent. 1; see also Mod. Ent. 9; Aston's Ent. 11; Calvin's case, 7 Co. 2).

[Replication.] When the plt. replies a natural-born subject, he must aver a place of birth, or, the replication will be bad on demurrer (Nicolas v. Powell, Carth. 302; Brodeck v. Briggs, ib. 265; Freeman v. King, Sid. 357; Rast. Ent. 605, 252; Herne, 361; see also Comb. 212; 2 Keb. 98; Leon. 76, 79; Cart. 50). As to how it ought to be averred, see the above authorities. When alienage is pleaded in bar, and the plt. replies indigena, he must take issue; but, when in abatement, he may take issue, or, conclude with a verification (per Holt, C. J., Comb. 394; Fort. 222). If the plt. have a protection he must plead it (Sylvester's case, 1 Lord Raym. 283; Farres. 150). See form of replication of license, &c. 3 Ch. Pl. 427.

[Evidence.] The evidence must necessarily depend upon the fact put in issue by the proclamation. If the plt. reply that he is not an alien, the proof of the negative, it is said, lies on him. So, if he replies a license, he will be bound to prove it. If he deny he was an enemy, the deft. will be bound to prove he was, by proving the war between this country, and that of which the plt. was a subject. It is said, that whether his prince is at league with ours is to be tried by the record in chancery, as, every league is of record (9 Co. 31). It is not necessary that a war should be formally proclaimed; open acts of hostility are sufficient proof of it (Owen, 43; Cro. E. 142). A proclamation in the "Gazette" is the readiest evidence. Proof, if the plt. is an Englishman, that he is residing and carrying on trade (McConnell v. Hector, 3 B. & P. 113); or, semble, that he is merely residing in an enemy's country (O'Mealy v. Wilson, 1 Camp. 481; De Luneville v. Phillips, 2 N. R. 97); or, if an alien, that he is trading in the enemy's country, though, as consul of a neutral state, is sufficient (Albrecht v. Sussman, 2 Ves. & B. 323). See, where mere residence did not, under the peculiar circumstances, incur this disability Roberts v. Hardy, 3 M. & S. 533. Proof that the plt. was sometime ago domiciled in a territory which has become hostile, without showing that he was a native, is not sufficient (Harman v. Kingston, 3 Camp. 152). By 11 & 12 Vict. the home secretary and the lord lieut. of Ireland have the power to order aliens to depart. By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 83, s. 1, all acts of colonial legislatures imparting privilege of naturalization are declared valid from the date of their enactment, and all future laws of the same nature are to be valid (sect. 2), but subject to confirmation or disallowance by her majesty. By section 3, it is declared that 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, does not extend to the colonies or foreign possessions.

*ALTERATION OF CONTRACT.

[How Defendant may avail himself of it.] Deft. might formerly avail himself of this defence in assumpsit, or, debt, on simple contract, under the general issue (Hodgson v. E. Ind. Comp., 8 T. R. 280); and in debt on a deed, or in covenant, under the plea of non est factum (5 Co. 23, 119; B. N. P. 172; 1 Ch. Pl. 425-8). In the latter case, he can still do so, but, not in the former case, as the effect of the general issue in assumpsit, or, debt is now different from what it was. Therefore, if the plt. where the contract has been altered since it was signed by the parties, declare upon it as it originally stood without noticing the alteration, the deft. must plead the alteration, and cannot take advantage of it under the general issue (Hemming v. Trenery, 9 Ad. & E. 926). An alteration of a bond which avoids it, may be given in evidence on non est factum, if it occasion a variance, or, require a fresh stamp. But if the alteration, whether by consent, or otherwise, discharge or, vary the liability of the parties to the bond, then it is matter which must be specially pleaded (Harden v. Clifton, infra; Mason v. Bradley, 11 M. & W. 590; Hemming v. Trenery, 9 Ad. & E. 926). It is no defence under the general issue, that a parol contract in writing has been altered, so as to convert it into a deed (Davidson v. Cooper, 11 M. & W. 778, 13 ib. 343). But, if, the plt. declare upon the instrument as altered, the deft. may take advantage of it without pleading it; as where a general acceptance of a bill of exchange had been altered to a special acceptance, this was held to be a good defence under a plea denying the acceptance (Calvert v. Baker, 4 M. & W. 407; and Cock v. Coxwell, 2 C. M. & R. 291; 4 Dowl. P. C. 497). A plea of alteration of a deed should allege that the alteration was in writing, and above the seal (Harden v. Clifton, 1 Q. B. 522; see "BILLS OF EXCHANGE;" see post, p. 114, as to Bills of Exchange).

Evidence for Defendant.

Effect of Alteration.] If a contract, either by specialty, or by parol, be once entered into, any subsequent alteration thereof, even after breach, without the consent of the other party, in any material part, by a party interested, or, by a stranger, will render the contract wholly invalid at common law, as against the party not consenting to such alteration; and, in such case, he is not bound to perform the contract, even in its original terms, on account of the fraud attempted to be practised on him, and the jealousy of the law to prevent fraud (Pigott's case, 11 Co. 26, b; Com. Dig. Fait.; Markham v. Gonaston, Cro. E. 626; Master v. Miller, 4 T. R. 320; Sanderson v. Symonds, 1 B. & B. 430; Fairlie v. Christie, 1 Moo. 114; Downes v. Richardson, 5 B. & A. 674; Davidson v. Cooper, 11 M. & W. 778; 13 ib. 343). Such an alteration by the drawer of a bill of exchange, taken as a security for a debt, has been held to extinguish even the debt (Alderson v. Langdale, 3 B. & Ad. 660). A material alteration in the sale note by the broker, at the instance of the seller, after the bargain made, and without the consent of the purchaser, has been held to preclude the seller from recovering (Powell v. Divett, 15 East, 29). And any material alteration made in a contract requiring a stamp, after it has been once perfected, and has become an available security, even with the consent of the parties, will require a fresh stamp; which, if not added, will discharge the party by operation of the stamp laws (Bathe v. Taylor, 15 Ea. 416; Bowman v. Nicholl, 5 T. R. 537); and, in the case of bills of exchange and promissory notes, such an alteration would render them absolutely void (post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE"). But no alteration made in furtherance of the original object and meaning of the parties, and for the purpose of correcting an error, can render the instrument invalid, even as respects the stamp laws (infra, and post, "STAMP").

Whether the alteration be by erasure, or, addition, and whether the original writing be legible, or not, is immaterial (Pigott's case, 11 Co. 26, b; Hibblethwaite v. M'Morine, 6 M. & W. 200). The alteration of one, or, two parts of an agreement discharges the party liable thereon, if made without his concurrence. Thus, a material alteration in a sale note by the broker, after the bargain made at the instance of the seller without the consent of the purchaser, annuls the instrument, so as to preclude the seller from recovering upon the contract evidenced by the instrument so altered by him (Powell v. Divett, 15 Ea. 29; Whitcher v. Hall, 5 B. & C. 269; 8 D. & R. 22); and so, as to a guarantee, as by affixing seals to it to make it a deed (Davidson v. Cooper, 11 M. & W. 778; in error, 13 ib. 343). An alteration before execution of the contract cannot affect its validity (infra; and Doe v. Bingham, 4 B. & A. 672; Hall v. Chandless, 4 Bing. 123; 5 Bing. 368). An alteration in a material part discharges the debt, even, though, the alteration is beneficial to him (semble, Whitcher v. Hall, 5 B. & C. 269; 8 D. & R. 22). It seems, the alteration, however, should be a substantial one (ib.). With respect to what is a material alteration, it must necessarily depend on its nature, and the nature of the contract. Where, after the execution of a policy, the time of sailing was enlarged by the assured, and acquiesced in by all the underwriters except the debt., it was held this was a material alteration, and that the policy was void as to him (Fairlie v. Christie, 1 Moo. 114; post, "STAMP;" and see the various instances as to bills, post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE"). An alteration in an immaterial part must, to discharge the debt., be made by the obligee, or party interested (Pigot's case, 11 Co. 26, b). Such an alteration by the assured in a policy of insurance has, however, been held not to vacate it (Sanderson v. Symonds, 1 B. & B. 426).

An alteration by a stranger must, to discharge the party, be by design, and in a material part. Thus, an alteration of a bill of exchange by a stranger, through mistake, does not vacate it (Roper v. Birckbeck, 15 Ea. 17), or, alter the relative rights of the parties, if it were not a genuine instrument (Wilkinson v. Johnson, 3 B. & C. 428; 5 D. & R. 433. See "BILLS OF EXCHANGE"). So, a deed from which the seal was torn by a young boy (petit garçon) was held good to lead the uses of a recovery (Argol v. Cheney, Palm. 402, and see observations of Parke, B., in Davidson v. Cooper, 11 M. & W. 790). So, where, on a bond conditioned to pay 100*l.* by six equal instalments of 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* on the 3rd of October in every year, until, the full sum of one pounds was paid, a stranger inserted the word hundred between one and pounds, the sense being sufficiently manifest before the alteration, that the condition was for payment of 100*l.*, by six yearly instalments of 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, it was held, that the insertion of the word hundred did not alter the sense, and was therefore immaterial, and did not destroy the bond (Waugh v. Bussel, 5 Taun. 707), and so, where by deed a mortgagee conveyed the legal estate to the mortgagor, and the latter re-conveyed it to trustees for the purpose of securing an annuity, and at the time of execution by the mortgagee there were several blanks left in a part not affecting him, for the sums to be received by the mortgagor from the grantees of the annuity, which were all filled up, at the time of the execution, by the mortgagor, but *several in-

[*115] terlineations were made in that part of the deed after the execution by the mortgagee, these interlineations being immaterial as to him, did not affect the conveyance from him to the mortgagor, and being made before the execution by the latter did not affect the conveyance from him to the trustees for the payment of the annuity (Doe d. Bingham, 4 B. & A. 672, and see Com. Dig. Fait. F. 1).

Where, after an award was made, but, before it was delivered, the umpire altered it, the court refused to set it aside, but, confirmed it for the original sum awarded, which was still legible; saying, that the umpire was to be considered as a mere stranger, but that if the alteration had been made by a party interested in the award, it would have been otherwise (Henfrey v. Bromley, 6 Ea. 309). This case stands on a different footing from deeds between party and party, and would seem to be overruled by the late case of Davidson v. Cooper, ante, p. 114.

The alteration must, to discharge the party, be made against his consent; for, if it be made merely for the purpose of correcting a mistake, and in furtherance of the original intention of the parties, such alteration will not discharge either party, either at common law, or, as regards the stamp laws (Sanderson v. Symonds, 1 B. & B. 426; Doe v. Bingham, 4 B. & Ad. 672; Kershaw v. Cox, 3 Esp. 246; Jacob v. Hart, 6 M. & S. 142; Clark v. Blackstock, Holt, 474; Hudson v. Revett, 5 Bing. 368; 2 M. & P. 663; Hall v. Chandless, 4 Bing. 123). A substantial alteration made in an instrument of guarantee, without the consent of the surety, even though, the alteration is beneficial, will discharge such surety (2 Bro. C. C. 579; 2 Ves. J. 542; 3 Mer. 272; Heard v. Wadham, 1 Ea. 619; French v. Campbell, 2 H. B. 163; 6 T. R. 200, S. C.; Matson v. Booth, 5 M. & S. 223; 5 B. & C. 269; 8 D. & R. 22; Davidson v. Cooper, supra). There can be little doubt that an alteration in a material point would avoid the contract, if made without the consent of the party to be bound; although, such alteration rendered the instrument conformable with the original intention of the parties; for parol testimony of such meaning could not, in such case, be admissible in contradiction to the written contract, as it was originally worded by both parties (Kershaw v. Cox, 3 Esp. 246; Cole v. Parkin, 12 Ea. 471; Bathe v. Taylor, 15 Ea. 415). Where there are several parties to, and several interests in, a contract, an alteration by the consent of one of such parties, his interest only being thereby affected, will not discharge the others, though against their consent. Therefore, where a lease of lands was made by A. to B., at the request of C., D., and E., out of which B. was to grant underleases at the direction of D., E., and F. (the object of which underleases was to secure a ground-rent to A. and C.), and, subject to such underleases, was to stand possessed of the lease in trust for D. and E., who were parties to the original lease; after C., D., and E. had executed that lease, and before A. or, B. had executed it, the lease was altered, with the consent and privity of C. only, by an erasure, which excluded a certain portion of land inserted by mistake, but in which D. and E. had no interest, and A. and B. then executed the lease: it was held that this alteration did not render it invalid (Hall v. Chandless, 4 Bing. 123).

Proof of Alteration.] If, the alteration appear upon the face of the instrument which the opposite party adduces in support of his case, inasmuch as such alteration gives the appearance of fraud, it imposes upon such party the proof of explaining away the same (Singleton v. Butler, 2 B. & P. 283; Johnson v. Duke of Marlborough, 2 Star. 313). It is for the holders of a bill to explain and *justify apparent alterations (Sebley [*116] v. Fisher, 7 Ad. & E. 444). But, as the plt. is obliged to produce the bill without notice, the deft. would have to begin on this issue (Barker v. Malcolm, 7 M. & W. 101). But, it is at all times, if practicable, advisable for the other party to prove the alteration; and it is necessary to do so, if the alteration is not apparent on the face of the instrument, or, it is doubtfully so. For this purpose, deft. should be prepared to prove the original contract from a copy, or, otherwise, or, by witnesses who can speak to the same. He should, if possible, prove the alteration itself, and that it was made by the plt. or, for him, with his consent; and, if the erasure, or, alteration be so done as to be scarcely perceptible, it would be advisable to subpoena some party, such as an officer from the bank, who is accustomed to discover forgeries, &c. or alterations of this nature. A declaration by a deceased attesting witness, as to the fact of alteration, is not admissible evidence (Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615). Where a special plea stated that a contract had been altered by a stranger, without the knowledge of deft., by attaching a seal to deft.'s signature, so as to make it purport to be sealed by him, and the plt. replied by traversing the alteration, modo et forma; held, that deft. entitled himself to a verdict by producing the contract, and showing that a wafer had been attached by some one before signature (Davidson v. Cooper, 11 M. & W. 778; 13 ib. 343, in error). If it be expected plt. will endeavour to prove deft.'s assent to the alteration, deft. should be prepared to rebut such evidence.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

When a bill appears to be altered it lies on the party producing it to show that the alteration was not improperly made (Henman v. Dickinson, 5 Bing. 183).

We have seen how far the burden of explaining away an alteration lies on the plt. (supra); also as to how far an alteration avoids a contract. The plt. should be prepared to show that the erasure was made at the time of the contract being entered into, by means of the subscribing witness, or otherwise. If it was made afterwards, for the purpose of futhering the original intent of the parties, the plt. should be prepared to prove that fact (ante, p. 115). In some cases, indeed, the instrument itself would show such intent (Waugh v. Bussell, 5 Taunt. 707; ante, p. 114). If the erasure was made by the subsequent assent of the deft. such subsequent assent should be proved (see "ADMISSIONS," "WRITTEN EVIDENCE," post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE").

The Right to Light, &c.

By Prescription.] No action lies for opening windows, though, the privacy of the adjoining premises be thereby destroyed (Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & C. 340; Chandler v. Thompson, 3 Camp. 80). The only remedy is, for the owner of the latter, by means of an erection on his own land, to obstruct the view, and this the owner of the windows cannot prevent, unless the apertures have acquired the privilege of "ancient windows" (Ib.).

This privilege, where it did not rest upon an actual grant, or, license, formerly depended upon an user for such a period, and under such circumstances as afforded the inference of an ancient grant; and juries were directed to presume a grant from proof of twenty years' enjoyment, where nothing appeared to rebut such presumption (Lewis v. Price, 2 Saund. 175, n.; Campbell v. Wilson, 3 East, 294); but, if, it appeared that at the time when the enjoyment commenced the owner of the adjoining premises was only tenant for life, or, that for any other reason such grant could not legally be presumed, no right was acquired (Barker v. Richardson, 4 B. & A. 579; Daniel v. Nash, 11 Ea. 372; Cross v. Lewis, 2 B. & C. 686).

Now by the statute 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, s. 3, it is enacted that "where the access and use of light to, and, for any dwelling-house, workshop, or, other building, shall have been actually enjoyed therewith for the full period of twenty years without interruption, the right thereto shall be deemed absolute and indefeasible, any local usage, or, custom to the contrary notwithstanding, unless, it shall appear that the same was enjoyed by some covenant, or, agreement expressly made, or, given for that purpose, by deed or writing."

And by s. 4, "The period before-mentioned shall be deemed and taken to be the period next before some suit, or, action wherein the claim, or, matter to which such period may relate shall have been, or, *shall be brought into question; and that no act, or other matter shall be [*118] deemed to be an interruption within the meaning of this statute, unless, the same shall have been, or, shall be submitted to, or, acquiesced in, for one year after the party interrupted shall have had, or, shall have notice thereof, and of the person making, or, authorizing the same to be made."

Also by s. 6, "No presumption shall be allowed, or, made in favour, or, support of any claim, upon proof of the exercise, or, enjoyment of the right, or, matter claimed for any less period of time, or, number of years."

The 7th sect. enacts, that when the light is by the court deemed to be absolute, and indefeasible, the proviso, or, exception as to infants, &c., and in the case of enjoyment against tenants for life only, &c., shall not be applicable. The words are "Provided also that the time during which any person otherwise capable of resisting any claim to any of the matters before-mentioned, shall have been, or, shall be an infant, idiot, non compos mentis, feme covert, or, tenant for life, or, during which any action, or, suit shall have been pending, and which shall have been diligently prosecuted until abated by the death of any party, or parties thereto, shall be excluded in the computation of the periods herein before-mentioned, except only in cases where the right, or, claim is hereby declared to be absolute and indefeasible."

The right may now, therefore, be acquired, 1st, by an uninterrupted enjoyment of twenty years, and this, as it seems, will create an indefeasible right under any circumstances whatever, other than, where the enjoyment has been had under a covenant, or, agreement expressly made for the purpose, and by which the right is limited, or, qualified. And as no obstruction, not acquiesced in for a year, is to be considered an "interruption," if, after the lapse of nineteen years and a fraction, the enjoyment be obstructed, and the action be brought after the expiration of the twenty years, and within a year after the obstruction, the right is secured (Flight v. Thomas, 11 Ad. & E. 688; S. C. 3 P. & D. 442).

2ndly. By Actual Grant or License.] As, if, A., being the owner of a house, and a piece of land adjoining, convey the house, with all the lights, &c., to B., and afterwards the land to C., C. cannot obstruct the lights in the house, for, he stands in the shoes of A., and A. could not derogate from his own grant (Palmer v. Fletcher, 1 Lev. 122). And, where a house and piece of ground adjoining were purchased at the same time by different persons, it was held, that the purchaser of the latter could not build higher than a shed which was already there, though the particulars of sale, by which both lots were sold, described the latter as "building ground" (Swansborough v. Coventry, 9 Bing. 305). So, where A. leased one of his adjoining houses to B., and the other to C., after which B. took a new lease, it was ruled, that he could not obstruct C.'s lights (Coutts v. Gorham, M. & M. 396; see also Compton v. Richards, 1 Pri. 27); nor can a tenant obstruct the light of a house adjoining to the land he rents, and in the possession of his landlord, &c., if that light was enjoyed at the time of the execution of his lease (Riviere v. Bower, R. & M. 24; Cox v. Matthews, 1 Vent. 287; Rosewell v. Prior, 6 Mod. 116; Blanchard v. Bridges, 4 Ad. & E. 176).

It seems, that if, the owner of premises give another a parol license to open windows overlooking them, and the other acts upon the faith of it, and thereby incurs expense, the former cannot afterwards exercise his right of obstruction without first reimbursing the latter the expense incurred (see Winter v. Brockwell, 8 Ea. 309; per Tindal, C. J., in Liggins v. Inge, 7 Bing. 682; Bridges v. Blanchard*, 1 Ad. & E. 536; Willis v. Harrison, 2 Jur. 1019; Blanchard v. Bridges, 4 Ad. & E. 176).

In order to support a claim under the statute, the party must, as it seems, prove an enjoyment commencing at a period not less than twenty years ago, and continuing, without an interval of a year together, down to the time of bringing the action (see Richards v. Fry, 3 N. & P. 67; S. C. 7 Ad. & E. 698; Parke v. Mitchell, 11 Ad. & E. 788). Hence, it may in many cases be necessary to resort to the old doctrine of presumption, which, it seems, is not excluded by the statute.

The custom of London, which authorized the building upon old foundations, though, it obstructed windows which would otherwise have been privileged (Plummer v. Bentham, 1 Burr. 248; Shadwell v. Hutchinson, 3 C. & P. 615) is entirely taken away by the above statute (Salter's Company v. Jay, 6 Jur. 803; 3 Q. B. 109).

How Lost.] The privilege of ancient windows may be lost by grant, or, non-user. "The right to light is acquired by enjoyment, and continues so long, as the party either continues that enjoyment or, shows an intention to continue it" (per Bailey, J., in Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & C. 336). Where the owner, having pulled down his house, built a blank wall, which continued seventeen years, and, in the mean time, the owner of the adjoining premises erected a building opposite the wall, it was held that the former could not afterwards reclaim the privilege (Ib.).

Action for Obstructing.] No action lies for merely obstructing a view, or, a prospect, or, a few rays of light; but only where the light is so diminished, as that the obstruction sensibly affects the occupation, enjoyment, or beneficial use of the premises (Pringle v. Weinham, 7 C. & P. 378; Wells v. Ody, ib. 410; Parker v. Smith, 5 C. & P. 438; Back v. Stacey, 2 C. & P. 465).

If, an ancient window be enlarged, the enlargement is not privileged till the expiration of twenty years; consequently, the building against that is not actionable, if, the access of light to the old part is not affected (Chandler v. Thompson, 3 Camp. 80; Blanchard v. Bridges, 4 Ad. & E. 176). And if the owner convert the building, as, from a malthouse into a dwelling-house, he cannot claim a greater quantity of light than he enjoyed while the building was in its former state (Martin v. Goble, 1 Camp. 320; Cotterell v. Griffith, 4 Esp. 69; Garrett v. Sharp, 3 Ad. & E. 325; S. C. 4 N. & M. 834; see Blanchard v. Bridges, 1 Ad. & E. 536).

Form of Action—Parties.] "Case" is the proper form of action for obstructing ancient windows. It lies for darkening ancient lights, although the building by which they were darkened was erected under the provisions of the building act, 14 Geo. III. c. 78, s. 43, repealed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 84, and the action was not commenced within the time limited by that act, and no notice of action given (Wells v. Ody, 1 M. & W. 452). The action may be brought, either by the tenant, or the landlord, or each may sue and recover his particular damage (Jesser v. Gifford, 4 Burr. 2141; 3 Leon. 209; Saund. 322, n.; Turner v. The Sheffield Railway Company, 10 M. & W. 425; Shadwell v. Hutchinson, M. & M. 350); and successive actions may be brought, and damages recovered, until, the obstruction is removed (Shadwell v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & Ad. 97). Where the reversion belongs to several, as joint tenants, or tenants in common, all should join in the action (Bac. Ab. Joint Tenants, K), or, the deft. may plead the nonjoinder in abatement (Ib.) So, if *the action be brought against the owners of [*120] the adjoining property, as owners, if all are not joined, the deft. may plead in abatement (Ib.). But the objection in either case can only be taken in this way—(Addison v. Overend, 6 T. R. 766). The party suing as reversioner must be the party having the legal estate, and not the cestui que trust (Vallance v. Savage, 7 Bing. 595). For the original erection, either the owner, or, person authorizing it to be made, or the person, or persons actually employed in making it, may be sued, or all may be joined (Wilson v. Peto, 6 Moo. 47; Witte v. Hayne, 2 D. & R. 33; Rosewell v. Prior, 12 Mod. 636). For the continuance of the nuisance, either the landlord, who lets the premises with it, or the tenant who occupies, may be made deft. (Rosewell v. Prior, 2 Salk. 460; Brent v. Haddon, Cro. J. 555; Rex v. Pedly, 1 Ad. & E. 827; Payne v. Rogers, 2 H. Bl. 350). But, as against all but the original wrong-doers, it seems, that no action can be brought until notice has first been given to remove the obstruction (Penruddock's case, 5 Co. 100, b; see Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes, 583). If the obstruction be continued, a second action may be brought, even by a reversioner (Shadwell v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & Ad. 97); though the first obstruction were before the plt.'s possession of the property (Thompson v. Gibson, 7 M. & W. 456).

Form of Pleadings.

Declaration.] The venue must be local (Warren v. Webb, 1 Taun. 379). The form of the declaration is not altered by reason of the statute 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71 (see form, 3 P. & D. 442), and it was before in the same form, whether, the plt. claimed by prescription, or, grant (1 Pri. 38; 2 Saun. 113 a, 1, to 114 b); but, the local situation of the premises need not, and, should not be described (2 Ea. 497; R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV.). If it be, the plt. must prove it, as laid; if not, the deft. cannot object that the venue is wrong, on the general issue, but, must plead the matter specially. Possession, in fact, is sufficient to sustain the action, and no title need be stated (2 Saun. 13 a, n. 1; Com. Dig. Pl. C. 39). Where the declaration stated "a messuage," and the proof was certain rooms in a house; held, no variance (Fenn v. Grafton, 2 B. N. C. 617). The word ancient is unnecessary; and where the right exists, by deed, or agreement, it is not strictly correct (Compton v. Richards, 1 Price, 27). The mode of obstruction, if stated, should be according to the fact; but, there is no occasion to state such mode, and it will suffice to declare as in the following precedent (3 Leon. 13; Cro. J. 606; 1 B. & P. 180; Raym. 452; Willes, 577). It is not necessary to state the commencement of the nuisance, where the plt. proceeds for its continuance, for it is said, that, "as the action of the case declareth the whole matter, it is not material when the nuisance was erected" (Cro. E. 191; see also Raym. 370; 1 Salk. 10; Carth. 455; vide "CASE").

Plea, &c.] Formerly, under the general issue, it was held deft. might show a custom of London to build on an ancient foundation to any height (Com. Rep. 273; 1 Wils. 45, 175; 2 Mod. 274); or give in evidence plt.'s license, or any other fact which could show deft. had a right to obstruct the light, &c. (Winter v. Brockwell, 8 Ea. 308; 2 Mod. 6; Com. Rep. 273, n.). The plea of not guilty shall now operate as a denial only of the breach of duty, or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by the deft., and not of the facts stated in the indictment, and no other defence than such denial shall be admissible under that plea. All other pleas in denial shall *take [*121] issue on some particular matter of fact alleged in the indictment (1 R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV.).

Hence the deft. may show under the general issue that the light and air were not diminished by the obstruction, or that he was not the party who made, or caused it, but not the plt.'s title to the house, or his right to the windows, or, any matter of justification, such as that he licensed the obstruction, &c., &c. Not guilty denies the mere fact of obstruction, but admits the plt.'s possession of the house, and that he was entitled to the right of enjoyment of the house (Franknurn v. Lord Falmouth, 2 Ad. & E. 452).

A plea denying the right to the light puts the plt. on proof of his right by twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment (see post, p. 123), or by grant (see post, p. 123); and a deft. may show under this tenure that the right has been lost by the plt.'s essentially altering the mode of enjoyment to the deft.'s prejudice (see Garritt v. Sharp, 3 Ad. & E. 325). A special plea of mere non-user would be bad (see Manning v. Wasdale, 5 B. & A. 758; see 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, s. 5, post; see a form justifying under a railway act, Turner v. Sheffield and Rotherham Railway Company, 10 Ad. & E. 426).

Precedents.

Declaration in case, for obstructing an ancient window.

In the Q. B. (C. P., or Ex.) On the _____ day of _____, in the year of our Lord 1850.

1. By the Person in Possession.] Venue local, commencement as usual.—For that whereas, the plt., before, and at the times of the committing of the grievances hereafter mentioned, was, and thence hitherto hath been, and still is, possessed of a certain messuage or dwelling-house, with the appurtenances, situate in the county aforesaid; which said messuage or dwelling-house, during all the time aforesaid, there of right were, and still of right ought to be, divers, to wit, _____ ancient windows, through which the light and air, during all the time aforesaid, ought to have entered, and, until the committing of the grievances hereinafter mentioned, did enter, and still of right ought to enter, into the said messuage or dwelling-house, for the convenient and wholesome use, occupation, and enjoyment thereof. Yet, the deft., well knowing the premises, but intending to injure the said plt., in this behalf, to wit, on, &c. [any day about the time,] wrongfully and injuriously erected a wall and building near to the said windows respectively, which said wall and building the said deft. there wrongfully and injuriously kept and continued for a long time, to wit, from the day and year aforesaid, until the commencement of this suit, by means of which said several premises the light and air during all the times aforesaid were, and still are, hindered and prevented from coming and entering unto, into, and through the said windows, or either of them, into the said messuage or dwelling-house, and the same have been, and are, thereby rendered dark, uncomfortable, close, unwholesome, and unfit for habitation, and the plt. hath thereby been, and still is, greatly annoyed and incommoded in the use, possession, and enjoyment of his said messuage or dwelling-house, with the appurtenances, and the same has been, and is, much deteriorated in value. [If any special damage, state it.] Thus, and also by means of the premises, the plt. has necessarily incurred divers expenses, to wit, £———, in obtaining light in his said messuage or dwelling-house, through, and by other windows by him opened for that purpose, and incidental thereto, and was, and is, otherwise injured to the damage, &c. [Conclude as usual.]

2. By the Reversioner.] As to a form, by a reversioner of a house against a railway company, for erecting a station, whereby his ancient lights were obstructed, see Turner v. Sheffield and Rotherham Railway Company, 10 M. & W. 425.

*Count for continuing the obstruction.

And whereas, before and at the time of the committing, by the deft., of the grievances hereinafter mentioned, a certain wall and building had been, and was, wrongfully erected, and stood in, and upon, a certain close near to the said windows, and wrongfully obstructed the light and air from entering unto, into, and through the same, into the said messuage or dwelling-house, of which the deft., before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c., had notice; yet the deft., intending to injure the plt. in this behalf, afterwards, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, and thence, until the commencement of this suit, wrongfully and injuriously kept and continued, and caused to be kept and continued, in and upon the said close, and near to the said windows as aforesaid, the said wall and building so there erected, and standing as aforesaid, although the deft. being the occupier of the said close, was, to wit, on, &c., requested by the plt. to remove the said obstruction, and by reason of the deft. keeping and continuing the said wall and building so erected, and standing as aforesaid, during all the time he so kept and continued the same, the light and air, were, and are, hindered and prevented from coming and entering into and through the same, into the said messuage or dwelling-house. (Conclude as in the preceding.)

Plea, see forms, post, "CASE."

Not guilty.

In the Q. B. (C. P., or Ex. of P.) On the _____ day of _____, in the year of our Lord 1850.

The deft., by _____, his attorney, says, that he he is not guilty of the grievances above laid to his charge, or of any, or either of them, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the plt. has above complained against him, and, of this he puts himself upon the country, &c.

Denial of plt.'s possession.

And, for a further plea, the deft. says, that the plt. was not, at the said several times, when, &c., possessed of the said messuage or dwelling-house, with the appurtenances, in the declaration mentioned, or of any part thereof, in manner and form as in the declaration is alleged, and of this the deft. puts himself upon the country, &c.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

Plaintiff's Possession.] Proof that the legal estate belongs to the plt. will be sufficient prima facie evidence to support this issue; but, if, it appear that the premises were, at the time of the injury complained of, occupied by another person, not in the character of servant to the plt., whether he occupied as tenant from year to year, or, otherwise, the variance will be fatal. Aliter, if the party occupied as the servant of the plt., as, the gatekeeper of a gentleman's park, occupying a lodge; or, a gardener, an outhouse in the garden. And where a cottage was occupied by a labourer in the plt.'s service who paid no rent, but, received less wages on that account, it was held that the plt. might properly declare as on his own possession (Bertie v. Beaumont, 16 Ea. 33).

Plaintiff's Title as Reversioner.] Where the plt. declares for an injury to his reversionary interest, and his title is traversed, he must prove an existing tenancy in another. And if the tenant hold under a lease, or, agreement in writing, the instrument itself must be produced (Cotterill v. Hobby, 4 B. & C. 465). But, a variance in the name of the tenant where it is alleged under a videlicet, as in the foregoing form, is immaterial.

The Right to the Windows.*] If traversed plt. must prove that [*123] the identical apertures have existed (see ante) for a period commencing twenty years before, and continuing without interruption for a year together (see Flight v. Thomas, 11 Ad. & E. 688; S. C. 3 P. & D. 442,) down to the issuing of the writ. It is observable that the words claiming right thereto, used in ss. 1 & 2, are omitted in s. 3 of 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71 (lb. 695). An actual enjoyment for twenty years, even under a permission verbally asked by the occupier of a house, and given by the person having right to obstruct, is sufficient to confer a right under sect. 3, the enjoyment thereunder need not be as of right, or adverse (Mayor of London v. Pewterers' Company, 2 M. & Rob. 409); or, if he have not enjoyed them so long as twenty years, that he is entitled under some conveyance, or, grant by which the right is expressly, or, impliedly given (see ante); or, if the windows are very ancient, but, a continuous enjoyment cannot be shown, then such circumstances as afford the inference of an ancient grant, and repel any presumption which might be raised from the non-user that the right has been abandoned (see ante, p. 117). The use of an open area as a timber yard, or saw-pit, for twenty years will not entitle the owner to the unobstructed enjoyment of light and air under the act (Roberts v. Macord, 1 M. & Rob. 230).

If traversed plt. must prove, either, that his house, with windows looking into the adjoining premises, has been so standing for twenty years, and that during that time the use of such windows has been uninterruptedly enjoyed (Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & C. 332; Cross v. Lewis, 2 ib. 689; Bealey v. Shaw, 6 Ea. 208) (and which may be done by calling prior occupiers and witnesses, who can speak to the fact); or, else, he should prove a grant, or, presumption of a grant from the deft., or, from a person under whom deft. claims: such as proof that a party having land, built on it a house with lights, and afterwards sold the remainder of the land, the plt. and deft. both claiming under the original owner (Palmer v. Fletcher, 1 Lev. 122). Proof that plt. and deft. held under the same landlord (either in the case of an adjoining house, or, where a house has been divided), and that the windows obstructed existed at the time of the demise, has been held sufficient, without proving twenty years' prescription for the windows, or, that the house is not of recent construction (Riviere v. Bower, 1 R. & M. 25); and proof of the plt. being occupier of one of two houses built nearly at the same time, and purchased of the same proprietor, is sufficient in an action against the tenant of the other for an obstruction of the plt.'s lights by adding to his own building, however short plt.'s previous period of enjoyment of the lights had proved to be (Compton v. Richards, 1 Pri. 27). If the action be against the immediate reversioner, &c., who has not been in the possession of the premises, plt. should, if possible, show that his windows have remained undisturbed with the acquiescence and consent of the deft. himself; inasmuch as a landlord, or, immediate reversioner cannot, without notice, be prejudiced by the laches, or, acquiescence of the tenant, in that which is a prejudice to the inheritance (Daniel v. North, 11 Ea. 372; Wood v. Veal, 5 B. & A. 454; Barker v. Richardson, 4 B. & A. 579; ante, "Admissions"). If the plt. has discontinued the enjoyment of his light during the twenty years, he should prove that, at the time and during such discontinuance, he did some act to show an intention of resuming the enjoyment within a reasonable time (Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & C. 332, 579). The interruption which defeats a prescriptive right under 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, is an adverse obstruction, not a mere discontinuance of user by the claimant himself (Carr v. Foster, 3 Q. B. 581; see tit. "Common"). The position of the plt.'s house may frequently assist the jury in forming an opinion as to the fact whether the light is, or, is not obstructed (Cross v. [124] Lewis, 2 B. & C. 688; 4 D. & R. 234), and for this purpose it should be proved (post, p. 125). If the plt. has licensed the deft. to obstruct the windows, without any consideration for such license, he should prove a countermand of such license, and a tender of the expenses incurred by deft. in consequence of such license (Winter v. Brockwell, 8 Ea. 308; Taylor v. Waters, 7 Taun. 374; Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 B. & C. 232).

Deft. caused the Injury.] This is established either by proving his actual erection of the nuisance by himself, or, servants, or, that he is the occupier of the premises whereon the obstruction is placed (Cheetham v. Hampson, 4 T. R. 318; Payne v. Rogers, 2 H. Bl. 250). Proof that deft. superintended the erection of the obstruction, and that he particularly directed the workmen, will be sufficient, though he be a mere clerk (6 Moo. 47). Where the action is for continuing the nuisance, such continuance, as well as the original obstruction, must be clearly proved. When deft. erects the nuisance and demises, proof of this will render him liable (Rosewell v. Prior, 2 Salk. 460; but see Rich v. Basterfield, 4 C. B. 783; 16 Law J. N. S., C. P. 273). If notice has been given to the person who immediately preceded deft., it will not be necessary to prove one was given to the deft., "as a person who takes premises on which a nuisance exists, and continues it, takes them subject to all the restrictions imposed upon his predecessor, by the receipt of such notice" (per Abbott, C. J., Salmon v. Bensley, 1 R. & M. 189). But, it seems, safest, where the action is not against the original erector, to prove a service of notice to discontinue the injury (Willes, 583; Cro. J. 555; 5 Co. 100; ante, p. 120).

The Injury.] The injury should be proved as described in the declaration, for a variance would be fatal. It is not necessary, however, to prove all the means of obstruction as stated. In an action against a reversioner, it should seem that plt. must prove the obstruction was of a permanent nature, or, else, the damage so material as necessarily to affect his reversionary interest (see Jackson v. Peshed, 1 M. & S. 234; Attersoll v. Stevens, 1 Taun. 202). It is not necessary to prove a total obstruction of light and air (Cotterell v. Griffiths, 4 Esp. 69; 2 Selw. 1046); and where the plt. had only a qualified right, &c., to a window, and blind attached to it to prevent his neighbour from being overlooked, if he remove the blind, yet his neighbour cannot build so as to exclude more light from the plt. than before (Cotterell v. Griffiths, supra). And, according to Lord Kenyon's doctrine (Ib.), "any thing which tended to deprive a person of the enjoyment of the light and air in the same quantity to which his house was entitled as an ancient messuage, entitles plt. to an action;" but, according to Best's, C. J., judgment (in Back v. Stacey, 2 C. & P. 465), "it is not sufficient to constitute an illegal obstruction, that the plt. has in fact less light than before, nor, that his warehouse, the part of his house principally affected, was not used for all the purposes to which it might have been applied. In order to give a right of action and sustain the issue, there must be a substantial privation of light, sufficient to render the occupation of the house uncomfortable, and to prevent the plt. from carrying on his accustomed business on the premises as beneficially as he had formerly done." His lordship added, "It might be difficult to draw the line, but, the jury must distinguish between a partial inconvenience, and a real injury to the plt. in the enjoyment of the premises." The diminution of light must be such as to render the premises sensibly *less fit for occupation (Parker v. Smith, 5 C. & P. 438; [*125] Wells v. Oddy, 7 C. & P. 410). The plt. should use great care in getting up his evidence, and come well prepared with surveyors and plans, and every other means within his power of enabling the jury to form a correct decision; and it is, in general, advisable, when it can be conveniently done, that the jury should view the premises (Back v. Stacey, 2 C. & P. 466; see Cross v. Lewis, 2 B. & C. 688).

In an action for obstructing ancient lights, in which it appeared that the building causing the obstruction was separated from the windows obstructed by a public street in the metropolis, the learned judge left it to the jury to say whether there had been any substantial diminution of light; observing, that whether the intervention of a public street would be a good ground of defence, was a question of law. Held, no misdirection (Roe v. The Marquis of Westmeath, 7 Law J. 82).

Damages.] Some substantial injury should be proved, but however slight, it would be sufficient to entitle plt. to damages, though, nominal (Cotterell v. Griffiths, 4 Esp. 69; 2 C. & P. 465; supra). In measuring the injury plt. may show, by reason of his particular trade, he has been injured by his being deprived of a display of goods, &c., or, another like fact (Reviere v. Bower, 1 R. & M. 25; 2 C. & P. 465). Plt. may, if stated in the declaration, show he has expended money in obtaining other light, or, the like. (See "CASE.")

Evidence for Defendant.

Against Plaintiff's Right.] Inasmuch as twenty years' uninterrupted possession does not confer a legal right, but only raises a presumption of such right, deft. may rebut it by showing it does not exist, and that the possession has been interrupted (Cross v. Lewis, 2 B. & C. 689; S. C. 4 D. & R. 234). Proof that the window has been blocked up above twenty years (Lawrence v. Obee, 3 Camp. 514), or, that plt. by some other means discontinued the right of enjoyment, as by building up the window, pulling it down, or, the like; for the right to light is acquired by enjoyment, and may be lost by a discontinuance of it, unless, the party who ceases to enjoy, at the same time does some act to show an intention of resuming the enjoyment within a reasonable time (Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & C. 332; Cross v. Lewis, 2 ib. 689). A party may so alter the mode in which he has been allowed to enjoy the easement, as to lose the right altogether, and, therefore, when a person entitled to light through certain apertures in a barn converted the barn into a malt-house, and cut windows where the apertures had been, it was decided that the judge at the trial of an action for a subsequent obstruction, ought not to have rejected evidence offered to show that the mode of enjoying the light had been thus altered to the deft.'s prejudice (Garritt v. Sharp, 3 Ad. & E. 325; Blanchard v. Bridges, 1 Ad. & E. 536). But where an injury is occasioned to a neighbour, a window may be enlarged without losing the right to its original quantity of light (Chandler v. Thompson, 3 Campb. 80). The presumption of a right from twenty years' undisturbed enjoyment of light is excluded by evidence of the custom of London (2 Swanst. 333; 1 Co. Rep. 273). The deft. may also rebut the evidence of the plt.'s prescription, by showing that, though plt. has had windows for twenty years, within that period the land was glebe, and that, therefore, the rector, who was tenant for life, could not grant a sufficient license on which the prescription might attach (Baker v. Richardson, *3 B. & A. 579); or, that the [*126] previous occupier within such period was merely his tenant, and he entitled to the immediate reversion, &c., as such act, being merely that of the tenant, could not exclude deft. (Daniel v. North, 11 Ea. 372; ante, p. 123); or, deft. may show that his obstruction was made in consequence of a license from plt. himself, or, one from whom he claims, which will be a sufficient answer, though, the license may have been revoked after the obstruction was made, unless, indeed, the deft.'s expenses have been tendered, or, paid (Winter v. Brockwell, 8 Ea. 308; ante, p. 124). Deft. may show a custom of London to build on an ancient foundation to any height (1 Co. Rep. 273; 1 Wils. 45, 175; see Salters' Company v. Jay, ante, p. 119). The mere circumstance of the windows being in a party wall, contrary to the 14 Geo. III. c. 78, is no answer to an action for obstructing them (Titterton v. Conyers, 1 Mar. 140). No diminution of light is a sufficient cause of action, unless, it render the building less fit for the purposes for which it was before used (Parker v. Smith, 5 C. & P. 438; Back v. Stacey, 2 ib. 465; Martin v. Gubb, 1 Campb. 322; 4 Esp. R. 69). It is not sufficient that a ray or two of light should be abstracted, the question is, whether in consequence of the obstruction the plt. has less light than before to such a degree as to injure his property in point of value, or, occupation (Pringle v. Wernham, 7 C. & P. 377; Wells v. Ody, ib. 410).

If the right, as alleged generally in the action on the case, be denied, all matters in the act mentioned and provided which shall be applicable to the case shall be admissible in evidence to sustain, or, rebut such allegation (2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, s. 5).

What it is.

An annuity is an incorporeal hereditament (Co. Lit. 2 a), partaking of the nature of realty, inasmuch as it is descendible, and may be assigned so as to give the assignee an action of annuity in his own name (Co. Lit. [*127] 144 b; see 53 Geo. III. c. 141, Ch. Stat. Annuities); *but, yet, it is chargeable on the person of the grantor, and thus, is distinguishable from a rent-charge. Hence, though, an annuity of inheritance is, at common law, forfeitable for treason, it is not within the statute of Mortmain, nor, entailable within the statute De Donis (Ib. n.; 2 Bl. Com. 41). But, being an incorporeal hereditament it cannot be granted without deed, and the word "grant" is essential (In re Locke, 2 D. & R. 603; see per Littledale, J., 6 B. & C. 370). Where the deft. purchased an estate charged with an annuity to M. S., and covenanted with the vendor "to pay the annuity to the person who for the time being should be entitled thereto, and that, he would at all times indemnify the vendor from all actions, claims, &c., on account of the annuity," the annuity was not a personal charge on the vendor; held, that the covenant to pay the annuity was absolute and indefeasible, and not qualified by the covenant of indemnity, and therefore that the vendor might sue for the non-payment thereof to the party entitled to it, although he, the vendor, was not and would not be damnified (Saward v. Ahstey, 2 Bing. 519).

Form of Remedy.] The form of remedy for amount of an annuity granted by deed is, if it be a chattel interest, by action of covenant, or, debt (Com. Dig. Debt, A 6). But, the latter is preferable, as the payment is final in the first instance. And it is advisable to sue on the covenant in the deed in preference to suing on the bond, because, breaches in the latter case must be assessed pursuant to 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 11, s. 8 (Walcot v. Goulding, 8 T. R. 126). But, debt will not lie for arrears of an annuity granted in fee, or, for life, so long as the freehold interest continues (Com. Dig. Debt, A 7; Webb v. Jiggs, 4 M. & S. 113; Kelly v. Clubbe, 6 Moo. 335; S. C. 3 B. & B. 130). Contra, for arrears due at the time the estate determined (Ognel's case, 4 Co. 49). So, where an annuity is granted issuing out of land, with a covenant to secure its payment, debt does not lie (Rundall v. Rigby, 4 M. & W. 131; Vin. Abr. Debt, D.; Thursly v. Plant, Sid. 401; Mills v. Auriol, 2 H. Bl. 433). In such a case the remedy must be on the bond, or, in an action of covenant, or, by action of annuity. The latter, though, almost obsolete (see form of declaration, 2 Wils. 221), not being either a real, or, mixed action, may still be brought, notwithstanding the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, s. 36 (Co. Lit. 285 b, n. 1; Jon. 214), and with this advantage, that no second action is necessary, but the accruing arrears may be obtained by scire facias (Com. Dig. Annuity, H).

Twenty years is the period of limitation for arrears (Strachan v. Thomas, 4 Jur. 1183; S. C. 4 P. & D. 229; Sims v. Thomas, 12 Ad. & E. 536; see Francis v. Grover, 6 Law T. 235). If, the annuity deed have been set aside, or, if, being void the grantor have in any way treated the security as defective, the grantee may recover the consideration money, with interest, in an action for money had and received (Shove v. Webb, 1 T. R. 732; Scurfield v. Gowland, 6 Ea. 241; Waters v. Mansell, 3 Taun. 56). Though it does not appear on what ground the security was set aside, nor whether the objection to it affects the validity of the annuity. Thus, where a rule was obtained by the grantor to set aside the warrant of attorney and proceedings thereon on grounds, some of which would and some would not, affect the validity of the annuity, and the rule was made absolute in terms not showing which objection prevailed, and no evidence was given on this point (Huggins v. Coates, 5 Q. B. 443). But in such action, the deft. may, under a plea of set-off, deduct the payment *made on account of the an- [*128] nuity (Cowper v. Godmond, 3 Moo. & S. 219; 9 Bing. 748; Hicks v. Hicks, 3 East, 12; Hills v. Hills, 4 Esp. 19). If the annuity, being defective from the act, or, negligence of the grantor in regard to the memorial, has not been set aside by that, it seems that the consideration-money is not recoverable unless it be shown that the grantor has refused to continue the payment of the annuity, or, upon request so to do, refused to execute valid securities. But it appears to be unnecessary to tender back those deeds (Widdle v. Symons, 1 Esp. 309; Peak. Ad. Ca. 30). Action may be brought within six years after the repudiation of the security (Ib.). The statute runs from the time when the security is set aside, it not appearing that the consideration has failed before that time. And the statute does not attach if the security was set aside within six years, though six years have elapsed since the annuity was last paid (Huggins v. Coates, 5 Q. B. 443). Where an annuity on a life was regularly paid up to the time of death, but no memorial was inrolled: held, that A.'s executors could not on that ground insist that the annuity was void, and recover back the money paid for it, as the contract was executed, and the testator enjoyed the full consideration for his advance, and the claim of the executors was against equity and good conscience (Davis v. Brown, 6 B. & C. 651).

In an action by the personal representative of a lunatic to recover from an assurance society the price of two annuities on his life, paid by the deceased to the society; a special verdict found that the purchasing of the annuities were transactions in the ordinary course of the affairs of human life; and that the granting of the annuities were fair transactions, and of good faith on the part of the society, without any knowledge or notice on the part of the society of the unsoundness of the mind of the deceased: held, that the action could not be maintained (Molton v. Camroux, 12 Jur. Exch. 800).

The want of inrolment of an annuity-deed, as required by the 53 Geo. III. c. 141, cannot be set up by the grantee of the annuity (Ib.)

A judge having made an order under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, charging an annuity payable out of the Suitors' Fund, by order of the Lord Chancellor, under 46 Geo. III. c. 128, the court, considering it doubtful whether the judge's order might not be enforced, left the question of its validity open, and discharged a rule nisi, to set aside the order (Witham v. Lynch, 1 Exch. 391; 17 Law J., Exch. 13).

Pleadings.

Declaration.] There is nothing peculiar in the form of the declaration in debt, or, covenant (see form of declaration in an action of annuity, 2 Wils. 221). The venue is transitory, and cannot be changed on the common affidavit (Taylor v. Becket, 1 Lev. 307; Crompton v. Stewart, 2 C. & J. 473; Foster v. Taylor, 1 T. R. 781). The declaration alleged that, by indenture "purporting to be made between plt. and deft., it was witnessed that," &c.; held, after plea, sufficiently certain (Baynon v. Batley, 8 Bing. 256); aliter, in a plea (Steph. Pl. 428; Moore v. Jones, 2 Lord Raymond, 1536; 1 Saun. 274, n. 1; Robertson v. Showler, 13 M. & W. 609). Where the intestate granted an annuity to plt.; after his death his administratrix caused the annuity to be vacated for a defect in the memorial; plt. to recover the balance of consideration-money brought indebitatus assumpsit against the administratrix for money had and received by the intestate to plt.'s use, stating promises by intestate and by deft. Held, that although a right to recover the consideration-money became vested in the plt., on the refusal to continue the annuity, such right did not go back by relation to the time when that money was originally paid; and, therefore, counts in the above forms were not applicable (Churchill v. Bertrand, 3 Q. B.; 2 G. & D. 548; see "DEED," "COVENANT," "PROFERT").

Pleas.] For what pleas are proper in an action of debt, or, covenant, see post, "DEBT," "COVENANT." In an action of annuity the deft. may plead non concessit, riens in arrear, or, a release of actions personal (Com. Dig. Annuity, F).

Where the objection is, that the requisites of the statute 55 Geo. III. c. 141, have not been complied with, the matter must be specially pleaded (Massey v. Manney, 4 Sc. 258; S. C. 3 Bing. N. C. 478); and care must be taken (Mestaver v. Briggs, 2 Dowl. 695) to show that the transaction was one within the statute, and therefore, if, the declaration does not show that the consideration was a pecuniary one the plea must (Horn v. Horn, 7 Ea.

529). Where the plea was, that no such memorial as the statute [129] required was enrolled, and the replication set out a memorial good on the face of it, a rejoinder alleging that the consideration was not truly stated in such memorial, was held bad, as a departure from the plea (Praed v. Cumberland (Duchess), 4 T. R. 585; affirmed in error, but, on another ground, 2 H. Bl. 280). But, this decision has been overruled, and it is now clear that the plea may either set out the memorial and thus show it to be defective, or aver it to be false (Darwin v. Lincoln, 5 B. & A. 444); and in this case it seems it should aver that no other memorial was enrolled (Simmons v. Hunt, 1 Marsh. 155), or may allege that no such memorial, as the statute required, was enrolled (Hicks v. Cracknell, 3 M. & W. 72).

To an action of debt for money had and received, the deft. pleaded that he had given, and that the plt. had accepted and received, in satisfaction, an indenture granting an annuity to the plt. Held, a good replication, that the annuity deed had not been enrolled under 53 Geo. III. c. 141; and that an action having been brought upon the annuity deed, the deft. had pleaded the non-enrolment, and that the plt. had thereupon elected that the said indenture should be null and void, and had entered a discontinuance in the action (Turner v. Brown, 3 C. B. 157). Quere, whether the 53 Geo. III. c. 141, applies to annuity bonds granted for a pre-existent debt (Marriage v. Marriage, 16 Law J. 244, C. P.; see Hall v. Luck, 1 Exch. 300).

Precedents.

Declaration in covenant on an annuity-deed, for arrears of annuity.

For that whereas, heretofore, to wit, on, &c., at, &c., by a certain indenture then made between the plt. of the one part, and the deft. of the other part (which said indenture, sealed with the seal of the deft., the plt. now brings into court, the date whereof is the day and year aforesaid), the deft., for the consideration there mentioned, did grant, &c. [Here state, in the past tense, the grant of the annuity and the defendant's covenant to pay it, and proceed as follows:] as by the said indenture, reference being thereunto had, will, amongst other things, more fully, and at large appear. And the plt. in fact saith, that after the making of the said indenture, and during the natural life of the said E. F., to wit, on, &c., a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of £—, of the said annuity, for one year and a quarter of a year, which expired on the day and year last aforesaid, then elapsed, became and was due and owing from the deft. to the plt., and still is in arrear and unpaid, contrary to the form and effect of the said indenture and of the covenant of the deft. so by him in that behalf made as aforesaid, * (and so, as in "COVENANT," see post,) an action hath accrued to the said plt., to demand and have of and from the said deft. the said sum of £—, being the said sum above demanded. Yet, &c. (Conclusion as usual: see "DEBT.")

This form down to the * will suffice for debt also, with the usual conclusion (see "DEBT"). See form of declaration in debt on the bond, stating condition and breach (2 Ch. P. 6th ed. 289).

Plea to the existence or sufficiency of the memorial.

[First Plea after craving oyer, when necessary—Non est factum.] And, for a further plea, the deft. saith, that the said indenture was made after the passing of a certain act of parliament, made and passed in the 53rd year of the reign of his late majesty king George the Third, and that the said annuity in the said indenture mentioned, was granted upon, and, for a pecuniary consideration, and the plt. further saith, that no memorial of the said indenture containing the names of all the witnesses thereto, and the date of the said indenture, and the names of all the parties thereto, or of the person for whose life the said annuity was granted, and of the person by whom the said annuity was to be beneficially received, or, of the pecuniary consideration for granting the said annuity, or how such consideration was paid, or the annual sum to be paid thereby, was enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, according to the directions of the said act of parliament, whereby the said *indenture in the declaration is null and void, and this the [*130] deft. is ready to verify. (Signature.)

See this form, 3 M. & W. 72; form of plea of payment on the same day, 2 Ch. Pl., 6th ed., 862; after the day, Ib. 863; payment in redemption of the annuity, Lane v. Drinkwater, 3 Dowl. 225; S. C. 1 C. M. & R. 602.

Replication that memorial was duly enrolled.

The plt., as to the plea, &c., says, that a memorial of the said indenture in the declaration mentioned was, within thirty days after the execution thereof, to wit, on, &c., duly enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, at Westminster, in the county of Middlesex, according to the directions of the said statute, which said memorial is as follows [here set out the memorial verbatim], as by the said memorial, now remaining duly enrolled in the said High Court of Chancery, more fully appears. And the plt. further says, that the said memorial did duly contain, and set forth, the day of the month, and year when the said indenture in the declaration mentioned bore date, and the names of all the parties, and of all the witnesses thereto, and of the person for whose life the said annuity was granted, and of the person by whom the same was to be beneficially received, and the pecuniary consideration, and how much consideration was paid for granting the same, and the annual sum to be paid in the form, and to the effect, as in, and by the said statute in that case made and provided, is required. And this the plt. is ready to verify by the said record, when, where, and in such manner as the court here shall order and direct (See this form, 3 M. & W. 72; 2 Moo. & Sc. 58; S. C. 9 Bing. 51. The verification by the record is proper, Ib.)

That grant was not for a pecuniary consideration.

That the said annuity was not granted for, or upon a pecuniary consideration, in manner and form as the deft. hath, by his said plea, alleged. And this the plt. prays may be inquired of by the country, &c. (2 Ch. Pl. 6th ed. 1098).

Rejoinder falsifying memorial.

That the said memorial in the said replication set forth contains divers false statements and representations, touching and relating to certain matters and facts material and essential to the validity of the said annuity, and to the maintenance of this action, and especially in this, to wit, that the said memorial imports and represents that the consideration of, and for the said annuity, to wit, 600*l.* was paid in notes of the governor and company of the Bank of England, whereas, in truth, and in fact the said 600*l.* was not, nor, was any part thereof paid to the deft. in notes of the governor and company of the Bank of England, or, otherwise, howsoever in manner and form, as in the said replication, is alleged; and so the deft. again saith, that there never was any such memorial as by the said act of parliament is required to be enrolled in the said High Court of Chancery according to the directions of the said act, and of this the deft. puts himself upon the country, &c. (3 M. & W. 74).

Evidence for Plaintiff.

The evidence must, like other cases in action on specialties, depend on the plea pleaded.

On non est factum.] Plt. must be prepared to prove the execution of the deed as usual (see "DEED"), and what is in arrear. There does not seem any actual necessity for proving that the grantor, or, person on whose life the annuity is granted, is living (def't. not having denied it by pleading), though usual so to do. If, indeed, the action is on the bond, and breaches are suggested in pursuance of the 8 & 9 Will. III. such proof would be necessary. (See "DEED," "COVENANT.")

No Memorial, &c.] The presumption is, that the annuity-deed is valid, and has been duly memorialized; it is not, therefore, incumbent on the plt. to prove the due enrolment of the memorial, unless, indeed, def't. plead no memorial, &c., when plt. should be *prepared to support his replication [*131] by showing the enrolment within the proper time (Doe d. Griffin v. Mason, 3 Camp. 7). If def't. does not, in his rejoinder, deny the record of the enrolment, an examined copy of the enrolment, completely recorded, should be produced and proved (see post, "RECORD"). The date of the enrolment, indorsed by the clerk of the enrolments, is, it seems, conclusive evidence of the date (Rex v. Happer, 3 Pri. 495).

Other Issues.] Plt. should be prepared to support his replication. If the burden of proof lies on def't., plt. should be prepared to disprove the subject of such proof.

Damages.] Plt. should be prepared to prove the amount of the arrears due.

In Action to recover Money had and received, if annuity-deed be defective, see post, "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED."

The receipt of the money must be proved, and it seems that the deeds should be produced and their execution proved, and that they were set aside by rule of court (2 Stark. Ev. 215, n.). But it would seem that the affidavits used in court, and the rule thereon, will prove plt.'s case.

Evidence for Defendant.

This must depend on the plea, or rejoinder, which def't. must be prepared to support (post, "PAYMENT," "USURY"). An annuity transaction is not, in general, affected by the usury laws, unless, it be very colourable ("USURY"). If def't. plead a defective memorial, he should be prepared to point out and prove the defect (Doe d. Griffin v. Mason, 3 Camp. 7).

Form of Remedy and Pleadings.

Form of Remedy.] The form of remedy by an apothecary or surgeon, for his bill for medicines and attendance, is by action of assumpsit or debt (see "ASSUMPSIT," "WORK AND LABOUR").

An apothecary may sue for medicines, &c., supplied to a patient in London, although he has only a certificate of qualification from the Apothecaries' Company to practise in England, except the city of London; the 55 Geo. III. c. 194, s. 19, requiring an additional fee to be paid for a certificate to practise in London, being only a fiscal regulation for the benefit of the company (Young v. Geiger, 12 Jur. 983, C. P.; 6 Q. B. 541).

Declaration.*] There is nothing peculiar relating to the form of the declaration. The plt. may recover under the common indebitatus count for work and labour, and materials (post, "WORK AND LABOUR"). But it is not unusual to employ a special indebitatus count, disclosing the nature of the work done. In such count, if the action be for a cure of a loathsome disease, the name of such disease should not be mentioned (Anon. 2 Wils. 20; see further, post "WORK AND LABOUR"). An apothecary may recover for both medicines and attendances if the united charges are reasonable (Morgan v. Hallen, 8 Ad. & E. 489). A physician may recover on an express contract, or if he contracts as a surgeon (Veitch v. Russell, 1 C. & M. 362; Little v. Oldacre, 1 C. & M. 370). If plt. abstain from sending in a bill in the lifetime of his patient in the expectation of a legacy, he may afterwards sue the executor (Baxter v. Gray, 4 Sc. N. R. 384).

Pleas.] The pleas are the same as in other actions of indebitatus assumpsit, or debt. It need not be specially pleaded that the plt. was not qualified to practise as an apothecary, that defence being admissible under the general issue (Morgan v. Raddock, 4 Dowl. 311; Sharpe v. Wagstaff, 3 M. & W. 521; S. C. 6 Dowl. 566; Shearwood v. Hay, 5 Ad. & E. 383).

Precedents.

Count for work and labour as an apothecary or surgeon and for medicines.

[The commencement of the count is as post, "ASSUMPSIT," "DEBT," inserting the words,] for the work and labour, care, diligence, journeys, and attendances of the plt., by him done, performed, given, and bestowed, as a [surgeon and] apothecary, at the request of the deft., in and about the healing, curing, and endeavouring to heal and cure the deft. [and divers other persons] of divers sicknesses, diseases, disorders, and maladies, under which they respectively laboured and languished, and also for divers medicines and other necessary things found and provided, administered, delivered, and applied by the plt. on those occasions, for the deft., and at his request, &c. (Add account stated and breach. Conclude as post, "ASSUMPSIT.")

Evidence for Plaintiff.

On General Issue.] The plt. must, on the general issue, prove in the ordinary way the work done and medicines supplied, and show that it was so done on the credit of the deft., or that the deft. is legally liable to pay (see as to liability of overseers for attendances on a pauper, Tomlinson v. Bentall, 5 B. & C. 738; Gent v. Tomkins, cited ib. 745; Lamb v. Bunce, 4 M. & S. 275; Wing v. Mill, 1 B. & A. 104); the reasonableness of the charges, and that he was duly qualified to act as an apothecary, according to 55 Geo. III. c. 194, or that the work was done by him in the capacity of a surgeon.

Proof of Plaintiff's Qualification.] By 55 Geo. III. c. 194, s. 21, explained and amended by 6 Geo. IV. c. 133, s. 5, it is enacted, that "no apothecary shall be allowed to recover any charges claimed by him in a court of law, unless he shall prove at the trial that he was in practice prior to or on the 1st August, or that he has obtained a "certificate," &c., to practise as such from the Apothecaries' Company, in the manner pointed out by the act, and by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 133, s. 5. If, therefore, the claim be made for business done as an apothecary, this proof must be given, even [*133] upon the general issue *and since the New Rules (see supra, "PLEAS"); because the proof of the practice or certificate is by the statute a part of the plt.'s case, and a condition precedent to his recovery (Shearwood v. Hay, 5 Ad. & E. 383; Wagstaff v. Sharp, 3 M. & W. 521). It is sufficient to produce a certificate to a person whose name is identical with that of the plt., and purporting to be under the seal of the Apothecaries' Company (Simpson v. Dismore, 8 M. & W. 47; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113); sed quare, for the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, only applies to documents made evidence by statute, and the 6 Geo. IV. c. 133, which made the seal of such certificate evidence of its authority appears to have expired, s. 11 (see Chadwick v. Bunning, 1 N. & M. 306). The practice of an apothecary, as distinguished from that of a surgeon and a chemist, seems to be the prescribing or administering of medicine for complaints, not being merely external ailments and injuries to the limbs. It is the province of a surgeon to deal with the latter, and of a chemist to make up, prepare, and vend medicines prescribed by others, but not to prescribe or administer them (see Allison v. Haydon, 4 Bing. 619; Apothecaries' Company v. Greenough, 1 G. & D. 378; Woodward v. Ball, 6 C. & P. 578; Apothecaries' Company v. Allen, 1 N. & M. 413; S. C. 4 B. & Ad. 625), and the proper question for the jury, is, not whether the plt.

has charged as an apothecary, but whether in the particular case he acted as such (Richmond v. Coles, 1 Dowl. N. S. 560; S. C. 6 Jur. 238). If he did, not being qualified, he cannot recover even for the value of the medicines, or the phials which contained them (Steed v. Henley, 1 C. & P. 574; Blogg v. Pinkers, R. & M. 125; see Chit. Contr. Index), nor on a promissory note given for his bill (Ib.). But if the case were a surgical one, and the plt. was and acted therein as a surgeon, he may recover not only for his services, but also for medicines supplied as ancillary to such attendance (Allison v. Haydon, 4 Bing. 619; Simpson v. Ralfe, 4 Tyr. 525), and this, though he was at the time and practised as a physician, as well as a surgeon (Battersby v. Lawrence, 1 C. & M. 277).

To prove his qualification as an apothecary, the plt. must show either—1st. That he was in actual practice as such on the 1st of August, 1815; his having so practised before that time is not enough (Apothecaries' Company v. Roby, 1 D. & R. 564; S. C. 5 B. & A. 949). Nor is it sufficient that he then attended patients as an assistant to an apothecary (Brown v. Robinson, 1 C. & P. 264), nor that he was in the habit of curing certain local complaints, but had no shop, and had never made up prescriptions (Thompson v. Lewis, M. & M. 255; S. C. 3 C. & P. 483; Apothecaries' Company v. Warburton, 3 B. & A. 40); nor of course is it sufficient that he was in practice as a surgeon or accoucheur (Woodward v. Ball, 6 C. & P. 577). The statute does not apply to physicians, chemists, or druggists, or to the College of Surgeons (s. 28, 29). The act only applies to England and Wales, therefore a physician practising under a Scotch diploma is not within the act (Apothecaries' Company v. Collins, 4 B. & Ad. 604; Collins v. Carnegie, 1 Ad. & E. 695); and chemists who practise as apothecaries are not exempted from the act by s. 28 semble (Apothecaries' Company v. Greenough, 1 Q. B. 799). Merely administering medicines previous to the 1st of August, 1815, will not be sufficient to prove that the party acted as an apothecary, and incapacity to make up prescriptions will be cogent evidence to prove the negative (Apothecaries' Company v. Warburton, supra). An unqualified person dispensing medicines of his own advice is within the penalties of the act (Apothecaries' Company v. Allen, 4 B. & Ad. 625).

Or, 2ndly. A certificate of the Apothecaries' Company, authorizing him to practise. By 6 Geo. IV. c. 133, s. 7, the common seal *of the company is sufficient proof of the certificate, and that the person [*134] named in it is qualified to practise. If under the company's seal the authenticity of the seal must be shown (Chadwick v. Bunning, 2 C. & P. 106; 6 Geo. IV. c. 133, s. 7); if not, the signature of one or more of the examiners (Walmsley v. Abbott, 5 D. & R. 62; 3 B. & C. 218; S. C. 1 C. & P. 309). But since 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, the certificate proves itself. A certificate of the Apothecaries' Company, purporting to bear the seal of that corporation, is a document which proves itself, and requires no authentication of the seal attached to it (Bailey v. Langley, 1 New P. C. 506, Williams; see Law M. for Nov. 1846). A general certificate, not confining the party to practise in the country, will entitle him to recover for business done in London, although he has only paid the price of the country certificate (Chadwick v. Bunning, supra). But it is not necessary to prove his previous apprenticeship (Sherwin v. Smith, 8 Moo. 30; 1 Bing. 204), nor his identity with the party named in the certificate (Simpson v. Dismore, 9 M. & W. 47; 1 Dowl. N. S. 357; S. C. 5 Jur. 1012). Debt for goods sold and delivered, work done and materials provided, and on account stated. The particulars of demand were for "medicines and attendances." At the trial the plt.'s assistant proved that they were surgeons, and that he had visited and dispensed medicines to the deft., and that on one occasion he had bled the deft.: held, that prima facie the charges were charges in a medical case; and that the plts. were therefore bound to prove that they were certificated as apothecaries, or that they had been in practice previous to the 1st of Aug. 1815 (Proud v. Mayall, 3 D. & L. 351, Q. B.).

Or, 3rdly. The plt. must bring himself within the provisions of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 113, s. 4, as a person who held while that statute was in force a commission or warrant as a surgeon or assistant surgeon in the army (Milbank v. Bryant, 6 Jur. 931; Steavenson v. Oliver, 8 M. & W. 234; 5 Jur. 1064).

Proof of Plaintiff being a Surgeon, &c.] By 3 Hen. VIII. c. 11, s. 1, no one shall act as a surgeon within the city of London, or, seven miles round, unless he be examined and licensed by the College of Surgeons, under the penalty of 5*l.* per month. But, notwithstanding this act, as it contains no prohibitory clause, it seems that a surgeon may maintain an action for his bill (Gremare v. Le Clerc Bois Valon, 2 Camp. 144; see Bensley v. Bignold, 5 B. & Ad. 340, &c.; Holt, 528). But this seems to be overruled (see Cope v. Rowlands, 2 M. & W. 159). At all events such defence, if it be any, must now be specially pleaded, and the proof lies on the deft. (Gremare v. Le Clerc Bois Valon, supra; see a form of plea, 3 Ch. Pl. 56, and see Little v. Oldacre, 1 C. & M. 370, n.) A surgeon not having a certificate from the Apothecaries' Company cannot charge for his attendance or administering medicine, except in cases within his own department, he cannot therefore recover for attending a patient in the typhus fever (Allison v. Haydon, 4 Bing. 619; and see Wagstaffe v. Sharpe, 3 M. & W. 525, n. a). If plt. be a surgeon and apothecary, he may, besides his charges for medicines, recover reasonable charges for attendances (Handey v. Harison, 4 C. & P. 110; Simpson v. Balfé, 4 Tyrw. 325; but see Towne v. Grisley, 3 C. & P. 581).

Proof of Reasonableness of Charges.] This must be proved as in ordinary cases by some person competent to speak thereon. There is not, as seems to have been formerly supposed (see per Best, C. J., in Towne v. Lady Gresley, 3 C. & P. 581), any rule of law which precludes an apothecary from charging both for medicines and attendance. It is for the jury to say what, under all the *circumstances, is a reasonable compensation [*135] for the plt.'s labour and skill (Morgan v. Hallen, 2 Jur. 591; 3 N. & P. 498; 8 Ad. & E. 489, S. C; see Handy v. Henson, 4 C. & P. 110; Gensham v. Germaine, 11 Moo. 1). Where the plaintiff, instead of putting a charge for his attendances, left a blank opposite such item, it was considered as evidence that he did not intend to make a charge for them (Tuson v. Batting, 3 Esp. 192). A surgeon who practises as a physician, having no diploma, cannot maintain an action for his fees (Lipscombe v. Holmes, 2 Campb. 441).

Evidence for Defendant.

On General Issue.] The deft. may on the general issue show that plt. was, or that his services were rendered in the character of a physician (Chorley v. Bolcot, 4 T. R. 317; Poucher v. Norman, 3 B. & C. 745; S. C. 5 D. & R. 649; Lipscombe v. Holmes, 2 Camp. 441); and this will be an answer to the action. But if a person subsequently promise a physician to pay him a certain sum for his services, he may be sued upon such promise (Veitch v. Russell, 1 C. & M. 362). And where a physician, who also practised as a surgeon, attended deft. in both capacities, he was held entitled to be paid for any service performed in the latter character (Battersby v. Lawrence, 1 C. & M. 277). In an action by a surgeon, if deft. intend to avail himself of the fact of his being unlicensed, he must prove it (Gremare v. Le Clerc Bois Valons, 2 Campb. 144); and since the New Rules. Again, as the law implies an undertaking on the part of surgeons and apothecaries that they will exert a reasonable amount of skill (Seare v. Prentice, 8 Ea. 348), the deft. may show that he received no benefit, in consequence of plt.'s gross unskilfulness or carelessness (per Lord Kenyon, Kannen v. McMullen, Pea. 59; Duffit v. James, cited 7 Ea. 480; Duncan v. Blundell, 3 Star. 6; Hill v. Featherstonehaugh, 7 Bing. 569). But this is only in cases of gross negligence; and, if it appear that improper remedies or unfit medicines were administered under the advice of a physician, the surgeon or apothecary is, in all cases, entitled to recover (Kannen v. McMullen, Pea. 59). In the case of a medical man, if an operation, which might have been useful, have merely failed in the event, he is entitled to recover, but if it could have been in no event useful, he cannot recover (Hill v. Featherstonehaugh, 7 Bing. 574, per Alderson, J.). In cases where an empiric professes to cure disorders in a specified time by sovereign remedies and does not succeed in his cure, he cannot recover (Huie v. Phelps, 2 Star. 480); but this does not apply to a regular practitioner (Ib.). Deft. may, of course, disprove the work done, or prove the unreasonableness of the charges, or account claimed.

ACTIONS AGAINST APOTHECARIES AND SURGEONS.

Form of Remedy and Pleadings, p. 135.

Evidence, p. 136.

Physician's Fees, p. 136.

[Form of Remedy and Pleading.] A surgeon or apothecary is liable, in assumpsit or case, for ignorance or unskilfulness, and for negligence in the exercise of his profession; as the law implies an undertaking or duty on their part to exercise due and reasonable skill, &c. (Slater v. Baker, 2 Wils. 359; Seare v. Prentice, 8 Ea. 348; B. N. P. 73). And the proper question for the jury is, whether the deft. exercised a fair, reasonable, and competent degree of skill (Lamphier v. Phipos, 8 C. & P. 475; Hancke v. Hooper, 7 C. & P. 81; *and see Rex v. Long, 4 C. & P. 398, 423). The action may be maintained, and, indeed must, in order [*136] to recover damages for the personal suffering he brought on the patient, and it is immaterial who employed the deft. or by whom he was to be paid (Gladwell v. Steggall, 8 Sc. 60; 5 B. N. C. 733; 3 Jur. 535, S. C.; Pippin v. Shepherd, 11 Pri. 400; See Ch. Contr. Index). A medical man is liable for gross negligence or unskilfulness, though he act gratuitously (Hancke v. Hooper, 7 C. & P. 81; Shiell v. Blackburne, 1 H. Bl. 158; see form of declaration, 7 C. & P. 81; 8 Sc. 60; Ch. Pl. by Pearson, 619). It is sufficient to aver that deft. was a surgeon, and "was retained and employed as such," without stating by whom, "for reward to him to treat and cure the plt., and that deft. entered upon the treatment," &c., without showing any undertaking by the deft., or averring in words that it was deft.'s duty to act skilfully, &c. (Pippin v. Sheppard, supra; Gladwell v. Steggale, 5 B. & C. 733; Story v. Richardson, 6 B. N. C. 130).

See a form of declaration for inducing plt. to purchase deft.'s practice as a surgeon, by misrepresenting the extent of business, Ch. Pl. by Pearson, 548.

Evidence.] Proof that deft. acted as a surgeon or apothecary will, if the allegation be denied, be sufficient proof that he was so (see 1 N. R. 210; 2 Camp. 513; 2 Camp. 441; 4 T. R. 317). Plt. must on the general issue give evidence as to the nature of deft.'s treatment; and he should call persons of skill and experience to prove that the treatment of the deft. was unskilful and improper; and that the wound or complaint, or increased wound or complaint, of the plt. resulted from such improper and unskilful treatment. The damages should be proved by showing the length of time plt. has been ill, that he will never again have the use of a limb or part of his body as before the expense he has incurred, &c. The evidence for the deft. will consist in rebutting these proofs.

In an action against a person for practising as an apothecary without having obtained a certificate according to 55 Geo. III. c. 194, the proof of a certificate lies upon the deft. (Apothecaries' Comp. v. Bently, R. & M. 159).

Physician's Fees.

A physician cannot maintain an action for his fees (Chorley v. Bolcot, supra), or for travelling expenses (Veitch v. Russell, 3 Q. B. 928); unless there be a special contract (Veitch v. Russell, supra), and such contract must be proved by unambiguous evidence, and not by mere letters acknowledging "a debt," or an "account," or "demand," in general terms (Veitch v. Russell, supra). Vide ante, p. 131.

APPRENTICE.(a)

ACTION ON AN INDENTURE OF APPRENTICESHIP.

Right to Dismiss.] A person has a right to dismiss a servant for misconduct, but has no right to turn away an apprentice because he misbehaves; but the case of a young man seventeen years old, who, under a written agreement not under seal, is placed with a surgeon as "pupil and assistant," and with whom a premium is paid, is a case between apprenticeship and service; and if such a person on some occasions come home intoxicated, this alone will not justify the surgeon in dismissing him. But if [*137] the "pupil and assistant," by employing the shop-boy to compound medicines, occasion real danger to the surgeon's practice, this would justify the surgeon in dismissing him (Wise v. Wilson, 1 C. & K. 662).

Who liable on Deed.] A contract of apprenticeship must be by deed (see per Bailey, J., in Rex v. Annesley, 3 B. & A. 584); and the infant must be an executing party (Ib.; Rex v. Cromford, 8 Ea. 25; Rex v. Ripon, 9 East, 295); but no action upon the instrument lies against him (Gilbert v. Fletcher, Cro. C. 179; Ch. Contr. Index); though he cannot avoid it, during his minority (Rex v. Wigston, 5 D. & R. 339; S. C. 3 B. & C. 484). An action therefore for breach of the indenture can only be brought against the master on the one hand, and the father or other person binding himself for the infant or his representative on the other. Upon an indenture in the common form the latter is liable by virtue of the general clause at the foot, "each of the said parties binds himself to the other," &c. (Branch v. Edington, 1 Doug. 500; Cumming v. Hill, 3 B. & A. 59).

The apprentice may, when he arrives at maturity, avoid the indenture and quit his master's service (Ex parte Davis, 5 T. R. 715); but the father remains liable on his covenant notwithstanding (Cuming v. Hill, 3 B. & A. 59). The apprenticeship may, however, be determined before that period—1st, by mutual consent of all the parties to it (Rex v. Weddington, Burr. S. C. 766; ib. 801; Rex v. Harberton, 1 T. R. 139); and this when carried out and acted upon puts an end to the contract, though the indenture be not in fact delivered up or cancelled (Rex v. Harberton, supra), but, as before observed, the infant cannot during his minority avoid the contract by his own act, nor will any arrangements for that purpose between him and his master, alone, avail to put an end to the apprenticeship, except under circumstances where such an arrangement is manifestly for the infant's benefit (see Rex v. Mountsorrel, 3 M. & S. 497). Hence if the apprentice quit his master's service with the intention of putting an end to the contract, as the master on the one hand may reclaim him (see Gray v. Cookson, 16 Ea. 13), so, on the other, if the apprentice return and offer his services, the master is bound to take him again (Winstone v. Linn, 2 D. & R. 465; S. C. 1 B. & C. 460; Hughes v. Humphreys, 9 D. & R. 715; S. C. 6 B. & C. 680); 2ndly, by the death of either party, the master or the apprentice (Rex v. Clark, Burr. S. C. 782); 3rdly, the bankruptcy of the master, and in this case the apprentice is discharged, though the fiat be afterwards, by a composition between the bankrupt and his creditors, annulled (6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 49; Allen v. Coster, 1 Bea. 274); and 4thly, by order of the justices at sessions (see stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 35; 20 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 3; 4 Geo. VI. c. 29; East v. Pell, 4 M. & W. 665).

Precedents.

[*138]

Declaration by master against the father for a breach by reason of the apprentice absconding himself.

[Commence as in ordinary cases: see post, "COVENANT."] For that, whereas, heretofore, to wit, on, &c., by a certain indenture of apprenticeship then made (one part whereof sealed with the seal of the deft., the plt. now brings into court here, the date whereof is the day and year aforesaid), one E. F., with the consent of the deft., his father and next friend, did put himself apprentice to the plt. to learn his art, trade, and mystery of a _____, and with him, after the manner of an apprentice, to serve from the date thereof until the full end and term of _____ years from thence next following, to be fully complete and ended, during which term it was thereby covenanted and agreed, that the said apprentice his said master should faithfully serve, his secrets keep, his lawful commands everywhere gladly do, and that he should not haunt taverns or play-houses, nor absent himself from his master's service day or night unlawfully, but in all things as a faithful apprentice should behave himself towards his said master, and all his, during the said term; and for the true performance by the said E. F. of all and every the covenants and agreements therein contained, on the part and behalf of the said E. F., to be performed and fulfilled, the deft. thereby bound himself unto the plt. [This is the effect of the general clause, see supra], as by the said indenture, reference being thereunto had, will (amongst other things) more fully appear, by virtue of which said indenture, the said E. F. afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, entered, and was then received into the service of the plt. as such apprentice as aforesaid, and remained and continued in such service, under and by virtue of such indenture, for a long space of time, to wit, from the day and year last aforesaid, until and upon the — day of —; and although the plt. has always, from the time of the making of the said indenture, hitherto well and truly performed, fulfilled, and kept all things therein mentioned and contained on his part and behalf to be performed, and fulfilled, and kept according to the tenor and effect, true intent, and meaning thereof, yet the said E. F. did not, nor would faithfully serve the plt., according to the tenor and effect, true intent, and meaning of the said indenture, but, on the contrary thereof, the said E. F., during the said term, to wit, on, &c., unlawfully absented himself, and has from thence hitherto remained, and continued absent from the service of the plt., contrary to the tenor and effect of the said indenture, and of the said covenant of the deft. in that behalf; and so the plt. says, that the deft. has not kept his said covenant, but has broken the same, to the plt.'s damage, of £—; and thereupon he brings his suit, &c.

Pleas.] See post, "COVENANT," and as to what matters must be specially pleaded. As to effect of non est factum, see ib., plea that plt. were partners when apprentice deed was executed, and that they have since dissolved (Lloyd v. Blackburn, 9 M. & W. 363). See a plea of an illegal agreement to ante-date the indentures of a surgeon's apprentice in order to make it appear falsely that he had served five years (Prole v. Wiggins, 3 B. N. C. 230; see Reg. v. Bannister, 7 Ad. & E. 858). See a form of plea justifying moderate correction of an apprentice for disobedience, Penn v. Ward, 2 C. M. & R. 388.

Evidence.] See post, "COVENANT."

ACTION FOR ENTICING AWAY AN APRENTICE.

• See post, "MASTER AND SERVANT," "SEDUCTION."

Form of Remedy.] Against any person who entices away an apprentice, or who knowingly harbours him, the master may maintain an action on the case (Reg. v. Daniel, 1 Salk. 380; Reg. v. Collingwood, Raym. 1116; Hail v. Aldridge, Cowp. 54; Hambleton v. Vere, 2 Saun. 169; *Rex v. [139] Edwards, 7 T. R. 745); or he may waive the *tort, and sue in debt or assumpsit in the ordinary way, for the work and labour of the apprentice (Foster v. Stewart, 3 M. & S. 191; Lightly v. Clouston, 1 Taun. 112; Eades v. Vandeput, 5 Ea. 39, n.).

Declaration.] See forms, 2 Ch. Pl. 6th ed. 455, 456.

Evidence for Plaintiff.] If the apprenticeship be traversed, plt. should prove it by the indentures, which should be produced and proved in the usual way (see "DEED"). It should be proved deft. knew of the apprenticeship at the time of his enticing away or harbouring the apprentice (Fores v. Wilson, Pea. 55; Pea. Ev. 334; Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes, 582). Slight evidence would suffice. If any express notice of it was given to deft., the same should be proved (see "NOTICE"). The mode of deft.'s causing the injury should, if possible, be proved; though this is not absolutely necessary. It will suffice to show the apprentice was enticed away or harboured by deft. The damage must be proved (Eades v. Vandeput, 5 Ea. 39; Bird v. Randall, Burr. 1352). The value of the services lost should be shown. The measure of damages is not to be ascertained at the actual loss plt. sustained at the time, but for the injury done by causing the apprentice to leave plt.'s employment (Gunter v. Astor, 4 Moo. 12). The apprentice, or his father, or party entering into the indenture, would, it should seem, be a competent witness for either party, though sometimes a dangerous one.

- Certificate under 4 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 27*, p. 159.

Assault and Battery.

What.] Any act of aggression upon the person of another, or any attempt to do a corporal hurt to another, under such circumstances as that the injury might, but for some casualty, have been inflicted, amounts in law to an assault, however slight the proposed *injury might be, as by [*141] holding up the fist, striking at another with a stick which does not touch him, or throwing any thing at one which misses him, or any act which shows an intention to do an injury (B. N. P. 15; Finch, 202; Genner v. Sparks, Salk. 79; Martin v. Shoppee, 3 C. & P. 373; Bac. Ab. Assault, A.; Stephens v. Myers, 4 C. & P. 349). But mere words of abuse and threats will not, nor will any mere attempt to hurt, unless accompanied with an intention to commit the harm (2 Keb. 545; 10 Mod. 187; Tuberville v. Savage, 1 Mod. 3; Griffin v. Parsons, 1 Selw. N. P. 27; Blake v. Barnard, 9 C. & P. 626; but see James v. Campbell, 5 C. & P. 372).

"It is not every threat where there is actually no personal violence that constitutes an assault, there must in all cases be the means of carrying the threat into effect; the question is whether the deft. was advancing in a threatening attitude to strike the chairman, so that his blow would have almost immediately reached the chairman if he had not been stopped then, though he was not near enough at the time to have struck him, yet if he were advancing with the intent, I think, it amounts to an assault in law; if he were so advancing, that within a second or two of time he would have reached the plt., it seems to me an assault in law" (per Tindal, C. J., Stephens v. Myers, supra). The animus is material in the case of an assault; therefore, if one half-draw his sword and say, "If it were not assize time I would run you through the body," held, that as the words negatived an intention to do violence, there was no assault (1 Mod. 3; Bac. Ab. Assault, A.; Blake v. Barnard, 9 C. & P. 626; Reg. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483; Williams v. Jones, Hardw. 301; Underwood v. Hewson, 1 Stra. 596). Giving a person into custody upon a charge before magistrates is not an assault in law (Reglin v. Nelham, 6 L. T. 455).

Battery.] Battery, which always includes an assault, is the actual infliction of an injury, and consists in any unlawful touching of the person of another, either by the aggressor or by any person or thing set in motion by him (1 Saun. 29 b, n.; 1b. 13 & 14, n. 3; Bull. N. P. 15; Cole v. Turner, 6 Mod. 149; S. C. Holt, 108; see Rawlins v. Till, 3 M. & W. 28). Thus, the spitting in another's face (Reg v. Coatesworth, 6 Mod. 172; S. C. 3 Salk. 19), cutting his hair (Forde v. Skinner, 4 C. & P. 239), or throwing water upon his person (Purcell v. Horn, 8 Ad. & E. 604; S. C. 4 N. & P. 564) is a battery. Where the deft. struck a horse so that it ran away and the rider fell, he was holden liable in an action of battery (Dodwell v. Burford, 1 Mod. 24; 1 Sid. 433). The liability is the same whether the injury was intentional or occasioned by the negligence of the deft. (Wakeman v. Robinson, 8 Moo. 63). The act need not be wilful to maintain the action, nor is the degree of violence material (3 East, 602; Bac. Ab. Assault, A.; Weaver v. Ward, Hob. 134). But where the injury is unavoidable, and deft.'s conduct is entirely without fault, no action will lie (Wakeman v. Robinson, supra); and this may be given in evidence under the general issue (see post). The party injured may proceed by indictment and action at the same time, and cannot be put to his election (Jones v. Clay, 1 B. & P. 191; Murphy v. Cadell, 2 ib. 137).

Bruises.] Bruises are where the skin is not broken.

Wounding.] Wounding is giving another a cut, or even a scratch, opening the flesh; or breaking the skin (1 Ch. Gen. Pr. 38; Moriarty v. Brooks, 6 C. & P. 684).

Mayhem.*] Mayhem is the deprivation of a member proper for [*142] defence in fight, and which is not only an arm, leg, finger, eye, and a fore-tooth, but also some others, but not, as it has been said, a jaw-tooth, or the ear, or a nose, because they have been supposed to be of no use in fighting (3 Bl. C. 121).

By and against whom Action to be brought.] To recover damages for the personal suffering and annoyance, the action must be brought in the name of the party injured. But the husband may sue alone to recover any damages resulting to him for an assault on his wife, child or servant, such as the loss of service, of his wife's society, expenses to which he has been put, &c. (See post, "HUSBAND AND WIFE," "SEDUCTION.") Hence, in such cases, each party may sue—the one for the direct, the other for the consequential damage.

Not only the person by whose immediate agency the hurt was done may be sued, but also the person who commanded, directed, or, caused it to be done, or who, being present, may be presumed from the circumstance to have assented (McLaughlin v. Prior, 4 Sc. N. R. 655; S. C. 6 Jur. 374; Roll. Ab. 555, V. pl. 2; Bro. Trespass, pl. 40; Scott v. Shepherd, 3 Wils. 403; S. C. 3 Black. 892); or, who, if it were done for his benefit, subsequently assented (Hull v. Pickersgill, 1 B. & B. 282; Wilson v. Barker, 1 N. & M. 409; S. C. 4 B. & Ad. 614).

Liability of Subordinate Officer for Orders of Superior.] In an action of trespass against the keeper of the queen's prison and his officers, for joint assaults, the officers are only liable for the part which each actually takes in the trespass complained of. Those are not liable at all who merely attend in obedience to the order of the superior, and witness the execution of his order by other officers. Where, in obedience to such orders, one set of defts.

assault the plt. and force him down stairs into a cab, and another set accompany the cab with the plt. to a certain place and back again, both sets of officers are not liable as for one entire trespass, but the plt. must proceed against one or other (Herring v. Hudson, 10 L. T. 287).

For injuries of this kind no action lies by or against the executors or administrators of the party doing or sustaining the injury (1 Saund. 216, a, n. 1), unless indeed the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s 2, gives the husband, father, or, master a remedy against the personal representatives of the tortfeasor, as for a wrong to him in respect of his personal property.

Form of Remedy.] Trespass is the only form of action for an assault and battery where the action is brought by the party injured. But when it is brought for the consequential damages, as, where a husband sues for an assault on his wife, a father, or master for an assault on his child, or servant, the action may be either in trespass, or, on the case (Chamberlain v. Hazlewood, 5 M. & W. 515; 7 Dowl. 816; S. C. 3 Jur. 1079; see "TRESPASS," "CASE").

Limitation.] An action of trespass must be brought within four years; an action on the case within six years next after the cause of action accrued (21 Jac. I. c. 16, s. 3; see Cook v. Sayer, 2 Wils. 85; B. N. P. 128; Macfadezn v. Olivant, 6 Ea. 387; Dyster v. Batty, B. & A. 448).

Assault and false Imprisonment.] An assault ex vi termini excludes consent; therefore, a plea of leave and license to a declaration charging an assault is bad, as amounting to the general issue (Christopherson v. Bare, 12 Jur. 374; 17 Law J., Q. B. 109). Quere, if it can be pleaded to an action for imprisonment (Ib.).

Where a party, on being summoned to appear before two justices for an assault, appeared and pleaded "not guilty," and the prosecutor then withdrew his complaint, and the deft. was accordingly discharged: held, that this was a hearing and dismissal, which entitled the deft. to a certificate that the charge had been dismissed as not proved, under the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 27; and that a plea stating those facts, and that the certificate had been granted, set forth a good defence, under the 28th section, to an action of trespass for the same assault (Tunnickliffe v. Tidd, 17 Law J., M. C. 67, C. P.; 5 C. B. 553).

In trespass for false imprisonment, it appeared that plt. was given into custody by deft. on a charge of stealing, and was taken before a magistrate, who, after hearing the evidence of plt. in support of the charge, remanded him: held, that the remand being the act of the magistrate, deft. was only liable in damages for the trespass and imprisonment in taking plt. before the magistrate (Lock v. Ashton, 13 Jur. 167; 11 Law J., Q. B. 76).

In an action against a constable for wrongly taking a party into custody, the deft. relying on the 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 8, the judge left to the jury whether they believed that in acting as he did the constable bona fide intended to do his duty: held, right, and that it was unnecessary to ask them whether the facts which took place at the time were either such as to justify him in taking the plt. into custody, or reasonably to lead him to believe that in doing so he was acting in the discharge of his duty (Gosden v. Elflick; Maynard v. Elflick; Vass v. Elflick, 13 Jur. 989, Ex.).

A party is not liable in trespass for false imprisonment who, seeing a man in custody of a constable for a supposed offence, points out another as the real criminal, and does not direct the constable to take that party into custody (Ib.).

To an action of trespass for an assault, the deft. pleaded that he was possessed of a gig and horse, which were upon a public highway; that the plt. seized the horse and attempted to dispossess the deft. of the horse and gig, and was driving them away and dispossessing him of them, wherefore the deft. did defend his possession and resisted the plt.'s endeavour, and in doing so committed the trespass in question: held, that this plea was not supported by proof; that the plt., whose horse had been struck by the deft., seized the deft.'s horse, intending to hold it until his master should come up for the purpose of inquiring the deft.'s name (Taylard v. Morris, 18 Law J., Ex. 297).

A party who trespasses upon land, under a fair and reasonable supposition that he has a right to do the act complained of, is not liable to be apprehended under the 28th section of the Malicious Trespass Act, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, by the owner of the property, although the latter have reason to suppose the party to be within the act (Parrington v. Moore, 2 Ex. 223).

The 24th sect. of stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, is only applicable to cases in which the damage done to trees is less than 1s. (Charter v. Greame, 3 N. S. C. 382; 13 Jur. 208; 18 Law J., M. C. 73); Semble, that it was not intended to apply to injuries to trees (lb.). Quære, whether stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, applies to malicious injuries done by a tenant to trees growing upon land in his occupation (lb.).

Form of Pleadings.

Declaration.] The observations that will be found post, "TRESPASS," will here apply. The venue, except when the action is brought against a magistrate, &c. (see post, "OFFICERS," *"JUSTICE OF THE PEACE"), may be laid in any county (Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 161; 1 [*143] Saun. 74, n. 2; see Glynn v. Houston, 2 Sc. N. R. 548); but the deft. may change it on the common affidavit. If the declaration begins with a "whereas," it will be objectionable on special demurrer, as not containing a positive allegation of an assault (Wildegoose v. Kellaway, 2 Salk. 636; 2 Ch. Pl. 648). It should allege the assault to have been committed "vi et armis;" but the omission of these words can only be taken advantage of by special demurrer (4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 1). The day of the assault should be stated, but the precise day is immaterial. That deft. on such a day, "and on divers other days," &c., assaulted plt. is good, and is the preferable form where there have been two assaults and one may be justified; but plt. cannot, on such a count, give evidence of more than a single act (Burgess v. Frelove, 2 B. & P. 425; see Stante v. Prickett, 1 Camp. 472). Aliter in trespass quære clausum fregit, or de bonis asportatis (B. N. P. 86; 1 Saun. 24, n. 1), or, case for an assault on plt.'s wife, &c. (Macfadden v. Olivant, 6 Ea. 387). That deft. on, &c., and on divers other days, &c. made an assault, is objectionable on special demurrer (English v. Purser, 6 Ea. 395; Michell v. Neal, Cowp. 828). Hence, if plt. complains of more than one assault, he should have a separate count for each. Where the declaration, containing but one count, alleged a single trespass, and that was justified, held, that plt. could not new assign (Taylor v. Smith, 7 Taun. 156; see Chertley v. Barns, 10 Ea. 73).

Statement of Injury.] Care should be taken to describe the injury, according to the facts of the case, and only such parts of the following precedents should be adopted as are applicable, and will be supported by the evidence to be adduced on the trial. Yet if the plt. prove any material allegation in the count, he will be entitled to a verdict pro tanto, though he fail in proving the residue (R. T. Hardw. 121; 2 Saun. 74 b.; see Phillips v. Howgate, 5 B. & A. 220; Bush v. Parker, 4 M. & Sc. 588; S. C. 1 Bing. N. C. 72). The vi et armis is necessary (2 Ch. Pl. 649). In an action by husband and wife, for the wife's suffering, care should be taken not to include any statement of an injury or damage to the husband only: as loss of service or expense (1 Ch. Pl. 434; Dengate v. Gardiner, 4 M. & W. 4); and so, in an action by the husband alone, for an assault on his wife, per quod, &c., care should be taken not to include any statement as to the personal sufferings of the wife (Russell v. Corne, 1 Salk. 119; Com. Dig. Pleader, 2 A, 1; post, "HUSBAND AND WIFE"). If only a liability to pay expenses have been incurred it should be so stated (see Pritchett v. Boevy, 1 C. & M. 775). The declaration should conclude with a contra pacem, but the omission must be taken advantage of by special demurrer (4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 1). The words, "other wrongs," &c., should be inserted, and under them any circumstances of aggravation, or matters which cannot with decency be stated, may be given in evidence (B. N. P. 89; see Huxley v. Berg, 1 Stark. 98; Lowden v. Goodrick, Peake, 46); but any resulting damage, not being the natural and necessary consequence of the injury, must be specially alleged (Petit v. Addington, Peake, 62; B. N. P. 89; Holt, 699, 1 Stark. R. 98; 1 Ch. Pl. Index, Damages). In an action by husband and wife, the declaration should conclude to the damage of both (Com. Dig. Pleader, C, 84).

Defence.] The new rules of pleading contain no express provision to alter the effect of pleas in trespass for personal injuries. Inevitable accident over which plt. had no control, is a defence under not guilty. The deft. may plead in denial, or in justification, or excuse, of the assault, or both, but he cannot plead "leave and *license" (Comb. 218; B. N. P. [*144] 16). An assault ex vi termini excludes consent; therefore a plea of leave and license to a declaration charging an assault is bad as amounting to the general issue. Quære, if it can be pleaded to action for imprisonment (Christopherson v. Bare, 17 Law J. 109, Q. B.). A. let certain premises to B. by an agreement, which contained the usual clauses for payment of rent and for repairing the premises, and also a clause that, in case of non-payment of the rent or non-performance of the conditions, it should be lawful for A., without any demand, to enter upon and take possession of the premises, and expel B. therefrom without any legal process; and that in case of such entry, and of any action being brought for the same, the defendant might plead leave and license of B. to A. for the entry or trespasses complained of. In an action of trespass by B. against C. for breaking and entering, &c. and assaulting plt., C. pleaded leave and license. It appeared that rent being in arrear from B. to A., C., under a written order from A., had entered and forcibly expelled B. The foregoing agreement was given in evidence. Held, that the plea was sustained by the evidence. Held, also, that as the plt. had not new-assigned any excess, the assault was merely an aggravation of the principal trespass, and was covered by the plea (Kavanagh v. Gudge, 7 M. & G. 316). He may justify an assault to a necessary degree, in defence of his person by "son assault demesne" (see Cockcroft v. Smith, 2 Salk. 642; Dale v. Wood, 7 Moo. 33); or that of his wife, or a wife in defence of her husband (Leeward v. Basilee, 1 Ld. Raym. 62; 1 Salk. 407); a servant in defence of his master, but not a master in defence of his servant, because he may have an action per quod servitium amisit (Ib.); a parent in defence of his child, or a child in defence of his parent (3 Salk. 47). A master may also justify the moderate correction of his servant, apprentice, scholar, or child (Ib.) But a person cannot justify an assault (i. e. by a fecit insultum) in defence of his house, or his goods (Leeward v. Basilee, 1 Ld. Raym. 62), though he may justify by mollitur manus imposuit, in order to turn out an intruder from his house, or prevent a spoiling of his goods (Com. Dig. Pleader, 3 M. 16, 17), but not striking and knocking down plt. (Gregory v. Hill, 8 T. R. 299), nor an imprisonment (Reece v. Taylor, 4 N. & M. 470; Green v. Bartram, 4 C. & P. 308; Rose v. Wilson, 8 Moo. 362; S. C. 1 Bing. 353), unless the plt. being in the deft.'s house, assault the deft. after being requested to leave (Reece v. Taylor, 4 N. & M. 469; Bone v. Daw, 3 Ad. & E. 711); or commit a breach of the peace in the presence of the deft., or which he has reasonable ground to expect he will renew (Timothy v. Simpson, 1 C. M. & R. 757; Baynes v. Brewster, 2 Q. B. 375; Wooding v. Oxley, 9 C. & P. 1); and on no other ground will the mere fact of a party refusing to leave a house on request, justify giving him in charge to a policeman (Wheeler v. Whiting, 9 C. & P. 269; Wooding v. Oxley, supra).

A wounding cannot be justified in defence of possession (Gregory v. Hill, supra; Oakes v. Wood, 2 M. & W. 791), unless plt. attempt to enter with force, or assault the plt. or his family in attempting to remove him (Ib.) And if a party enter, or endeavour to enter a house, or close, or to take goods by force, he may be resisted by force, and deft. may allege that if any damage happened to plt. it was in defence of deft.'s possession (Weaver v. Bush, 8 T. R. 80). In such a case no request to depart, or desist need be given, but, otherwise, the plea must allege such request and refusal (Ib.; Tabay v. Reed, 1 C. & P. 6; Com. Dig. ubi sup.). Deft. cannot justify imprisoning plt. without showing that it was necessary in order to preserve the peace (Timothy v. Simpson, 1 C. M. & R. 757; Atkinson v. Warne, ib. 827; 3 Dowl. 483; Banes v. Brewster, 1 G. & D. 669; S. C. 6 Jur. 392; Ingle v. Bell, 1 M. & W. 516; Howell v. Jackson, *6 C. & P. 723; Cohen v. Huskisson, 2 M. & W. 477; S. C. 1 Jur. [*145] 559).

Where the trespass is the act of the deft., though it may be excused by involuntary accident owing to the act of the plt. it must be specially pleaded; therefore, if the plt. slipped off the pavement and got under the carriage, and was driven over by the deft., this was held not admissible under the general issue (Hale v. Fearnley, 3 Q. B. 919).

Deft. may also plead a judgment recovered for the same assault (Fritter v. Beal, 1 Salk. 11; S. C. 1 Raym. 339), either against himself, or, another co-trespasser (2 Lutw. 944; Broome v. Wooton, Yelv. 68; Day v. Porter, 2 M. & R. 151). And the certificate of a magistrate who has adjudicated on the case is by statute 9 Geo. IV. c. 3, ss. 27, 28, a good bar to an action for the same assault (see Skuse v. Davis, 7 Dowl. 774; 2 P. & D. 550; 10 Ad. & E. 635; S. C. 3 Jur. 1170; Harding v. King, 6 C. & P. 427; Anon. 1 B. & Ad. 382; Bennine v. Neck, 2 H. & W. 178; Reg. v. Robinson, 12 Ad. & E. 672; 4 P. & D. 391; S. C. 5 Nev. 244).

Assault and battery are excepted out of the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 21, consequently the deft. cannot in this action pay money into court.

Pleas.] The new rules are silent as to pleas in actions for an assault and battery. The general issue denies the act itself, and that it amounts to a trespass, as well as the special damage, if any. In Williams v. Jones, Rep. Temp. Hardw. 301, his lordship says, "The party's intention must be considered, for people will sometimes, by way of joke, or, in friendship, clap a man on the back, and it would be ridiculous to say that in such a case a man must justify, and may not plead not guilty. In Gibbons v. Pepper, Raym. 38; Salk. 637; S. C. 4 Mod. 405, a plea that the deft.'s horse took fright and ran away, and that the plt. wrongfully continued in the way, and in consequence was run over against the will of the deft., was holden bad on demurrer, as amounting to the general issue; for it went to show that it was not the deft.'s act which produced the injury (see per Denman, C. J., in Boss v. Litton, 5 C. & P. 409; Goodman v. Taylor, ib. 410).

But, except in actions against magistrates, &c. (see post, "OFFICERS," "JUSTICE OF THE PEACE"), any defence which admits the trespass complained of, and seeks to excuse, or, justify it, must be specially pleaded; such as inevitable accident (Knapp v. Salsbury, 2 Camp. 500; Boss v. Litton, sup.; Pearcy v. Walter, 6 C. & P. 232; Wakeman v. Robinson, 8 Moo. 63; S. C. 1 Bing. 213; Bac. Ab. Trespass, H); son assault demesne (1 Saun. 77, 296, n. 1); moderate correction (Watson v. Christie, 2 B. & P. 224), &c., &c., as well as matter in discharge, as accord and satisfaction, judgment recovered either against the deft., or, a co-trespasser (see Boyce v. Bailiff, 1 Camp. 60; Day v. Porter, 2 M. & R. 151; 2 Lutw. 944; Broome v. Wootton, Yelv. 68; 11 Co. 67).

The usual form of the general issue is, that the deft. is not guilty of "the said several trespasses, or any, or either of them;" but where to an action for assault, battery, and tearing plt.'s clothes, the deft. pleaded "not guilty of the said supposed assault in manner and form," it was held, after verdict, that the modo et forma denied the battery and tearing as well as the assault (Weatherell v. Howard, 3 Bing. 135; S. C. 10 Moo. 502).

Pleas in justification, or excuse must admit the trespass attempted to be justified (Gibbon v. Pepper, Raym. 38; S. C. 2 Salk. 637). But [*146] *a plea of son assault demesne sufficiently confesses the assault and battery by alleging that, before the said time, when, &c., the plt. assaulted deft., and would have bruised and ill-treated him if he had not immediately defended himself, and that if any hurt, or damage happened to plt. it was occasioned by plt.'s assault and deft.'s defence (Wise v. Hodsoll, 3 P. & D. 510; 11 Ad. & E. 816; S. C. 4 Jur. 535). A wounding may be justified in self-defence, but in defence of the possession of property the plea must be only molliter manus imposuit, unless there be resistance, &c., on the plt.'s part (Alderson v. Waistell, 1 C. & K. 358). If a man be attacked he has a right to defend himself by striking blows in return, but not to revenge by subsequently striking an unnecessary blow (Reg. v. Driscoll, 1 C. & M. 214). Where there are several assaults, there should be a separate plea of son assault demesne to each count, if each assault be justified in self-defence. Declaration that deft. assaulted plt. and wrenched a stick from his hands, and with the said stick, and with his fists, gave the plt. blows. Plea as to assaulting the plt. with the stick, and with his fists, giving him blows, &c., son assault demesne. Held, after verdict, the plt. sufficiently justified the battery with the stick, as well as the assault (Blunt v. Beaumont, 2 C. M. & R. 412). So, a plea justifying in defence of possession against a forcible entry, must admit the trespass attempted to be justified (Weaver v. Bush, 8 T. R. 78). And a molliter manus imposuit is good to a common action of assault and battery, as it admits a battery in law (C. Tem. Hardw. 358; see Smith v. Edge, 6 T. R. 562; Johnson v. Northwood, 7 Taun. 689; S. C. 1 Moo., 420), but not to a charge of wounding (Gregory v. Hill, 8 T. R. 299). A necessary degree of beating, and hurting, and pulling about, may be justified under molliter manus imposuit, but if there were an actual resistance, and in consequence thereof, a wounding, or a greater degree of violence of the deft.'s part, than would otherwise have been justifiable, such facts should be stated (Oakes v. Wood, 3 M. & W. 151; Reeve v. Taylor, 4 N. & M. 470; Bush v. Parker, 1 B. N. C. 72). A plea justifying the principal trespass need not justify that which is merely matter of aggravation (Taylor v. Cole, cited 3 T. R. 297; 1 Saun. 28, n. 3; Monprivatt v. Smith, 2 Camp. 175; Griffiths v. Dunnett, 1 Sc. N. R. 836); for if the plt. relies on that, he must new assign; otherwise where the additional matter alleged amounts to a substantive trespass (Phillips v. Howgate, 5 B. & A. 220; Bush v. Parker, 4 Moo. & Sc. 588; S. C. 1 Bing. N. C. 72; Stammers v. Yearsley, 10 Bing. 35). In justifying in defence of property it is sufficient to allege that the party was possessed, without setting forth the particulars of his title (Johns v. Whitler, 3 Wils. 71; Weaver v. Bush, 8 T. R. 78; Gregory v. Hill, ib. 299).

A plea which professes to justify several assaults and false imprisonments, laid in separate counts, must show distinct occasions upon which the deft. was justified in committing each particular trespass: McCurdy v. Driscoll, 1 C. & M. 618; where Bayley, B., observed, There are six assaults, and four imprisonments laid in the declaration; the party justifying is bound to cover the whole. I see no reason which you give for assaulting him six times; you profess to justify four imprisonments, you should have shown that circumstances existed by which you had a right to imprison him, whereupon you imprisoned him once, and then that such and such circumstances occurred, whereby you had a right to imprison him a second time, and so throughout, but here you do not show any different occasions.

But, where to assault and imprisonment the plea *justified the arrest [*147] on a charge of felony, alleging resistance, wherefore deft. beat him; the justification was proved as to the arrest for felony, but the resistance was not: held, that the verdict was right, for as much of the plea as was necessary to cover the declaration was proved, and deft. need not prove what was unnecessarily alleged (Atkinson v. Warne, 1 C. M. & R. 827).

Declaration charged that deft., to wit, on 1st January, 1844, with force and arms "assaulted" plt., and "then," with great force, &c., seized and shook plt., and dragged him about, and struck him many blows, by means of which he was hurt and wounded, and was sick, &c., and so continued for a long time, to wit, one week, &c. Plea 2. That deft. was lawfully possessed of a close and a gate belonging to it, and plt., a little before the time, when, &c. with force and arms, and with a strong hand and against the will of deft., attempted to break open, and did then thereby unlawfully break open the gate, and in breach of the peace did thereby attempt forcibly to enter and unlawfully trespass upon the close, and would then unlawfully and forcibly, &c., have effected such attempt, if deft. had not defended his possession, whereupon deft. being in his close during the unlawful attempt, defended his possession, and resisted such attempt, and because he could not successfully resist without, in a slight degree, committing the trespasses, he did a little unavoidably, &c., commit the trespasses in the declaration, using no unnecessary force, which are the trespasses complained of. Plea 3. That deft. was lawfully possessed of a cow, being in a certain close, and plt., a little before the time when, &c., did, against the will of deft., endeavour to drive away and dispossess defendant of, and was driving away from the close, the cow, and dispossessing deft. of the same, and would then unlawfully, forcibly, and in breach of the peace, have driven away and dispossessed defendant of his said cow; wherefore deft., &c. (justifying as before mutatis mutandis.)

On demurrer to the replication, held, first, that the trespass on the part of the plt. being alleged by the pleas to be forcibly made, the justification was sufficient, though it was not alleged that the plt. had been requested to desist; secondly, that the pleas were not objectionable for omitting to show a good justification of the wounding; thirdly, that the third plea was not objectionable for omitting to show that the cow was on deft.'s close. Held, also, on special demurrer to the replication for duplicity, that the declaration showed only one trespass, committed on a single occasion, and therefore, that to the above pleas the plt. could not reply both de injuriâ and also that defendant committed the trespasses in the declaration on other occasions than those in the pleas mentioned (Polkinhorn v. Wright, 8 Q. B. 97).

To a declaration of trespass quare clausum fregit, containing a count for an assault, the defts. pleaded, inter alia, liberum tenementum in J. W., and a justification, on that ground, of the trespass, and that because the plt. "was unlawfully in possession," the defts., as servants of J. W., and by his command, ejected her; and, in so doing, because she resisted, committed the assault. The plt. replied, that she was lawfully possessed, and was lawfully entitled to her possession as against the defts.; with a special traverse, that the plt. was unlawfully in possession or occupation. Held, on special demurrer to the replication, that the plea was substantially one of liberum tenementum, and therefore bad, as attempting to justify assault (Roberts v. Taylor, 3 Dow. & L. 1).

[*148] To trespass for assault and imprisonment the deft. pleaded, *secondly, to the assault, that he was possessed of a dwelling-house; that the plt. was making a noise and disturbance there; and that the deft. mollitur manus imposuit to turn him out; fourthly, to the assault and imprisonment, that the deft. was possessed of a tavern or ale-house, and that the plt. conducted himself in a rude and quarrelsome manner in it, and assaulted the deft. and others, and afterwards, and before, &c. remained standing in the street near the door of the house, using loud, menacing and disgusting language to the deft. and his family, who was within hearing, and by reason thereof many persons congregated about the house and made a riot and disturbance; and at the time when, &c., the plt. was causing persons to congregate in breach of the peace, whereupon the deft., after requesting him to go, gave him in charge to a police-officer.

To the second plea, the plt. replied, that the house was a common ale-house, and that the plt. was lawfully drinking there, wherefore he refused to depart; and that the deft. of his own wrong committed the trespasses. Held, on demurrer to this replication, that it was insufficient, as it must be taken to admit that the plt. was making a noise and disturbance, and was, in that case, no answer to the plea. Held also, on demurrer to the fourth plea, that it was good, as sufficiently showing matter amounting to a breach of the peace by the plt. (Webster v. Watts, 17 L. J. 73, Q. B.; 12 Jur. 243).

When the plea varies from the time laid in the declaration, it should conclude with a quæ est eadem (Com. Dig. Plead. E. 31; 2 Saun. 5 e, n. (p.); 1 Saun. 297); and this is sufficient, without a formal traverse. Indeed, if a traverse of any other time be added, it will be bad on special demurrer (Hembro v. Bailey, 1 C. & M. 204; Cardwarden v. Watkins, 7 Dowl. 484; S. C. 5 M. & W. 333).

Formerly it was not advisable to plead son assault demesne, or, any other plea of justification, specially, in actions for a trifling assault, if there was not satisfactory evidence to sustain it, for, the battery being admitted, plt. must get full costs, though he obtains less than 40s. (Smith v. Edge, 6 T. R. 562); but this is now otherwise (see post, section "Costs").

Replication, &c.] See post, "TRESPASS." Where the plea is untrue, and consists merely of matter in excuse, as son assault demesne, &c., the plea should reply de injuriâ, which puts in issue all the material allegations in the plea (see Crogate's case, 8 Co. 67 a; Com. Dig. Plead. F. 18; 3 M. 29; Selby v. Bardons, 3 B. & Ad. 2; Piggott v. Kemp, 1 C. & M. 197; S. C. 3 Tyr. 128; see also Isaac v. Farrar, 1 M. & W. 65; 4 S. C. Dowl. 750; Griffin v. Yates, 2 Sc. 845; S. C. 4 Dowl. 647; 2 B. N. C. 579; Crisp v. Griffiths, 2 C. M. & R. 159; S. C. 3 Dowl. 752; Humphreys v. O'Connell, 9 Dowl. 213; see post, "REPLICATION"). This replication suffices where title is alleged as matter of inducement (Ib. 2 Saun. 295, n. 1). But where the plea sets up as a substantial part of the defence a prior interest in land, &c., a title to chattels, matter of record, or authority from the plt., there the replication de injuriâ is bad (Ib.; Solly v. Neish, 2 C. M. & R. 355; S. C. 4 Dowl. 248; Purchill v. Salter, 1 Q. B. Rep. 197; 1 G. & D. 682; S. C. 5 Jur. 502). Seem, it must be specially demurred to (Riley v. Parker, 3 M. & W. 230; S. C. 6 Dowl. 375). The plt. however may, instead of replying de injuriâ, traverse the material allegations of the plea (Sarten v. Robinson, 2 D. N. S. 40).

*Where the plea is in substance true (see Reece v. Taylor, 4 N. & M. 470; Phillips v. Howgate, 5 B. & A. 220; Timothy v. [*149] Simpson, 1 C. M. & R. 757), and the plt.'s complaint is for excess, he should not reply de injuriâ, but should new assign (Penn v. Ward, 2 C. M. & R. 338; 4 Dowl. 215; 5 Tyr. 975; Lambert v. Hodgson, 8 Moo. 326; 1 Bing. 317; S. C. Dale v. Wood, 7 Moo. 33; Oakes v. Wood, 2 M. & W. 791; S. C. 3 M. & W. 150; Weaver v. Bush, 8 T. R. 78; see Bone v. Daw, 3 Ad. & E. 711; see post, "EVIDENCE FOR DEFENDANT," p. 155). He cannot do both (Franks v. Morris, 10 East, 81, n.; Thomas v. Marsh, 5 C. & P. 596; Gisborne v. Wyatt, 1 Gale, 35; 3 Dowl. 505; Saund. 300, b, d, n. 6; 1 Saund. 24, n. Polkinghorn v. Wright, 15 L. J. 70, Q. B.; Worth v. Terrington, 13 M. & W. 781; Loweth v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 582; and see Page v. Hatchitt, 15 L. J. 58, Q. B.) So where the plt. has a justification for doing that which the plea ascribes to him, and which is alleged as the excuse, he must reply specially (Carth. 281; Sage v. Rochford (Earl), 2 Bla. R. 1196; Thomas v. Marsh, 5 C. & P. 596). So where the action is brought, not for the assault, which the deft. has justified, but for another, the plt. should new assign (see post, "NEW ASSIGNMENT"); but he cannot do this where the declaration charges only a single act (Taylor v. Smith, 7 Taun. 156; Cheasley v. Barnes, 10 East, 73; Stammers v. Yearsley, 10 Bing. 35).

It was formerly necessary where the plea alleged matter which could not be properly included in the general traverse of de injuriâ, as a justification under process of a court of record, and the plt. did not wish to deny the process, to begin with a protestando of the writ, so that he might not be concluded by the admission in another action (see ante, "ADMISSION"); but since the rules of H. T. 4 Will. IV. which prohibit protestations, it is usual to admit expressly the writ, and reply de injuriâ absque residuo causæ to the rest of the plea.

Precedents.

Declaration for assault and battery, and injury to plt.'s clothes, stating the facts fully.

[Commencement as usual: "see TRESPASS."] For that the deft. on, &c. [and if the deft. assaulted plt. on more times than one, then say, and on divers days and times, between that day and the day of the commencement of this suit], with force and arms, &c., assaulted the plt., and then seized and laid hold of him, and with great force and violence pulled, shook, and dragged him about, and gave and struck the plt. a great many violent blows and strokes on divers parts of his body; and also, then with great force and violence, knocked, cast, and threw him down to and upon the ground, and then violently kicked him, and gave and struck him a great many other blows and strokes, and also, then with great force and violence, rent, tore, and damaged the clothes and wearing apparel, to wit, one coat, &c. [state the apparel injured], of the plt., of great value, to wit, of the value of £30, which the plt. then wore. By means of which said several premises, the plt. was greatly hurt, bruised, and wounded, and became and was sick, sore, lame, and disordered, and so remained and continued for a long space of time, to wit, for the space of six weeks, then next following [or if plt. is still labouring under the injury, say, to wit, from thence, hitherto), whereby he was, during all that time, and still is; hindered and prevented from doing, following, and transacting his lawful affairs and business, and hath been obliged to lay out and expend a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of £100 [state a sufficient sum], in and about the curing and healing himself of his aforesaid wounds, sickness, and indisposition.

Second count for a common assault.

For that the deft., on the day and year aforesaid, with force and arms, made an assault upon the plt., and then beat, bruised, wounded, and ill-treated him.

[*150]

*Third count, for injury to plt.'s clothes.

For that the deft., on, &c., with force and arms, tore, damaged, spoiled, and destroyed divers goods and chattels of the said plt., to wit, one coat, &c., of a large value, to wit, of, &c.

By husband alone for battery of a wife.

For that the deft., on, &c., with force and arms, &c., made an assault on E. F., then and still being the wife of the plt., and then violently beat, kicked, bruised, and ill-treated her, insomuch that she, the said E. F., by means of the premises, then became and was sick, sore, lame, and disordered, and so remained and continued for a long space of time, to wit, hitherto, whereby the plt., during all that time, not only lost and was deprived of the comfort, benefit, and assistance of his said wife, in his domestic affairs, which he might and otherwise would have had, but thereby also, the plt. was then forced and obliged to pay, lay out, and expend, and hath necessarily paid, laid out, and expended divers large sums of money, in the whole amounting to a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of £—, in and about the endeavouring to heal and cure his said wife, of the sickness, soreness, lameness, and disorder aforesaid, occasioned as aforesaid; and other wrongs, &c.; to the damage of the plt. of £—; and therefore he brings his suit, &c.

By a master or father for the battery of his servant or son.

For that the deft., on, &c., with force of arms, &c., made an assault on E. F., then and still being the son and servant (or servant only) of the plt., and then, beat, bruised, wounded, and ill-treated the said E. F., insomuch that, by means thereof, the said E. F. then became and was sick, sore, lame, and disordered, and so remained and continued for a long space of time, to wit, from thence hitherto, during all which time the plt. lost and was deprived of the service of his said son and servant (or servant only), and of all the benefit and advantage which might and would otherwise have arisen and accrued to him from such service.

Plea of son assault demesne.

General issue: post, "TRESPASS." And, for a further plea in this behalf [if only part of the trespasses stated in declaration are justified, say, as to the said assaulting, beating, &c., in the said declaration mentioned], the deft. says, that the plt. just before the said time when, &c., to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, with force and arms, made an assault upon the deft., and would then have beaten and ill-treated the deft., if he had not immediately defended himself against the plt. Wherefore the deft. did then defend himself against the plt., as he lawfully might, for the cause aforesaid; and, in so doing, did necessarily and unavoidably a little beat, wound, and ill-treat the plt., doing no unnecessary damage to the plt. on the occasion aforesaid. And so the deft. saith, that, if any hurt or damage then happened to the plt., the same was occasioned by the said assault so made by the plt. on him, the deft., and in the necessary defence of himself against the plt.; which are the supposed trespasses in the introductory part of this plea mentioned, and whereof the plt. hath above complained. And this the deft. is ready to verify.

Son assault in defence of a relative, &c.

Says, that the plt., just before the said time, when, &c., to wit, on the same day and year aforesaid, with force and arms, &c., made an assault upon E. F., then and there and still being the father of the deft., and would then have beaten and ill-treated the said E. F., if the deft. had not immediately defended the said E. F.; wherefore the deft. did then defend the said E. F. against the plt., as he lawfully might, for the cause aforesaid; and, in so doing, did necessarily and unavoidably commit the said supposed trespass in the said declaration mentioned, doing no unnecessary damage to the plt. on the occasion aforesaid. And so the deft. says, that if any hurt or damage then and there happened to the plt., the same was occasioned by the said assault so made by the plt. upon the said E. F., and in the necessary defence of him, the said E. F., against the plt.; which are the same supposed trespasses in the introductory part of this plea mentioned, and whereof the plt. hath above thereof complained against him, the said deft. And this, &c. (Conclude with a verification, as supra.)

*Plea that A. B. was possessed of a shop; and moliter manus by the deft., as servant to A. B., to turn him out.

Says that one A. B., long before, and at the said time, when, &c., was, and still is, lawfully possessed of, a certain shop, with the appurtenances, situate, lying, and being, in the parish of, &c., in the county of, &c.; and, being so possessed thereof, the plt., at the said time, when, &c., with force and arms, &c., entered and came into the said shop of the said A. B., and there made a great noise, disturbance, and affray, in the said shop; and then and there greatly disturbed and disquieted the said A. B. in the peaceable and quiet possession, use, and occupation, of his said shop; and, thereupon, the deft., as the servant of the said A. B., and by his command, then, in the said shop, civilly requested the plt. to go and depart out of the said shop, and to cease her said noise and disturbance; which the plt. then and there refused to do, and still stayed and continued in the said shop, making and continuing such her said noise and disturbance therein, without the leave and license, and against the will, of the said A. B. Whereupon the deft., as the servant of the said A. B., and by his command, at the said time, when, &c., gently laid his hands upon the plt., in order to pull, push, put, and remove, the plt. from and out of the said shop; and was at the said time, when, &c., gently pulling, &c., the plt. from and out of the said shop, whereupon the said plt., being angry and in great wrath, then and there, with force and arms, &c., in the said shop, made an assault on the deft., and would then have beat, bruised, wounded, and ill-treated him, the deft., if he, the deft., had not immediately defended himself against the said plt.; whereupon the said deft. did then immediately defend himself against the said plt., as he lawfully might for the cause aforesaid: and so the deft. says, that if any mischief or damage happened to the plt.; the same so happened unto her from the said assault by her made on the deft., and in the defence of him, the deft., in manner aforesaid, which are, &c., whereof, &c., and this, &c.

See a form of plea of expulsion from a police officer (Collier v. Hicks, 2 B. & Ad. 663); a public house (Howell v. Jackson, 6 C. & P. 723); a select vestry (Dobson v. Fessey, 7 Bing. 305); a church, for indecent behaviour (Worth v. Terrington, 13 M. & W. 781; Hartley v. Cook, 9 Bing. 728); a house, and when a tenant holds over (Newland v. Harland, 1 M. & Gr. 644; Harvey v. Bridges, 14 M. & W. 437; Wright v. Burroughs, 16 Law J. 16, C. P.); of deft.'s servant from his house, which he refused to leave (Donaldson v. Williams, 1 C. & M. 345); from a railway, for trespassing thereon (Manning v. South Eastern Railway Company, 12 M. & W. 237); to prevent forcible entry into a house (Weaver v. Bush, 8 T. R. 78); into a close (Kingsbury v. Collins, 4 Bing. 202); plea justifying an assault in defence of deft.'s sheep, which plt. attempted to take (Alderson v. Waistell, 1 C. & K. 358); Polkington v. Wright, 15 Law J. 70, Q. B.); in defence of possession of a steam-vessel (Dean v. Hogg, 6 C. & P. 64).

Replication de Injuriâ.

And as to the plea by the deft., above pleaded, the said plt. says, that the deft., at the same time, when, &c., of his own wrong, and without the cause in his said last-mentioned plea alleged, committed the said several trespasses in the introductory part of that plea mentioned, in manner and form as the plt. hath above complained. And this he prays may be inquired of by the country.

(This is applicable to each of the above special pleas. See 1 C. & M. 197.)

New assignment.

And, as to the plea of the deft. by him above pleaded, the said plt. says, that he brought his said action, not for the trespasses in the said second plea acknowledged to have been done, but for that the deft., heretofore, to wit, on the _____ day of _____, in the year of our Lord _____, with force and arms, upon another and different occasion, and for another and different purpose than in the said second plea mentioned, made another and different assault upon the plt. than the assault in the said second plea mentioned, and then beat, wounded, and ill-treated him in manner and form as the plt. hath above thereof complained, which said trespasses, above newly assigned, are other and different trespasses than the trespass in the said second plea acknowledged to have been done; and this the plt. is ready to verify. Wherefore, inasmuch as the said deft. hath not answered the said trespasses above newly assigned, the plt. prays judgment, and his damages by him sustained by reason of the committing thereof, to be adjudged to him, &c.

Evidence for Plaintiff.*

[*152]

Right to begin.] By a recent resolution of the judges the plt. has a right to begin in all actions for personal injuries, also in slander and libel, though the general issue be not pleaded and the affirmative be on the deft. (Carter v. Jones, 6 C. & P. 64; Atkinson v. Warne, ib. 687).

Under the general issue the plt. must prove an assault or battery, (see ante, p. 145). Holding up a weapon at a man within reach is an assault (Garner v. Sparkes, 1 Salk. 79). So, riding after a person, and obliging him to run away to avoid being beaten (Martin v. Stroppee, 3 C. & P. 373); so, cutting the hair of a pauper against his will (Forde v. Skinner, 4 C. & P. 239); so, throwing a lighted squib at A., who, in self-defence, throws it from him, and it accidentally falls on B., is an assault on B. by the first thrower (Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 392); as to evidence of an assault, see ante, p. 140; as to evidence of a battery, wounding, &c., p. 140.

Extent of proof.] The plt. should prove as many distinct assaults as there are counts, and all the allegations contained therein, by going into the circumstances of his case at length, as to the manner in which the assault and battery were committed, the deft.'s conduct and expressions, the degree of violence used, and the extent of the injury. Any admission made by deft. of the assault should be proved (ante, "ADMISSIONS"). In an action of assault on plt.'s wife evidence of what she said immediately on receiving the hurt is admissible for him (Thompson v. Trevanion, Skin. 402). He cannot give in evidence a conviction on an indictment for the assault and battery (Jones v. White, 1 Str. 68). If, on an indictment for an assault, the deft. plead guilty, the record is said to be evidence against him in an action for damages for the same assault (1 Ph. Ev. 320); but Lord Tenterden, C. J., held the contrary at N. P. (2 Ph. Ev. 203). He is not, however, bound to prove the whole of the facts stated; deft. may be found guilty of an assault only, though an assault and battery be stated (4 Moo. 405; B. N. P. 94; Bro. Abr. Trespass, pl. 40).

In cases of variance between the allegations and the proof, the judge who tries the cause has power to amend (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 23), and this power is liberally exercised (see ante, INTRODUCTION). But he cannot add to, or, supply an omission in the declaration (John v. Currie, 6 C. & P. 618). Where the declaration stated that deft. struck plt.'s cow divers blows whereof she died, and it appeared that plt. to shorten her miseries put her to death, this was holden no variance (Hancock v. Southall, 4 D. & R. 202). Evidence to fix deft. with having sanctioned the act of postilions (see McLaughlin v. Prior, 4 M. & Gr. 48).

Proof of time.] The day, or, place stated in the declaration is immaterial B. N. P. 86; Brownl. 233; Webb v. Turner, Str. 1095). But where the *issue is on son assault only, the deft. may prove any assault by [*153] the plt. before the date of the writ, and the plt. cannot resort to another time (Randle v. Webb, 1 Esp. 37); where the declaration charges assaults diversis diebus, and no new assignment, plt. cannot give in evidence more than one transaction (Burgess v. Freelove, 2 B. & P. 425; see Stante v. Pricket, 1 Campb. 473); aliter in trespass quere clausum fregit, &c. (ante, "TRESPASS"). But where the declaration stated that the deft., on divers days and times, between two specified days, assaulted the plt., he may prove any number of assaults within that period, or he may prove a single trespass at any time before action brought (B. N. P. 86; 1 Saund. 24, n.); and, after proving several assaults within the period mentioned, he might, perhaps, be permitted to prove others committed before that time, to show deft.'s malice (2 Ph. Ev. 194). If trespasses incapable of continuance be so charged, plt. may be confined at the trial to a single act (B. N. P. 86).

Several Assaults.] Where there are two counts, and deft. suffers judgment by default on one (Compare v. Hicks, 7 T. R. 727), or pleads a justification which is admitted by the replication (Atkinson v. Matteson, 1 T. R. 172; 1 Selw. N. P. Assault, &c.), and not guilty to the other, and plt. proves but one assault, the deft. is entitled to the verdict (Ib.): where there were several counts, and deft. pleaded that the assaults therein mentioned were one and the same, and plt. instead of demurring joined issue; it was held that he could not give evidence of more than one assault (Gale v. Dalrymple, R. & M. 118).

Several Defendants.] In an action against several, plt. must confine himself to the trespass in which all were implicated. He cannot recover for what was done by one, or, more, before, or, after the joint act (Aaron v. Alexander, 3 Campb. 36). But where one has suffered judgment by default, he need only give evidence to affect the rest, and it is for the jury to say whether the trespass proved is the same as that confessed (Harris v. Butterly, Cowp. 483). The plt. must confine himself to the case upon which he has proceeded. If where there is one count he has given evidence of an assault, he cannot waive that and go on to prove another (Stante v. Prickett, 1 Campb. 472); and if the action be brought against several for a joint trespass, committed at a particular time, he must confine himself to that time; and if all the defts. were not then concerned in the trespass committed at that time, the plt. cannot have recourse to a trespass committed at any other time, when some only of the defts. were concerned who were not engaged in the first transaction, for some of the defts. might thereby be subjected to damages for a trespass in which they had no concern (Sedley v. Sutherland, 3 Esp. 202); and so in an action against several, after proving a joint trespass, he cannot abandon that and go on with another case against some of the defts. though there were two counts in the declaration (Tait v. Harris, 6 C. & P. 73; 1 M. & Rob. 282; see Wynne v. Anderson, 3 C. & P. 596); but this is doubted by Patteson, J., in Hitchin v. Teale, 2 M. & Rob. 30; on the other hand, where he has elected to proceed in a case against one he cannot go on as against him on a trespass affecting them all (Hitchen v. Peale, 2 M. & Rob. 30). But where plt. attempted to prove a joint trespass on a given day, and failing in that, proceeded to implicate all in another trespass on the following day; held, that he was at liberty to do so (Roper v. Harper, 5 Sc. 250; S. C. 4 Bing. N. C. 20). *Where plt. proves distinct and unconnected trespasses by different defts. he will be made to elect on which he will proceed be- [*154] fore the deft. opens his case (Howard v. Newton, 2 M. & Rob. 509).

It is discretionary in the judge at what stage of the cause to direct a verdict for such of the defts. as are not implicated, and this discretion is regulated not merely by the fact that the plt.'s evidence has not affected them, but by the probability whether such evidence will arise before the case closes (Sowell v. Champion, 2 N. & P. 627; S. C. 6 Ad. & E. 407). And one against whom some prima facie case has been made has no right to have his case put separately to the jury, in order that he might be acquitted and become a witness for the rest (Leach v. Wilkinson, 1 M. & Rob. 537).

Under Special Plea.] Where deft. pleads specially, the plt. should be prepared with evidence to rebut the facts stated in deft.'s pleas: and he may give it in anticipation or not, but if not, he will be restricted in reply to such evidence as exactly answers the case set up by the deft. (Pierpont v. Shapland, 1 C. & P. 447). If plt. has replied specially, he must be prepared to prove the facts stated in the order of the replication. As an assignment admits the justification mentioned in the deft.'s plea, that assault is out of the question, and the plt. must go into evidence of the one set out in the new assignment, and produce his evidence as he would in support of a declaration.

Damages.] See post, "DAMAGES." Under the "alia enormia," the plt. may give in evidence, over and above what is alleged in the declaration, any circumstances of aggravation in the deft.'s conduct, accompanying the trespasses alleged, or matters which cannot with decency be stated (B. N. P. 89; Huxley v. Berg, 1 Stark. 98; Bracegirdle v. Oxford, 2 M. & S. 77). But not any distinct act which may itself be the subject of an action (see Lowden v. Goodrick, Peake, 46; B. N. P. 89; Sippord v. Basset, 1 Sid. 225; 2 Salk. 643). Therefore in trespass for false imprisonment the plt. cannot shew that he was stinted in his food or that he caught the gaol fever (Lowden v. Goodrich, Pea. Ca. 46; Pittel v. Addington, ib. 62), but he may prove intemperate language of the deft. (Merest v. Harvey, 5 Taunt.)

Special Damage.] Nor can the plt. give in evidence any consequential inquiry not being the natural, and as it were the necessary result of the trespass unless it be alleged in the declaration as special damage (see Pettit v. Ardington, Peake, 62; Westwood v. Corne, 1 Stark. 172). Nor even then if it be not the proximate, but remote consequence of the act (see Boyce v. Bailiff, 1 Camp. 57; Langridge v. Levy, 2 M. & W. 519; 4 M. & W. 337; Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 M. & W. 109). In an action by husband and wife, the jury cannot give damages for loss of service. Nor in an action by the husband alone for the wife's suffering. Nor damages for costs incurred in setting aside a warrant of attorney and subsequent process, under which the trespasses were committed (Holloway v. Turner, 6 Q. B. 928).

Evidence may be given of the circumstances which accompany and give a character to the trespass in order to enhance the damages (Bracegirdle v. Oxford, 2 M. & Sel. 79). Time and place, when and where the assault was committed, may frequently enhance the damages. *Thus it [*155] it is a greater insult to be beaten upon the Royal Exchange than in a private room (Tulledge v. Wade, 3 Wils. 19; see "TRESPASS, QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT"). Heath, J., observed (in Merest v. Harvey, 3 Taunt. 442), "It goes to prevent the practice of duelling, if juries are permitted to punish insult by exemplary damages." The putting on the record a special plea imputing felony, which is abandoned at the trial, may be urged in aggravation (Warwick v. Foulkes, 12 M. & W. 507). As to the proof of admissions by co-trespassers, vide ante, p. 75. Where there has been a maihem or wounding, the court may, upon view, increase the damages (Cooke v. Beal, Raym. 176; S. C. 3 Sal. 115). But, upon a motion to increase the damages super visum vulneris, it should be proved to be the same wound for which the damages were given, but the court will not allow fresh evidence to be adduced (B. N. P. 21). On a view of the party and examination of the surgeon ore tenus in court, the damages were increased from 11*l.* 14*s.* to 50*l.* (Burton v. Baynes, Barn. 153). But, where the judge who tries the cause is satisfied with the verdict, the court will not increase the damages (Brown v. Seymour, 1 Wils. 5). The damages may be assessed, not for the mere corporal injury, which in many cases may be very trifling; and the jury are not obliged to confine themselves to the mere pecuniary loss, but may award exemplary damages in proportion to the malicious or insulting conduct of the deft. (see Howard v. Crowther, 8 M. & W. 601); and not only for the injury already sustained, but for all which the plt. is likely to sustain, since he cannot bring a second action (Fetter v. Beal, 1 Raym. 332, 692; 1 Salk. 41).

Where several Defendants.] In an action against two, or more, the jury cannot sever the damages, but must award one gross sum, although some be less culpable than others (Hill v. Goodchild, 5 Burr. 2790; Brown v. Allen, 4 Esp. 158; Elliott v. Allen, 1 C. B. 18). Such as they think the most culpable ought to pay (Lowfield v. Bancroft, Str. 910). The test of damage is the injury sustained, and not the act or motives, or the most or the least guilty of the defts. (Clarke v. Newsom, 1 Ex. 131). If damages are assessed against defts. separately, the judgment will be erroneous, but plt. will be allowed to set it aside and take judgment de melioribus damnis (Mitchell v. Milbank, 6 T. R. 199); or he may enter a remitter for the excess (Sabin v. Long, 1 Wils. 30). Where, to a count for expulsion, A. pleaded not guilty, and B. and C. paid 20s. into court, and the plt. replied damages ultra, the jury were directed to find for plt. with nominal damages against A., if they thought 20s. sufficient, and in that case to find in favour of B. and C. (Walker v. Walcott, 8 C. & P. 352). One deft. against whom some prima facie case has been made out, has no right to have his case put separately to the jury, in order to his being acquitted and becoming a witness for the rest (Leach v. Wilkinson, 1 M. & R. 537). But plt. may be called upon to elect against which of the defts. he will go at the close of his case (Davis v. Moseley, 1 C. & C. 710; Howard v. Newton, 2 M. & Rob. 509); but this is discretionary with the judge (White v. Hill, 2 D. & L. 537; Sewell v. Campion, 6 Ad. & E. 407).

The deft. may give in evidence in mitigation of damages, any matter which is not inconsistent with his admissions on record, and which does itself amount to an answer to the action. But not that which, if pleaded, would have afforded a defence (Speck v. Philips, 7 Dowl. 470).

Evidence for Defendant.*

General Issue.] Under this plea deft. may give in evidence any matter denying the facts stated in the pleadings, showing that he was not the trespasser, and that no assault was committed. Matters of excuse, or in justification, cannot, as we have seen, be given in evidence under the general issue, but must be specially pleaded, unless in some actions against justices of the peace and other public officers (see "JUSTICES OF PEACE," "OFFICER," &c.). He may also give in evidence matters in mitigation of damages, which could not have been pleaded (3 Stark. Ev. 1460; Vin. Abr. Ev. I, b. pl. 16; 2 B. & P. 225, n.), as that the plt. gave provocation (see Thomas v. Powell, 7 C. & P. 807); but not that which, if pleaded, would have been a defence to the action (Watson v. Christie, 2 B. & P. 224; Day v. Porter, 2 M. & R. 151). So in trespass for false imprisonment against a private person, evidence of reasonable suspicion of the plt.'s having been guilty of the felony is admissible, on not guilty, in reduction of damages (Chinn v. Morris, R. & M. 424). So he may give evidence of expressions used by the plt. at the time, tending to create mutiny and disobedience, for every thing which passed at the time is part of the transaction on which the plt.'s action is founded, and he cannot therefore be surprised at the evidence (Bingham v. Garnault, 1 Esp. Dig. N. P. 337; B. N. P. 17). Where, in an action for assault and battery, and not guilty pleaded, evidence was offered that the battery was given by way of punishment for misbehaviour on board the ship of which the deft. was captain, and it was insisted that the conduct of the deft., at the time of the assault, being necessarily in evidence, proved that misbehaviour, Lord Eldon, C. J., was of opinion, that, as there was no justification pleaded, the jury should give damages to the amount of the injury suffered, without lessening them on account of the circumstances under which it was inflicted; and the Court of Common Pleas were of opinion that this direction was right (Watson v. Christie, 2 B. & P. 224). A declaration in trespass charged that the defts. assaulted the plt., and took him into custody, and led him through and along divers public streets to a police office, and there detained him in custody. The deft. pleaded to a special plea, justifying the whole of the trespasses. The plt. new assigned, and to the new assignment the defts. pleaded not guilty. Held, upon these pleadings, that the question was, whether deft. had committed any other assault and imprisonment than that justified in the plea; and that even if the plt., after he had once been taken, had escaped from the custody of the defts., and been retaken and led to the police station, the whole being substantially one transaction, and the plt. having been taken to the police office once only, a nonsuit was right (Newton v. The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 11 L. T. 85, Q. B.). In trespass for false imprisonment, under a charge of false pretences the deft. cannot cross-examine the plt.'s witnesses as to the character of the plt. or previous charges against him (Bruning v. Butcher, 2 M. & Rob. 374).

Plaintiff's first Assault.] If to this plea the plt. replies de injuriâ he puts the whole plea in issue, and the deft. will be bound to show that plt. committed the first assault, and that it was such as to justify the deft.'s self-defence (Cockcroft v. Smith, Salk. 642; see Reece v. Taylor, 4 N. & M. 470; 1 H. & W. 15; Dale v. Wood, 7 Moo. 33; Moriarty v. Brooks, 6 C. & P. 684; Oakes v. Wood, 3 *M. & W. 150; Timothy v. Simpson, 1 [*157] C. M. & R. 757). If deft. prove that the plt. lifted up his stick and offered to strike him, it is a sufficient assault to justify his striking the plt., and he need not wait to be actually struck (B. N. P. 18). It is not every assault that will justify every battery, and it is matter of evidence whether the assault was proportionable to the battery. Therefore if A. strike B., B. is not justified in drawing his sword, and cutting off A.'s hand (Cook v. Beal, 1 Ld. Raym. 177). But the plt. cannot upon the replication de injuriâ show that the deft.'s assault was excessive, or that his own previous assault was justifiable (Penn v. Ward, 2 C. M. & R. 338; Dale v. Wood, 7 Moo. 33; R. v. Tebbart, Skin. 387; see Franks v. Morris, 10 East, 81, n.; Oakes v. Wood, 3 M. & W. 150). Thus, where the plt. complained that the deft. beat, bruised, and wounded him, and the deft. pleaded son assault demesne, and plt. replied de injuriâ, and it appeared in evidence that the plt. meeting the deft., shook his stick at him, whereupon the deft. committed a violent assault upon the plt., and beat him, and on a verdict for deft. the court held, that if the deft. had assaulted the plt. more violently than was necessary for self-defence, the plt. should have replied it specially (Dale v. Wood, supra; Oakes v. Wood, supra). When plt. complained of an assault, and beating with a stick, and deft. pleaded son assault demesne. It was held that deft. was entitled to a verdict generally on proof of his plea, and that plt. was not entitled to damages merely because the plea did not expressly justify the beating, this being ground of special demurrer to the plea (Blunt v. Beaumont, 2 C. M. & R. 412). If son assault demesne be pleaded without the general issue, and the declaration confines the plt. to the proof of one assault only (ante, p. 156), the deft. may prove the plt.'s assault on him to have taken place at any day before the action brought, and is not confined to that laid in the declaration; but this is not the case where the declaration comprises more than one assault, or when the general issue is pleaded with the justification of son assault, for then the deft. is bound to justify the assault proved (Downes v. Skrymsher, 1 Brownl. 233).

As to when the plt. should new assign see "NEW ASSIGNMENT." But it is not necessary to new assign where the plt. alleges and proves an assault and battery, and the plea alleges matter to justify both; the deft. must prove as much of his plea as will justify both (Lamb v. Burnett, 1 C. & J. 294). So, where plt. declared for imprisonment, and blows by the deft., who pleaded a justification of the imprisonment under process, and because the plt. conducted himself with violence when in custody, therefore, the deft. on de injuriâ must prove the plt.'s violence in order to justify his blows, and no new assignment was necessary (Phillips v. Howgate, 5 B. & A. 220). So, where the plt. alleges, and proves an assault, a turning out of the plt.'s house, and imprisonment, and the deft. pleaded not guilty, and justified the assault and removal by a moliter manus imposuit, and that because the plt. assaulted him, the deft. gave him in charge to a constable; held, that on proof of the imprisonment, the deft. must prove the assault by the plt. (Reece v. Taylor, 4 N. & M. 469). If there really were two assaults, one only of which the deft. can justify, and he pleads son assault demesne, the plt. should new assign, but if the declaration contain two counts, then there is no occasion for a new assignment, for as the deft. can only prove one justification, the plt. on proving two assaults must have a verdict (B. N. P. 17). Where there are two counts, and the deft. pleads not guilty and a justification, *and his justification alleges that the trespasses in [*158] both counts are one and the same, and the plt. replies de injuriâ, he will be allowed to prove one trespass only (Gale v. Dalrymple, R. & M. 118; Gibson v. Hawkey, R. & M. 121, n.). Where there are two counts, a new assignment may preclude the plt. from giving evidence of a trespass under each event (see Atkinson v. Matteson, 2 T. R. 172). * Where the plt. can justify his first assault, he must reply it specially, for it is not in issue under de injuriâ (King v. Phippard, Carth. 281; B. N. P. 18). Therefore he cannot, under this replication, show that the first assault was lawfully committed by him in enforcing a public right of way which def. prevented him from using (Bird v. Jones, 7 Q. B. 742; see Griffin v. Parsons, 2 Selw. N. P. 27, n.; sed quære).

Moderate Correction.] Under this plea deft. must prove that plt. was such servant, or apprentice. If there be any written contract of hiring between plt. and deft. the same should be produced, and proved in the usual way. If the justification be against an apprentice, the indenture of apprenticeship should be produced and proved. Evidence of the plt.'s faults must be adduced, which must be sufficient to warrant the assault in question (see Newman v. Bennet, 2 Ch. R. 195). In an action at the suit of a seaman for an assault, which deft. justified on account of disobedience, &c., if plt. was found guilty of it by a court martial, the sentence should be fully proved as well as pleaded, as an estoppel against plt.'s disputing the fact of disobedience, &c. (Hannaford v. Hunn, 2 C. & P. 148. The quality of the punishment, whether excessive or not, is not in issue under the replication of de injuriâ to this plea, the misconduct alone being in issue (Penn v. Ward, 2 C. M. & R. 338; 4 Dowl. 215; Gale v. Dalrymple, 1 C. & P. 381.) When plt. declared for assaulting and beating with fists and a rope, putting him in irons, &c.; justification as master of a ship, flogging and imprisoning the plt. for mutiny and disobedience, de injuriâ; held, that plt. could not prove disproportionate punishment (Lamb v. Burnett, 1 C. & J. 294.)

Defence of Relative, Servant, &c.] The facts of relationship, or service, must be proved (see post, title, "SEDUCTION"). Also, that deft's interference was necessary for deft.

To preserve the Peace.] The facts stated in the plea must be fully proved, especially that the queen's peace was then being broken, or, about to be so.

Defence of Possession.] The deft. must prove that he was possessed of the premises in question, as by carrying on business, or living in the house (Cro. Car. 183). Where the plea alleged that deft was possessed of a dwell-ing-house, and it appeared that he was only a lodger therein, the variance was holden fatal (Monks v. Dykes, 4 M. & W. 567; 3 Jur. 125; see Fenn v. Grafton, 2 B. N. C. 617). There is no necessity for deft. to prove the title to the premises (Piggott v. Kemp, 1 C. & M. 197). He must also prove so many of the other material allegations as constitute a justification in law for the trespasses confessed by the plea (see Timothy v. Simpson, 1 C. M. & R. 757; Reece v. Taylor, 4 N. & M. 470; Atkinson v. Warne, 1 C. M. & R. 827; S. C. 3 Dowl. 483; Coken v. Huskisson, 2 M. & W. 477; Howell v. Jackson, 6 C. & P. 723; Williams v. Jones, 2 Str. 1049; *(Green

[*159] v. Goddard, 2 Salk. 641). Where the deft. pleads possession of a house, &c., and that plt. without his license entered and disturbed him; whereupon he requested the plt. to depart, and on refusal, molliter, &c., to turn him out. Replication de injuriâ, &c. The deft. must show his possession, the plt.'s entry and disturbance, the request to depart and the refusal. If plt. enter forcibly into deft.'s house, the latter may resist force by force without any previous request to depart, but the justification should not be molliter manus, &c., but he should plead specially that plt. with a strong hand endeavoured forcibly to break and enter the deft.'s close, whereupon the deft. resisted and opposed such entrance, &c., and that if any damage happened to the plt. it was in defence of the possession of the close (Com. Dig. pl. 3, M, 16, 17). Plt. declared for an assault, battery, and a dragging through a pond; deft. pleaded, 1st., not guilty; 2d., as to the assault and battery that the plt. was unlawfully in deft.'s close, &c. Held, that the latter plea did not justify the dragging through the pond, and that plt. was entitled to a verdict for so much, under not guilty, and need not new assign (Bush v. Parker, 1 N. C. 72). Trespass for assault and battery, ill-treating, and wounding with a truncheon: plea, 1st, not guilty; 2d, as to assault, battery, and ill-treating, a removal, because plt. was making a noise in deft.'s house. Replication, de injuriâ; held, that the wounding was not covered by this plea, and that the plt. was entitled to a verdict and damages for it without a new assignment, but that on the above replication he could not show that the deft. removed him for other and different reasons and motives than those alleged in the plea (Oakes v. Wood, 3 M. & W. 150). A plea justifying the removal of plt. from a boat in deft.'s possession is not proved by showing that the deft. was using it under a contract with the boat-owner for the exclusive use of it on a certain occasion, on which it was navigated by the servants of the owner (Dean v. Hogg, 10 Bing. 345). Deft. pleaded the removal of the plt. from deft.'s house of which he was lawfully possessed, and plt. replied de injuriâ; held, that the plea was not proved by showing a forcible entry by deft. into the house which plt. was wrongfully holding over, and a subsequent removal of the plt. (Newton v. Harland, 1 M. & G. 644; sed quære, see Browne v. Danson, 12 Ad. & E. 624; Harvey v. Bridges, 14 M. & W. 437).

Under Process or Authority of Law.] Where the process is irregular only, and not void or set aside for irregularity, it may be pleaded, and the plt. cannot defeat the plea by proof of the irregularity (Riddle v. Pakeman, 2 C. M. & R. 30; see "TRESPASS"). Assault and imprisonment; plea, arrest on a charge of felony, and because plt. resisted deft. beat him; held, unnecessary to prove the resistance because the rest of the plea justified the alleged trespass (Atkinson v. Warne, 1 C. M. & R. 827). Plea of justification under a ca. sa.; replication admitting the writ, de injuriâ absque residuo causæ; held, that plt. may show that deft. did not in fact act under the writ at all, but not that the arrest was a trespass ab initio in consequence of antecedent matter, as he had not replied specially (Price v. Peek, 1 N. C. 380).

Certificate under 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 27.] A certificate of a summary conviction or dismissal by two justices on a complaint in respect of the same assault or battery must be specially pleaded. Where the plea stated the giving of a certificate "forthwith" (in the words of the statute), and the replication traversed the obtaining *such certificate modo et [*160] forma; held, that the obtaining forthwith was put in issue, and that a certificate obtained some months after dismissal did not support the plea; held, also, that the dismissal of the complaint as "not proved" was not in itself an answer independently of the certificate (R. v. Robinson, 13 Ad. & E. 672). Where a party, on being summoned to appear before two justices, for an assault, appeared, and pleaded "not guilty," and the prosecutor then withdrew his complaint, and the deft. was accordingly discharged: held, that this was a hearing and dismissal, which entitled the deft. to a certificate that the charge had been dismissed as not proved, under the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 27; and that a plea, stating those facts, and, that the certificate had been granted, set forth a good defence, under the 28th section, to an action of trespass for the same assault (Tuncliffe v. Tedd, 17 Law J. 176, C. P.; 10 Law T. 347).

Nature of the Action.] The action of assumpsit, which originally belonged to the class of "actions of trespass on the case," but which since the Uniformity of Process Act (2 Will. IV. c. 39) has been treated as a distinct species of action ex contractu, under the name of an action "on promises," lies for the breach of any contract whatsoever, whether it be one implied by law from the acts and relationship of the parties, or one expressly made between them, so that it be not by deed, or matter of record. Hence, assumpsit may be maintained for the recovery of simple contract debts, and for the breach of any duty which the deft. has been legally liable to perform in favour of the plt., the law *implying in the one case a promise to pay, and in the other a promise to perform the particular act, as well as on [*163] special agreements, bills of exchange, bankers' cheques, promissory notes, and other contracts of this description (see Com. Dig. Action Ass.). Assumpsit lies for tolls (Com. Dig. Action Ass. H, 1; Steward v. Baker, 1 T. R. 616; Exeter (Mayor) v. Truelett, 2 Wils. 95; Reading (Mayor) v. Clarke, 4 B. & A. 286; Falmouth (Earl) v. Penrose, 6 B. & C. 385); for copyhold fines and dues (Whitfield v. Hunt, 2 Doug. 727); for money accruing due from deft. to plt. under the provisions of a statute (1 Saund. 37; B. N. P. 129; Rann v. Green, Cowp. 474; see Tilson v. Warwick Gas Company, 4 B. & C. 962). It lies for contribution to party walls (14 Geo. III. c. 78; Peck v. Wood, 5 T. R. 130; Beardmore v. Fox, 8 T. R. 214; see Sangster v. Birkhead, 1 B. & P. 303; see 7 & 8 Vict. c. 84); and, upon an Irish or foreign judgment, though not upon a judgment of the Courts at Westminster (Harris v. Saunders, 4 B. & C. 411; see Reynolds v. Fenton, 3 C. B. 187). It lies upon a decree of the Court of Session of Scotland (Cowan v. Braidwood, Sco. N. R. 138); so against a deft. resident in this country, for costs awarded against him after appearance by a decree of the Court of Session in Scotland, in a suit for a divorce (Russell v. Smith, 9 M. & W. 810). Where the court of a foreign country imposes a duty to pay a sum certain, there arises an obligation to pay, which may be enforced in this country (Russell v. Smith, sup. per Parke, B.). Assumpsit will not lie by the party against whom a fi. fa. has issued on a subsisting judgment, to recover the sum levied under it, on the ground that such judgment was signed on a warrant of attorney, which was obtained by fraud or duress (De Medina v. Grove, 15 Law J., 287, Q. B.); it lies on by-laws (see Felt-makers' Company v. Davis, 1 B. & P. 98); for money due on an award under an order of nisi prius (Bonner v. Charlton, 5 East, 139; see "AWARD" for legacies charged on land; Evans v. Jones, 2 Salk. 415; but see Webb v. Jiggs, 4 M. & S. 113; Braithwaite v. Skinner, 5 M. & W. 313; Wms. Exors. 1514, et seq.; post, "EXECUTORS"); and to recover a balance, however voluminous the account may be, and the plt. is not obliged to resort to the action of account (Tomkins v. Willshear, 5 Taunt. 431; S. C. 1 Marsh. 115; Com. Dig. Action Ass. A, 1). A. boarded and lodged in the house of his brother B., and assisted B. in his business; A. brought assumpsit for the services, and B. set off the board and lodging: held, that neither could claim, unless the jury were satisfied that the parties came together on the terms that they were to pay and be paid; but if that were not so, no ex post facto charge could be made on either side (Davies v. Davies, 9 C. & P. 87).

In some cases, therefore, assumpsit is a concurrent remedy with debt, it being a maxim that wherever indebitatus assumpsit lies, debt will lie; and as the rule which prohibits an action of debt against an executor or administrator (Berry v. Robinson, 1 N. R. 293) is now repealed by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, it may be laid down that wherever an indebitatus count in debt is maintainable, the plt. may bring assumpsit upon the implied promise which the law raises from the existence of an antecedent debt (Reading (Mayor) v. Clark, 4 B. & A. 268); whether payable in money or goods (Falmouth (Earl) v. Penrose, 6 B. & C. 385). But for the recovery of money payable by instalments, where the whole debt is not due, debt does not lie, and assumpsit where the security is not by deed is the only remedy (Rudder v. Price, 1 H. Bl. 550; Cooke v. Whorwood, 2 Saund. 337; Peters v. Opie, 2 Saund. 350). It is also the only remedy upon a guarantee (Hard. [*164] 486; 1 Saund. 211 a; Urien v. Walters, 5 East, 10; *2 Saund. 62 b); so it is the only remedy where a simple contract creates a collateral liability, as for the payment of a debt of a third person (Hard. 486; Purslow v. Bailey, 2 Ld. Raym. 1040; and upon a bill of exchange or promissory note, except as between payee and acceptor, or indorsee and his immediate indorser, in which cases the plt. may sue in debt or assumpsit (Hatch v. Trages, 11 Ad. & E. 702; Watson v. Kightley, ib.; Watkins v. Wake, 7 M. & W. 488; S. C. 9 Dowl. 402; Powell v. Ancell, 9 Dowl. 893; S. C. 3 Sc. N. R. 444; Sison v. Redman, 4 Sc. N. R. 429; 1 Dowl. N. S. 493; S. C. 6 Jur. 283; Lewin v. Edwards, 9 M. & W. 720; 1 Dowl. N. S. 639; S. C. 6 Jur. 401; see post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE"). Assumpsit lies on an indemnity (Goddard v. Vanderheyden, 3 Wils. 262; see Tayler v. Higgins, 3 East, 169; Toussaint v. Martinnant, 2 T. R. 105; Cowell v. Edwards, 2 B. & P. 268); on a contract to serve and employ (see Hall

v. Heightman, 2 East, 145; Martyn v. Hind, Cowp. 437); to perform works (Else v. Gatewood, 5 T. R. 143).

There is in practice an advantage in suing in debt, inasmuch as the judgment, is in most cases final in the first instance; whereas a judgment, by default, or demurrer, &c., in assumpsit, is interlocutory only, and the plt. must execute a writ of inquiry, except in cases where a rule to compute can be obtained (see Arch. Pr. Index). Debt however, on the statute of Edw. VI., for tithes, and debt for foreign money are not final (2 Saund. 107 a, n. b).

When or not sustainable where higher Security given.] Where a party has different securities, of different descriptions, for the same debt or demand, and from the same person, the action must be on that of the higher nature, unless, indeed, such security had been taken as a collateral and additional one, or it be void (2 Leon. 110; White v. Cuyler, 6 T. R. 176; 5 Dowl. 234; Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East, 251). Assumpsit cannot be maintained where the contract is by deed or matter of record, as for rent reserved by lease, under seal (Aley, 29; Hob. 284; Com. Dig. Action Ass. A. 1, C; Acton v. Symmond, Cro. Car. 415). Thus, where the master of plt.'s ship entered into a charter-party, under seal, for delivery of goods to dest., at a stipulated price, it was held that plt. could not sue in assumpsit for the freight, but that his remedy was by covenant on the charter-party (Shack v. Anthony, 1 M. & S. 573; Moorson v. Romer, 2 M. & S. 303; Atty v. Parish, 1 N. R. 104; see Tilson v. Warwick Gas Light Company, 4 B. & C. 962; but see Edwards v. Bates, 2 D. & L. 395; recognising Atty v. Parish); and, where a surety took from his principal a bond of indemnity, and afterwards, being called on to pay his principal's debt, sued him in assumpsit, as for money paid, it was held that the action would not lie, but that he must sue on the bond (Toussaint v. Martineaux, 2 T. R. 104); and, where a tenant had underlet a part of the premises by deed, and the ground-landlord distrained on the under-tenant, it was held, that the latter could not sue his lessor as upon an implied promise to indemnify him (Schlenker v. Moxsy, 3 B. & C. 792; see English v. Blundell, 8 C. & P. 332). In such case the existence of an express contract is held to exclude an implied assumpsit. So, if a contract by deed be entered into after, and in substitution of a parol contract, the latter is merged in the former, and assumpsit can no longer be maintained (Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East, 259). Aliter, where the latter is given as a collateral security, and not in substitution (Twopenny v. Young, 3 B. & C. 208; S. C. 5 D. & R. 259; Drake v. Mitchell, supra); or, where it is inoperative or void, as where given by an infant for necessities (1 Ch. Pl. *118, and cases cited); or, by a person who had [*165] previously become bankrupt, the original simple contract remains (B. N. P. 182; 1 Saund. 295, n. 1). Where a warrant of attorney given to secure an annuity had been set aside for want of proper enrolment, it was held, that the grantor might maintain assumpsit to recover back the consideration money, though the annuity had been secured by a bond and covenant which had not been set aside (Scurfield v. Gowland, 6 Ea. 241; see ante, "ANNUITY"). So, where neither security had been set aside, but the grantor had treated them as void (Waters v. Mansell, 4 Taunt. 56; Scurfield v. Gowland, 6 East, 241); so, where a new contract by parol had been superinduced upon a contract by deed, if it be not inconsistent with the terms of the latter, assumpsit will lie (White v. Parkin, 12 Ea. 578; Heard v. Wadham, 1 East, 630; Burn v. Miller, 4 Taunt. 748). If there be an agreement by deed to let a house, by words not amounting to an actual demise, assumpsit for use and occupation lies (Elliot v. Rogers, 4 Esp. 59; see Kirkland v. Pounsett, 2 Taunt. 145; Dunk v. Hunter, 5 B. & A. 322). It lies for the use and occupation of a water-course (Davis v. Morgan, 4 B. & C. 8); the taking a security by deed, on usurious terms for money previously lent, and not affected by usury, would not bar an action of assumpsit for money lent (1 Saund. 295, n. 1; see "USURY").

And assumpsit will lie where there has been a new contract, in respect of a new consideration to pay a debt or perform a contract under seal (White v. Parkin, 12 Ea. 578); as, on a promise by the debtor to pay an assignee of a bond in consideration of forbearance (1 Saund. 210, n. 1; Martin v. Burn, 2 Nev. & P. 297; S. C. 7 Ad. & E. 19); or, by a third person, to pay the original creditor (Anon. Cowp. 129; Russell v. Huddock, 1 Lev. 188; see Lewis v. Davison, 4 M. & W. 654); or, on a promise to the husband to pay the arrears of a rent-charge, due to the wife in her lifetime, though the rent was secured by deed (Anon. 1 Leon. 293, cited in Moorsom v. Kymer, 2 M. & S. 309; Flight v. Creesden, Cro. Car. 8); but, a promise by the debt. to pay a judgment debt in consideration that the plt. would stay execution, is nudum pactum (Anon. Cowp. 129). Where a debt. granted and assigned by indenture certain demised premises to the plt., who having been distrained for rent in arrear to the superior landlord before the assignment, brought assumpsit to recover money paid under the distress, and relied upon debt.'s express promise to re-pay it; held, that as covenant would lie on the covenant implied in the word "grant," assumpsit would not lie on any implied contract to indemnify plt., nor on the express promise, it not being founded on a new consideration (Baber v. Harris, 9 Ad. & E. 532; see Gwynne v. Davy, 1 M. & G. 857; Harris v. Goodwin, 9 Dowl. 409; West v. Blakeway, 9 Dowl. 846). But if money be lent, and a mortgage deed be afterwards executed to secure the re-payment, but which contains no covenant to pay the mortgage money, the mortgagee may sue for money lent (Bates v. Asten, 12 Law J. N. S., Q. B., 160). So, on a balance between partners, if one expressly promise to pay it, assumpsit lies, though they have covenanted to account (Foster v. Allanson, 2 T. R. 483; White v. Parkin, cited in 12 Ea. 582). And, if the binding be not mutual, as, where parties contract by deed, and plt. signs, but the debt. does not execute the deed, it will be no bar, but he may sue in assumpsit (Sunderland v. Lishnan, 3 Esp. 42). And, where a husband covenanted with a trustee to pay his wife a certain separate allowance, but neglected payment, it was held, that the trustee might recover in assumpsit for necessities supplied, on the common-law obligation (Nurse v. Craig, 2 N. R. [166] 148), Mansfield, C. J., dissent.; as, he thought "the specific covenant excluded a ground in law for supporting an assumpsit on the presumed assent of the husband" (Ib. 160); and, where a feme covert contracted with a servant, by deed, but without authority from the husband, it was held the law would imply a contract on the part of the husband to pay the servant for the work done (White v. Cuyler, 6 T. R. 176).

In Cases of Tort.] Frequently where debt. has been guilty of a tortious act, plt. may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit or debt. Where there has been an express contract, the party injured may sustain assumpsit though the breach amount to a trespass (Dicken v. Clifton, 2 Wils. 321; Mast v. Goodson, 3 Wils. 354; see Smith v. White, 2 B. N. C. 218; but see Burchell v. Hornsby, 1 Camp. 360; Birch v. Wright, 1 T. R. 386). Where debt. has wrongfully taken or appropriated plt.'s goods, and received the money for them, plt. may sue for the money had and received to his use (Edmeads v. Newman, 1 B. & C. 418; S. C. 2 D. & R. 568; see Longchamp v. Henry, 1 Doug. 137; Hill v. Perrott, 3 Taunt. 274). So, where he has, under colour of office, extorted from plt. illegal fees (Morgan v.

Palmer, 2 B. & C. 735; S. C. 4 D. & R. 283; Dew v. Parsons, 2 B. & A. 562); so the right to an office is frequently tried in an action of assumpsit, to recover the fees received by the deft. therein (Com. Dig. Action Ass. A 1; Baxter v. Dodsworth, 6 T. R. 681; Rex v. Chester, 1 T. R. 396; Green v. Hewitt, Pea. 182; Kitchen v. Campbell, 3 Wils. 304; Lindon v. Hooper, Cowp. 419; Gill v. Kymer, 5 Moo. 525; Edmeads v. Newman, 1 B. & C. 418; Morgan v. Palmer, 2 B. & C. 729; Roland v. Hall, 1 Sco. 539; Spry v. Emperor, 6 M. & W. 639; see post, "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED"); and we have seen that plt. may sue another, who has enticed away his apprentice, in an action of assumpsit for his earnings (see post, ib.). But it has been held that assumpsit will not lie to recover back money paid for the release of cattle distrained, damage feasant, though the distress were wrongful (Lindon v. Hooper, Cowp. 414; Shipwick v. Blanchard, 6 T. R. 298; see Marshall v. Hopkins, 15 East, 309; and see Couwne v. Garment, 2 Sco. 276); nor for use and occupation against a person who holds adversely, as the Courts will not try a title to land in this form of action (see Birch v. Wright, 1 T. R. 378; see Money Penny v. Bristow, 2 R. & M. 117). But assumpsit lies for stallage against a person who enters plt.'s market, and erects a stall without leave (Newport (Mayor) v. Saunders, 3 B. & Ad. 411). It lies for the price of goods which deft., by fraud, induced the plt. to sell to an insolvent person, the benefit of which he obtained himself (Hill v. Perrott, 3 Taunt. 274; Abbotts v. Barry, 5 Moo. 98; Edmeads v. Newman, 1 B. & C. 418); and where the goods of a trader after his bankruptcy are taken in execution, or otherwise tortiously disposed of, without the concurrence of the assignees, they may sue in assumpsit if the goods have been sold (Russell v. Bell, 10 M. & W. 340); but they must, if they have recognised the wrongful sale and waived the original tort (Brewer v. Sparrow, 7 B. & C. 310). It lies to recover money paid, or goods delivered by way of fraudulent preference (see Brittle v. Hodson, 4 T. R. 211; Edmeads v. Newman, supra). It lies to recover back rents tortiously received (Bayter v. Dodsworth, 6 T. R. 683; Lindon v. Hooper, Cowp. 414). Wherever a common-law duty results from the employment of a person in a particular character, and he is guilty of a breach of that duty, he may be sued in assumpsit upon the implied contract, or in an action upon the case. Hence assumpsit lies against a carrier *for the loss of goods. Against attorneys, [*167] surgeons, &c., for negligence; or the plt. may sue in case (see these heads respectively). Where goods are obtained under a fraudulent contract, giving the purchaser a specified credit, although the vendor may disaffirm the contract, and maintain trover before the expiration of the credit, yet he cannot, during the prescribed period, maintain assumpsit for goods sold (Ferguson v. Carrington, 9 C. & P. 59). Where a party who had worked into his neighbour's land, and dug coal, which he sold, retaining the proceeds, and died intestate; held, that assumpsit lay against his administrator for the price of the coals, independently of the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 2, and was not affected thereby (Powell v. Rees, 7 Ad. & E. 426). Where the ground of action is assumpsit, declaring in tort will not render one liable who would not have been so on his promise (Green v. Greenbank, 2 Mar. 485; Brotherton v. Wood, 3 B. & B. 62; see Lee v. Shore, 1 B. & C. 94).

When preferable to sue in Case.] As by suing in assumpsit the deft. is let in to plead a set-off, or the law of mutual credit in the case of bankruptcy, a plea in abatement for nonjoinder, &c., which he cannot do in an action on the case (see Sutton v. Clarke, 6 Taunt. 29; Ansell v. Waterhouse, 6 M. & S. 385; Max v. Roberts, 2 M. & R. 454: quære, as to pleading in abatement, where the action, though framed in tort, is founded on a contract (Weall v. King, 12 East, 452; Govett v. Radnidge, 3 East, 62); it is often desirable to sue in case, or trover, rather than in assumpsit (see Smith v. Hodson, 4 T. R. 211; Hunter v. Princess, 10 East, 378; Thomason v. Frere, 10 East, 418; Fair v. M'Iver, 16 East, 130). Another reason is that, generally speaking, a misjoinder of debts, in tort does not vitiate, as one may be acquitted and the other found guilty (Govett v. Radnidge, supra; Breshould v. Wood, 3 B. & B. 54; Pozzi v. Shipton, 1 P. & D. 4); and one of two parties jointly interested may sue alone (Bloxam v. Hubbard, 5 Ea. 407; Addison v. Overend, 6 T. R. 766; Sedgworth v. Overend, 7 T. R. 279).

By and against whom Action to be brought.] As the proper parties to sue and be sued will be found pointed out under the various titles, descriptive of the nature of the action, or the character of the party suing (see "GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED," "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED," "ATTORNEYS," "CARRIERS," "EXECUTORS," &c. &c.), it will only be necessary here to state the general rules on the subject, which are applicable to this form of action, it being assumed that there is a complete and perfect contract capable of being enforced by some person. See as to contracts in general and what consideration is sufficient to support an assumpsit, Ch. Contr.; Selw. N. P., Assumpsit; 1 Ch. Pl. Plaintiffs).

Plaintiffs.] 1st. The general rule is that the action must be brought in the name of the party who has the legal interest in the contract; i. e. from whom the consideration either actually or in contemplation of law moved. Thus, where a person farmed the tolls of a turnpike under a written contract by which he engaged to pay the rent to the treasurer of the commissioners, it was held, that the treasurer could not sue for the rent, but that the action should be brought by the commissioners (Pigot v. Thompson, 3 B. & P. 147; see also Evans v. Evans, 3 Ad. & E. 132). So, where plt. declared that an agreement was made between him and defendant that J. L., plt.'s son, should espouse C., deft.'s kinswoman, and that in consideration that the plt. agreed to assure to C. lands of the value of 10*l.* per annum *for her joint-[*168] ure, deft. assured to plt. that he would give J. L. upon her marriage with C. 200*l.*, the court arrested the judgment, on the ground that the legal interest and cause of action vested in J. L. (Level v. Hawes, Cro. Eliz. 619; see Dutton v. Poole, 1 Vent. 318; 2 Lev. 210; affirmed on error, T. Raym. 302; Rippon v. Norton, Cro. Eliz. 849, 881; Martyn v. Hind, Doug. 142). So, where the declaration stated that one P. was indebted to plt., and in consideration thereof, and that plt. at deft.'s request, had undertaken to work for deft. and leave the amount of his earnings in deft.'s hands for the purpose, deft. promised to pay plt. his debt, the judgment was arrested, the plt. being a stranger to the consideration (Price v. Euston, 4 B. & Ad. 433; Crow v. Rogers, 1 St. 592). See 2 Saund. 137 d, n. b; Carnegie v. Waugh, 2 D. & R. 277; see Garratt v. Handley, 4 B. & C. 664; Sargent v. Morris, 3 B. & A. 280). As to the case of a promise to A. for the benefit of B., and an action brought by B., there the promise must be laid as having been made to B., and the promise actually made to A. may be given in evidence to support the declaration (Feltmakers' Company v. Davis, 1 B. & B. 101, per Eyre, C. J.).

Where the Interest has been assigned.] The assignee of a chose in action cannot, in general, sue in his own name on a contract assigned to him, but must proceed in the name of the assignor; or, if dead, his personal representative (Splidt v. Bowles, 10 East, 281; Muster v. Miller, 4 T. R. 340; Johnson v. Collings, 1 East, 104; Bally v. Wells, 3 Wils. 27; 1 Saund. 210, 153, 154; Canham v. Rust, 2 Moo. 164; Seddon v. Senate, 13 East, 73; Wake v. Tinkler, 16 East, 36; Fairlie v. Denton, 8 B. & C. 395; see Hewell v. M'ivers, 4 T. R. 690; Heath v. Hale, 4 Taunt. 326; Jeffrey v. M'Taggart, 6 M. & S. 126; Sidaway v. Hay, 4 D. & R. 669; see "COMPOSITION"). Where the assignor of a chose in action has become bankrupt, the action must be in his name (Carpenter v. Marnell, 3 B. & P. 40; Winch v. Keeley, 1 T. R. 619; Chambers v. Page, 3 B. & A. 697). And if, after a charter-party, the owner assign and then become bankrupt, he should sue (Splidt v. Bowles, supra; Merrison v. Parsons, 2 Taunt. 407). But if an express promise, or contract to pay the debt or perform the contract, be made to the assignee of the chose in action, in consideration of forbearance, or in respect of any other new consideration, the assignee may declare upon such (1 Saund. 210, n. 1; Innes v. Dunlop, 8 T. R. 595; Price v. Seaman, 4 B. & C. 525). But, under the bankrupt and insolvent laws, the assignee may sue (see these titles). So the assignee of a judgment by confession, in Ireland, may sue in his own name (O'Callaghan v. Thomond, 3 Taunt. 82). Where A. owes B. 100*l.*, and B. owes C. 100*l.*, and the three meet, and it is agreed between them that A. shall pay C. the 100*l.*, B.'s debt is extinguished, and C. may recover that sum against A. (per Buller, in Tattock v. Harris, 3 T. R. 180; Wilson v. Coupland, 5 B. & A. 228; Israel v. Douglas, 1 H. Bl. 239; Hodgson v. Anderson, 3 B. & C. 855; Wharton v. Walker, 4 B. & C. 166; Fairlie v. Denton, 8 B. & C. 395; Crowfoot v. Gurney, 9 Bing. 372; Belcher v. Oldfield, 6 B. N. C. 101; Tibbetts v. George, 5 Ad. & E. 101; Smith v. Smith, 2 Car. & M. 231). But an express agreement between all the parties, that A. should become C.'s debtor, must be proved (Wharton v. Walker, supra; Fairlie v. Denton, supra); and it must appear that A.'s debt to B. was ascertained and fixed (Fairlie v. Denton, supra); and it seems necessary, in order to enable the plt. C. to sue A., that the debt originally due to him the plt., from B., should be extinguished* by the new ar- [*169] rangement (Cuxon v. Chadley, 5 B. & C. 591; Wharton v. Walker, supra; see Ward v. Evans, 2 Ld. Raym. 928); and it is not extinguished, unless there be an express agreement, by the plt. to accept the debt, only as his debtor, entered into between all the parties (Wilson v. Coupland, supra; Cuxon v. Chadley, supra; Wharton v. Walker, supra). What is not such an extinguishment of a debt due to two partners dissolving partnership, as will render the remaining partner only the creditor, see Biggs v. Fellows, 3 B. & C. 402. Where the liability of one partner is substituted for that of a firm, on a dissolution, there must be an express promise and agreement, so as to give a clear right of action against the one (Thomas v. Shillibeer, 1 M. & W. 124). These promises need not be in writing (Hodgson v. Anderson, 3 B. & C. 842; Crowfoot v. Gurney, 9 Bing. 372; Andrews v. Smith, 2 C. M. & R. 627; see Eastwood v. Kenyon, 2 P. & D. 276; see "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED").

Several Plaintiffs.] Where the legal interest in the contract is vested in several persons jointly, all must be joined as co-plts. (Thimblethorpe v. Hardesty, 7 Mod. 116; Roles v. Yates, Yelv. 177; Jones v. Robinson, 10 Jur. 933; 17 Law J. 36, Exch.; see Eccleston v. Clipsham, 1 Saund. 153, n.; Anderson v. Martindale, 1 East, 497; Townsend v. Neale, 2 Camp. 190; James v. Emery, 5 Pri. 529; Hatsall v. Griffith, 4 Tyrw. 487; see also Chanter v. Leese, M. & W. 698); and one may use the names of the others on tendering an indemnity (Savill v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 380; Chambers v. Donaldson, 9 East, 471; Mountstephen v. Brooke, 1 Chit. Rep. 390). Thus, where two persons being bail to an action, employed an attorney to render the deft., it was held, that one alone could not sue the attorney for negligence (Hill v. Tucker, 1 Taunt. 7, and see Rol. Abr. 31, pl. 9). So, where two sureties, being sued to judgment, borrowed, on their joint credit, a sum of money to pay it off, they were held capable of maintaining a joint action against the principal for money paid (Osborne v. Harper, 5 East, 225); though if each had paid his proportion out of his own pocket, each must have sued separately (Brand v. Boulcott, 3 B. & P. 235; see Graham v. Robertson, 2 T. R. 282); and where three persons, joint owners of a ship, having determined on a sale, two of them employed a broker to sell, who received the price, and paid those two their proportions; it was held, that the plt. the third owner, could not sue him alone for his proportion, but that the action should be brought in the names of the three (Halsall v. Gilpin, 4 Tyrw. 487). It would have been otherwise, as the court observed, if each had separately employed the deft. to sell his share (and see Smith v. Hunt, 2 Chit. Rep. 142). Upon the same principle it was held, that one of three co-parceners could not sue an agent who had continued after the ancestor's death to receive the rents, for his proportion thereof, but that all should have joined in the action (Decharmes v. Hornood, 10 Bing. 526; and see Co. Litt. 198, a, b). And where deft. entered into a guarantee with a member of a banking firm, for securing repayment of money about to be advanced to a third person, it appearing that the money was advanced by the firm, and not by the individual member; held, that the latter could not sue alone on the guarantee (Garrett v. Handley, 3 B. & C. 462; sed quære this case; see Garret v. Handley, 4 B. & C. 664; Alexander v. Barker, 2 Tyrw. 140; see also Lane v. Drinkwater, 1 C. M. & R. 599; Byrne v. Fitzhugh, ib. 613, n.). Where A. and B. declared in assumpsit that their several cattle had been distrained, and that deft., in consideration of 10*l.* paid to him by the plts., [*170] *promised to procure the cattle to be returned to them by such a day, and that he had not done so; held, that the action was properly brought (Rol. Abr. 31, pl. 9; 2 Saund. 116 a, n.). If one of several bankers lend money to a third person, all the members of the firm may join in an action to recover it (Alexander v. Barker, p. 168). So, where the mayor of a borough entered into an agreement on behalf of himself, and the rest of the burgesses and commonalty, for the sale of corporate property, it was held, that he could not in his own name maintain an action against the purchaser for breach of contract (Bowen v. Morris, 2 Taunt. 374). In an action for goods sold by the directors of a company a director who has become bankrupt, and ceased to act, must be joined as plt.) Phelps v. Lyle, 10 Ad. & E. 113; but not if, by the terms of the deed constituting the company, he ceased to be a director by his bankruptcy (Phelps v. Lyle, supra). If a third person collude with one partner of a firm to injure the other partners, the latter may, omitting the colluding partner, sue the third person so colluding (Longman v. Pole, 1 M. & M. 223).

But there may be cases where the employment of an agent may be several as well as joint, or cases of a subsequent severance, so as to entitle one partner to sue for his share, semble (Halsell v. Griffiths, 4 Tyrw. 488, n. a, b, c, and cases cited, Break v. Douglas, 4 Tyrw. 489). A declaration in assumpsit alleged that, in consideration that plt. and W. D. would sell and assign to the deft. a certain co-partnership business, &c., the defendant promised the plaintiff to pay him all the money that he had advanced in respect of the co-partnership, and also promised the plt. and W. D. that he would discharge all the debts due from them as such co-partners, and all liabilities to which they were subject as such. The declaration, after averring performance by the plt. and W. D., averred that the plt. had at the time of making the promise advanced a certain sum in respect of the co-partnership, and for which the co-partnership was at the time of the promise accountable to him; and laid as a breach the non-payment by the deft. to the plt. of that sum: held, good on motion in arrest of judgment (Jones v. Robinson, p. 168).

2d. Where, however, an express contract is made by one person, as the agent of another, the action for the breach of such contract may be brought either in the name of the agent, or in that of the principal (See per cur. in Cothay v. Fennell, 10 B. & C. 671; Skinner v. Stocks, 4 B. & A. 437; Garrett v. Handley, 4 B. & C. 664; Alexander v. Barker, 2 Tyrw. 140; but see Bowen v. Morris, 2 Taunt. 374; Garrett v. Handley, 3 B. & C. 460); provided, however, that the agent is dealt with as a contracting party, for where he acts, and is treated in the transaction as a mere servant, he cannot sue in his own name (see Evans v. Evans, 3 Ad. & E. 132). Where the plt. made a written contract for the sale of goods, in which he described himself as the agent of A., and the buyer accepted and paid the price of a portion of the goods, and had then notice that the plt. was himself the real principal in the transaction, and not an agent of A.: held, that the plt. might sue in his own name for the non-acceptance of and non-payment of the residue of the goods (Rayner v. Grote, 15 M. & W. 359; 16 Law J. 79, Ex.). As to the right of the principal to interfere as against the agent, see "AGENT," "PRINCIPAL AND AGENT." Hence, on a policy of insurance, either the agent who effected the policy or the person interested may sue (see post, "INSURANCE"). And an auctioneer (Williams v. Millington, 1 H. Bl. 81), factor, or del credere commission agent, may sue in his own name for the price of goods sold by him on account of his employer (see Morris v. Cleasby, 1 M. & S. 581).

*So, where the master of a ship delivers goods under a bill of lading, which makes them deliverable "on payment of freight," he [*171] may sue for such freight (see "FREIGHT"); so where the bill of lading specifies "demurrage," he may also sue for such demurrage (Jesson v. Solly, 4 Taunt. 52), the acceptance of the goods under such circumstances raising an implied contract with the master; but otherwise he cannot sue, as he has no legal interest therein (Brouncker v. Scott, 4 Taunt. 1).

Where by a lease not under seal, the guardians of an infant demised his lands, and the lessee undertook to pay the rent to the guardians, or to any other person duly authorized to receive the same, "for behoof" of the infant; it was held that the latter on coming of age might sue for the rent, though it would have been otherwise had the instrument been under seal (Fitzmaurice v. Waugh, 3 D. & R. 273; Carnegie v. Waugh, 2 D. & R. 277). And hence it was said by Buller, J. (in Marchington v. Vernon, 1 B. & P. 101, n.), that if a person make a promise to another for the benefit of a third, that third person may sue upon it.

So, where there is an express contract by one person in his own name, but on behalf of himself and others, the action may be brought by all, or by himself only. Hence, where three mercantile houses agreed to be jointly interested in certain goods, but that one of them should purchase in his own name, and he did so, it was held that all three might join in an action against the vendor for a breach of the contract, though the actual purchaser might have sued alone (Cothay v. Fennell, 10 B. & C. 673; S. P. Skinner v. Stocks, 4 B. & A. 437). But it would have been otherwise, had the agreement been made subsequently to the purchase (see Young v. Hunter, 4 Taunt. 582). And where one of the joint owners of a ship, placed in his banker's hands certain warrants of the East India Company for payment of freight, with directions to receive the proceeds, and place them to his private account, which was done, and after the death of the depositor the surviving part owners sued the bankers for this money; held, that they could not maintain the action, there being no privity of contract between them and the defts. (Sims v. Bond, 5 B. & A. 389; see Lucas v. De La Cour, 1 M. & S. 249; Robson v. Drummond, 2 B. & Ad. 303; Pinto v. Santos, 5 Taunt. 447; S. C. 1 Marsh. 132).

On this ground, a dormant partner in a firm may be joined with the other partners in an action on a partnership contract, or the latter may sue alone (see post "PARTNERS"): and where the deft. had received from the plts., as the trustees of an assurance company, the amount of a policy, executed by the plts. under seal, which was afterwards discovered to be void on account of fraud; it was held, that the plts. might recover back the money without joining the other members (Lefevre v. Boyle, 3 B. & Ad. 877).

But the parties may stipulate that the action may be brought in the name of a particular person (see Feltmakers' Company v. Davis, 1 B. & P. 98; Reidenhurst v. Bates, 3 Bing. 463; Davies v. Hawkins, 3 M. & S. 488; and see "PARTNERS;" but see Patrie v. Bury, 3 B. & C. 353). Where A. and B. carried on business as attorneys in co-partnership, and deft. employed them in that capacity; and it appeared that, by the agreement under which A. and B. entered into business together, B. was to receive annually out of the profits a certain sum, but he was not to be in any manner liable for losses, and was to have a lien on the profits for any loss he might sustain by reason of his liability: held, that they, as partners, properly joined in an action for work and labour, for the money when recovered [*172] would *be the joint property until the division took place (Bond v. Pittard, 3 M. & W. 357).

The rule above-mentioned applies equally to a contract in writing as to parol contracts; whether it be such as is required by statute to be in writing or not, provided it be not a contract under seal (Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 844). Where, by an agreement in writing, inter partes, A. and B. contracted to employ D. in their business as type-founders for a certain term; it was held, that C., a dormant partner with A. and B., might be sued jointly with them for a breach of such contract, though not named in it, on the ground that where the contract is not under seal evidence is in all cases admissible to show who the real parties are (Beckham v. Drake, 9 M. & W. 79, affirmed in error, overruling Beckham v. Knight, 5 Sco. 619; S. C. 4 B. N. C. 293; see Bateman v. Phillips, 15 Ea. 272; post, "DEFENDANT"). Where, however, the contract is under seal, none but the parties thereto can sue or be sued upon it. Hence, where by indenture, between B. of the one part and C. of the other, C. covenanted to pay a sum of money to A. who was not a party; it was held, that A. could not sue thereon (Salter v. Kedgley, Carth. 77; South (Lord) v. Brown, 6 B. & C. 718); though it was expressed, on the face of the deed, that B. entered into the contract as A.'s agent (Berkley v. Hardy, 5 B. & C. 355). So if A. covenant to pay B. a sum of money for the use of C. the action must be brought by B., and C. cannot sue thereon (Offley v. Ward, 1 Lev. 235; see 3 B. & P. 149, n). If one covenant with A. and B. to pay an annuity to A., this vests a joint legal interest in A. and B.; although the former is to derive the sole benefit (Anderson v. Martindale, 1 East, 497; Withers v. Bircham, 3 B. & C. 256; and post, "COVENANT," "BOND").

If the action be brought in the name of the wrong person, or, if there be a misjoinder, or nonjoinder of a necessary party, as co-plt. the objection may be taken on the general issue, or if it appear on the record by demurrer, motion in arrest of judgment, or writ of error (1 Saund. 291 f; Slingby's case, 5 Co. 18 b; 2 Saund. 115; see Cameron v. Reynolds, Cowp. 407; see as to action by Assignees, Executors, &c., these titles respectively).

The omission of the christian names of persons in pleading a written contract, unless it be excused by averment, is ground of special demurrer (Gatty v. Field, 15 Law J. 407; Applemans v. Blanche, 14 M. & W. 154; see Esdaile v. McClean, 15 M. & W. 277; Smith v. Bale, 15 Law J., 413, Q. B.; Levy v. Webb, 15 Law J., 407, Q. B.; Langdale v. McClean, 10 Jur. 642; Tigar v. Gordon, 9 M. & W. 347; Nash v. Collier, 17 Law J. 91, C. P.). Where a surviving-partner sued upon a contract made with himself and his deceased partner, without stating that he was survivor, he was nonsuited (Fell v. Douglas, 1 B. & A. 374; see Latch v. Wedlake, 3 P. & D. 499). So, where a contract for the sale of goods, which was made with three persons, was stated to be made with two; held fatal, though the correct quantity which the two were to have was stated (Parish v. Burwood, 5 Esp. 33; Everett v. Tindall, 5 Esp. 169). So, where the agreement was stated to be made between the plt. &c., when there were other parties, from whom the consideration for deft.'s promise moved (Chanter v. Leese, in error, 5 M. & W. 698).

The declaration alleged that in consideration that the plt. and W. D. would sell to the deft. their business, the deft. promised the plt. to pay him all the money he had advanced in respect of the co-partnership, and for which the co-partnership was accountable to the plt. Averment, performance by the plt. and W. D., and that the plt., at the time of the promise, had advanced a sum of money in respect of the co-partnership, and for which it was at the time of the promises accountable to him; breach, the non-payment of that sum by the deft.: held, a sufficient consideration to entitle the plt. to sue alone (Jones v. Robinson, 1 Exch. 454; 17 Jaw J. Exch. 36).

Defendants.] The action must be brought against the person who made the contract, either by himself or his agent (Young v. Brandeer, 8 East, 10; see Frazer v. Marsh, 13 East, 238; M'Ivor v. Humble, 16 East, 169). As before observed, where there is an *express contract, whether by parol or in writing, so that it be not under seal, it is competent for the other party to show that the [*173] person who actually entered into the contract did so as the agent of another, and to bring his action against the principal. Thus, where a broker buys or sells goods, the action for non-delivery or non-acceptance may be brought against his principal, though the name of the latter does not appear in the contract, and was not mentioned in the transaction (Trueman v. Loder, 3 P. & D. 267; S. C. 11 Ad. & E. 589; Whitehead v. Tuckett, 15 Ea. 400; Wilson v. Hart, 7 Taunt. 295; Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 840). So, where goods have been sold and delivered to a person as the real purchaser, and it afterwards becomes known that he was only an agent, the seller may at all times resort to the principal for the price (Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 Ea. 62; Smith's Leading Cases). Hence, where a bankrupt carried on the business in his own name, but for the benefit of his creditors under the authority of the assignee; it was held, that the latter was liable for goods supplied to the bankrupt in the way of trade (Kinder v. Howarth, 2 Stark. 354). So, where the purchaser was known at the time of the sale to be acting as his agent, but it was not known for whom, the principal was holden liable (Thompson v. Davenport, 9 B. & C. 78). But if the principal be known at the time of the sale, and the seller notwithstanding debit the agent, he cannot afterwards proceed against the principal (Addison v. Gandasequi, 4 Taunt. 574; see Paterson v. Gandasequi, supra; Thompson v. Davenport, supra). Except in cases where the principal for the purpose of fraud procured the goods to be sold on the agent's credit. In such cases the principal remains liable (Wilson v. Hart, 7 Taunt. 295; Hill v. Perrott, 3 Taunt. 274). And in the former cases if the principal has before notice (see Powell v. Nelson, cited 15 East, 65), and in the due course of business (see Waring v. Favenc, 1 Camp. 85), paid or otherwise settled with his agent, he is no longer liable (see Thompson v. Davenport, 9 B. & C. 78; Wyatt v. Headfort (Marquis), 3 East, 17, n.); and the agent is not liable for the non-performance of the contract, even for a deceitful warranty, if he had authority from his principal to make the contract (Paterson v. Gandasequi, supra; McBrain v. Fortune, 3 Camp. 317; Hartop v. Jenkes, 2 M. & S. 428; Bowen v. Morris, 2 Taunt. 387; Johnson v. Ogilby, 3 P. Wms. 278; Pochin v. Pawley, 1 Bla. R. 670; Pond v. Underwood, 2 Ld. Raym. 1210, and cases cited in 1 Ch. Pl. 40, n. g). If an attorney, "for and on behalf of his client, and as his agent," promise to pay money, he is not liable if he had authority (Hartop v. Jenkes, 2 M. & S. 438). Where a trader after an act of bankruptcy, employed an auctioneer to sell goods, who sent him the proceeds by the hands of the deft., it was decided that the assignee could not sue the deft. for the money (Coles v. Wright, 4 Taunt. 198; Coles v. Robins, 3 Camp. 183; White v. Bartlet, 9 Bing. 378; but see Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & S. 259). On sale of premises by auction, the memorandum of agreement to purchase and sell was signed by the auctioneer, as agent for the purchasers, and the vendor's attorney "as agent for S. S.," held, that the deposit money could not be recovered from the attorney, as he was not a stakeholder, but merely the vendor's agent, and payment of the deposit to him was payment to the vendor (Bamford v. Shuttleworth, 11 Ad. & E. 926; see "AGENT," "PRINCIPAL AND AGENT," "ATTORNEY").

On the same principle, a dormant partner may be joined with the ostensible partners in actions on partnership contracts; and it makes no difference that the contract is in writing, or that it was required so to be by [*174] the Statute of Frauds (Trueman v. Loder, 3 P. & D. 267; *S. C. 11 Ad. & E. 589), if it be not a contract by deed. Where by agreement between A. and B., described therein as co-partners of the one part, and C. of the other, A. and B. engaged to employ C. for a certain period in the way of their trade: it was held, that D., a dormant partner in the firm, might be sued jointly with A. and B. in an action for a breach of this contract (Beckham v. Drake, 9 M. & W. 79, affirmed in error, overruling Beckham v. Knight, 5 Sc. 619; S. C. 4 B. N. C. 243; see "PARTNERS"). If one of the parties originally bound be dead, he need not be noticed in the declaration, and the survivors may be sued as the parties primarily liable (Richards v. Heather, 1 B. & A. 29; Calder v. Rutherford, 3 B. & B. 302). Where a promise is so framed that it does not confer a remedy against the contractors jointly, but each is separately liable for his own acts, each must be separately sued; but where it appears upon the instrument that the promise by two contractors was intended to be joint, it may be so treated, although the promise was in terms several only (Lee v. Nixon, 3 Nev. & M. 441).

On the other hand, the action may be brought against the party by whom the contract was in fact made, though he were but an agent, unless it appears thereby, if it writing, or from the circumstances if by parol, that he was dealt with and treated in the transaction merely as an agent, and that no credit was given to him. Thus, if a broker enter into a contract for the sale of goods on behalf of his principal, and sign the bought-note or invoice in his own name, without describing himself as agent, the purchaser may sue him personally on the contract for not delivering them, though he knew that deft. was only an agent and who the principal was (Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 834; Jones v. Littledale, 6 Ad. & E. 486; 1 Nev. & P. 677; Magee v. Atkinson, 2 M. & W. 440; see Bowen v. Morris, 2 Taunt. 374; Spittle v. Lavender, supra); for though evidence is admissible to charge a third party, which is in effect only showing that such party contracted in a name not his own, and therefore the principal may be sued on a contract made by the agent in his own name, yet to allow evidence in discharge of the agent would be to contradict a written document by parol testimony (Ib.; Story on Agency, s. 269, 270). If an agent act as principal, and do not disclose the principal, or declare that he acts as agent at the time of making a verbal contract, and credit be given expressly to him, he will be personally responsible (McBrain v. Fortune, supra; Paterson v. Gandasequi, supra; Hanson v. Robendeau, Pea. 120; Mabeath v. Handimand, 1 T. R. 181; George v. Clagett, 7 T. R. 359; Simon v. Motivos, Burr. 1921). So, where an auctioneer sold goods without disclosing the name of his principal, it was held, that the purchaser was entitled to look to him personally for the completion of the contract, and that he was liable to an action for not delivering them in due time (Hanson v. Roberdean, Pea. 120; see post, "AUCTIONEER"). And, on the other hand, where a clerk bought goods for his master, but did not inform the purchaser that he was a clerk for whom he purchased, he was holden personally liable for the price (Seaber v. Hawkes, 5 M. & P. 549). And where defts. entered into an agreement by which they, "as solicitors" for a third party, undertook to pay certain moneys to the plt. they were holden personally liable (Burrell v. Jones, 3 B. & A. 47; see also Kennedy v. Goreia, 3 D. & R. 503; Norton v. Herron, 1 C. & P. 643; Redhead v. Cator, 1 Stark. 14). But where, in a similar case, the principal added at the foot of the agreement, "I hereby sanction this agreement, and approve of A. B. having signed the same on my behalf," this was held conclusive that the agent did not intend to become *personally [*175] liable; and in an action against him the plt. was nonsuited (Spittle v. Lavender, 2 B. & B. 452). Where the deft., by a written agreement expressed to be made "by himself on behalf of A. B. of the one part, and plt. of the other," stipulated that he the deft. would execute to the plt. a lease of premises, which it was proved belonged to A. B.; held, personally liable, and there is no difference between deeds and parol agreements (Norton v. Herron, Ry. & M. 229). So the defts. were held personally liable on a written undertaking, that "they, as solicitors to the assignees," &c., undertook to pay the rent (Burrell v. Jones, 3 B. & A. 47; Iveson v. Coninton, 1 B. & C. 160). The deft. a merchant residing at St. P., carried on business in London through H., who had no capital or credit, and was known to represent the deft., though H.'s name was always used. The deft. gave notice to H. that he purposed to cease employing him, after which H. contracted with deft. to sell him tallow, and H.'s name was used as before; H. intended to contract on his own account, but plt. did not know this, and believed that H. represented the deft. as usual. The contract was made by a broker acting for both parties. He signed bought and sold notes, the former beginning, "bought for J." (plt.), and the latter, "sold for H. to my principals." Held, deft. was liable for the non-delivery (Truman v. Loder, 11 Ad. & E. 589).

Spittle v. Lavender, p. 173, illustrates the general rule, that where the person contracting is known to be, and is treated as the agent of another party who is known as the principal, he cannot be made personally liable, unless he exceeded his authority and thereby discharged his principal, or unless he expressly agreed to be responsible (see Owen v. Gooch, 2 Esp. 567; Thomas v. Edwards, 2 M. & W. 215). Hence an attorney is not liable for the expenses of a witness whom he subpoenaed on behalf of his client (Robins v. Bridge, 3 M. & W. 214); nor a solicitor in bankruptcy cases for the assignees' bill (Hartopp v. Jukes, 2 M. & S. 438); nor the governor of a fort or colony for stores or ammunition supplied on behalf of the government (Macbeath v. Haldimand, 1 T. R. 172; Unwin v. Wolsely, ib. 674; see Thompson v. Pearce, 1 B. & B. 25; Cunningham v. Collier, 4 Doug. 233); nor is the colonel of a troop liable as such for forage supplied to the troop (Rice v. Chute, 1 Ea. 579; Myrtle v. Beaver, ib. 135). Nor is the secretary at war liable to a retired clerk at the War Office for his retired allowance, although he received such allowance in his official character (Chidley v. Palmerston (Lord), 3 B. & B. 275). But an attorney, who, in the course of a cause or matter, employs another attorney as his agent, is by the usage of business personally liable to pay him (Saull v. Whittington, 2 B. & C. 11; see Foster v. Blakelock, 5 B. & C. 328; see "ATTORNEY"). On the same ground the master of a ship, as well as the owner, is personally liable for repairs (Rich v. Coe, Cowp. 639); and a broker, who purchases for a foreign principal, for the price (see Eyre, C. J., 1 B. & P. 368; 9 B. & C. 78; 15 Ea. 62).

The registered owner of a ship is the party who, besides the master, is prima facie liable for stores provided, or repairs done, (Treheller v. Rowe, 11 East, 435; Stokes v. Carne, 2 Camp. 340; Webster v. Seekamp, 4 B. & A. 352); but if it be shown that another person is beneficially entitled to and receives the profits (Young v. Brander, 8 East, 10); or that credit was given to another, this implied contract does not arise. So where goods are shipped in, or stores supplied to a chartered vessel, the action for non-delivery of the one, and for the price of the other, should be brought against the charterer, and not the owner (James v. Jones, 3 Esp. 27; see Frazer v. Marsh, 13 East, 238). And the mortgagee *of a ship is not liable for wages [*176] or repairs, where the party claiming the debt was employed by the mortgagor, expressly giving him credit (Annett v. Carstairs, 3 Camp. 354; Briggs v. Wilkinson, 7 B. & C. 30; Cox v. Reid, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 199; Harrington v. Fry, 2 Bing. 179). The master of a ship has authority by law to pledge the credit of his owner, resident in England, for money advanced to the master in an English port, when the owner has no agent there or near, and the advance of money is requisite for the prosecution of the voyage (Arthur v. Barton, 6 M. & W. 138); and he has also authority to obtain supplies of goods in a foreign port for the necessary use of the ship, on the credit of the owners, independently of express stipulation in the charter-party (Weston v. Wright, 7 M. & W. 396; see Rich v. Cox, Cowp. 639; Westerdell v. Dale, 7 T. R. 312; Abb. Sh., by Shee, Sergt.); and the master, or the owners, may be sued upon the bill of lading, or generally, for the loss of goods, unless there be an express contract with the owners (Boson v. Sandford, Carth. 58; Bac. Ab. Actions, B).

It seems a policy-broker alone can be sued for the premiums of insurance (1 Marsh. In. 204).

Where an agent does not pursue his authority, or so far exceeds it as to discharge his principal, or where he acts under an authority which he knows the principal has no right to give, he is personally responsible (Fenn v. Harrison, 3 T. R. 761; Mertens v. Winnington, 1 Esp. 112; Johnson v. Ogilby, 3 P. Wms. 279; Eaton v. Bell, 5 B. & A. 34; Bowen v. Morris, 2 Taunt. 386; Ex parte Bennett, 10 Ves. 400; Buller v. Harrison, Cowp. 565; Sadler v. Evans, 4 Burr. 1984; B. N. P. 133; Pond v. Underwood, 2 Ld. Raym. 1210; Greenway v. Hurd, 4 T. R. 558; Cary v. Webster, 1 Stra. 480; Snowden v. Davis, 1 Taunt. 359; Bowen v. Morris, supra; see "AGENT," "PRINCIPAL AND AGENT").

Where a person has received money, as agent of another who had no right thereto, and has not paid it over, an action lies against the agent to recover the money, and the mere passing of such money in account with the principal, or making a rest without any new credit given to him, fresh bills accepted, or further sums advanced to the principal in consequence of it, is not equivalent to the payment of the money to the principal (Cox v. Prentice, 3 M. & S. 344; Buller v. Harrison, Cowp. 565; Cary v. Webster, supra; Edwards v. Hoddings, 5 Taunt. 815). But in general, if the money be paid over before notice to retain it, the agent is not liable, unless his receipt of the money was obviously illegal, and his authority was wholly void (1 Ch. Pl. 42, and cases cited, n. d., e.). Where a debtor of plt. transmitted a sum of money to deft., who admitted having received it, and being afterwards informed that it was meant to be paid to the plt., said that he would so pay it; these statements were communicated to plt. by deft.'s authority: held, that on his failing to pay, plt. might sue him, and that deft. could not allege a want of consideration moving from plt. to himself (Lily v. Hayes, 5 Ad. & E. 448). When plt. sold goods to B., taking his acceptances for the price, and sent them to the deft. as B.'s agent, who consigned them to his partners abroad for sale; whilst the acceptances were running, plt. doubted B.'s solvency, and required farther security; it was then agreed between plt. B. and the deft., that B. should write and deliver to the deft. a letter authorizing him, out of any remittances he might receive against the net proceeds of the above consignment, to pay the acceptances as they became due if not honoured by him, B., previously to the receipt of such net proceeds; the letter was delivered to deft., and he consented thereto. Before the bills were due B. became bankrupt, and deft., having received the net proceeds *of the goods, refused to pay any part thereof to the plt., but handed [*177.] them over to B.'s assignees: held, that plt. was entitled to recover the amount of the acceptances from deft. in an action for money had and received, this being an appropriation irrevocable, except by consent of all parties, for which the existing debt, although not then payable, was a good consideration (Walker v. Rostron, 9 M. & W. 411). A. being a deft. in an action brought by B., paid the debt and costs to his own country attorney for transmission to B., the attorney sent a cheque exceeding the amount to his own town agent directing him to pay the debt and costs out of it. The agent acknowledged the receipt by letter to the country attorney, promising to apply the money as directed, but he retained it in reduction of a debt due to him from the attorney; held, that there was no sufficient privity to support an action for money had and received by A. against the agent (Cobb v. Becke, 6 Q. B. 930; see further, "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED").

Where goods are supplied to, or work done for, a joint-stock trading or other company associated for profit, the action may be brought against all the directors, though some of them only gave the order (Doubleday v. Muskett, 7 Bing. 110); and this, though the project failed before the company was completely organized (Ib.). And where such company has commenced its operations every shareholder, who has become a complete partner, is liable to be sued for debts properly incurred by the company in carrying on its affairs after such party became such partner, though he was not known to be a partner at the time the credit was given, and though it was stated in the prospectus that the company was to purchase for cash, and no debt was to be incurred (Hawken v. Bourne, 8 M. & W. 703). And every person who by interference or otherwise holds himself out as a partner is liable, though he parted with his shares before the company was completely formed (Perring v. Hone, 4 Bing. 28; Ellis v. Schniveck, 5 Bing. 521; see Bourne v. Tredwen, 9 B. & C. 632; S. C. 4 M. & R. 512; Dickinson v. Valpy, 10 B. & C. 128; Braithwaite v. Schofield, 9 B. & C. 401). So, where a company commences business before the prescribed number of shares is subscribed for, every subscriber who authorises the directors so to proceed becomes liable, as much as if the company was completely formed (Tredwen v. Bourne, 6 M. & W. 461; Steigenberger v. Carr, 3 Sc. N. R. 466). But in such case it must be shown that the deft. knew of and sanctioned their so proceeding (Pilchford v. Davis, 5 M. & W. 2; S. C. 3 Jur. 408; Fox v. Clifton, 6 Bing. 776; 4 M. & P. 676; 9 Bing. 115; S. C. 2 Moo. & S. 146); but he is not liable for goods ordered before he became a partner (Whitehead v. Barron, 2 M. & R. 248; see "PUBLIC COMPANIES").

But, with regard to other associations, as charitable institutions, clubs, &c. the rule is different; and, in order to charge any person other than the one who actually entered into the contract, or gave the order, it must be shown affirmatively that he gave authority so to do. Hence, the members of a club were holden not liable for work done or goods supplied by the order of the committee, the rules giving no authority to the committee to deal on credit, and the defts. not being shown to have authorized it (Fleming v. Hector, 2 M. & W. 172; see Adams v. Rippon, 2 M. & W. 172). Nor are even committee-men, who were not present when the orders were given, liable without proof of authority (Todd v. Emly, 7 M. & W. 427; 8 M. & W. 505). But where deft. who was one of a committee for managing the affairs of a hospital, supported by voluntary contributions, frequently attended their meetings, at which accounts were audited, and cheques signed, *he was [*178] holden liable for bread furnished to the hospital during that period, though it did not appear who had given the orders (Burls v. Smith, 7 Bing. 705; Delawrey v. Strickland, 2 Stark. 416; see post, "PARTNERS"). A fortiori, the person who hath actually given the order is liable, unless it appear that he acted, and was treated only as an agent, and that credit was given to another. Where a person, as agent of an election committee, opened a public house for the voters of the candidate, and was afterwards sued for the value of the refreshments, it was held, that if plt. supplied them on a mere speculation that the candidate, or some other person would, as a matter of honour, pay for them, no contract was created with any one; but that if he looked to be paid for them as a matter of right, then the person who gave the order was prima facie liable, but if plt. showed that he was employed by another, and that the latter was not acting as agent for a third person, then the latter would be liable though he did not intend to pledge his personal responsibility (Thomas v. Edwards, 2 M. & W. 215); and, where churchwardens, in pursuance of a resolution of vestry, gave orders for the repairs of a church, they were holden personally liable, though the parishioners who signed the resolution were not (Lancaster v. Tucker, 1 Bing. 201; S. P. Same v. Frewer, 2 Bing. 361; Sprött v. Powell, 3 Bing. 478); and where goods were ordered by one of two overseers for the supply of the poor, both are prima facie liable (Eden v. Tischmaish, 1 Ad. & E. 691; Malkin v. Vickerstaff, 1 B. & A. 89).

The action on bills of exchange and promissory notes cannot be brought against any other than the party whose name appears thereon as the drawer, acceptor, &c., though it be known that such party drew or accepted only as agent, if it does not so appear on the face of the instrument (Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 M. & S. 345; Sowerby v. Butcher, 2 C. & M. 368); and where a person accepts a bill, as by procuration, for the drawee, having no authority to do so, neither can he be sued on the bill, but the former is liable to an action on the case for the fraud (Polhill v. Walker, 3 B. & Ad. 114, see Wilson v. Barthruf, 2 M. & W. 863); so, if a bill be drawn on and accepted by one partner, in his own name, the others cannot be sued on it (Emly v. Lye, 15 East, 7); except where the business was carried on in the name of such partner only, and then an action may be brought against all the parties composing the firm (Carolina Bank case, 8 B. & C. 427; see post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE").

When the contract is several as well as joint, the plt. may proceed jointly or separately, though the interest be joint (1 Ch. Pl. 50; see Lilley v. Hedges, 1 Stra. 553; Envys v. Dennithorne, 2 Burr. 1197; Brown v. Wootton, Cro. Jac. 73; 5 Co. R. 86; Claxon v. Swift, 3 Mod. 87); and where the debt or demand is considerable, it is advisable to proceed separately, see 1 Ch. Pl. 51.

Where the Interest has been assigned, or the Credit changed.] In general, an action for the breach of a mere personal contract cannot be brought against an assignee; the action must be brought against the original party (see Bally v. Wells, 3 Wils. 27; Saville v. Robertson, 4 T. R. 720; see ante, "PLAINTIFFS;" 1 Ch. Pl. 54); but there may be a change of credit by agreement between the parties, so as to transfer the liability from the original contracting parties (1 Ch. Pl. 54, and n. p). Thus, where the plts. were creditors to T. and the defts. debtors to T., and they all agreed that the defts. should pay to the plts. the debt due from them to T.; held, that the plts. were entitled to recover (Wilson v. Coupland, 2 B. & A. 228), but T., must be discharged from all liability, otherwise the action will not *lie (Hodgson v. Anderson, 3 B. & C. 855; Wharton v. Walker, 4 B. [*179] & C. 166; Wilson v. Coupland, supra; Fairlie v. Denton, 8 B. & C. 395). See instances of a new firm adopting a debt of an old firm, and thereby becoming liable (1 Mont. Bank. L. 619; Weston v. Barton, 4 Taunt. 673; Bodenham v. Purchas, 2 B. & A. 39; Hart v. Alexander, 2 M. & W. 484; see further, 1 Ch. Pl. 54; post, "PARTNERS").

Joinder of Defendants.] As a general rule, all the contracting parties should be made co-defts., or the deft. may plead in abatement (see ante, "ABATEMENT"), but cannot treat the omission as a material variance at the trial on the general issue (Mountstephen v. Brooke, 1 B. & A. 224). But the right of pleading in abatement is greatly restricted by statute 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 11 and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 8, the first of which requires an affidavit, that the plea is true, and the second an affidavit, stating the residence of the omitted party, which must be within the jurisdiction of the court (see "ABATEMENT"); and if this be omitted the deft. will be chargeable with the whole debt, and he cannot object on the general issue, as a variance, that a bill or note stated to be made by deft. was in fact made by him and others (Mountstephen v. Brooke, 1 B. & A. 224; Wilson v. Reddall, Gow, R. 161); and as the plea in abatement must mention all the co-contracting parties whom the plt. has not sued, so as to give him a better writ (Godson v. Good, 6 Taunt. 587; S. C. 2 Mar. 299), otherwise the plt. may safely take issue upon it; it follows, that if either of the parties happen to be out of the jurisdiction, the plt. may select which, or as many as he pleases. If either be a certificated bankrupt or discharged insolvent, the plt. may and should omit him (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 10), provided of course that the cause of action is one which is barred by the certificate or discharge. In actions against common carriers, mail contractors, and stage-coach proprietors, a plea in abatement for nonjoinder is inadmissible (1 Will. IV. c. 68, s. 5); and, though a dormant partner may be joined in an action with the other partners, yet the latter, if sued alone, cannot plead the nonjoinder in abatement (Mullett v. Hook, M. & M. 88; Baldrey v. Ritchie, 1 Stark. 338; De Maniort v. Saunders, 1 B. & Ad. 398; see "PARTNERS"). Formerly, if one of the contracting parties was an infant, or feme covert, he could not properly be sued (Chandler v. Parkes, 3 Esp. 76; Jaffray v. Frobain, 5 Esp. 47); but this appears to have been altered by the effect of the pleading rules (see Lush's Pr. 78); at all events, plt. may safely omit such party, and if the nonjoinder be pleaded, reply the infancy or coverture (Burgess v. Merrell, 4 Taunt. 468; see 1 Ch. Pl. 52). Where, in assumpsit for work and labour against several defts., one the wife of another, the declaration alleged promises by the deft., and deft. pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of other parties; after verdict for the plt., the court refused to arrest the judgment, as it did not appear that the promise was not made before marriage (France v. White, 1 Sco. N. R. 604; 1 Man. & G. 731); but the declaration would be bad on special demurrer (France v. White, supra, per Maule, J.; see Nurse v. Wills, 4 B. & A. 739). But if it expressly appear upon the face of the declaration, or some other pleading of the plt., that the omitted party is still living, as well as that he jointly contracted, in that case the deft. may demur, or move in arrest of judgment, or bring error (1 Saund. 291 b, &c. n. 4; 154, n. 1; Scott v. Godwin, 1 B. & P. 73; but see Churchill v. Gardner, 7 Taunt. 596; South v. Tanner, 2 Taunt. 254; see 1 Ch. Pl. 54).

On the other hand, the joinder of too many persons as co-defts. is fatal on non assumpsit, or, if the objection appear on record, by *demurrer, [*180] arrest of judgment, or writ of error (Mansell v. Burrige, 7 T. R. 352); and, though all but one suffer judgment, and that one deny the contract, the plt. must prove a joint-contract by all, in like manner as if all had joined in the plea (Shirreff v. Wilks, 1 Ea. 52; see Porter v. Harris, 1 Lev. 63; Hanney v. Smith, 3 T. R. 662; Robeson v. Ganderton, 9 C. & P. 476; see Jacques v. Whitcombe, 1 Esp. 363; Coope v. Eyre, 1 H. Bl. 37; Powell v. Layton, 2 N. R. 365; Max v. Roberts, 2 N. R. 454; Neale v. King, 12 East, 454; Burton v. Hanson, 2 Taunt. 49; Cooper v. Whitehouse, 6 C. & P. 545). The court will not permit the striking out the names of one or more defts. to cure the defect (Cooper v. Whitehouse, supra).

Where there is any doubt as to the propriety of joining a party, the safer course is to sue in the first instance those only against whom the plt. is certain of succeeding; and, if they plead in abatement, to commence a fresh action, including the omitted parties. Then, it will be incumbent on the defts. in the first action, at their peril, to prove that the new parties are jointly liable with them (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 10). If deft. plead in abatement the non-joinder of a party, and it should turn out that there are other joint-contractors not named in the plea, the deft. will not succeed thereon (Godson v. Good, 6 Taunt. 587; Abbott v. Smith, 2 Bl. R. 951; see Hill v. White, 6 B. N. C. 23). See, as to cases where some of the contracting parties are discharged by the Statute of Limitations, post, "STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS."

When, however, the plt. finds that he has misjoined a party, he may obtain a rule or order to amend the proceedings, by striking out the name of such party on payment of his costs (Palmer v. Beall, 9 Dowl. 529). This has been allowed even after verdict, and a new trial granted. Lastly, a certificated bankrupt may plead his certificate to an action for the price of goods wrongfully sold by him, which he could not do if the plt. sued in trover (Parkes v. Norton, 6 T. R. 695; Utterton v. Vernon, 3 T. R. 539, per Buller, J.).

Form of Pleadings.

With respect to the title of the court and term, the venue and usual commencement of declaration, see post, "DECLARATION."

Declaration.] The declaration in this action must invariably disclose the consideration upon which the contract was founded; the contract itself, whether express or implied, and the breach thereof, and damages (Bac. Abr. Assumpsit, F); and whether the contract be express, or implied, or in writing, or by parol, the declaration is the same: always stating a specific contract, which may be proved in evidence, by showing a contract, either express or implied.

1. Common Counts.] The form of the declaration is either common or special.

In general, the common or indebitatus counts are applicable only to the recovery of debts, and where a common action of debt might have been sustained (Hard's case, Salk. 23). Wherever the terms of a special agreement have been performed, so as to leave a mere simple debt or duty between the parties, plt. may proceed on the common count (Stone v. Rogers, 2 M. & W. 448; see Irving v. Veitch, 3 M. & W. 111, per Parke, B.). No action of indebitatus assumpsit, or upon a quantum meruit can be brought, for any thing done under a special agreement which remains open (Gordon v. Martin, Fitz-Gib. 303; Hall v. Heightman, 2 East, 145; Cutler v. Powell, 6 T. R. 320; Sinclair v. Bowles, see 2 Smith, Leading Cases, n. 10; see also Ellis v. Hamlin, 3 Taunt. 52; R. v. Whittlebury, 6 T. R. 467; Spain v. Arnott, 2 Stark. 256; Turner v. Robinson, 6 C. & P. 16; *Ridgway v. Hungerford Market Company, 3 Ad. & E. 171; Jesse v. Roy, 1 [*181] C. M. & R. 342; Sinclair v. Bowles, 9 B. & C. 92). Assumpsit for work and labour, and materials. It appeared that the plt. repaired three chandeliers for deft., and that 5*l.* was a reasonable price for the work and materials; but it also appeared that the plt., when he accepted the job, expressly agreed to make them complete for the 10*l.*, which he had failed in doing. Park, J., nonsuited the plt., with leave to move to enter a verdict for 5*l.*, which was refused, as the contract was entire, and the plt. not having completed his part had no right to recover anything (Sinclair v. Bowles, supra); but see Roberts v. Havelock, 3 B. & Ad. 404, where there was also a specific contract to do work, but when a portion of it was done plt. demanded payment for what he had already done and refused to finish the job without, and then sued in indebitatus assumpsit; held, that plt. was entitled to recover, for there was nothing in the case that amounted to a contract to do the whole repairs and make no demand until they were completed (see this case discussed in 2 Smith's L. Ca. 12; this case was distinguished from Sinclair v. Bowles, on the ground that there the contract was for a specific sum; see also Withers v. Reynolds, 2 B. & Ad. 882; see "ATTORNEY"). But where the terms of the special agreement have been performed on the one side, and nothing remains to be done upon the other but a money payment, that may be enforced by an action of indebitatus assumpsit (Cooke v. Munstone, 1 B. & P. 354; B. N. P. 139; Alcorne v. Westbrooke, 1 Wils. 117; Clutterbuck v. Coffin, 3 Man. & G. 842; see Bianchi v. Nash, 1 M. & W. 545; Grissell v. Robinson, 3 B. N. C. 10, per Tindal, C. J.). The nonperformance of a stipulation, not being a condition precedent to repayment, is no objection to indebitatus assumpsit for money lent (Scott v. Parker, 1 Q. B. 810). Where goods have been supplied or work done under a special agreement, but not in conformity therewith, compensation may be enforced by this form of action, the deft. having retained and enjoyed the benefit of that which was done (Farnsworth v. Gerrard, 1 Camp. 38; Read v. Rann, 10 B. & C. 440, per Parke, B.; recognized in Broad v. Thomas, 7 Bing. 99; see this subject discussed and all the cases collected in Cutter v. Powell, 2 Smith's L. Ca. n. 13; see Denew v. Daverell, 3 Camp. 451; also Bracy v. Carter, 12 Ad. & E. 373; Nicholls v. Wilson, 11 M. & W. 107; Hill v. Featherstonehaugh, 7 Bing. 569; Shaw v. Arden, 9 Bing. 287; Gill v. Laugher, 1 Tyr. 124; Huntley v. Bulwer, 6 B. N. C. 111; see where plt. may put an end to a special contract, and sue for what has been done under it; Withers v. Reynolds, 2 B. & Ad. 882; Planché v. Colburn, 8 Bing. 14; Franklin v. Miller, 4 Ad. & E. 599; see Lines v. Rees, reported 2 Smith's L. Ca. 18; see Robson v. Drummond, 2 B. & Ad. 303; Palmer v. Temple, 9 Ad. & E. 508; Amor v. Fearon, 9 Ad. & E. 550). If a contract involve personal confidence, the death of the party confided in, rendering its performance impossible will terminate the contract, otherwise not (see Wentworth v. Cock, 10 Ad. & E. 42: as to what will justify the rescission of a contract, see Withers v. Reynolds, supra; Fillieul v. Armstrong, 7 Ad. & E. 557; Freeman v. Taylor, 8 Bing. 124; Franklyn v. Miller, supra; Fitt v. Cassanett, 4 Man. & G. 898; and see Ch. Contr.).

Where a servant has contracted to serve for a certain time at certain wages, and his master has turned him away before that period in consequence of his misconduct, he is entitled to no wages, for his faithful service is a condition precedent to his right to recover (Turner v. Robinson, 5 B. & Ad. 789; Callo v. Brouncker, 4 C. & P. 518; Spain v. *Arnott, [*182] 2 Stark. 256; Amor v. Fearon, 9 Ad. & E. 548; Turner v. Mason, 14 M. & W. 116). But if the master wrongfully dismiss him, he may immediately bring a special action for the breach of contract; or he may treat the contract as rescinded, and may sue on a quantum meruit; or he may wait till the end of the period for which he was hired, and may then, perhaps, sue for his whole wages in indebitatus assumpsit (Pagani v. Gandolfi, 2 C. & P. 370; Blanché v. Colburn, supra; Orchard v. Horner, 3 C. & P. 349; Gundell v. Pontigny, 4 Camp. 375; and see Collins v. Price, 5 Bing. 134, and Smith v. Kingsford, 3 Sco. 279; but see Smith v. Haward, 7 Ad. & E. 544; see also Eardly v. Price, 2 N. R. 333, overruled by Fewings v. Tisdal, 11 Jur. 977; see Bloxham v. Waggstaff, 5 Jur. 845). Where the contract of yearly service is put an end to by consent in the middle of a quarter, there is no implied contract to pay pro rata; but a new agreement to pay for the broken part of the year's service may be inferred from circumstances, which should therefore be submitted to the jury (Lamburn v. Cruden, 2 Man. & G. 253; and see Thomas v. Williams, 1 Ad. & E. 685). Although there may be a special contract, yet if a part of the work have not been included therein, but is performed at defl.'s request, the price of it may be recovered in this form of action, but the contract, if in writing, must be produced, that it may appear how much was extra, and if it be not stamped the plt. will be nonsuited (see "STAMPS"). In assumpsit for the price, and the setting up of, "a 14-horse power steam-engine," "the last instalment to be paid two months after its completion," it appeared that the engine was of less power than that mentioned in the contract, and improvements and alterations were made by plt. from time to time till the action was brought: held, 1. That common counts would lie. 2. That the term "completion" did not apply to the mere making of improvements and alterations. 3. That the degree of power of the engine was a material part of the contract (Parsons v. Saxter, 2 Car. & Kir. 266, Erle, J.)

The form of the count is the same in assumpsit as in debt (see post); but in assumpsit a promise to pay must be alleged, which promise is implied by law, from the relationship of debtor and creditor. Hence, indebitatus assumpsit does not lie on a bill of exchange by payee against the acceptor, nor on a promissory note, guarantee, or wager (Borey v. Castlereau, Ld. Raym. 69; Com. Dig. Act. Ass. A 2); for, there is an express contract which creates the debt, and that contract must be declared on specially. But indebitatus assumpsit lies on an Irish (Vaughan v. Plunkett, 3 Taunt. 85; Harris v. Saunders, 4 B. & C. 411; see Guinness v. Carroll, 1 B. & Ad. 459) or foreign judgment (Plaislow v. Van Uxem, Doug. 513); though not on a judgment of the courts at Westminster, as that is matter of record. And where work has been done or services performed under a written agreement, indebitatus assumpsit for work and labour lies (see post, "WORK AND LABOUR"). So, it lies for use and occupation, though the deft. hold under a written agreement, if it were not under seal (see post, "USE AND OCCUPATION"). When the amount of a bill of exchange, may be recovered on the common counts, see post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE."

Where, in indebitatus assumpsit, the plt. by his declaration claims one sum for work, &c., money paid and had and received, the whole forms only one count (McGregor v. Graves, 3 Ex. 34; 18 Law J. 109). Where, therefore, the latter part of the declaration was bad for not alleging that the money was paid, &c., at the request of the deft.: held, after a general verdict for the plt., that the defect in the declaration was no ground for arresting the judgment (Ib.).

Form of Count.] The form of an indebitatus count is now given by Rule of Court (see "FORMS," post). The quantum valebat and quantum meruit counts are abolished. There is, it will be observed, no prefatory inducement. They state, that deft. was, on a certain day, indebted to plt. in a certain sum, for (a given consideration); and that, in consideration thereof, he promised to *pay it on request. No venue should be [*183] inserted in the body of the count (R. G. H. 4 Will. IV. pl. 8). The precise date is immaterial, though, if no time be stated, the count will be demurable (Ring v. Roxborough, 2 C. & J. 418; but, as the plt. cannot give in evidence any demand accruing after the day mentioned, it is usual and proper to allege the day before the date of the writ when the action is between the contracting parties; where it is brought by or against an executor, or by an assignee, &c., the day before the death, bankruptcy, &c. The precise amount is also immaterial. It must be stated for what cause the debt or duty became due, in order that it may appear to the court to be matter whereon an assumpsit may be founded, or wherein the deft. may demur, or move in arrest of judgment (Rooke v. Rooke, Cro. Jac. 206; Foster v. Smith, Cro. Car. 31). But a very general statement suffices; as for goods then sold and delivered, without specifying what they were: and recent decisions show, that the word "then," or any statement of time in this part of the count is unnecessary (Webb v. Baker, 7 Ad. & E. 81; Lane v. Thelwall, 1 M. & W. 140; Derligner v. Fenna, 7 M. & W. 439; S. C. 9 Dowl. 244; Leaf v. Lees, 4 M. & W. 579; S. C. 7 Dowl. 189); even in a count upon an account stated (Bingley v. Durham, 1 P. & D. 58; S. C. Ad. & E. 775; Leaf v. Lees, supra, semble, overruling Ferguson v. Mitchell, 2 C. M. & R. 687). It is in most cases, except in counts for money had and received, and in an account stated, essential to aver, that the consideration arose at the deft.'s request, and the omission of these words, where necessary, would be fatal (Hayes v. Waner, 2 Str. 933; 1 Saund. 264; Cro. Jac. 18); though such request may, in some cases, be implied in evidence (see "MONEY LENT," &c.; 1 Saund. 264, n. 1; Durnford v. Messiter, 5 M. & S. 446; Friche v. Poole, 9 B. & C. 543). Several debts due in respect of different contracts not under seal, of the same or a different nature as demands for work and debts for goods, moneys lent, &c., may be included in one count of this description, and the plt. will succeed pro tanto, though he only prove one of such contracts (2 Saund. 122, n. 2). If one of the subject-matters be improperly stated, the deft. should not demur to the whole, but only to the insufficient part of the count or declaration (Ring v. Roxbrough, supra). Under an indebitatus count the plt. may recover what may be due to him, although no specific price or sum was agreed upon (2 Saund. 122 a, n. 2).

Promise.] The statement of a promise to pay is essential, and the want of it is objectionable on special, and perhaps even on general demurrer, or in arrest of judgment (see Lee v. Welch, 2 Str. 793; Com. Dig. Act. Ass. H; Harding v. Hibel, 4 Tyrw. 314; Hayter v. Moat, 5 Dowl. 298; S. C. 2 M. & W. 56; Head v. Baldrey, 2 N. & P. 217; but see Griffith v. Roxborough, 2 M. & W. 734; Starke v. Cheeseman, 1 Ld. Raym. 538; Wegerslofe v. Keene, 1 Stra. 224). Where a count stated an agreement between plt. and deft., but omitted the mutual promises, the court held that an agreement was a promise (Mountford v. Horton, 2 N. R. 62; see Corbett v. Packington, 6 B. & C. 268). No distinction exists between pleading an implied promise and an express one (1 Ch. Pl. 309; see Starke v. Cheeseman, supra; Anon. 6 Mod. 131; Kinder v. Paris, 2 H. Bl. 563, n. a); and it should be alleged to have been made after the debt accrued, and on a day prior to the commencement of the action; but, where the day mentioned was one subsequent to the date of the writ, the Court refused to arrest the judgment (Arnold v. Arnold, 3 Sc. 547; 5 Dowl. 203; 3 B. N. C. 81).

The usual allegation is, that "afterwards, to wit, on the day and [*184] year aforesaid, deft. promised." In strict form, the promise should be stated to have been made to the plt., but these words are not material in an indebitatus count, as it there appears that the consideration moved from the plt. (Com. Dig. Act. Ass. A, 5; Jones v. Owen, 5 Ad. & E. 222; Banks v. Camp, 9 Bing. 604; S. C. 2 M. & Sc. 734); otherwise the objection would be fatal (Price v. Easton, 1 N. & M. 303; S. C. 4 B. & Ad. 433). The form states the promise, under a "whereas" (see Ring v. Roxburgh, 2 C. & J. 418); but the omission of this word is not a ground of demurrer (Com. Dig. Act. Ass. H; see Shepherd v. Goshen, 4 Jur. 578). Where, (after stating a former agreement for the sale of goods by the deft. to plt., at a certain rate or price per pound, to be paid in a manner then stipulated between them, the goods to be delivered by the defts. to the plts. at a time which had elapsed before making the promise thereafter mentioned, but which goods had not been delivered) the declaration stated a new contract, that, in consideration the plt. would still receive and pay for the goods at the rate or price and in manner aforesaid deft. promised to deliver the same within such reasonable time as aforesaid, held, too general, and bad on special demurrer (Andrews v. Whithead, 13 East, 102; see Reading (Mayor) v. Clarke, 4 B. & A. 268; but see Royle v. Bagshaw, Cro. Eliz. 149; Com. Dig. Ass. H, 3). Lastly, the promise upon an indebitatus count should be, to pay "on request." A promise to pay at a future time, unless some new consideration be shown, is bad on general demurrer (Hopkins v. Logan, 5 M. & W. 241; 7 Dowl. 360; but see Davies v. Wilkinson, 2 P. & D. 256; see Roscorla v. Thomas, 2 G. & D. 508; 6 Jur. 929). The day of the promise is immaterial in general (Arnold v. Arnold, 3 B. N. C. 81).

Breach.] The breach must be co-extensive with the promise, but a general allegation that the deft. "has not paid any of the said moneys," suffices; though there is a count on a bill of exchange, as well as the common counts (Turner v. Denman, 4 Tyr. 313); and, a breach in this form was held good, in an action by executors laying the promise to the testator, the objection being, that it should have averred non-payment to the testator in his lifetime, and to the plts. since his decease (Debenham v. Chambers, 3 M. & W. 126; S. C. 6 Dowl. 101). In an action by assignees in that character a breach that the deft. did not pay the plts., without alleging as assignees, is sufficient on special demurrer, and indeed proper and preferable, (Cobbett v.

Cockrane, 8 Bing. 17). The R. G. T. 4 Will. IV. prescribes a concise form of breach of one or more indebitatus counts (see post).

Damages.] The damages should be stated at an amount sufficient to cover the plt.'s demand, as the jury cannot give more.

Special Counts.] Wherever the action is brought for the non-performance of a contract, either express or implied, as distinguished from an action for the recovery of a debt, the declaration must be special, and must set out the contract, and the particular breach which is complained of. In many instances, it is advisable to declare specially; as in actions against agents for not accounting for goods, or the proceeds of goods, entrusted to them; or for not using due care in selling: though declaring specially for unliquidated damages will exclude a tender or set-off, or even the defence of bankruptcy (see Colson v. Welsh, 1 Esp. R. 380; Hardcastle v. Netherwood, 5 B. & A. 93; Hutchinson v. Reid, 3 Camp. 329). But, it seems, if on such count the plt. prove a cause of action, which is *also proveable upon the common counts as a debt, the set-off is not excluded (Birch v. [*185] Dessyster, 4 Camp. 385).

Where the declaration contained one special, and several general counts; and to the former deft. pleaded several special pleas, and to the latter the general issue; and plt. entered a nolle prosequi as to the special count, and joined issue on the plea to the others: held, that he was entitled to recover on the general counts, although the matters proved might have been given in evidence and investigated on the special count and the pleas thereto (Hayward v. Kain, 1 M. & M. 311). A. sells goods to B., to be paid for partly in cash, and the residue in bills at intervals of three months each. The payment of the money and the delivery of the bills do not constitute a condition, so as to entitle A., upon non-payment of the money and non-delivery of the bills, to sue as for goods sold and delivered, without waiting the expiration of the credit. Nor can such action be maintained for the amount of the stipulated cash payment. A.'s remedy is by special action on the express contract (Paul v. Dod, 2 C. & B. 800).

Several Counts.] The first count stated that in consideration of the plt. having at the deft.'s request contracted to sell H. certain shares, of which deft. was registered holder, deft. promised to deliver to plt. all new shares allotted in respect of the shares so sold, as long as deft. continued to be registered holder, and to indemnify against all loss in respect of breach of former promise. Breach, that certain shares were allotted to deft. which he would not deliver, and that by reason thereof plt. was obliged to lay out money in the purchase of other similar shares, in order to fulfil his own contract. Held, that such a count might be joined with one for money paid (Simpson v. Rand, 5 D. & L. 389.)

Inducement.] In special counts it is frequently necessary, in order to render the statement of the contract intelligible, to commence the same by a prefatory statement, which is called inducement. The matter of such inducement may, indeed, be stated in any part of the declaration, but it will be found most advisable to state it preparatory to the contract itself, or any other matter (see Taverner v. Little, 5 B. N. C. 678; Lewis v. Alcock, 3 M. & W. 188). But where a variety of facts preceded the contract, and are so connected with it that the statement of them is necessary to render the count intelligible, it is better to adopt a formal inducement in the beginning (Dartnell v. Howard, 4 B. & C. 345). Thus, in assumpsit for not performing an award, the declaration states, that there were differences between the parties, before it states the submission and promise to perform the award (post, "AWARD"). And so, on a contract to pay money upon a consideration of forbearance, the debt forborne and proceedings stayed should be stated (Jones v. Ashburnham, 4 Ea. 455; Marshall v. Buckenshaw, 1 N. R. 172). So, in actions against persons whose character or situations create certain liabilities, as actions against wharfingers, carriers, coach-owners, attorneys, captain of a ship, innkeepers, &c., it is usual, and proper to state, by way of inducement, that they were employed in those characters (Powell v. Layton, 2 N. R. 365; Max v. Roberts, 12 Ea. 94; Bretherton v. Wood, 3 B. & B. 4; Pozzi v. Shipton, 1 P. & D. 4; Dartnell v. Howard, 4 B. & C. 345; S. C. 6 D. & R. 438). If no such allegation be contained in the declaration, the debt cannot be charged thereon for a breach of duty which results only from the particular character which he held, and in reference to which he was retained (Dartnell v. Howard, supra); but, when the consideration and promise explain themselves, without reference to any collateral matter, no inducement need be stated; as in actions on policies of insurance, bills of exchange, foreign judgments, &c.

Mere matter of inducement need not be stated with such precision and certainty, as matter which constitutes the true substance or gist of the action itself. But it must be stated with a certainty sufficient to explain the contract, and certainty to a common intent is enough, especially if it be matter of an executed or past consideration (Com. Dig. Pleader, C, 31, 43, E, 10, 18; Gwinnet v. Phillips, 3 T. R. 646, per Buller, J.; Andrews v. Whitehead, 13 East, 116; Biggs v. Ballingham, Cro. Eliz. 715; Steph. 328, 409; Coxe v. Jennings, *Yelv. 17). Thus, where an agreement with a [*186] third person is stated only as inducement to the debt's promise, which is the gist of the action, it is sufficient to state such agreement, without certainty of name, place, or person (Coxe v. Jennings, supra). So, in declaring on a promise to pay money, in consideration of the forbearance of a preceding debt, though some cause of action must be alleged, it is not necessary to state the particular cause or subject-matter of the debt, or the time when, or place where, it was contracted (Woollaston v. Webb, Hob. 18). In an action against a carrier for the loss of goods, the usual inducement as to the delivery of the goods to him, need not contain an exact description of such goods (2 Saund. 74 a). In declaring on a parol submission to an award, it does not seem necessary to state the cause of dispute (2 Saund. 61 h, n. 1). But where the inducement disclosing a past consideration also professes to state some matter material to be ascertained with certainty it must be stated with precision and accuracy (Andrews v. Whitehead, supra); therefore where, in assumpsit for not accepting a lease, the inducement charged that the plt. was possessed of the premises for a certain term ending on a day named, and the proof showed that he had only a shorter term; held, a fatal variance (Routledge v. Grant, 4 Bing. 653; see Carrick v. Blgrave, 1 B. & B. 536).

Inducement should be according to its Legal Effect.] The matter of the inducement should be stated in the substance, according to the legal effect, and substantially agree with the facts of the case (Winter v. White, 3 Moo. 673, 695). It should not be stated merely as a matter of description, for fear of a variance, as it is a rule that allegations of substance must be substantially proved, but allegations of description literally (Stoddart v. Palmer, 3 B. & C. 4; S. C. 4 D. & R. 624; see Bevan v. Jones, 4 B. & C. 403). Where, in assumpsit for not indemnifying plt., in consequence of his having become bail for A. in an action at the suit of B., it was stated that B. (in Mich. Term, 58 Geo. III.) recovered of plt., the judgment given in evidence was in Hilary Term, it was held that this was no variance, as it was not matter of description, but an allegation in substance, that the judgment had been obtained before the commencement of the action (Phillips v. Shaw, 4 B. & C. 435; and see Stoddart v. Palmer, 3 B. & C. 2; S. C. 4 D. & R. 624; post, "CASE"). On the other hand, in an action on a promise to pay the costs of an action, in consideration of plt.'s staying the proceedings therein, the court in which the action was depending must be accurately described (Impey v. Taylor, 3 M. & S. 166).

Must be proved strictly, if stated as Part of Contract.] If the inducement be so stated as to constitute a part of the contract itself, it must be proved strictly, in the same way as the contract should be proved: so, where the price of goods was stated in matter of inducement, and the declaration afterwards, stating the contract itself, and the price of those goods referred to the price stated in the inducement, which was not the real one, it was held a fatal variance (Andrews v. Whitehead, 13 Ea. 102).

When Inducement need not be strictly proved.] In all cases, care should be taken not to insert any more than is absolutely necessary; for, though an immaterial averment, which is wholly impertinent, and may be rejected as surplusage, need not be proved (Winn v. White, 2 Bla. 840; Bristow v. Wright, Doug. 667; Bromfield v. Jones, 4 B. & C. 380; Peppin v. Solomons, 5 T. R. 498; Turner v. Eyles*, 3 B. & P. 463; Bourne v. Diggles, 3 Chit. Rep. 311); yet, if it by the statement becomes [*187] relevant to the action, or, is so mixed up with a material averment that it cannot be readily separated therefrom, and rejected as surplusage, the plt. will be compelled to prove it substantially; and, if it be stated as matter of description, he will be bound to prove it literally (see 1 Ch. Pl., 6th ed. 298; Williams v. Allison, 2 East, 446; Stoddart v. Palmer, 3 B. & C. 4; 4 D. & R. 624; see further, as to what is a variance, post, and the different titles, Peppin v. Solomons, 5 T. R. 498; Gwinnett v. Phillips, supra). Thus, in an action against an attorney for negligence, in not proceeding to judgment in due time against a prisoner, whereby she escaped, and the declaration averred that such prisoner was indebted to plt. on promises, &c., and that plt. retained debt. for the recovery of the debt, but it appeared on the trial that the averment was not true, as it was proved that the prisoner was a married woman, and therefore was incapable of contracting a debt, the plt. was nonsuited; though, had the declaration been framed to meet the question, plt. might perhaps have recovered (Lee v. Ayrton, Pea. 119; Gunter v. Cleyton, 2 Lev. 85; Alexander v. Maccauley, 4 T. R. 611). And even material matter laid in an inducement need not be proved precisely as alleged when stated under a videlicet; thus, where in an action to recover from debt, a debt due from a third person which debt. promised to pay in consideration of forbearance, the sum was stated, in the inducement under a videlicet, to be 26l. 13s. 6d., and was described as a balance of a larger sum, and the statement of the contract referred to the sum so alleged in the inducement to be due, but only 26l. was due as the balance; held immaterial (Bracey v. Freeman, 2 Moo. 114; Carrick v. Blgrave, supra).

By the operation of the pleading rules (H. T. 4 Will. IV.) the inducement is in all cases admitted, unless it be specially traversed by the debt.'s plea, the plea of non assumpsit denying only the contract alleged (see Dakes v. Gostling, 3 Dowl. 619; Frankum v. Falmouth, 3 Nev. & M. 330; post).

The Contract.] Next to the inducement, where an inducement is necessary, follows the statement of the contract itself, which may be considered as consisting of two parts, viz. the consideration and the promise, and these it is necessary to state fully and correctly, or the plt. will fail, unless the judge exercise the powers of amendment under the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42 (see ante, "AMENDMENT").

1. The whole of the consideration must be stated (see per Lord Ellenborough, Clarke v. Gray, 6 East, 568; Miles v. Sheward, 8 East, 7; King v. Robinson, Cro. Eliz. 79; Leeds v. Burrows, 12 East, 1; Andrews v. Whitehead, 13 East, 102). Where in assumpsit, on the warranty of a horse, the declaration described the transaction as a sale of one horse, and it appeared that two horses had been sold at an entire price, and upon a joint warranty, the variance was holden fatal, as the purchase of the two horses constituted the consideration for the warranty (Symonds v. Carr, 1 Campb. 361). So, where in an action by an outgoing against an incoming tenant, the declaration alleged that in consideration that plt. would relinquish to the deft. certain hay, the deft. promised to pay so much as certain valuers mentioned should appraise it at, and it was proved to be part of the agreement, that the appraisers were also to estimate the value of repairs for gates and fences, which the plt. was to make good, the variance was holden fatal (Leeds v. Burrows, 12 East, 1; see 1 Leon. 300; Simms v. Westcott, Cro. Eliz.

147; White v. Milton, 2 B. & P. 716). So, where it was part of [*188] the agreement between landlord and tenant *that the landlord was to keep the premises insured, and to rebuild in case of fire, a declaration against the tenant for not repairing was holden defective for want of including these terms as part of the consideration, and the plt. nonsuited (Beech v. White, 4 P. & D. 399; 12 Ad. & E. 668; S. C. 5 Jur. 116). And where the consideration for a warranty was alleged to be the purchase of a horse for 55*l.*, and it appeared in evidence that in certain events the defts. was to return part of the price, the plt. was nonsuited for want of this qualification being stated (Blyth v. Bampton, 3 Bing. 472; see Hands v. Burton, 9 East, 349; Vansandau v. Burt, 5 B. & A. 44). And if any part of the consideration be shown to have failed, the plt. will be nonsuited (Head v. Baldrey, 2 Nev. & P. 217). And it is also imperative that the consideration stated should be proved to the extent alleged; and in general, when the consideration proved falls short of that stated in the declaration, as the foundation for the promise, the variance will be equally fatal as when the proof exceeds the statement. A declaration by husband and wife and a third person stated that, by an agreement between the plts. and deft., the plts. agreed to let to deft. certain lands, that deft. became tenant, and stated mutual promises, the agreement proved was made by an agent on behalf of the wife and the third party only, but it appeared that the husband had subsequently received rent from the tenant; held, that to support the above allegation it ought to be proved that the husband was a contractor ab initio, and as that did not appear the variance was fatal (Saunderson v. Griffiths, 5 B. & C. 939). 1. An indorsement, written and signed after the agreement to which it was annexed, purported to guaranty the performance of the covenants and conditions of that agreement, but there was evidence to show that the guarantee was from the first agreed on between the parties: held, that the agreement and subsequent indorsement formed but one entire contract, and that therefore the latter did not require a separate consideration. 2. It being part of the agreement that the plt. should pay the first instalment of a certain sum on a given day: held, that a verbal agreement to postpone the day was sufficient (Coldham v. Showler, 2 Car. & Kir. 261).

A bankrupt took certain premises under lease, which provided that any greenhouse erected by him should belong to him, and not to his lessor. He afterwards transferred to the defendant, by a verbal contract, the lease in question, a greenhouse erected by him, together with the furniture and plants therein, of all which the defendant took possession: held, in an action by the plts., as assignees of the bankrupt, to recover the price thereof, that they were entitled to recover the value of the furniture and plants, but not of the greenhouse, as the contract was entire, and no valid assignment of the lease had been made to the deft. (Sleddon v. Cruikshank, 16 Law J. 61, Exch.).

But where part of the consideration is frivolous or insufficient, viz., such as, if it stood alone, would not support an assumpsit, that part need not be stated, or, if stated, it will not vitiate if the residue is good (Com. Dig. Action, Assumpsit, B. 13; Crisp v. Gamel, Cro. Jac. 127; King v. Sears, 2 C. M. & R. 48; Ring v. Roxbrough, 2 C. & J. 418; R. & P. 147; see Saunderson v. Griffith, 5 B. & C. 909); otherwise, where part of the consideration is the doing an unlawful act (Com. Dig. ubi supra; Featherstone v. Hutchinson, Cro. Eliz. 199; Rawson's case, 4 Leon. 3; Morris v. Chapman, Jon. 24). See Norton v. Simmes, Hob. 14; Newman v. Newman, 4 M. & S. 69; as to distinction between illegality at common law and by statute.

So, where the action is brought on an agreement containing a variety of stipulations on both sides, it is not necessary, or proper, [*189] to set out the whole. It is sufficient to state so much of any contract, consisting of several distinct parts and collateral provisions, as contains the entire consideration for the act, and the entire act, which is to be done in virtue of such consideration (Clarke v. Gray, 6 East, 569; Tempest v. Rawling, 13 East, 18; Ward v. Smith, 11 Price, 19). Where the declaration averred that by a certain agreement plt. and deft. did, "amongst other things," agree, &c.; held, that the omission to set out the whole was no ground of nonsuit; but that it would have been a fatal variance had it appeared that those parts of the agreement not set out amounted to conditions precedent (Clarke v. Morrell, 2 Sc. N. R. 17; 1 M. & G. 841; S. C. 9 Dowl. 461; see also Kemble v. Miles, 2 Sc. N. R. 121; 1 M. & G. 757; S. C. 9 Dowl. 446).

In actions on bills of exchange, bankers' cheques, and promissory notes, instruments which of themselves import consideration, it suffices merely to set out the instrument, without showing on what account it was given, even though the consideration appears on the face of the document (Coombs v. Ingram, 4 D. & R. 211; see "BILLS OF EXCHANGE"). So, in an action on a foreign judgment. But a declaration on a guarantee, or, other collateral contract, must show a sufficient legal consideration (see post, "GUARANTEE").

2. The consideration must be stated with such convenient particularity that the court may see it is such an one as can be enforced, and upon which the jury can assess damages. Therefore, in an action for not delivering goods purchased, an allegation that the defts. had agreed to deliver them "at a certain rate or price per pound, to be paid in a manner then and there fixed and stipulated between the plt. and the deft." was holden bad in demurrer for not specifying the price, for the damages would be estimated by the difference between their actual value and the price agreed upon (Andrews v. Whitehead, 13 East, 102). But in a similar case, held sufficient after, verdict (Ward v. Harris, 2 B. & P. 265). And yet the price, if mentioned under a videlicet, need not have been precisely proved (Ib.). And where the agreement was alleged to have been to deliver the goods at a reasonable price, and the proof was that they were to be delivered at from 24s. to 26s.

it was held as a specific price was not agreed on, the allegation was sufficient (Laing v. Fidgeon, 6 Taunt. 108). On the other hand, in actions against carriers for loss of goods, against attorneys, &c., for negligence, it is sufficient to say, that they undertook, &c., "for reasonable reward," without stating any amount, as in these cases the amount of damages has no reference to the quantum of reward (2 Ch. Pl. 303, 307; see Andrew v. Whitehead, 13 East, 114, n.; Bayley v. Tucker, 3 N. R. 458; Whitehead v. Greetham, 2 Bing. 464); and it seems it will not amount to a variance if it appear by the evidence that a specific sum was agreed upon (Bayley v. Tucker, 2 N. R. 458). So, in a declaration on a contract to restore plt.'s goods in consideration of his giving the deft. two warrants of attorney, it is not necessary to set out the warrants of attorney (Radford v. Smith, 6 Dowl. 381; S. C. 3 M. & W. 254; Dalston v. Janson, 3 Ld. Raym. 115). In actions upon contracts to pay the debt of another, the time of forbearance must be stated (Fish v. Richardson, Cro. Jac. 47; 1 Rol. Abr. 24, pl. 33), and the amount of the debt forborne; but the nature of the debt need not be stated, nor will the sum alleged be material, if stated under a videlicet (Bray v. Freeman, 8 Taunt. 197; S. C. 2 Moo. 114).

A declaration in assumpsit alleged, that while certain differences were pending between the plt. and deft. respecting some claims of *the [*190] plt., to deduction from a sum of 29,700*l.* to which the deft. was entitled, it was agreed between them by deed that that sum should be paid to trustees for the benefit of the deft., and the matters in difference referred to arbitration, the costs to abide the event. The declaration then stated, that the parties afterwards, with the consent of the arbitrator, agreed, that, on the immediate payment of 200*l.* by the deft. to the plt., in full satisfaction of his claims, the reference should cease, and each party pay his own costs; and alleged, as a breach, the non-payment by the deft. of this sum of 200*l.*; held, that the action was maintainable, as there was a sufficient consideration for the new promise, and that it was not like the case of an accord without satisfaction (Smyth v. Holmes, 10 Jur. 862, Exch.). An agreement, by which, in consideration that the prosecutor of an indictment preferred against certain persons for an assault and riot would not proceed further on the indictment, the defts. promised to pay him a sum of money, is illegal, although the prosecutor forbore to give evidence on the indictment with the knowledge and assent of the court before which the indictment was pending. In all offences which involve damages to an injured party, and for which he may maintain an action, he may, notwithstanding they are also of a public nature, settle his private damage in any way he may think fit; but a compromise of an assault, coupled with riot, is not legal (Keir v. Leeman, in error, 15 Law J. 194, M. C.). A. made an agreement with the plts. to serve them at all times, during the term of seven years, as a crown-glass maker, and that he would not, during the said term, work for any other person, at any other glass-house or other place of business, without the license of the plts.; that, during any depression of trade, he should be paid a moiety of his wages; that if he should be sick, the plts. should be at liberty to employ any other persons in his stead, without paying him any wages; that the plts. should pay him certain wages as long as he should continue and be employed as a crown-glass maker, and 8*l.* per annum, in lieu of house-rent and firing; and that they should have the option of dismissing him from their service on giving him a month's notice: held, that this contract showed an undertaking on the part of the plts. to employ A.; that it contained a good consideration; and that was not void on the alleged ground of its being in restraint of trade (Pilkington v. Scott, 15 Law J., 329, Exch.).

The consideration is, in the language of pleading, either executed or executory, viz. something already done or to be done by the plt. It is not, as a general rule, necessary to state an executed consideration with so much precision as an executory one with reference to time and place, nor as to quantity, quality, value, &c. (see Andrews v. Whitehead, sup. Steph. 328, 409; 1 Ch. Pl. 302). It must, however, be alleged that the executed consideration arose at the deft.'s request (1 Saund. 264, n. 1; Hayes v. Warren, 2 Str. 933; Hunt v. Bate, Dyer, 272; see per Parke, B., in King v. Sears, 2 C. M. & R. 53; Thornton v. Jenyns, 1 Sc. N. R. 52); though such request may in some cases be implied in evidence. Thus, where deft. has derived benefit from the consideration, and has afterwards made an express promise to the plt., or has recognised the plt.'s acts, and it is only necessary in cases of executed consideration to state that the consideration for the deft.'s promise moved at his request (King v. Sears, 2 C. M. & R. 48; 1 Saund. 264, n. 1; as to the value of an executed consideration, see post). Where the plt. has performed his part of the contract he has the option of stating it either as an executed or executory consideration (see Shuter v. Horlock, 1 Bing. 34; Payne v. Wilson, 7 B. & C. 423, and infra; see Ch. Contr. [*191] 62). On an executed consideration the law implies a promise to pay immediately on request, so, such consideration will not support a promise to pay in future (Hopkins v. Logan, 5 M. & W. 241; 7 Dowl. 366).

When the consideration is stated as executory, a greater degree of certainty is required (1 Saund. 264, n. 1); and plt. must aver a performance before action, or a readiness and willingness to perform, which must be alleged with proper certainty as to time, &c. (B. N. P., 146 a; Ring v. Roxbrough, 2 C. & J. 418; see post, p. 201). There is an advantage with reference to the new pleading rules in stating the contract as an executory one, because then the performance must be specially denied, otherwise it will stand admitted (Gibson v. Harris, 8 C. & P. 378; whereas, if it be alleged as executed, non assumpsit puts in issue the performance as well as the contract (Ch. Contr. 63)).

Declaration in assumpsit stated that in consideration of the plt.'s agreeing to stay proceedings in an action against B., the deft. promised to pay the amount, upon a certain event. Averment, that the plt. did stay proceedings; that the event happened, but that deft. did not pay. At the trial, the plt. proved the following agreement, in writing:—"In consideration of the plt.'s having agreed to stay proceedings against B., I hereby undertake to pay the sum," &c.: held, that the contract was an executory contract, a continuing agreement to stay proceedings, and therefore that there was no variance (Tanner v. Moore, 15 Law J. 391, Q. B.). Where the father of an illegitimate child, in order to prevent the mother from applying to the magistrates for an order in bastardy, promised to pay her 2s. 6d. per week for the child, and the time for going before the magistrate had expired before action brought without any application having been made: held, that indebitatus assumpsit lay at the suit of the mother against the father for the child's maintenance, the consideration, which was originally executory, having been executed (Linegar v. Hodd, 17 Law J. 106, C. P.).

In the case of a continuing consideration the declaration generally states that in consideration that the deft. had become, and was tenant to, the plt. of certain land, &c., he undertook during the continuance of the tenancy to use the premises in a tenant-like manner, &c., averring a continuance of the tenancy and breach (Pawley v. Walker, 5 T. R. 373; Mussen v. Price, 4 East, 150; 1 Ch. Pl. 304). But the promise must not be stated to be more extensive than the law would support (Brown v. Crump, 6 Taunt. 300; Granger v. Collins, 6 M. & W. 400).

3. The contract may be stated either according to the fact, or according to its legal effect. Hence the omission of matters which, though forming part of the actual consideration, were idle or void, and therefore had no legal operation, does not vitiate (supra). Where the declaration alleged that in consideration that the plt., at the request of deft., had shipped on board deft.'s vessel certain goods, deft. undertook to carry them safely, and it appeared that the contract was made before the wheat was shipped, the court held, that upon the receipt of the goods, in pursuance of the previous contract, a duty arose to deal with them accordingly, and an implied promise to perform that duty, and that the plt. might therefore declare upon that promise as made upon an executed consideration, or upon the contract as an executory one, with an averment that he did afterwards ship the goods (Stueta v. Horlock, 1 Bing. 34). On the other hand, an allegation that, in consideration that the plt. would consent to stay proceedings against A., deft. promised to pay, was held sufficiently proved by a paper stating *"the plt. having at [*192] my request consented, to stay," &c., as the request must have preceded the consent (Payne v. Wilson, 7 B. & C. 423). The words "I agree to pay," in an instrument given in evidence in an action on an account stated may import consideration (Davies v. Wilkinson, 2 P. & D. 256).

4. The deft.'s contract, or promise, the breach of which is complained of, must be positively and distinctly alleged. If this be omitted, the declaration will be bad on demurrer, or in arrest of judgment, as where it was alleged that, in consideration that plt. would surrender a term, deft. "solvere vellet. 10l." without stating any promise (Buckler v. Angill, 1 Lev. 164; S. C. 1 Sid. 246; Lee v. Welsh, 2 Ld. Raym. 1517; 1 Rol. Abr. 8, m. pl. 1; Chandeler v. Lopes, Cro. Jac. 4). So, where the name of the deft. was omitted in the statement of the promise the judgment was arrested (Law v. Saunders, Cro. Eliz. 913). But where there were two other counts, in each of which it was averred that the deft. promised; the court applied the same nominative to a third count, in which deft.'s name was omitted (Roe v. Gatehouse, 2 Salk. 663; 5 Mod. 305; see Carth. 309; and Shore v. Brown, 1 Salk. 27). The plt. can only recover upon the promise alleged, therefore, if that be bad or insufficient in law, the court cannot give judgment for him, though it appear on the record that he has a good cause of action, if it be different from that for which he has proceeded (Head v. Baldrey, 2 N. & P. 217; S. C. 6 Ad. & E. 459; see Marsh v. Bulteel, 5 B. & A. 507). The second count stated an agreement, by which the plaintiff was to receive from the company a salary in lieu of rendering a bill of costs for general business done by him as their attorney and solicitor, and alleged, that, in consideration that the plt. promised the company to perform the agreement, which was in the first count alleged to be to retain and employ plt. as permanent solicitor, in all things on his part, the company promised the plaintiff to perform the same in all things on their part, and to retain and employ him as attorney and solicitor of the company. The count assigned as a breach, the dismissal of the plaintiff from such employment, alleging also, that the company had, since such dismissal, refused to retain or employ him as such attorney, or to pay him the salary: held, bad in arrest of judgment, there being no consideration for the promise to retain and employ. Held, also, that even if there was a good breach for the non-payment of the salary, there was no necessity for a venire de novo, though general damages had been assessed on this count, inasmuch as the promise could not be severed, and there was no consideration for the entire promise (Elderton v. Emmens, 16 Law J. 209, C. P.; 11 Jur. 612). Allegation that a person since deceased was indebted to plt., and that after the death, in consideration of the premises, and that the plt., at deft.'s request, "would give time for the payment of the debt, deft. promised," &c., not stating that there was any person liable in respect of assets, or otherwise, to be sued by the plt., for the debt, and to whom he gave time: held, insufficient on demurrer, for neither benefit nor detriment was shown to the deft. or plt., as it was not stated that any one was liable to be sued, or that plt. had suspended the enforcement of any right (Jones v. Ashburnham, 5 East, 455). So, where it was alleged that in consideration that the plt. would retain and employ the deft. to lay out a sum of money in the purchase of an annuity, and the latter undertook to do his duty in the premises, and plt. retained deft., but he neglected to do his duty, and took an insufficient security: held, bad in arrest of judgment, for not showing that any reward was to be paid to the deft., nor that he was employed as attorney, or in any particular character *whereby it became his duty not to take a security of an insufficient nature (Dartnell v. Howard, 4 B. & C. [*193] 345); see Whitehead v. Greetham, 2 Bing. 464, where it was held that a count in assumpsit, that plt. had retained the deft. at his request to lay out 700*l.* in the purchase of an annuity, that the deft. promised to lay it out securely, that plt. delivered the money to him for that purpose, and that deft. did not lay it out securely, contained a sufficient consideration for deft.'s promise after verdict.

The consideration must be co-extensive with the promise. Thus, where the declaration stated that the deft. was liable, as executor, to pay a certain debt, and that in consideration thereof he personally promised to pay the debt: held, bad in arrest of judgment, as no additional consideration was shown for the enlarged responsibility arising from the promise (Rann v. Hughes, 7 T. R. 350, n. a). So, a declaration against a husband alone, on his mere promise to pay the debt of his wife contracted before marriage, must show a new consideration, or the judgment will be arrested (Mitchenson v. Hewson, 7 T. R. 348). A deed of separation having been drawn up, but not executed by plt.; held, that his executing it was a legal consideration for a promise by deft. to pay certain debts and expenses, for which plt. was solely liable (Jones v. Waite, 5 B. N. C. 341). So, where it was stated that in consideration that the plt., at the request of deft., had consented to allow the deft. to weigh two boilers of the plt., the deft. promised to give them up, after weighing, in as perfect a condition as they were in at the time of the consent; holden to disclose a sufficient consideration (Bainbridge v. Firmstone, 8 Ad. & E. 743).

In actions on special agreements, it is usual, after setting out the agreement, to allege mutual promises, and perhaps on special demurrer the omission would be objectionable; but no objection can be taken on general demurrer, or after the verdict, as the agreement itself imports a promise (Mountford v. Horton, 2 N. R. 62). And in actions against the acceptor of a bill, or maker of a note, the want of such an averment is no objection even on special demurrer (Donaldson v. Thompson, 8 Dowl. 209; 6 M. & W. 316). Otherwise, in actions against the drawer, or indorsee (Henry v. Burbridge, 4 Sc. 296; 3 Bing. N. C. 501; S. C. 5 Dowl. 484); but even in these cases, the objection must be taken by special demurrer (Starkey v. Cheesman, Salk. 128; S. C. Carth. 509; Wegusloff v. Keene, 1 Str. 214; Griffith v. Roxbrough, 2 M. & W. 734; S. C. 6 Dowl. 133).

It should also be averred that the promise was made to the plt., and where the declaration does not show to whom the promise was made, nor that the consideration moved from the plt., the judgment will be arrested (Price v. Easton, 1 N. & M. 303; S. C. 4 B. & Ad. 433; Sty. 255; S. C. Noy, 832; Coulston v. Carr, Cro. Eliz. 848). Where a reward is offered to any person who would give such information as should lead to the conviction of a felon, a person giving such information may sue for the reward and allege the promise as made to himself in consideration of giving the information (England v. Davidson, 3 P. & D. 594; 4 Jur. 1032; S. C. 11 Ad. & E. 856). But where it appears that the consideration moved from the plt., it is sufficient to allege the promise without stating to whom (Com. Dig. Plead. C, 18; Jones v. Owen, 5 Ad. & El. 222; Banks v. Camp, 9 Bing. 604; S. C. 2 M. & Sc. 734), as it will be intended that the contract was made with the party from whom the consideration proceeded (Ib.; see Marshall v. Birkenshaw, 1 N. R. 172). It should be stated also that the deft.'s promise was made "in consideration" of what had been alleged as the plt.'s part of the contract (see Whitehead v. Greetham, 2 Bing. 464).

Though the contract were in writing, and required by the statute to be *so, yet it is not necessary so to state it in the declaration (1 [*194] Saund. 276 a, n. 2; 2 Steph. Pl. 3rd ed. 375): this is matter of evidence. There are circumstances which may render it advisable, though not necessary, to state the contract to be in writing (see Whittaker v. Mason, 2 B. N. C. 359; see 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78; Chalie v. Belshaw, 6 Bing. 529; post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE"). Where the promise is to do two things, and as to one it is invalid for want of being in writing, the other cannot be enforced, but the whole action fails (Chater v. Beckett, 7 T. R. 201; Thomas v. Williams, 10 B. & C. 664; Head v. Baldrey, 2 Nev. & P. 217; S. C. 6 Ad. & E. 459). And there is no difference in pleading in the statement of an express and an implied promise.

The contract should be stated according to its legal effect (1 Ch. Pl. 312, n. t). Thus an agreement, promissory note, &c., made with husband and wife, where the husband sues alone, should be described as made with him, without naming the wife (Arnold v. Revoult, 4 Moo. 66; Ankerstein v. Clarke, 4 T. R. 616; Beaver v. Lane, 2 Mod. 217; see post, "HUSBAND AND WIFE"). So a promise made to A., but which comes to B., should be stated as having been made to B. (Feltmakers' Company v. Davis, 1 B. & P. 102.) Where it is doubtful whether an agreement amounts to an actual demise or not, the declaration need not allege what it amounts to in law, it suffices to set out the agreement in terms (Price v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 6). Where the agreement was "to sell the house and fixtures, No. 163, Piccadilly, to commence from the 1st of January next, for 60*l.*," held, to be an agreement to sell an interest in fee simple, and will not support a declaration alleging a contract for the sale of a dwelling-house and fixtures for the residue of a term of years, although the agreement given in evidence was really intended to convey the latter interest (Hughes v. Parker, 8 M. & W. 244). When there exists any doubt as to the legal effect and construction of a written instrument, it seems to be the preferable course to set it out in its precise words (see Ross v. Parker, 1 B. & C. 358; 1 Ch. Pl. 314; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 23).

The declaration set out a guarantee whereby, in consideration that a banking company would make advances to the deft., the plt. undertook to guarantee the company the payment of sums advanced not exceeding 250*l.* Averment, advances to deft. that he afterwards became bankrupt, and at that time there was due to the company exceeding 250*l.* That, after issuing of the fiat, deft. in consideration of the premises, promised plt. that if he should be called upon by virtue of the guarantee to pay the said 250*l.*, the deft. should repay the same when it should be in his power, notwithstanding he should previously obtain his certificate, and also interest on the said sum, that plt. paid in respect of the guarantee, 250*l.*, of which deft. had notice. Breach, non-payment. Held, no objection to the promise, that it was made before the certificate (Earl v. Oliver, 2 Ex. 71); also, that the mere liability to repay the plt. was an equally good consideration to support the promise as an existing debt (Ib.); that the conditional promise to pay was good as supported by the original consideration (Ib), and that the promise to pay interest was supported by the same consideration as the original promise (Ib.).

The construction of a contract, and the meaning of particular words used in it, is for the judge, except in cases where there is evidence that a particular word was used in a sense peculiar to a particular trade or business, or that its meaning depends on the usage of a particular place (Simpson v. Margetson, 12 Jur. 155; 17 Law J., Q. B. 81).

Where it was agreed that the plt., an auctioneer, should receive a certain amount of commission, in case a sale of a certain estate should be effected "within two months" of a given day: held, that months, prima facie, meant lunar months, and that the subsequent conduct of the parties was not to be looked at to shew that it meant calendar months (Ib.). Quære, whether evidence was admissible to show, that, according to the usage of auctioneers, month was considered as meaning calendar month? (Ib.).

The deft. agreed to supply the plt. with 150 tons weight of iron girders, at a certain price per ton, and according to plans to be furnished by the plt. Plans were furnished within a reasonable time from the date of the agreement, and at the same time fourteen tons weight of girders were ordered. Four months after the date of the agreement, the fourteen tons were demanded, and other plans were furnished, and orders given for sixty tons more girders. The deft. then repudiated the contract: held, that the contract was entire; and that, as the plt. had not furnished plans for the whole 150 tons within a reasonable time from the date of the agreement, he could not recover for the non-delivery of the fourteen tons, for which plans had been furnished within a reasonable time from such date (Kingdom v. Cox, 12 Jur. 336; 17 Law J., C. P. 155). Where a thing is to be done in a reasonable time, the reasonableness of the time is a question wholly for the jury (Nelson v. Patrick, 2 C. & K. 461—Wilde).

Effect of Bad Statement of Consideration.] When plt. states no legal consideration; as, where it is entirely insufficient or void from illegality, it is objectionable on demurrer (Clipsam v. Morris, 1 Vent. 9; Jones v. Ashburnham, 4 East, 455); in arrest of judgment (Dartnall v. Howard, 4 B. & C. 345; 6 D. & R. 438); or writ of error (Whitehead v. Greetham, 2 Bing. 464; Mitchinson v. Hewson, 7 T. R. 348; see "ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION"). Plt. sought to recover the sum of 50*l.* on an agreement, which was set out in the declaration. It recited that the plt. had for a long time carried on business as a law stationer, and also had been a sub-distributor of stamps, and collector of assessed taxes, and "that, in consideration of 300*l.*, payable by instalments, the plt. agreed to sell, and the deft. agreed to purchase, the business of a law stationer, theretofore carried on by the plt.; and it was thereby further agreed between them, that the plt. should not, after the 1st of March then next, carry on the business of a law stationer, or collect any of the assessed taxes, &c., but that the plt. would use his utmost endeavours to introduce the deft. to the said business and offices," &c.: held, that the agreement was for the sale of an office within the 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 16, and that the declaration was therefore bad (Hopkins v. Prescott, 16 Law J. 259, C. P.; 11 Jur. 562). But, if the consideration be merely alleged insufficiently, it should be objected to by special demurrer (Whitehead v. Greetham, 2 Bing. 464); and, where it is untruly stated, it will be a ground of nonsuit as a variance (King v. Robinson, Cro. Eliz. 79; Miles v. Sheward, 8 East, 7). An uncertain or informal statement of the consideration is cured by verdict (Sty. 304; Jones v. Ashburnham, 4 East, 464; Ward v. Harries, 2 B. & P. 265; Whitehead [*195]

v. Greetham, M'Cle. & Yo. 205). The objection should be raised by special demurrer (Jones v. Ashburnham, 4 East, 455; Andrews v. Whitehead, 13 East, 102. As to what is a sufficient consideration, see Chit. Contr. 30 et seq.; 2 Bing. 468). The main rule seems to be, that it may arise either, first, by reason of a benefit resulting to the party promising, or, at his request, to a third person, by the act of the promisee: secondly, on the latter sustaining any loss or inconvenience, or subjecting himself to any charge or obligation at the instance of the person making the promise, although such person obtain no advantage therefrom (Chit. Contr. 30, and cases cited; see Jones v. Ashburnham, 4 East, 463; Morley v. Berkly, 3 Bing. 112; Willatts v. Kennedy, 8 Bing. 10; 2 Saund. 137 e); and with reference to the benefit conferred on the promiser, the consideration need not be adequate in point of actual value. It is sufficient that a slight benefit be conferred by the plt. on the deft., or at his request upon a third person, or even that a benefit may arise to the party promising (see Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 Ad. & E. 456; Phillips v. Bateman, 16 East, 372, per Lord Ellenborough, C. J.; Kirwan v. Kirwan, 2 C. & M. 623). When the adequacy of consideration is material at law, it is a question for the court (Horne v. Ashford, 3 Bing. 327). So it is with regard to the detriment arising to the deft. (Chit. Contr. 32; Sturlyn v. Albany, Cro. Eliz. 67; Wilkinson v. Oleviera, 1 B. N. C. 490; Bainbridge v. Firmstone, 1 P. & D. 2; Haigh v. Brooks, 4 P. & D. 288; Traver v. —, Sid. 57).

When the consideration for deft.'s contract consists of any agreement on the part of the plt., it must appear from the declaration that such agreement was binding on the plt. at the time the deft.'s promise was made; for if the declaration show that the obligation was all on one side, it will be bad (Cooke v. Oxley, 3 T. R. 653; see Payne v. Cane, 3 T. R. 149; M'Iver v. Richardson, 1 M. & S. 557; Adame v. Lindsell, 1 B. & A. 681; Humphreys v. Carvalho, 16 East, 45; Drant v. Brown, 3 B. & C. 668; Hawkins v. Wane, 3 B. & C. 690).

Instances of what a Sufficient Statement of Contract.] As instances of what is a sufficient statement of a contract, according to its legal effect, it has been held, that a contract to furnish goods with a certain latitude as to price, may be described as a contract to furnish them at a reasonable price (Laing v. Fidgeon, 6 Taunt. 108; see Squiver v. Hunt, 3 Price, 38). Where the contract was laid in the declaration, to deliver stock on the 27th Feb., and the contract proved was to deliver stock on the settling-day, which at the time was fixed, and understood by the parties to mean the 27th Feb., it was held no variance (Wickes v. Gordon, 2 B. & A. 335, overruling Payne v. Hayes, B. N. P. 145). A contract stated to be for the purchase of a certain quantity, to wit, eight tons of goods, is supported by evidence of a contract for the purchase of about eight tons, the precise quantity having been ascertained to be eight tons (Gladstone v. Neale, 13 Ea. 410). A declaration stating a contract to pay a sum of money at a certain time is supported by proof of a contract to pay it at that time, and at a certain place (Paine v. Emery, 4 Dowl. 191; S. C. 2 C. M. & R. 304). A joint and several bond is sufficiently described as a joint bond only (Middleton v. Sandford, 4 Camp. 34; and see Bass v. Clive, 4 M. & S. 13; Willis v. Barrett, 2 Star. 29; post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE"). A contract for the sale of fifty casks of tallow, at 72s. per cwt., "warranted ready for delivery *from ship or [*196] warehouse, by the 1st Nov., to be weighed or taken at the king's landing scale," &c.; it was held, this was only a general undertaking to deliver, and that the omission of the words "ship or warehouse," was immaterial (Thornton v. Jones, 2 Marsh. 287; S. C. 6 Taunt. 581.

Where the contract was stated to be, to deliver a quantity of gum senegal, but the contract proved was for the delivery of rough gum senegal, this was held no variance, as all gum senegal, on its arrival in this country, was called rough (Silver v. Heseltine, 1 Ch. R. 39). Where the plts. declared, that they agreed to sell, and the deft. agreed to buy, certain goods and merchandizes, to wit, three hundred and twenty-eight half-chests of oranges and lemons, at, &c., for a certain price, to wit, the price of 623*l.* 13*s.*, the contract proved was for three hundred and eight chests, and thirty half-chests of China oranges, and twenty chests of lemons, without specifying the price; this was held no variance (Crispin v. Williamson, 8 Taunt. 107; S. C. 1 Moo. 547; see also Robson v. Fallows, 3 B. N. C. 392). Where the contractors stated that deft. had agreed to buy a large quantity of head matter, and sperm oil, in the possession of the plt., which was afterwards ascertained to be a given quantity, and the contract proved to be for the purchase of "all the head matter, and sperm oil, per the W.," it was held no variance (Wildman v. Glossop, 1 B. & A. 9; see Ross v. Parker, 2 D. & R. 662; S. C. B. & C. 358). In assumpsit on guarantee, the declaration stated that the defts. undertook to indemnify A. from holding goods in his warehouse, on their behalf, and delivering same up to them when requested. On production of the instrument, it appeared that the defts. only guaranteed him for holding the goods in this warehouse, on their behalf: it was held that this was no variance, as it must be implied he was to deliver them up to the defts. (Sampson v. Burton, 4 Moo. 515). A declaration, in consideration that plt. would procure A. to grant a lease to deft., the latter promising to pay to plt. £170, the proof was, that A., having agreed to grant a lease to the plt. the latter undertook originally to assign it to the deft. for the consideration mentioned, but that afterwards a lease to which plt. was a party, and assented, was granted immediately by A. to the deft. It was held, that the evidence proved the substitution of a new contract, to procure a lease from A. to the deft., in lieu of the original contract, and that there was no variance (Boone v. Mitchell, 1 B. & C. 18).

An agreement by plt. (an attorney), deft. and B., set forth that in consideration of B. having agreed to pay to deft. his claim against B. and certain costs, out of the proceeds to arise from the recovery by B. in action of B. against J., deft. undertook to pay plt. all costs incurred by him in prosecuting the action of B. against J., plt. thereby agreeing with deft. to bring the same: held, that in assumpsit on this agreement the consideration was rightly described to be that plt., at the request of deft., would, with B.'s assent, prosecute the action of B. against J. (Dally v. Poolly, 6 Q. B. 494).

A declaration in assumpsit stated, that the plt. and deft. had been partners in trade, and had dissolved partnership, and that a bill of exchange, drawn by the plt. upon and accepted by M. for 40*l.*, being a debt due from M. to the plt. and deft., had been lost by the plt. and deft., with their indorsement in blank thereon; and thereupon, in consideration that the plt. delivered to the deft. another bill for 40*l.* and four promissory notes for 20*l.* each, for his share of the capital of the partnership, the deft. promised the plt. to bear the loss of half the amount that might not be paid in liquidation of the lost bill; provided that, in case of M.'s making any difficulty, the plt. should obtain the approval of Messrs. B. & G., the deft.'s advocates, *to any proceedings against M.; and that the deft. would deposit, when required [*197] by the plt., 40*l.* in the hands of a third party, in case such deposit should be found necessary to recover the said debt due by M. Averment, that it became necessary to deposit the 40*l.* for the purpose of recovering the debt due from M., M. being ready to pay the debt if the 40*l.* were deposited at the Bank of England, to indemnify him against the payment of the lost bill; and that the Bank were ready to receive and hold the money. Breach, that the deft. refused to make such deposit: held, on special demurrer, that the promise of the deft. was an absolute promise to deposit the 40*l.* if necessary, and was not dependent on the approval of his advocates; and that a sufficient consideration for, and breach of such promise, were alleged in the declaration (Applemans v. Blanche, 14 M. & W. 154).

If the consideration be expressly traversed by plea (but not otherwise since R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV.), it must be proved as stated, or the plt. will fail at the trial on the ground of a variance, unless the judge permit an amendment under the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 23. We shall now proceed to consider some of the cases in which variances have been holden fatal.

What a Variance.] The statement of a contract to sell oats at so much per bushel, must be taken to mean the Winchester bushel, and will not be supported by evidence to sell by some other bushel (Hockin v. Cooke, 4 T. R. 314; St. Cross (Master) v. Howard De Walden (Lord), 6 T. R. 338). A contract stated as a general covenant to repair is not supported by proof of a covenant to repair, "casualties by fire excepted" (Browne v. Knill, 5 Moo. 164; S. C. 2 B. & B. 395; see also Horsfall v. Testar, 1 Moo. 89; S. C. 7 Taunt. 385). But where a lease contained a proviso that if a certain event should happen after the execution of the lease the rent reserved should be reduced; held, that plt. may declare as on an absolute covenant to pay so much (Grogan v. Magan, 1 Al. & Nap. 366, Irish). A declaration or promise to deliver good merchantable wheat, is not supported by proof of a promise to deliver good second sort of wheat (Anon. Raym. 735). A contract to remove goods in a reasonable time, is not supported by proof of a contract to remove them in a month (Hore v. Milner, Pea. 42, a). A contract to be performed on request, is not supported by evidence that it was performed on a particular day (5 East, 111). A contract to carry goods, and deliver them to A. B. the plt., varies from a contract to deliver them to J. S. (Leery v. Goodson, 4 T. R. 687). Where a bill of exchange is stated to have been drawn for a certain sum of money, it will be intended to mean English money (Sprowle v. Legge, 1 B. & C. 16; Kearney v. King, 2 B. & A. 301). Stating a party to be retained at a certain salary, to wit, 250*l.* per annum, is supported only by proof of a contract for a specific annual salary (Preston v. Butcher, 1 Stark. 3). Stating a contract to take a full cargo of wheat, is not supported by proof of a contract to take on board five hundred quarters of wheat, though that quantity, in fact, amounts to a full cargo (Harrison v. Wilson, 2 East, 708). A count stated deft. to be a tenant to plt., and that he promised to use lands in a husbandlike manner; the contract proved, was to farm land in a husbandlike manner, to be kept constantly in grass; this was held a fatal variance (Saunderson v. Griffiths, 5 B. & C. 909). In an action of assumpsit the declaration stated, that there were accounts between plt. and deft., which were open and unsettled; and that there were disputes concerning such accounts, and mutual claims by each party; and that it was agreed that they should give up their respective claims *upon each [*198] other, and thereupon, in consideration that plt. would relinquish and forbear to prosecute all claims which he had against deft., the deft. then promised to pay the plt. an annuity of 6*l.*; held, that the declaration disclosed a sufficient consideration for the promise (Llewellyn v. Llewellyn, 15 Law J. 4 Q. B.; 9 Jur. 991). The declaration alleged that deft. was indebted to T. in 200*l.*, and that a commission in bankruptcy had issued against deft., and that in consideration of T.'s proving for this 200*l.* against the estate of the deft. the deft. then promised to pay to him the said sum of 200*l.* after the delay of a few months. Judgment was arrested after evidence for the plt. as there appeared no consideration (Bremley v. Andrew, 7 Ad. & E. 108). The discharge of one of two joint debtors is the discharge of the other, a promise therefore in consideration of his discharge is void (Herring v. Dorrell, 8 Dowl. P. C. 604). In an action for wages to be paid to plt. in consideration he would proceed on a particular voyage, a variance in the description of the voyage is fatal though laid under a videlicet (White v. Wilson, 2 B. & P. 116). The declaration alleged that in consideration that the plt., at the request of the deft., would consent to suspend proceedings against A., deft. promised, &c., and the agreement put in evidence was in these terms, viz.: "Plt. having, at my request, consented to suspend proceedings against A., I do hereby, in consideration thereof, promise to pay 30*l.* on the 1st of April:" held, in arrest of judgment, that the consideration was sufficiently described (Payne v. Wilson, 7 B. & C. 423). Where a declaration against a carrier alleged that in consideration that plt., at the request of the deft., had secured to be shipped, &c., a quantity of wheat, &c., and it appeared that deft.'s undertaking to carry was made before the whole of the wheat had been shipped on board, &c.: objected, that the consideration was executory; held, that the count might be supported, as where an order is given to a carrier before the delivery of the goods, and he assents to deal with them when delivered in a particular manner, a duty attaches on the receipt of the goods to deal with them according to the order previously given, and the law implies a promise to perform such duty (Shuter v. Horlock, 1 Bing. 34). Where a contract is conditional, it will be a fatal misdescription to state it as an absolute one (Langston v. Corney, 4 Camp. 176); and, upon the same principle, it would seem that if plt. rely upon a subsequent promise where debts are barred by the Statute of Limitations, to take the case out of the statute, and the promises were qualified or conditional, as to pay when the deft. is able, &c. the plaintiff should declare upon the subsequent promise (Tanner v. Smart, 6 B. & C. 603; Pitman v. Foster, 1 B. & C. 248; Hayden v. Williams, 7 Bing. 163; see "BILLS OF EXCHANGE").

Where Liability qualified by Exception.] If the promise or engagement contain an exception or proviso, which qualifies deft.'s liability, the declaration must notice the exception, or there will be a fatal misstatement. Thus, where the declaration stated that the deft. had undertaken to carry and deliver goods safely, and the contract proved was subject to the exception of fire and robbery: held, a fatal variance (Latham v. Rutley, 2 B. & C. 20). So, where the carrier was not liable to any extent, unless insured (Latham v. Rutley, supra; see Clarke v. Gray, 6 East, 569); so, where the declaration averred that the deft. had warranted a horse to be sound, and the warranty was subject to the exception of a kick in the leg: held, a fatal mistake (Jones v. Cowley, 4 B. & C. 446; Heming v. Parry, 6 C. & P. 580; see Brown v. Knill, supra; Tempany v. Burnand, 4 Camp. 20; Beech v. White, 12 Ad. & E. 668; see Saunderson v. Griffiths, supra; Vavasour v. [*199] Ormswood, 6 C. & P. 430). But if the exception be distinct from and not even referred to by the clause creating the debt, it is considered matter of defeasance, and ought to come from the other side (1 Ch. Pl. 246, 318).

Variance in stating Contract too specially.] The contract must not be stated more specially than it really was, and any additional statement, varying the effect of the contract, will be fatal. Thus, a contract to deliver soil cannot be declared on as a contract to deliver soil or breeze, it appearing that soil and breeze are different articles (Clarke v. Manstone, 5 Esp. 239); and see the case of a note being stated to have been made payable at a particular place, when it was not so (Exon v. Russell, 4 M. & S. 505, post). Where two lots were sold under an enclosure act, a declaration upon a sale of "divers, to wit, two lots," &c., is bad, the agreements being separate, both in law and fact, and not forming one contract (James v. Shore, 1 Stark. 426; Emmerson v. Heelis, 2 Taunt. 47).

Variance in Omission of Part of Contract.] The omission of any part of an entire contract or promise, and which omission affects that part of the contract for the breach of which the plt. proceeds, will be fatal; as where the contract declared on was, that the deft. should deliver to plt. all his tallow, at 4s. per stone, and the contract proved was, that the deft. should deliver it at 4s. per stone, and so much more as the plt. paid to any other person, the variance was held fatal (Churchill v. Wilkins, 1 T. R. 447). Where land was alleged to have been demised at a rent of 15*l.* and in evidence the rent appeared to have been 15*l.* and three fowls, the variance was held fatal (Sands v. Ledger, 2 Raym. 792). In a case where the plt. purchased a horse for 55*l.* deft. warranting it sound, and agreeing to give back 1*l.* if it did not fetch plt. 4*l.* or 5*l.*, and the averment was, that, in consideration plt. would buy of deft. a horse for a certain price, to wit, 55*l.*, deft. undertook that horse was sound, it was held a fatal variance (Blyth v. Bampton, 3 Bing. 472; Gaselee, J. diss.). But the omission of any immaterial part of the contract is immaterial (Thornton v. Jones, 2 Marsh. 287; S. C. 6 Taunt. 582, sup.). A variance between the evidence and declaration, as to such part of the consideration stated as is frivolous or insufficient, is immaterial (ante, p. 187; see Farewell v. Dickinson, 6 B. & C. 251). Sums of money as stated in pleading are not essential, unless from the nature of the case, as by forming an essential part of some calculation or otherwise, they necessarily become material (Cooper v. Blick, 2 G. & D. 299, per Lord Denman, C. J.). In declaring upon contracts made in Ireland, relative to the payment of a sum of money, and in the currency of that country, the plt. must show that the money was to be of Irish currency; otherwise it will be a fatal variance, the intendment being that when a sum of money is stated generally, English money is meant (Sprawle v. Legg, 1 B. & C. 16; Kearney v. King, 2 B. & A. 301). Literal errors would now be amended (see instances of such, 1 Ch. Pl. 320, 324; see Silver v. Heseltine, 1 Chit. Rep. 39; post, "VARIANCE"). Where the declaration stated the loan of a horse to the deft., and averred that the deft. was to take care of him and return him in good condition, or pay a certain sum of money; but the contract proved showed that the deft. was to find the horse meat for his work: held, sufficiently stated, as the law implied that a party borrowing a horse was to keep it, unless the contrary appeared (Handsford v. Palmer, 2 B. & B. 359; see Ward v. Smith, 11 Pri. 19).

No more of Contract to be stated than that which was broken.]

[*200] But where the contract consists of several distinct parts and collateral provisions, it is sufficient to state so much of it as constitutes that contract the breach of which is complained of, and which prescribes the duty to be performed, and the time, manner, and other circumstances of its performance (Miles v. Sheward, 8 East, 7); containing the entire consideration for the act, and the entire act which is to be done in virtue of such consideration (per Lord Ellenborough, Clark v. Grey, 6 East, 564; Martin v. Smith, 6 East, 563; Thompson v. Miles, 1 Espin. 184; Miles v. Sheward, 8 East, 7). Where the plt. declared, that, in consideration of his re-delivery to deft. of an unsound horse, which he had before then sold to the plt., the deft. promised to deliver him another horse, which would be worth 80*l.*, and be a young horse, and then alleged a breach in both these respects, the declaration was held sufficient, though the proof was not only of a promise that the second horse should be worth 80*l.* and be a young horse, but also of a warranty that it was sound and never been in harness (Miles v. Sheward, 8 East, 7; Thornton v. Jones, 2 Marsh. 237). A declaration on a contract to pay 52*l.* 10*s.* for rum-money is supported by proof of a note, by which the deft. undertook to pay the plt. 52*l.* 10*s.* together with a pint of rum per day (Baptist v. Cobbold, 1 B. & P. 7). A declaration that, in consideration plt. would lend deft. a horse, deft. would take care of it, and return the same in as good condition, or pay fifteen guineas, in addition to which terms it was proved that deft. contracted to find meat for the horse: it was held no variance (Handford v. Palmer, 5 Moo. 74; S. C. 2 B. & B. 359). So, where the contract was stated to be that deft. warranted certain bacon to be prime bacon, and the contract proved was a warranty that it should be prime singed bacon, it was held no variance (Cotterill v. Cuff, 4 Taunt. 285.) Where, in an action for not accepting goods sold, it was averred in the declaration that the deft. bought of plt. a quantity of rice according to certain conditions and it appeared in evidence that in addition to these conditions the rice was sold per sample: held, no variance, for this was a mere collateral engagement or warranty (Squier v. Hunt, 3 Pri. 68; Ward v. Smith, 11 Pri. 19). As to declaring on a lease under seal, see 1 Wms. Saund. 233. n. 2; Dundass v. Weymouth (Lord), Cowp. 665; Bristow v. Wright, Doug. 667.

Part relating to Liquidation of Damages need not be stated.] No part of the contract which relates merely to the liquidation of damages, and goes in defeasance of the contract, need be stated. In an action against a carrier, it was held unnecessary to state in the declaration a notice by which the carrier limited his responsibility (in certain cases) to 5*l.* (Clarke v. Gray, 6 East, 564). If a carrier limit his responsibility, that need not be noticed in pleading; but if a stipulation be made that under certain circumstances he shall not be liable at all, that must be stated (per Abbott, C. J., Latham v. Rutley, 2 B. & C. 22; 3 D. & R. 211; see post, "CARRIER"). So, where to the warranty of a horse was annexed a condition that the warranty should terminate at twelve the next day, unless in the meantime a notice of defects was sent, it was held that the condition formed no qualification of the contract of warranty, but was matter of defence (Smart v. Hyde, 1 Dowl. N. S. 60; 8 M. & W. 723). In assumpsit for not accepting rice sold, and the contract was to accept per sample, the omission in the declaration of these words was held immaterial; "as they were not a description of the commodity sold, but a mere collateral engagement on the part of the seller, *that it should be of a particular quality" (per Abbott, C. J., Parker v. Palmer, 4 B. & A. 391). But any matter which qualifies the [*201] contract, and destroys the plt.'s right to recover, either in toto or in part, or constitutes a condition precedent, must be stated in the declaration. Therefore, on a warranty, where plt. stated deft. warranted a horse to be sound, and the proof was, that deft. warranted the horse to be sound every where except a kick on the leg, it was held to be a qualified warranty (Jones v. Cowley, 4 B. & C. 445; 6 D. & R. 533). So, exceptions and conditions, qualifying the insurer's liability on a policy of insurance, should be stated (Strong v. Rule, 3 Bing. 315).

It was agreed in writing, between the plt. and defts., that certain growing crops of the plt. should be taken by the defts. at a valuation made by certain valuers, on the 1st of April, 1844, and the amount secured by the deft.'s promissory note; but that such valuation should be examined and revised on the 1st of August then next ensuing; and that the parties should be bound by any alteration then made in it. The valuers, on the 1st of April, estimated 41*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* to be due to the plt. for the crops (after certain deductions), and the defts. accordingly gave their promissory note for that amount. The valuers revised their valuation on the 2nd of August, 1844, and, according to their revised valuation, the sum due to the plt. was only 3*l.* 5*s.*: held, that the time fixed for the revision of the valuation was of the essence of the contract, and that the plt. was entitled to the full amount of the note, though it was proved that nothing had occurred between the first and second of August to affect the value of the crops (Marshall v. Powell, 11 Jur. 61; 16 Law J. 5 Q. B.; 1 N. P. C. 590).

Statement of Alternative Contract.] A contract in the alternative must not be stated as an absolute contract, though the option were in the party pleading (Penny v. Porter, 2 East, 2; 2 B. & P. 119, n.; Tate v. Wellings, 3 T. R. 531; White v. Wilson, 2 B. & P. 116; see Miles v. Sheward, 8 East, 8). An agreement to pay 20*l.*, if a given number should be drawn on a given day, varies from an agreement to deliver an undrawn ticket, or pay 20*l.* (Churchill v. Wilkins, 1 T. R. 448). As, where it was agreed to purchase a hundred bags of wheat, forty or fifty to be delivered on one market-day, and the remainder on the next, and only forty were delivered, and, in an action for the non-delivery of the remainder, the contract was not stated in the alternative, it was held fatal (Penny v. Porter, 2 East, 2).

A collateral consideration is not sufficient to support an action of assumpsit, but there must be an immediate consideration for the precise promise (Smart v. Chell, 7 D. P. C. 78); therefore, where the declaration stated that by negligence of the deft. (an attorney), the plt., his attorney, was compelled to pay 14*l.*, and in consideration thereof deft. promised to pay half that sum (not stating any forbearance to sue for the negligence): held, not sufficient consideration stated (Smart v. Chell, supra).

Where there are two or more special contracts, it will be fatal to blend them together, and treat them as one; therefore, where different lots were sold at an auction for different sums, the contracts were deemed separate, both in law and in fact, and the plt. having, in assumpsit for refusing to comply with the conditions of sale, blended the two contracts, and declared upon them as one agreement, he was non-suited (James v. Shore, 1 Stark. 426; see Emmerson v. Heelis, 2 Taunt. 38). But, where the terms of a former agreement have been modified and altered by a subsequent one, the [*202] plt. may *declare upon the latter one, without noticing the former (Boone v. Mitchell, 1 B. & C. 18; Thresh v. Rake, 1 Esp. 53; Robinson v. Tobin, 1 Stark. 336).

Scilicet: When the matter alleged is material and traversable, it must be stated with exactness and certainty, the stating it under a videlicet will not avoid the consequences of a variance, or a repugnancy, if the matter be misstated, and there would be a fatal variance in the absence of the videlicet; whether the matter be the consideration or promise, or be time, or place (1 Ch. Pl. 325, and cases cited in n. (k)). "On the other hand, the want of a videlicet will in some cases make an averment material, that would not otherwise be so; as if a thing which is not material be positively averred without a videlicet, though it were not necessary to be so, yet it is thereby made material and must be proved" (2 Saund. 291 c, n.).

Averments.] Next to the statement of the contract, the declaration should contain all such averments as are necessary to show a complete cause of action. If, for example, deft.'s contract be to do an act at the expiration of a given time, or the happening of a certain event, it must be averred that the time expired, or that the event happened before the commencement of the suit (see Parkinson v. Whitehead, 2 Sc. N. R. 620; S. C. 2 M. & G. 329); or, if the act to be done were such as required time, and no specific time were agreed on, it must be averred that a reasonable time had elapsed (Sansom v. Rhodes, 6 B. N. C. 621; 8 Sc. 544; see post, "MARRIAGE"). But in actions on bills of exchange and promissory notes, it is sufficient, as formerly, to aver, with respect to the time of payment, "which period has now elapsed" (Owen v. Waters, 2 M. & W. 91; S. C. 5 Dowl. 324, overruling Abbott v. Arlett, 4 Dowl. 752; S. C. 1 M. & W. 209; see post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE").

The class of averments upon which generally the greatest difficulty arises, are:—

Averment of Performance of Conditions Precedent—when necessary.]

Where there are several promises, or agreements, or covenants, which are independent of each other, one party may bring an action against the other for a breach of his promise, &c., without averring or proving a performance of the promise, &c., on his, the plt.'s part; and it is, in such case, no excuse for the deft. to plead, or show a breach of the promise on the plt.'s part. But, where the promises, &c., are dependent, it is necessary for the plt. to aver, and prove a performance of the promise, &c. on his part, or, what is tantamount thereto, an excuse for the non-performance, to entitle himself to sue for a breach of the promise on the part of the deft. (1 Saund. 320 a, n.; Ughtred's case, 7 Co. Rep. 10 a, b; Jones v. Barkley, Doug. 690; Hotham v. East India Company, 1 T. R. 638); except in cases where the promise of the plt. was the consideration for the deft.'s promise (see Peate v. Dicken, 1 C. M. & R. 422; Martindale v. Fisher, 1 Wils. 88; Nichols v. Rainbred, Hob. 88; Pullen v. Stokes, 2 H. Bl. 312). And, wherever there is a condition precedent, however improbable the thing may be, or difficult to be performed, performance must still be averred; as, where plt. stipulates for the act of third persons (1 Saund. 320 d; Worsley v. Wood, 6 T. R. 710, 719; see Glazebrook v. Woodron, 8 T. R. 373), though strangers, an averment of performance of that act is nevertheless as necessary as in other cases (Ib.).

What a Condition Precedent.] It is extremely difficult to lay down any general rule as to what constitutes a condition precedent; *the question depending on the whole tenor of the contract, and the [*203] intention of the parties (Glazebrook v. Woodrow, 8 T. R. 373; Hotham v. East India Comp. 1 T. R. 645; Thornton v. Jenyns, 1 M. & G. 166; S. C. 1 Sc. N. R. 52; Stevens v. Curling, 3 B. N. C. 355; 3 Sc. 740; Kemble v. Mills, 2 Sc. N. R. 121; S. C. 9 Dowl. 446). It makes no difference where different contracts are placed on a written instrument; the precedence of the performance must depend on the order of time in which the intent of the transaction requires their performance (Jones v. Barkley, Doug. 690). The following rules, however, have been ably collected on the point (see Thorpe v. Thorpe, Ld. Raym. 662; S. C. Salk. 171; 1 Saund. 319, n. 1; 1 Ch. Pl. 6th ed. 323; Selw. N. P., 10th ed. 108):—

Condition where Defendant's Act is to be or may be done first.] 1. If a day be appointed for payment of money, or part of it, or for doing any other act, and the day is to happen, or may happen, before the thing which is the consideration of the money, or other act, is to be performed, an action may be brought for the money, or for not doing such other act before performance; for it appears that the party relied upon his remedy, and did not intend to make the performance a condition precedent (Pordage v. Cole, 1 Saund.

319 h; see Mattock v. Kinglake, 10 Ad. & E. 50). Therefore, if a man covenant to pay another 500*l.* for teaching him a business, 250*l.* to be paid down, and 250*l.* on the 25th February following, an action may be maintained for the second 250*l.* after the 25th February, without averring that the plt. taught the deft. the trade (Campbell v. Jones, 6 T. R. 571; see Franklyn v. Miller, 4 Ad. & E. 599; Cerrall v. Cattell, 4 M. & W. 734; Wilkes v. Smith, 10 M. & W. 355; see also Lester v. Lobley, 7 Ad. & E. 124). Where A. contracts to build a house for B., and finish it on or before a certain day, in consideration of a sum of money which B. contracts to pay A. by instalments, as the building shall proceed, the finishing the house is not a condition precedent to the paying of the money, but the contracts are independent; and A. may, therefore, sue B. for the whole sum, though the building be not finished at the time appointed (Terry v. Duntze, 2 H. Bl. 389). If it is agreed between A. and B., that B. shall pay A. a sum of money for his lands, &c., on a particular day, it is an independent contract; and A. may bring an action for the money before any conveyance by him of the land (Thorpe v. Thorpe, 1 Salk. 171); for, perhaps, the conveyance cannot be made by the day appointed for payment of the money (Pordage v. Cole, Raym. 183; Mattock v. Kinglake, 2 P. & D. 343; 10 Ad. & E. 50; S. C. 3 Jur. 699; Spiller v. Westlake, 2 B. & Ad. 155; Irving v. King, 4 C. & P. 309). Where an agreement was to sell land for a sum to be paid at the expiration of four years, and interest in the mean time half-yearly, held, that the declaration for an instalment of this interest need not contain an averment of readiness to convey (Wilkes v. Smith, 10 M. & W. 360; see Alexander v. Gardner, 1 B. N. C. 671; Hall v. Bainbridge, 5 Q. B. 233; Howden (Lord) v. Simpson, 10 Ad. & E. 793; Pister v. Cater, 9 M. & W. 315). Where the plt. declared that, in consideration that he had agreed to deliver cloth to the deft., deft. agreed to pay him so much in case A.'s horse should win a certain race, an averment that A.'s horse won the race was held sufficient, without averring a delivery of the cloth; but, had the declaration been, that deft. agreed, &c., in consideration that plt. would deliver the cloth, the delivery must have been averred (Martindale v. Fisher, 1 Wils. 88). Where A. covenanted with B. to serve him with three esquires in the wars of France, and B. covenanted with him to pay him so [*204] much *money for the service; and it was further agreed, that half the money should be paid in England, on a certain day, before they went to France, and the rest by quarterly payments (which also might occur before the service), it was held an action would lie for the money before the service (1 Saund. 320 b; 12 Mod. 461). A ship, having been let to freight for twelve months, or for such longer period as the freighters should detain her, for which, certain proportions of the freight were to be paid at the end of two, six, ten, and fourteen months, &c., it is no answer to a breach of non-payment of six months' freight, due at the end of the ten months, that the owner had covenanted to keep the vessel in repair during the time she was freighted, and that she was not in repair when the freighter shipped the goods on board her, during the twelve months, which made it necessary for him to unload and repair her, whereby she was unserviceable for part of the six months, and that he had paid the freight for all the time she was serviceable, and that she was not in his service for ten months in the whole; for non constat but that, after she had been used by the freighter, she wanted repair, without any default of the owner; or, that he was guilty of any delay in making the repairs; and the freight would still run on during the time of repair; the freight being reserved at so much per month, was earned at the end of each month, although the stipulated times of payment were from four months to four months, and the ship were lost before the end of fourteen months (Havelock v. Geddes, 10 East, 555).

Condition where Defendant's Act is to be done afterwards.] 2. But, when a day is appointed for the payment of money, &c., and the day is to happen after the thing which is the consideration of the money, &c., is to be performed, no action can be maintained for the money before performance (Thorpe v. Thorpe, 1 Salk. 171; S. C. 1 Raym. 665; Anon. Cro. Eliz. 46). Therefore, where a ship was let to freight at a certain sum per month, to be paid on her final discharge at the end of her voyage, and she was lost in the middle of her voyage, it was held that no action could be maintained for any freight (Abbott, Ship. 347; Smith v. Wilson, 8 East, 473). So, where freight was to be paid on the ship's arrival at her first destined port, and she was lost before her arrival (Gibbon v. Mendez, 2 B. & A. 17). In an action on a covenant against a lessee for not repairing (the covenant adding, "the lessor allowing and assigning timber for the repairs"), it is necessary to aver that the lessor did allow and assign timber, &c. (Thomas v. Cadwallader, Willes, 496). In a lease for seven years, containing the usual covenants that the lessee should pay the rent, keep the premises in repair, &c., there was a proviso that the lessee might determine the term at the end of the first three or five years, giving six months' previous notice; and that then, from and after the expiration of such notice, and payment of all rents and duties to be paid by the lessee, and performance of all his covenants, until the end of three or five years, the indenture should cease, and be utterly void. Ruled, that the payment of rent, and performance of the other covenants, are conditions precedent to the lessee's determining the term at the end of the first three years, and that his merely giving six months' notice, expiring with the first three years, is not sufficient for that purpose (Porter v. Sheppard, 6 T. R. 665). So, where bail are bound in a recognisance that if deft. be condemned, he shall appear in eight days after warning, and render himself, or pay, &c., the plt. must aver that he was warned, for it is a condition precedent (Com. Dig. Plead. C, 51). So, where deft. agreed to deliver to plt. at a certain price, fifteen *tod of wool, to be [*205] chosen by plt. out of a parcel containing seventeen tod, in an action for the non-delivery of the fifteen tod, the declaration was holden bad, because it did not aver that the plt. had chosen the fifteen tod, which was as a condition precedent to the deft.'s delivering them (Raynay v. Alexander, Yelv. 76). But where deft. agreed, in consideration that plt. would suspend proceedings against A., to render A. to any writ of execution which plt. might issue within fourteen days after notice thereof; held, not a condition precedent that plt. should lodge the writ with the sheriff (Turner v. Standage, 4 B. N. C. 208; 5 Sc. 554; S. C. 2 Jur. 97). Where it was agreed that a vessel was to proceed to T. and there load, and then proceed to a port in the United Kingdom, and upon payment of freight at a certain rate, that forty running days shall be allowed the merchants (if not sooner despatched) for loading at T. and for unloading at the port of discharge, and twelve days on demurrage at 6*l.* per day, the vessel to sail from England on the 24th of February next; held, that the sailing on or before the 24th of February was a condition precedent (Glaholm v. Hays, 2 Man. & G. 257; see Lucas v. Godwin, 3 Bing. N. C. 737). An agreement by which a debtor undertook to convey his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, contained a proviso that "the said agreement was to be void unless the creditors, &c., should concur in the arrangement; held, that this was not a condition precedent, the performance of which the debtor was bound to aver on setting up the agreement as an answer to an action by one of his creditors (Matthews v.

Taylor, 2 Man. & G. 667; Olive v. Booker, 1 Exch. 416). Deft. had sold to plts. cement in casks and bags for a certain sum, the deft. to allow the plts. 3s. 6d. for each cask and 2s. 6d. for each bag, which should be returned, terms cash. In an action upon this contract, for the price of the casks and bags, the deft. pleaded that the plts. did not duly pay the deft. for the cement, according to the terms in the declaration mentioned. It appeared that the plts. had not paid for part of the cement on delivery, nor until after an action had been brought for it. Held, that the words "terms cash" had been sufficiently complied with to entitle the plts. to recover in this action and upon this issue. The plts. averred and the deft. traversed a readiness and offer to return the casks and bags: held, that the averment was severable, and that the plts. were not bound to prove a readiness to return all the casks and bags (Nelson v. Patrick, 16 Law J. 99; 3 C. B. 772).

Condition where Contract goes to Part of Consideration on both sides.]

3. "Where a contract or covenant goes only to part of the consideration on both sides, and a breach of such contract or covenant may be paid for in damages, it is an independent contract or covenant, and an action may be maintained for a breach of the contract or covenant on the part of the deft., without averring performance in the declaration" (1 Saund. 320 b; and per Lord Ellenborough, Davidson v. Gwynne, 12 East, 389). As, where A. conveyed to B. the equity of redemption of a plantation in the West Indies, together with the stock of negroes upon it, in consideration of 500*l.*, and an annuity of 160*l.* for life, and covenanted that he had a good title to the plantation, was lawfully possessed of the negroes, and B. should quietly enjoy; and B. covenanted that A. well and truly performing all and every thing therein contained on his part to be performed, he would pay the annuity; in an action by A. against B. on this covenant, the breach assigned was the non-payment of the annuity: plea, that A. was not at the time legally possessed of the negroes on the plantation, and so had not a good title [206] to convey. The court of K. B., on demurrer, held the plea to be ill; and added, that, if such plea were allowed, any one negro not being the property of A. would bar the action (Boon v. Eyre, 1 H. Bl. 273, n.; S. C. 2 Bl. R. 1312; St. Albans (Duke) v. Shore, 1 H. Bl. 279; Carpenter v. Cresswell, 4 Bing. 409; S. C. 1 M. & P. 66; Rose v. Poulton, 2 B. & Ad. 822; Lawton v. Sutton, 9 M. & W. 795). So, where "it was agreed between C. and D., that, in consideration of 500*l.*, C. should teach D. the art of bleaching materials for making paper, and permit him, during the continuance of a patent which C. had obtained for that purpose, to bleach such materials according to the specification, and C., in consideration of the sum of 250*l.* paid, and of the further sum of 250*l.*, to be paid by D. to him, covenanted that he would, with all possible expedition, teach D. the method of bleaching such materials, and D. covenanted that he would, on or before the 24th of February, 1794, or sooner, in case C. should before that time have taught him the bleaching of such materials, pay to C. the further sum of 250*l.*: in covenant by C. against D., the breach assigned was, the non-payment of the 250*l.*; to which it was objected, that it was not averred that C. had taught D. the method of bleaching such materials. The court, however, held, that the whole consideration of the agreement being that C. should permit D. to bleach materials, as well as teach him the method of doing it, the covenant by C. to teach formed but part of the consideration, for a breach of which D. might recover a recompense in damages; and C. having in part executed his agreement, by transferring to D. a right to exercise the patent, he ought not to keep that right without paying the remainder of the consideration; because he may have sustained some damage by D.'s not having instructed him" (Campbell v. Jones, 6 T. R. 570). Where, in a lease, the lessee covenanted to pay the rent, and the lessor covenanted that the lessee, paying the rent, should quietly enjoy; held, that the payment of the rent was not a condition precedent to the lessee's rights to quiet enjoyment (Dawson v. Dyer, 5 B. & Ad. 584; and, see Allen v. Cameron, 1 C. & M. 833). Where the master and freighter of a vessel of four hundred tons mutually agreed in writing that the ship, being every way fitted for the voyage, should, with all convenient speed, proceed to Petersburg, and there load from the freighter's factors a complete cargo of hemp and iron, and proceed therewith to London, and deliver the same on being paid freight for hemp 5*l.* per ton, for iron 5*s.* per ton, &c., one half to be paid on a right delivery, the other at three months: held, that the delivery of a complete cargo was not a condition precedent, but that the master might recover freight for a short cargo at the stipulated rates per ton, the freighter having his remedy in damages for such short delivery (Ritchie v. Atkinson, 10 East, 295; see Stavers v. Curling, 3 B. N. C. 355; S. C. 3 Sc. 740; Bornmann v. Tooke, 1 Camp. 377; Galloway v. Jackson, 3 Sc. N. R. 753). Plt., as captain of a South Sea whaler, covenanted with defendants that he would proceed to the fishery and procure a cargo of sperm oil, &c., or as great a portion as might be under all circumstances within his power to obtain; would return to London and at his own cost deliver the cargo; would obey instructions, be frugal of provisions, and not dispose of them without accounting for the same, and would not smuggle or trade; deft. covenanted on the performance of the before-mentioned terms and conditions on the part of the plt. to pay him a certain proportion of the net proceeds of the cargo. Held, that the plt.'s covenants were independent and that the performance of them was not a condition precedent to an action on the deft.'s covenant (Stavers v. Curling, supra; see Invett v. Spencer, 1 Exch. 647; Ollive v. Booker, sup.; Mills v. Blackall, 17 Law J., 31, Q. B.; 12 Jur. 93; *Dicker v. Jackson, 17 Law J., 234, C. P.; 12 Jur. 541; see also Franklin v. Miller, 4 Ad. & E. 599; Wilkes [*207] v. Smith, 10 M. & W. 355; Glaholm v. Hays, supra). Where in a contract for a loan it was agreed that securities deposited should be returned upon repayment, held, that the return of the securities was neither a concurrent act nor a condition precedent (Scott v. Parker, 1 Q. B. 809; see Fishmongers' Company v. Robertson, 5 Man. & G. 131; Mackintosh v. Midland Railway Company, 14 M. & W. 548). Where a charter-party contained a covenant by the owner, that the ship should and would proceed from D., where she then lay, on or before the 12th day of February, on her outward-bound voyage, and return, &c., and a covenant by the freighter that, in consideration of every thing above mentioned, &c., he would pay certain freight for the voyage; the voyage being averred to be performed, and the freight earned, the owner may recover in an action of covenant, without averring that the ship sailed on or before the 12th February: such covenant that the ship should sail on or before the 12th February being no condition precedent, but only an independent covenant, for breach of which the party had his remedy for damages (Hall v. Cazenove, 4 East, 477; see also Havelock v. Geddes, 10 East, 555; Fothergill v. Walton, 8 Taunt. 576; S. C. 2 Moo. 630; Storer v. Gordon, 3 M. & S. 308). But where it was agreed that the vessel should proceed to Trieste, and there load a full cargo of wheat, and therewith proceed to a port in the United Kingdom, the vessel to sail from England on or before the 4th of February; held, that the sailing on or before the 4th was a condition precedent to the owner's right to sue the merchants for not providing a cargo at Trieste (Glaholm v. Hays, 3 Sc. N. R. 471; S. C. 2 M. & G. 257; see also Shadforth v. Higgin, 3 Camp. 385; Freeman v. Taylor, 8 Bing. 124; S. C. 1 M. & Sc. 182). So, where a day is specified for the performance of certain works, and the money is to be paid on performance, although the works be not performed on the day specified, yet an action may be maintained for the money when they are performed; and the party who is to pay the money must have recourse to a cross-action for any damages occasioned by the delay (Cock v. Curtoys, cited 1 Saund. 319). If a vendee receive one of several articles bought together under one contract, he must pay for such article, although he might have refused to take it (Champion v. Short, 1 Camp. 53). Where the deft. agreed to purchase a lot of trees for a certain sum, and pay for the same according to conditions of sale, and afterwards felled and carried away part of them, without making such payment, and refused to pay until the remainder had been delivered, it was held, he was liable for the value of the trees he had taken (Bragg v. Cole, 6 Moo. 614). Upon a contract for twenty-four numbers of a periodical work, to be delivered monthly, at a guinea a number, a plt. may sue for the numbers actually delivered, though not amounting to the whole twenty-four (Mavor v. Pyne, 3 Bing. 285).

Where mutual Promises go to whole Consideration on both sides.] 4. But, where the mutual covenants go to the whole consideration on both sides, they are mutual conditions, and performance or excuse for it must be averred (Large v. Cheshire, 1 Vent. 147; St. Alban's (Duke) v. Shore, 1 H. Bl. 270). An entire contract cannot be apportioned; and if a party contract to do a certain work before his claim to remuneration is to accrue, he cannot recover for a partial performance, although the completion was prevented by accident, as by fire, &c. (Cutter v. Powell, 6 T. R. 320; Hulle v. Heightman, 2 East, 145; Mulloy v. Baker, 5 East, 316); unless, indeed, the deft. [*208] disaffirm the entirety of the contract, by receiving what in law *amounts to a partial benefit (supra). A. covenants that he will, on or before a certain day, convey to B., by such conveyance as B.'s counsel should advise, all the ground before conveyed to him by C.; in consideration of which, B. covenants to pay a certain sum, and reserve certain rents, &c., to A., and to lay out a certain sum on the premises; it was held, that A. cannot maintain covenant against B. without averring such a conveyance, or a readiness to convey to B., on or before the day, all the land, or that B. prevented him by some act or neglect of his (Heard v. Wadham, 1 East, 619). In an action for covenant on a charter-party of affreightment, in which the deft. covenanted to pay so much for freight for goods delivered at A., freight cannot be recovered pro rata itineris, if the ship be wrecked at B. before her arrival at A., though the deft. accept his goods at B. (Cook v. Jennings, 7 T. R. 381; Leddard v. Lopes, 10 East, 526; ante). Plts. and deft. entered into the following contract: "Bought of Messrs. A. and Co., about thirty packs of Cheviot fleeces, ewes and hogs, and agreed to take the undermentioned noils (coarse woolen cloths); also agreed to draw for 210*l.* on account at three months," specifying the quantity and quality of the noils; held, one entire contract, and that A. and Co. could sue for non delivery of the noils, without averring the delivery or tender to the deft. of the fleeces (Atkinson v. Smith, 14 M. & W. 695).

In the case of reciprocal covenants, constituting mutual conditions to be performed at the same time, the plt. must aver performance, or a readiness to perform his part of the contract (Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East, 203). Thus, in declaring on a promise to pay a sum of money, in consideration that plt. would execute a release, it must be averred that such release was executed, or tendered and refused (Collins v. Gibbs, 2 Burr. 899; Smith v. Wilson, 8 East, 437; Andrews v. Whitehead, 13 East, 117; 2 Saund. 108, n. 3). A declaration in covenant by the vendor, against an intended purchaser of lands, for non-payment of the purchase money, need not aver that plt. offered or tendered a conveyance: it suffices to say that he was always ready and willing to execute one; for, in the absence of an express stipulation to the contrary, it is the purchaser's duty to prepare the conveyance and tender it to the vendor for execution (Poole v. Hill, 6 M. & W. 835; see De Medina v. Norman, 2 D. N. S. 239). In an action for not delivering goods sold, a readiness on the plt.'s part to pay the price must be alleged (Rawson v. Johnson, supra; see Wilkes v. Atkinson, 1 Marsh. 412; Levy v. Herbert (Lord), 7 Taunt. 314; 2 Saund. 352, n.); but paying rent is not a condition precedent to the lessee's right to sue for a disturbance of possession (Dawson v. Dyer, 5 B. & A. 584).

Where concurrent Acts to be done at the same time.] 5. Where two acts are concurrent, and to be done at the same time. When A. contracts or covenants to convey an estate, or to deliver goods, to B. on such a day, or generally, and, in consideration thereof, B. contracts or covenants to pay A. a sum of money on the same day, or generally, neither can maintain an action without showing performance of, or a readiness and offer to perform, his part, and either stating that the deft. neglected to attend when necessary, or refused to perform his part, or discharged the plt. from his performance (Morton v. Lamb, 7 T. R. 125; Callonel v. Briggs, 1 Salk. 112, 3; Thorpe v. Thorpe, ib. 171; Giles v. Hart, 2 Salk. 623; Gordison v. Nunn, 4 T. R. 761; Glazebrook v. Woodrow, 8 T. R. 366; Jones v. Barkeley, Doug. 684; Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East, 203; 2 Saund. 252, n. 3; Stephens v. De Medina, 4 Q. B. 422; see Head v. Baldrey*, 6 Ad. & E. 459; [*209] Chanter v. Leese, 4 M. & W. 295); or that the deft. had incapacitated himself from performing his part (Knight v. Crockford, 1 Esp. 190; see 1 Camp. 253, 552); but it does not seem necessary in such case to aver a tender and refusal: it is sufficient averment, at least after verdict, that plt. was ready and willing, and offered to pay the money or do the particular act (Feny v. Williams, 8 Taunt. 62; Martin v. Smith, 6 East, 555; Levy v. Herbert, 7 Taunt. 314; Waterhouse v. Skinner, 2 B. & P. 447; Kemble v. Mills, 2 Sc. N. R. 121; 1 M. & G. 757; S. C. 9 Dowl. 446; Hannuic v. Goldner, 11 M. & W. 849; Granger v. Dacre, 12 M. & W. 431). Where the declaration was founded on an agreement to accept goods within a reasonable time after notice, the plt. must aver that he was himself during such reasonable time ready to deliver them (Granger v. Dacre, 12 M. & W. 431; Hannuic v. Goldner, 11 M. & W. 849; see Jackson v. Allawy, 6 Man. & G. 942; Bond v. Lett, 1 C. B. 222); and it will be sufficient proof of this averment to show that he called on deft. to accomplish this (Wilks v. Atkinson, 1 Marsh. 412; Levy v. Herbert, supra, per Dallas, C. J.). In an action against a carrier for refusing to carry goods, the declaration averred that plt. was ready and willing, and then offered to pay to deft. such sum of money as deft. was legally entitled to receive for the receipt, carriage, and conveyance of the said parcel: held, on special demurrer, sufficient, and that it was not necessary to aver an actual tender of the money (Pickford v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 8 M. & W. 372); and the performance of an implied condition ought to be averred as well as an expressed one, as, for instance, the lapse of a reasonable time (Samson v. Rhodes, 6 B. N. C. 261; Granger v. Dacre, 12 M. & W. 431; Startup v. Macdonald, 2 Man. & G. 401). Where there are two acts to be done in pursuance of an agreement, and a day is specified for the performance of one and none for the other, an action will lie for the omission to comply with the act at the specified time, without averring performance of the other act (see Mattock v. Kingslake, 10 Ad. & E. 50; Wilks v. Smith, 10 M. & W. 355). In an action on an undertaking to deliver on request at a certain price, it is sufficient, without alleging an actual tender of the price, to aver a request, and that plt. was ready and willing to receive the goods, and to pay for them according to the terms of the sale, and that deft. had notice of such readiness, but refused to deliver them (Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East, 203); or, if deft. did not attend, at the appointed place, such non-attendance should be stated, and then the averment of request would be unnecessary (Morton v. Lamb, supra; Bardenave v. Gregory, 5 East, 107; see Lilly v. Hewitt, 11 Price, 494). On a promise to pay money in consideration of forbearance by plt., the fact of forbearance must be averred (Com. Dig. Plead. C. 52). But where A. and B. agreed to exchange horses, and a sum of money was given by way of earnest: held, that A. might sue B. for non-delivery of his horse, without averring a delivery of, or readiness to deliver his, as the payment of earnest vested the property of A.'s horse in B. (Back v. Owen, 5 T. R. 409).

Where a party was to pull down a wall and then to be paid for it, the pulling down is a condition precedent to the right to enforce payment; but a readiness to pay is not a condition precedent to the right to oblige the deft. to commence the work (Morton v. Lamb, 2 Saund. 352 b; see Combes v. Green, 11 M. & W. 490).

There are many cases where it has been held, though no condition be expressed, yet the lapse of a reasonable time is an implied condition precedent to the right of action (see Stewart v. Eastwood, 11 M. & W. [*210] 197; Sansom v. Rhodes, supra; Granger v. Dacre*, supra; Startup v. Macdonald, supra); the delivery of goods so late that they could not be examined before twelve o'clock at night, is not an unreasonable hour (Startup v. Macdonald, 2 Man. & G. 395).

Where an estate or interest passed or vested immediately in the plt., and was to be defeated by condition subsequent, or matter ex post facto, performance of that matter need not be averred (7 Co. R. 10 a; Cornish v. Bolitho, Willes, 147); as, if a grant of an annuity were until the plt. should be advanced to a benefice, he need not say that he was not yet advanced (Pl. Com. 25 b, 30, a, 32 b; Hotham v. East India Company, 1 T. R. 645; Wood v. Worsley, 2 H. Bl. 579).

Declaration in assumpsit recited an agreement in writing by which the deft. agreed to permit the plt. to occupy certain lands until the 29th of September, 1843, the plt. paying therefore on that day, as he thereby agreed to do, 30*l.* as rent for the same, and then to deliver up the premises to the deft. in good repair, and meantime to cultivate the same in a husbandlike manner; and that, upon the plt. so quitting the premises, paying the rent, and observing the other stipulations, and releasing the deft. from all claim under the will of H. G., as also releasing the deft. all the lands devised by H. G. which the plt. thereby agreed to do, the deft. should pay to the plt. 200*l.* with interest from the 29th of September, 1842; it was further agreed that all releases required by the deft. should be prepared by the deft.'s attorney. Averment that the plaintiff was ready and willing to deliver up the premises, and to pay the rent, and to release the deft. (as agreed on). Breach, that although the 29th of September did elapse, &c., and although a reasonable time elapsed between that day and the commencement of this suit for the payment of the 200*l.*, and although no release was prepared by deft.'s attorney before the said day,—non-payment of the 200*l.* by the deft. Plea, that the plt. was not ready and willing to deliver up the premises: held, on special demurrer, that the acts to be done by the plt. were not conditions precedents to, or independent of, but concurrent with, the payment of the 200*l.* by the deft. That it was, therefore, sufficient for the plt. to aver his readiness and willingness to do them, without alleging performance; but that this avermment was necessary, and, therefore, that the plea was good, as raising a material issue. Third plea, that the plt. was not ready and willing to release the deft.; held, that as the release was to be prepared by the deft.'s attorney, and it was averred that no such release was prepared, the plt.'s readiness to execute it was immaterial, and the plea was therefore bad, as raising an immaterial issue (Giles v. Giles, 15 Law J. 387, Q. B.).

Form of Averments of Performance, or Excuse for Performance.] Averments should be formally stated by an express allegation; as, "that plt. avers," or, "in fact saith" (Com. Dig. Plead. C. 77; 1 Saund. 117, n.; ib. 235; 2 ib. 61 g). The simple and best mode is, "and the plt. saith that" (1 Ch. Pl. 333). And, when an express averment of performance is necessary, plt. must aver it with time and place, when and where it was done, and the performance must be precisely alleged, and with reasonable certainty, so that the court may judge whether the intent of the contract has been duly performed (see per Holt, C. J., Ld. Raym. 662; S. C. Salk. 171). Thus, in consideration that plt. would acquit A. of a debt, it must be shown how, as by deed (Lanaret v. Rivet, Cro. Jac. 503; King v. Hobbs, Cro. Eliz. 914; Prideaux v. Rawlins, Jones, 125). On a promise to pay the debt of another in consideration of forbearance, the fact and time of forbearance must be averred * (Com. Dig. Plead. C. 52; see Martin v. Burn, [*211] 2 N. & P. 297; 7 Ad. & E. 19), and it must appear either by averment or necessary intendment to whom the forbearance was given (Jones v. Ashburnham, 4 East, 455; Marshall v. Birkenshaw, 1 N. R. 172). When an usurious contract was set out in the declaration, and the period of forbearance was stated to be from the 21st Dec. 1774, until the 23d Dec. 1776; held, that evidence of a contract from the 23rd Dec. 1774, for two years, did not support the declaration (Carlisle v. Trears, Cowp. 676; Fox v. Keeling, 2 Ad. & E. 620). So, where the forbearance was alleged to be until a certain specified day absolutely, but the contract proved was until the day named, or a certain other day at the option of the borrower: held, that the declaration was not supported (Tate v. Wellings, 3 T. R. 531). But, on a promise to pay so much as the plt. should expend for the officers of the army in such a suit, an averment that he spent so much is sufficient, without showing for what officers in particular (Com. Dig. Plead. C. 61; Jermy v. Jenny, T. Raym. 8, 9). In a declaration on a contract to pay so much if the plt. would marry deft.'s daughter at his request, an averment that he did marry her, without saying at the deft.'s request, is sufficiently certain (Poynter v. Poynter, Cro. Car. 194). And upon a contract by deft. to restore plt.'s goods on plt. giving him two warrants of attorney, an averment that he gave deft. two warrants of attorney, without specifying when or what they were, was holden sufficient on general demurrer (Radford v. Smith, 6 Dowl. 138; S. C. 3 M. & W. 254). The performance must be averred to have been according to the agreement and intention of the parties (Jermy v. Jenny, T. Raym. 8, 9; Com. Dig. Plead. C. 61): as, on a promise in consideration that the plt. would cause A. to be bound to the deft. for 20*l.*, it is not sufficient to aver that the plt. caused A. to come to be bound, but it also ought to be alleged that A. was bound (Com. Dig. Plead. C. 58; Game v. Harvie, Yelv. 50). An exact performance, according to the intention of the parties, must also be stated, as on a promise in consideration that the plt. would procure the loan of 20*l.* for one year, it will not suffice to allege that he procured part at one time and part at another (Com. Dig. Plead. C. 59; Dorrington v. East, Yelv. 87); but a condition to enfeoff is satisfied by a conveyance by lease and release (Co. Litt. 207 a); and a condition to deliver a will by delivery of the letters testamentary (1 Rol. Abr.

426, pl. 2—4; Poynter v. Poynter, Cro. Car. 194). It is usual, in declarations on mutual promises and in covenant between landlord and tenant, &c., to aver that the plt. hath performed all things on his part to be performed; but this is unnecessary (1 Saund. 234, c, n. (5)); though it may, after verdict, aid the omission of an averment of a special performance (Thorpe v. Thorpe, Lut. 253; Sir T. Jones, 125; Varley v. Manton, 9 Bing. 363; S. C. 2 M. & Sc. 484). As to where a general allegation of performance is sufficient, see Proctor v. Sargent, 2 Man. & G. 20; Kemble v. Mills, 1 Man. & G. 757). If the condition be in the disjunctive, the averment of performance must be so too (Burgess v. Brazier, 1 Stra. 594).

Averment of Request—when necessary.) When it is necessary, by the terms of the contract, that the deft. should be requested by plt. to perform his part of the contract, such request, being a condition precedent, must be specially alleged in the declaration (Com. Dig. Plead. C, 69; 1 Saund. 33, n. (2)); Phillips v. Fielding, 2 H. Bl. 131; Back v. Owen, 5 T. R. 409; Williams v. Germaine, 7 B. & C. 468; see Radford v. Smith, 3 M. & W. 258); or a sufficient excuse for the omission (see post, infra). In *an [*212] action for not delivering a horse sold by deft. to plt., or for not finding timber for repairs, a special request should be alleged (Back v. Owen, supra; Lowe v. Kirby, Jon. 56; Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East, 204). So, where a note is payable one month after demand, a demand must be made (Sharpe v. Booth, 1 R. & M. 388); but not where payable on demand (Rumball v. Ball, 10 Mod. 38). It must be averred and proved, or else excused, if the contract were to deliver up a bond to be cancelled on request (Peck v. Methold, 3 Bulst. 299); so, to pay money on request (Carter v. Ring, 3 Camp. 459); so, if an award direct the deft. to perform some act on request (1 Saund. 32); so, if deft. contracted, as surety, to pay the debt or rent of a third party on request (Sicklimore v. Thistleton, 6 M. & S. 9; see Rede v. Farr, 6 M. & S. 9; see Bowdell v. Parsons, 10 East, 359; Lilley v. Hewitt, 11 Pri. 494). But, on a bond conditioned generally for payment with interest, no demand need be alleged (Gibbs v. Southam, 5 B. & Ad. 911). Where a mere duty or sum of money, which the deft. is in duty bound to pay or perform, is promised to be performed or paid on request, there needs no actual request (see Rowe v. Young, 2 B. & B. 231); and, in the case of common counts for goods sold, work and labour performed, money lent, &c., although the promise have been laid to pay on request, the "licet scipius requisitus" need not be laid or proved (Ring v. Roxbrough, 2 C. & J. 418; 2 Tyr. 468); but, where a collateral duty or sum is promised to be performed or paid on request, there must be an actual request (Birks v. Trippet, 1 Saund. 33 a), or some averment to excuse it (Amory v. Brodrick, 5 B. & A. 712; S. C. 1 D. & R. 361). Thus, where a party promises to pay on request money previously due, plt. need not make or aver a request to pay (B. N. P. 151 b; Williams v. Germaine, supra; Ring v. Roxbrough, supra). The bringing of the action would, in that case, be a sufficient request (Simpson v. Routh, 2 B. & C. 683; Wallis v. Scott, 1 Str. 88). So, no demand of payment need be made on a note payable on demand so as to charge the maker (Norton v. Ellam, 2 M. & W. 461; Rumball v. Ball, 10 Mod. 38; Frampton v. Coulson, 1 Wils. 33). And, though a distinction was formerly taken between a promise by the deft. to pay a debt originally his own, and that of a third person, that distinction is now overruled (Hill v. Wade, Cro. Jac. 523; Wallis v. Scott, 1 Str. 88; Brockingham v. Shacker, 2 Vent. 75). Therefore, where deft. promised, in consideration that plt. would discharge A. from custody, to give his note for 10s. in the pound on the debt, it was held unnecessary to state a request to deliver the note (Brown

v. Dean, 2 N. & M. 317; S. C. 5 B. & Ad. 848; see also Radford v. Smith, 6 Dowl. 381; S. C. 3 M. & W. 254); so, where deft. undertook to procure plt.'s goods, which had been seized under a fi. fa., to be re-delivered to him on his giving deft. two warrants of attorney for securing the amount; held, it was not necessary, after alleging the giving of the warrants of attorney, to aver a request of the goods (Radford v. Smith, 6 Dowl. 381; S. C. 3 M. & W. 254; see Spaeth v. Hare, 1 Dowl. N. S. 595; 9 M. & W. 326).

No request is necessary where the party has, by his own act, rendered the performance of the contract by him impossible: as, where deft. was to deliver a certain quantity of hay to plt. on request, and it was stated that deft. had otherwise disposed of it (Bowdell v. Parsons, 10 East, 359; see also Amory v. Brodrick, 5 B. & A. 716; S. C. 1 D. & R. 361; Bristow v. Waddington, 2 N. R. 355; Lovelock v. Franklyn, 8 Q. B. 371). On the other hand, in an action for not marrying on request, plt. should aver a request, or some other allegation, to dispense with it (Seymour v. Gartside, 2 D. & R. 55). *But, in a declaration for not marrying [*213] within a reasonable time after request, if the count show that the deft., after promise and before action brought, married a person other than the plt., a request is not a necessary averment; and a plea to such count, alleging, as new matter, that request was not made, is no defence. The declaration, averring deft.'s marriage to such other person, need not show that the person is living. So held, on demurrer to a plea, which stated by way of confession and avoidance that plt. did not at any time, before action brought request deft. to marry (Short v. Stone, 8 Q. B. 368; see Cains v. Smith, 15 Law J. 106, Ex.). In an action against an agent for not accounting, a request to account should be averred (Topham v. Braddick, 1 Taunt. 572). So, on a contract to deliver up a bond to be cancelled on request (3 Bulst. 549); or, on an award to perform an act on request (Birks v. Trippet, 1 Saund. 32). So, a request of payment should be made on sheriff previous to an action for not paying over the proceeds of an execution (Jefferies v. Sheppard, 3 B. & A. 696); or, for any surplus in his hands after satisfying it (see Simpson v. Routh, 2 B. & C. 685); and it seems necessary, in all cases where plt. alleges, not the actual performance of an act which was to be concurrent with deft.'s, but a readiness and offer to perform it, to aver a request (see ante, p. 207). But where actual performance is averred, the allegation of a request is unnecessary, except where deft.'s contract was to do the act on request (see Radford v. Smith, 6 Dowl. 381; S. C. 3 M. & W. 254; where Back v. Owen, 5 T. R. 409, is commented on by Parke, B.).

Form and Manner of stating Request or Excuse.] When a special request is necessary, it must be stated when, and by and to whom it was made (3 Bulst. 298; Wallis v. Scott, 1 Str. 88; Com. Dig. Plead. C. 69). The general averment, "although often requested," &c. will not be sufficient (Back v. Owen, 5 T. R. 409); since the pleading rules H. T. 4 Will. IV., no place of request need be stated, unless a request at a particular place be material according to the terms of the contract; and the request must be so set forth, that the court may judge whether it was sufficient, according to the contract (Hardr. 38; Skin. 391). But the want of particularity in the statement of a request can only be taken advantage of by special demurrer (Bowdell v. Parsons, 10 East, 359; Amory v. Brodrick, 5 B. & A. 712; Seymour v. Gartside, 2 D. & R. 55). If a special request be unnecessarily stated, plt. is not bound to prove it (Buckley v. Thomas, Plow. 128), consequently it cannot be traversed (Spaeth v. Hare, 1 Dow. N. S. 595; S. C. 9

M. & W. 320). The usual averment of "although often requested so to," do," in cases where this general form is sufficient, is of no avail in pleading, and the omission of it is immaterial (Phillips v. Fielding, 2 H. Bl. 131; Morgan v. Sargent, 1 B. & P. 59; Frampton v. Coulson, 1 Wils. 33; Ring v. Roxbrough, 2 Crompt. & J. 418); though, indeed, its insertion will, after verdict, avoid a defect in or omission of stating a special request (see Seymour v. Gartside, 2 D. & R. 55). In averring an excuse of performance by the plt., he must state his readiness to perform the act and the particular circumstances which constitute the excuse, so that it is not sufficient to state that arbitrators could not make their award, without showing the special cause which prevented them, (2 Saund. 129; 1 Ch. Pl. 335). It must in general be shown that deft. either prevented the performance, or rendered it unnecessary to do the prior act by his neglect, or by his discharging the plt. from performance (Hotham v. East India Company, 1 T. R. 638; Jones v. Barkley, 1 Ch. Pl. 336, n. h). Where deft. stipulated *to pay a

[*214] sum of money on plt.'s assigning to him a certain equity of redemption, and the declaration averred that plt. was ready, &c., and offered to assign, and tendered a draft of assignment to the deft. for approbation, and offered to execute, &c., and would have executed, &c.; but that he absolutely discharged the plt. from executing the same, or any assignments whatever, and had not paid the money, held sufficient (Jones v. Barkley, supra; Laird v. Pim, 7 M. & W. 474). The absence of the deft. if his presence were necessary for the plt.'s performance, or his neglect to do the first act if it were incumbent on him to perform it, will be a sufficient excuse (1 Rol. Abr. 457, 458); or, in some cases, by the deft. not giving notice to the plt. (1 Rol. Abr. 457; Co. Lit. 207 a). It is no excuse for the plt. to show that the third person refused to do the act (Worsley v. Wood, 6 T. R. 710).

Deft. being bail for C. H. in an action brought against him by plt., and plt. having agreed to forego bail on C. F. giving a cognovit to pay 23*l.* by instalments, deft. undertook in default of payment to render C. S. within fourteen days after notice of the issuing of a ca. sa. against him. In a declaration on this agreement, averment of notice of the issuing of the ca. sa. held sufficient without averring a delivery of the writ to the sheriff (Turner v. Standage, 4 Bing. N. C. 208).

Averment of Notice to Defendant, when necessary.] Wherever the fact upon which the deft.'s liability is incurred, lies peculiarly within the knowledge and privity of the plt., notice thereof must be stated to have been given to deft. previous to the commencement of the action (Rex v. Holland, 5 T. R. 621, 624; 2 Saund. 62 a; Com. Dig. Plead. C, 73—75; 1 Saund. 117, n. (2); Henning's case, Cro. Jac. 432). As, where the deft. promises to give the plt. so much for a commodity as it is worth, or as any other had given him for the like, or to give so much for every cloth the plt. should buy, or pay to plt. what damages he had sustained by a battery, or to pay the plt.'s costs of suit (1*l.*; Harris v. Ferrand, Hardr. 42; 16 Vin. Abr. Notice; Rex v. Holland, 5 T. R. 621; Tidd, 442; but see Pullen v. Stokes, in error, 2 H. Bl. 312); and where deft. covenanted to appear at an insurance office, so that plt. might insure his life, and not to go beyond the limits of Europe, notice of the policy was holden necessary though deft. had appeared at the office (Vyse v. Wakefield, 6 M. & W. 442; 8 Dowl. 372; affirmed in error 7 M. & W. 126; S. C. 8 Dowl. 912). But, when the matter does not lie more peculiarly in the knowledge of the plt. than of the deft., no notice is requisite (Harris v. Ferrand, Hardr. 42; 1 Saund. 117, n. (2); 2 Saund. 62 a, n. (4)). Therefore, if a man contracts to do a thing on the performance of an act by a stranger, notice need not be averred, for it lies in the deft.'s knowledge as much as the plt.'s, and he ought to take notice of it at his peril (Harris v. Ferrand, supra; 2 Saund. 62 a, n. (4); Com. Dig. Plead. C, 75). If a man be bound to another to indemnify against the acts of a third person, no notice of these acts need be alleged (1 Saund. 116; Lelly v. Hewitt, 11 Pri. 494). Where the deft. promises plt. to give as much as a third person named, there the information was as accessible to the deft. as the plt. (Smith v. —, 11 Mod. 48; Smith v. Goff, 2 Salk. 457; S. C. 2 Raym. 1127). And so, in the case of an award, no notice thereof need be stated (2 Saund. 62 a), unless it be expressly stipulated that a notification be made to the parties (2 Bulst. 144; Harris v. Ferrand, supra; R. v. Holland, 5 T. R. 621; see Mansell v. Bulteel, 5 B. & Ad. 507). And, in an action on a promissory note by indorsee against maker, notice of the *indorsement need not be averred (Reynolds v. Davies, 1 B. & P. 625). [*215] And on a promise to pay so much money on the full age of an infant, no notice is requisite of his having attained that age (1 Saund. 117, n. (2); Tidd, 442); or where deft. had been a party to a previous suit or decree, no notice thereof was deemed requisite (Ashe v. Doughty, Yelv. 121). Where the deft., by the terms of the contract, engaged to take notice at his peril, no notice need be averred, even though the fact peculiarly lie in plt.'s knowledge: as, where he contracted to pay money on the marriage of the plt. with B. (Selby v. Wilkinson, 2 Bulst. 254; Com. Dig. Plead. C, 75); and, in the case of a condition precedent, to be performed by the plt. to the deft. in person, no notice of the plt.'s performance need be averred (Com. Dig. Plead. C, 75).

In actions on bills of exchange, promissory notes, &c., against the drawer or indorsee, an allegation of notice of dishonour, or some excuse for the neglect, is essential (Rashton v. Aspenall, Doug. 679; Lundie v. Robertson, 7 East, 231; Bristow v. Waddington, 2 N. R. 355; see post, "BILLS OF EXCHANGE"). Where the acts are mutual, and to be performed at the same time, the plt. should, it appears, not only aver his readiness to perform the act, but also a notice of his readiness, or insert some other allegation to dispense with it. Thus, in an action against a woman for not marrying plt. within a reasonable time, an averment of notice of readiness to marry should be stated, though the omission would suffice after verdict (Seymour v. Gartside, 2 D. & R. 55).

When notice is necessary, it ought to appear that the notice was given in due time, and to a proper person (Com. Dig. Plead. 74); but, where a special request is averred, notice will sometimes be presumed (Bradley v. Soder, Cro. Jac. 228; Reynolds v. Davies, 1 B. & P. 626; Alfrey v. Blackmore, 3 Bulst. 326). Where no notice has been given, the absconding of the party or other circumstances should be stated as an excuse (1 Ch. Pl. 338); but where a notice has been given, but a justifiable delay in giving it at the regular time has occurred under the averment that notice was given, sometimes the facts excusing the delay may be proved (Firth v. Thrush, 8 B. & C. 387). The omission of an averment of notice, when necessary, will be fatal on demurrer or judgment by default (— v. Henning, Cro. Jac. 432); but may be aided by a verdict (Palgrave v. Wyndham, 1 Stra. 214; 1 Saund. 228 a; Seymour v. Gartside, 2 D. & R. 55); unless in an action against the drawer of a bill (Rushton v. Aspenall, Doug. 679; Lundie v. Robertson, 7 East, 231).

Consequence of Insufficient Averment of Performance.] The omission of an averment of performance of a condition precedent or of an excuse for non-performance is fatal, or in arrest of judgment by default (Collins v.

Gibbs, 2 Burr. 899); but, after verdict, in some cases the omission may be aided (1 Ch. Pl. 337, n. t.; and cases cited). In actions upon agreements to sell and assign leasehold property, an averment by the plt., the vendor, that he was ready and willing, and offered to assign, seems to be sufficient after verdict, without alleging that he had good title (Perry v. Williams); and at least, after verdict, an averment of readiness and willingness to assign is tantamount to an averment of a tender of an assignment (1 Ch. Pl. 337). But, where the non-performance of the condition precedent appears on the face of the pleadings, a verdict will not aid the defect (Worsley v. Wood, 6 T. R. 710); as to the sufficiency of a general allegation of performance, even on general demurrer, see Proctor v. Sargent, 2 M. & G. 20.

Breach.*] It is necessary in all cases for the plt. to allege a [*216] breach of the contract (Com. Dig. Plead. C, 44, &c.). When there are several counts in the declaration for a money demand: as, in actions on bills of exchange and the common counts, one breach, viz., "that the deft. had not paid any of the said moneys, or any part thereof," usually suffices (Frampton v. Coulson, 1 Wils. 33; Butterworth v. Le Despencer (Lord), 3 M. & S. 150). But this would be found almost impracticable in an action, not merely for the non-payment of money. In an action on a special contract, there may be several breaches, all of which may be alleged in one count (Com. Dig. Plead. C, 33; Leph v. Hewitt, 4 East, 154; 1 Ch. Pl. 295). The new rules of pleading expressly allow this (R. H. 4 Will. IV. r. 5). As to several breaches on bonds, post, "Bonds." The usual averment of deft.'s contriving, &c., to injure, &c., the plt., is unnecessary (Tewkesbury (Bailiffs of) v. Diston, 6 East, 433); and, in a declaration against a peer, it should be omitted (Imp. K. B. 526). See the form of breach prescribed by the R. G. T. T. 1 Will. IV.

Must be stated with Certainty.] The breach must be so assigned, and with such certainty, as to show the subject-matter of complaint (Pitt v. Williams, 4 N. & M. 412; S. C. in error 2 Ad. & E. 419; 5 Ad. & E. 685); a breach that deft. has not performed his agreement or promise, is too general, and bad (Com. Dig. Plead. 48; Skin. 344; 7 Pri. 550; Hinde v. Gray, 1 Sc. N. R. 123; 1 Man. & G. 195; S. C. 4 Jur. 392); but the breach may be assigned with less particularity and more conciseness, when great prolixity would be thereby avoided (Barton v. Webb, 8 T. R. 463; Shum v. Farrington, 1 B. & P. 640; Gale v. Reed, 8 Ea. 85); or, where the particulars lie more in the deft.'s than the plt.'s knowledge (Ib.). It may be assigned in the words of the contract, or in words which agree with the sense and substance of it (Com. Dig. Plead. B, 45, C, 46, &c.; 2 Saund. 181 b, c.; Baxter v. Jackson, 1 Sid. 178; Sedden v. Senate, 13 East, 63; Knight v. Cambridge, 6 Taunt. 45; see Hodges v. Gray, 4 Dowl. 733; Archer v. Marsh, 6 Ad. & E. 959; S. C. 2 N. & P. 562); thus, in assumpsit, to manage a farm in a good and husbandlike manner, and according to the custom of the country, it may suffice to assign a breach in the words of the promise (Falmouth (Earl) v. Thomas, 1 C. & M. 89; 3 Tyrw. 38); but the breach must not be too general; it must show the subject-matter of complaint (Warn v. Bickford, 7 Pri. 550); therefore "that the deft. did not perform the said agreement" is not sufficient (Knight v. Keech; but see Falmouth (Earl) v. Thomas, 1 C. & M. 89). In covenant for revoking an arbitrator's authority, it is sufficient to aver that deft. by deed revoked, without showing notice to the arbitrators, for without such notice there could be no revocation (Marsh v. Bulteel, 5 B. & Ad. 507; 8 Co. Rep. 162; sed quare). So, in assumpsit against a tenant on his implied contract to manage, use, and cultivate a farm in a good and husbandlike manner, and according to the custom of the country, it suffices even on special demurrer to assign as a breach that the deft. did not so manage, &c.; but, on the contrary, managed, &c., the said farm, lands, and premises in a bad, improper, and unhusbandlike manner, and contrary to the custom of the country where the said farm was so situate, not showing any particular acts of bad husbandry, or what custom had been violated (Falmouth (Earl) v. Thomas, supra). In an action on deft.'s promise to pay the debt of a third person, a breach that deft. did not pay the debt, has been held in substance and effect to agree with the terms of the contract (1 Sid. 178; 2 Roll. 738); but debt on *bond, conditioned for payment of an annual sum to the wife of an obligor, a breach assigned in non-payment of the same [*217] to the obligee is bad, and in such a case judgment was arrested (Lunn v. Payne, 6 Taunt. 140; S. C. 1 Marsh. 495). On a contract not to release or aliene without license, it must be averred that deft. released or aliened without license, though, indeed, the burthen of proving the license lies on deft. (Coppin v. Haymaker, Jon. 229; Skin. 120). In assumpsit by A. against B., the declaration set out an agreement, under which B. was to be let into possession of a public-house, and to purchase certain fittings, &c. for 65*l.*, 4*l.* thereof to be paid immediately, and the residue on the 30th of July, on which day B. was to be let into possession; and, if either party made default, or failed to fulfil the agreement, he was to forfeit 30*l.* to the other, on demand. Averment, that A. was always ready and willing, and offered to give possession, and to sell and deliver the fittings. Breach, that although B. paid the 4*l.* yet he did not pay the plt. the 61*l.*, or any part thereof, or pay the plt. the 30*l.* or any part thereof: held, on special demurrer, assigning for cause that there had been no demand for the 30*l.*, that the breach was sufficient, notwithstanding the reference to the clause of forfeiture by the introduction of the words negating the payment of the 30*l.* (Maylam v. Norris, 1 C. B. 244; 2 D. & L. 829).

Certainty in Statement of.] More certainty is required in assigning an affirmative breach, that is, a breach that the deft. has done that which he contracted not to do, than a negative breach, that is a breach that deft. has not done something he contracted to do (Ib.). In the former case, time must be alleged to the breach, but not so in the latter, if the breach on the face of it is complete and co-extensive with the contract without such allegation. In an action by an apprentice for not finding victuals and other necessaries, a breach in the words of the contract suffices (Proctor v. Burdet, 3 Lev. 170). And, in a covenant for not repairing, a breach in the words of such covenant suffices, without enumerating the particular dilapidations (Lee v. Johnson, Lutw. 329: cited in Falmouth (Lord) v. Thomas, 3 Tyrw. 41; Harris v. Mantle, 3 T. R. 308). On a contract to show a sufficient record, it suffices to aver deft. did not show a sufficient record (Heyford v. Reve, Yelv. 39, 40). And, in action on a condition that one B. should account for and pay over to plts. such voluntary contributions as he should collect for the charity, an averment that B. "had received divers large sums of money, amounting to a large sum, to wit, 100*l.*, from divers persons, for divers voluntary contributions for the said charity," which he had not accounted for or paid over, is sufficient (Barton v. Webb, 8 T. R. 463; Shum v. Farrington, 1 B. & P. 640; Gale v. Reed, 8 Ea. 85). On the other hand, if the contract were for quiet enjoyment without lawful disturbance, a breach merely stating that the plt. was disturbed, is insufficient; for it should be that he was by lawful means disturbed, in the words of the covenant or otherwise. The plt. should show by whom he was disturbed, and how (2 Saund. 181 b). But, an averment that A. B. lawfully claiming title under deft., entered by virtue thereof, is sufficient, without setting out the particulars of his title (Hodgson v. E. I. Co., 8 T. R. 278; see Foster v. Pearson, 4 T. R. 617; Campbell v. Lewis, in error, 3 B. & A. 392; S. C. 3 Moo. 35; see also Brookes v. Humphries, 5 B. N. C. 55; 6 Sc. 756; 7 Dowl. 118; 2 Jur. 945). So, where the declaration is on a contract for good title, it should be shown that the person evicting had a lawful title before or at the time of the date of the grant to [*218] the plt., and an averment that he *had a lawful title without this qualification, is too general, and bad after verdict; for it will be intended that the title of the person entering is derived from the plt. himself; but the plt. is under no necessity of setting out the title of the person who entered upon him (2 Saund. 181 n. (10); Com. Dig. Plead. C, 47, 49). If the matter to be performed by the deft. depend on some other event, it seems proper to assign the breach not merely in the terms of the contract, but first to aver that such event took place (Serra v. Wright, 6 Taunt. 45; but see Willcocks v. Nicholls, 1 Pri. 109). Thus, in debt on bond, conditioned that a collector of poors' rate should render an account of money received, it should aver that he received moneys, and then that he did not render an account, &c. (Serra v. Wright, supra; Wilcocks v. Nicholls, supra); and, in Falmouth (Earl) v. Thomas, supra, the court considered it safer to state the custom affirmatively, and then the breach.

Breach must not be too Narrow.] The breach must be assigned in terms co-extensive with the contract, and not be too narrow. Thus, in an action by the assignee, heir, or executor, the breach should be, that the deft. did not perform the act to the original contractor or the plt.; and so, if it be against an assignee, heir, or executor, the declaration should state, that neither the original contractor nor deft. performed the act. And a declaration by husband and wife, or by an administrator, merely stating that the deft. did not pay before marriage, or that he did not pay since the death, would be bad on demurrer, though aided by verdict (Elstob v. Thorowgood, 1 Raym. 284; Hornsey v. Dimocke, 1 Vent. 119). But an allegation that the deft. "had not paid any of the said moneys, or any part thereof," was in such a case holden good on special demurrer (Debenham v. Chambers, 3 M. & W. 128; S. C. 6 Dowl. 101). So, in sci. fa. on recognisance of bail, conditioned, that, if J. B. and G. K. be condemned, they shall pay or render, after an allegation that J. B. was condemned, it is not sufficient to aver that J. B. and G. K. did not pay or render, without adding, "nor did either of them" (Wilkinson v. Thorley, 4 M. & S. 33). For, although payment by one would be payment by both, yet a render of one is not a render of both, and, consistently with the allegation, B., against whom only the judgment was, might have rendered, which would have been sufficient to discharge the recognisance (1 Saund. 234 c). And, if the promise were in the disjunctive, to do one or other of two things, the breach must deny he did either; as, if a contract be, that "the deft. and his executors and assigns should repair," a breach for not repairing should not be in the conjunctive (Colt v. How, Cro. Eliz. 348; Gyse v. Ellis, 1 Stra. 228). So, on a promise to deliver a horse by a particular day, or pay a sum of money, it should be denied deft. did either (Wright v. Johnson, 1 Sid. 440; Anon. Hard. 320; Plummer v. Woodburne, 4 B. & C. 634; S. C. 7 D. & R. 249). But, if the breach in this respect be co-extensive with and according to the substance of the contract, it will suffice. Thus, in assigning the breach of warrant or contract "to pay," or "cause to be paid," a sum of money, it suffices to say that the deft. did not pay, omitting the disjunctive words (Aleberry v. Walby, 1 Stra. 231; 1 Saund. 235, n. (6)); so, where there are several defts., an averment that they have not paid suffices, for a payment by one is a payment by all (Aleberry v. Waleby, supra; 1 Saund. 235, n. (6); but see Wilkinson v. Sherley, 4 M. & S. 33). So, in an action by several persons, or where deft. is to perform his act to several persons, an averment that he did not perform it to them suffices, without adding *the words, "or either of them" (Aleberry v. Wale- [*219] by, 1 Stra. 231; 1 Saund. 235). So, if a contract be to perform an act to or by a person or his assigns, it need not be averred that it was not performed to or by the assigns (Gyse v. Ellis, 1 Stra. 228). But, if the action be by or against the assignee, heir, or executor, the breach should then be in the disjunctive, and the declaration by husband and wife only, or by an administrator; merely stating that the deft. did not pay before the marriage, or that he did not pay since the death would be bad on demurrer though aided by verdict (Elstob v. Thorogood, 1 Ld. Raym. 284; Hornsey v. Dimocke, 1 Vent. 119). It is injudicious to narrow the breach unnecessarily; and where plt. stated as a breach that the deft. had not used the premises in a husbandlike manner, &c., but, on the contrary, committed waste, spoil, and destruction, these latter words were held to exclude evidence as to bad husbandry in not sowing, &c., as they tied down plt. to proof of such facts as amounted to waste, spoil or destruction (Harris v. Mantle, 3 T. R. 307; Radford v. McIntosh, 3 T. R. 637; Moore v. Clark, 5 Taunt. 95; see Falmouth (Lord) v. Thomas, supra). When an averment is divisible, the plt. may recover, though he only prove a part of the breach alleged in the pleadings; as, in an action against the sheriff for a false return, an averment that A. and B. had goods in his bailiwick, is divisible, and is supported in evidence by proof that A. only had property therein (Jones v. Clayton, 4 M. & S. 349; Forty v. Imber, 6 East, 437; Barnard v. Duthy, 5 Taunt. 27).

Breach must not be too Large.] The breach must not be more extensive and large than the deft.'s contract, so that thereby it remains uncertain whether the contract has been broken. As, in a contract to repair a fence, except on the west side thereof, a breach that the deft. did not repair the fence, without showing that the want of repair was in other parts besides that on the west, is bad on demurrer (Com. Dig. Plead. C, 47); though not after verdict (Ib.; sed vide Spires v. Parker, 1 T. R. 144, 5). So, if a covenant were for quiet enjoyment, without lawful disturbance, a breach merely stating that the plt. was disturbed is insufficient, for it should be that he was legitimo modo disturbed in the words of the covenant, otherwise the plt. should show by whom he was disturbed, and how (2 Saund. 181, a). And, if the matter to be performed by the deft. depend on a certain event, the happening of that event must be averred: as, if the promise be to account for moneys to be received by deft., the receipt of money ought to be averred (Serra v. Wright, 6 Taun. 45). Where the contract was to deliver a gelding in as good plight as he borrowed him, and the breach that he did not deliver him at all, the judgment was arrested (Wright v. Johnson, 1 Vent. 64).

Several Breaches.] Two breaches of the same specific stipulation would be bad for duplicity (Com. Dig. Pl. 633; Falmouth (Earl) v. Thomas, supra; see Hoggett v. Exley, 6 B. N. C. 607); except in debt, on bond conditioned for the performance of covenants, &c. (8 & 9 Will. III. c. 11; 1 Ch. Pl. 250, 347): But at common law where the deft.'s contract was general, and several distinct breaches thereof can in fact be committed, as if a tenant agree to observe the due course of husbandry, which is obviously an engagement capable of several breaches, the declaration may then contain several (Leigh v. Hewett; ante, p. 215); and the R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. permits several breaches.

When there has been a part payment or part performance, it is advisable to admit it on the face of the declaration, so as to avoid a plea to that effect (Bos. Rules, 50, n. 48).

[220] Consequence of Omission or defective Statement of Breach.] The total omission of a breach, or a defective statement of it, so that thereby the contract does not appear to have been broken, would be bad on demurrer, or after verdict (Brickhead v. York (Arch.), Hob. 198, 233; Heard v. Busherville, 1 Sid. 440; 1 Lunn v. Payne, 6 Taunt. 140; Sicklemore v. Thistleton, 6 M. & S. 9; 7 Pri. 550; Pitt v. Williams, 4 Nev. & M. 412; S. C. in error, 2 Ad. & E. 419; 5 Ad. & E. 885; Newton v. Wilmot, 8 M. & W. 711). But a mere informal statement of it, provided there be sufficient matter on the whole, to show a breach of the contract, would not be bad, except on demurrer (see Wright v. Goddard, 3 Nev. & P. 361; S. C. 8 Ad. & E. 144; Amory v. Brodrick, 5 B. & A. 702); and, therefore, where, in an action against husband and wife, on the contract of the feme, whilst sole, to perform an award, it appeared that the award was made after the marriage, which was a legal revocation of the arbitrator's authority, and consequently the breach was improperly assigned in the non-performance of such award, it was held the plt. was entitled to recover, because it appeared that the feme had broken her covenant by the very act of her marriage, which, though a different breach to that assigned, was sufficient, after verdict, to support the declaration (Charnley v. Winstanley, 5 East, 270, 271; Perreau v. Bevan, 5 B. & C. 284; Anon. Jon. 125; Vivian v. Champion, 1 Salk. 140; Brooks v. Heberd, 8 D. & R. 69; see Warn v. Pickford, 7 Pri. 550). If one of several breaches, or a part of a breach, be improperly assigned, the deft. cannot demur to the whole (Amory v. Brodrick, 5 B. & A. 712; S. C. 1 D. & R. 361; Duffield v. Scott, 3 T. R. 374; Orton v. Butler, 5 B. & A. 652; Samuel v. Judin, 6 East, 333; S. C. 1 N. R. 43; Powdick v. Lyon, 11 East, 565); although, if the deft. plead and damages be given on the whole declaration, the judgment might be arrested (Sicklemore v. Thistleton, supra; but see "PARTICULARS OF DEMAND"). And, if he do so demur, the court will give judgment for the plt. on the whole record, and he can then avoid a writ of error by entering a nolle pros. to the bad breach (Webb v. Baker, 3 Nev. & P. 87; S. C. 7 Ad. & E. 841; Wainwright v. Johnson, 5 Dowl. 317; Ferguson v. Mitchell, 2 C. M. & R. 687; 4 Dowl. 513; Spyer v. Thelwall, 2 C. M. & R. 692; 4 Dowl. 509; Price v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 6; Boydell v. Jones, 4 M. & W. 446; S. C. 7 Dowl. 210; Parrett Nav. Co. v. Stower, 6 M. & W. 564; S. C. 8 Dowl. 405, sed qu. see 1 Saund. 285; Powell v. Graham, 1 Moo. 365; S. C. 7 Taunt. 580). If one of several breaches be ill assigned, so that the same be not cured by verdict, and general damages be given, the court will not now arrest the judgment, but grant a venire de novo (Leach v. Thomas, 2 M. & W. 427; Lewin v. Edwards, 1 Dowl. N. S. 639; 9 M. & W. 720; 6 Jur. 401). And if the damages are assessed separately, they will arrest the judgment on the bad breach only (Haytes v. Moat, 5 Dowl. 298; S. C. 2 M. & W. 56).

Averment of Damages.] If the contract be broken, the plt. will be entitled to some damages, however small, whether they be stated or not, for damages will be implied from the very breach itself; and wherever the damages sustained necessarily and naturally arise from the breach complained of, and may therefore be implied, they need not be specially stated.

In an action for not giving possession of certain apartments taken by plt., it was held that he might give in evidence the loss of business by his wife, in her trade of a milliner, though not mentioned in the declaration (Ward v. Smith, 11 Pr. 19). But the damages ought to be stated, in order to prevent the surprise on the deft., which might otherwise ensue at the trial;

*and, if he do not state them particularly, he will not be permitted [*221] to prove them in evidence (Vin. Abr. Damages; 1 Ch. Pl. 348).

In an action against a vendor of an estate for not making a good title to, or conveying same, only the deposit can be recovered under the count for money had and received; and, if the purchaser proceed for interest and expenses, he must declare specially, stating such expenses, and the loss arising from not having the use of the deposit (Camfield v. Gilbert, 4 Esp. 223; Walker v. Constable, 1 B. & P. 306; Fleureau v. Thornhill, 2 Bla. 1078; Slack v. Lovell, 3 Taunt. 157; Harrison v. Allen, 2 Bing. 4). In an action for refusing to complete an agreement for the purchase of land, the measure of damage is not the amount of the purchase-money, but only such damage as the plt. has actually sustained by the breach of the contract (Laird v. Pim, 7 M. & W. 474). The damages must be proximate, not remote or depending upon a contingency. Therefore, in an action for not replacing stock, it will be of no avail to state in the declaration that the plt. was prevented from completing an advantageous contract he had entered into (1 Ch. Pl. 348). Such damages as may be presumed necessarily to arise from the breach of contract do not require particularity in their statement in the declaration, therefore, in an action for not accepting goods sold to the deft. damages resulting from a fall in the market may be recovered under a special count, with a general allegation of loss of profit, without averring that the value of the goods was less at the time the contract was broken than when it was made (Boorman v. Nash, 9 B. & C. 145). Where a sum is mentioned as a penalty the plt. may proceed for general damages, and may recover them beyond the amount of the penalty (Harrison v. Wright, 13 East, 343; Barton v. Glover, Holt's N. P. 44; Davies v. Penton, 6 B. & C. 224).

Mode of Statement of Damages.] The damages must be stated according to the facts; and, as the jury cannot give greater damages than those stated, the plt. should take care to state them sufficiently extensive (Cheveley v. Morris, 2 Bla. 1300); especially as the jury may give less than the amount claimed (Dow, 207; Gardiner v. Croasdale, 2 Burr. 904): as, in declaring on a policy, under a statement of a total loss, a partial one may be recovered (Ib.). In the statement of them, the word "whereby," or "by means of the premises," &c., refers to all the antecedent matter (Pereau v. Bevan, 5 B. & C. 292). Where the declaration positively and expressly avers that plt. has sustained damages from a cause subsequent to the commencement of the action, or previous to the plt.'s having any right of action, and the jury give entire damages, judgment would be arrested; but where the cause of action is properly laid, and the other matter either comes under a verdict, or is void, insensible, or impossible, and therefore cannot be intended that the jury ever had it under their consideration, the plt. will be entitled to his judgment (2 Saund. 171 b). If the jury give more damages than are laid, the surplus should be remitted before judgment has been entered (1 Ch. Pl. 349). The incurring a liability to pay costs, without having paid them, should be so stated (Pritchett v. Boevey, 3 Tyrw. 949); noting and postages on a bill must be declared for specially (Kendrick v. Lomax, 1 C. & J. 408). As to what damages are recoverable, see post, "DAMAGES."

Several Counts.] Formerly, the plt. was at liberty to insert in his declaration as many counts as he thought proper, so as to be prepared for every complexion which the case might assume at the *trial; but now [*222] by the pleading rules of H. T. 4 Will. IV., which have the force and authority of an act of parliament, it is ordered, that:

Several counts shall not be allowed, unless a distinct subject-matter of complaint is intended to be established in respect of each; nor shall several pleas, or avowries, or cognisances be allowed, unless a distinct ground of answer or defence is intended to be established in respect of each. Therefore, counts founded on one and the same principal matter of complaint, but varied in statement, description, or circumstances only, are not to be allowed. Ex. gr. counts founded upon the same contract, described in one as a contract without a condition, and in another as a contract with a condition, are not to be allowed; for they are founded on the same subject-matter of complaint, and are only variations in the statement of one and the same contract. So, counts for not giving, or delivering, or accepting a bill of exchange in payment, according to the contract of sale, for goods sold and delivered, and for the price of the same goods to be paid in money, are not to be allowed. So, counts for not accepting and paying for goods sold; and for the price of the same goods, as goods bargained and sold, are not to be allowed. But counts upon a bill of exchange or promissory note, and for the consideration of the bill or note in goods, money, or otherwise, are to be considered as founded on distinct subject-matters of complaint; for the debt and the security are different contracts, and such counts are to be allowed. Two counts upon the same policy of insurance are not to be allowed. But, a count upon a policy of insurance, and a count for money had and received, to recover back the premium upon a contract implied by law, are to be allowed. Two counts on the same charter-party are not to be allowed. But, a count for freight upon a charter-party, and for freight pro ratâ itineris, upon a contract implied by law, are to be allowed. Counts upon a demise, and for use and occupation of the same land for the same time, are not to be allowed. In actions of tort for misfeasance, several counts for the same injury, varying the description of it, are not to be allowed. In the like actions for nonfeasance, several counts founded on varied statements of the same duty are not to be allowed. Several counts in trespass, for acts committed at the same time and place, are not to be allowed. Where several debts are alleged in indebitatus assumpsit to be due in respect of several matters, ex. gr. for wages, work, and labour as a hired servant, work and labour generally, goods sold and delivered, goods bargained and sold, money lent, money paid, money had and received, and the like, the statement of each debt is to be considered as amounting to a several count within the meaning of the rule which forbids the use of separate counts, though one promise to pay only is alleged in consideration of all the debts. Provided, that a count for money due on an account stated may be joined with any other count for a money demand, though it may not be intended to establish a distinct subject-matter of complaint in respect of each of such counts. The rule which forbids the use of several counts is not to be considered as precluding the plaintiff from alleging more breaches than one of the same contract in the same count. The examples, in this and other places specified, are given as some instances only of the application of the rules to which they relate; but the principles contained in the rules are not to be considered as restricted by the examples specified.

And to enforce the due observance of this rule, it is ordered (R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV.) that:

Where more than one count, plea, avowry, or cognisance, shall have been used in apparent violation of the preceding rule, the opposite party [*223] shall be at liberty to apply to a judge, suggesting *that two or more of the counts, pleas, avowries, or cognisances are founded on the same subject-matter of complaint, or ground of answer or defence, for an order that all the counts, pleas, avowries, or cognisances, introduced in violation of the rule, be struck out at the cost of the party pleading; whereupon the judge shall order accordingly, unless he shall be satisfied, upon cause shown, that some distinct subject-matter of complaint is bona fide intended to be established in respect of each of such counts, or some distinct ground of answer or defence in respect of each of such pleas, avowries, or cognisances, in which case he shall indorse upon the summons, or state in his order, as the case may be, that he is so satisfied; and shall also specify the counts, pleas, avowries, or cognisances mentioned in such application, which shall be allowed. Upon the trial, where there is more than one count, plea, avowry, or cognisance upon the record, and the party pleading fails to establish a distinct subject-matter of complaint in respect of each count, or some distinct ground of answer or defence in respect of each plea, avowry, or cognisance, a verdict and judgment shall pass against him upon each count, plea, avowry, or cognisance, which he shall have so failed to establish, and he shall be liable to the other party for all the costs occasioned by such count, plea, avowry, or cognisance, including those of the evidence as well as those of the pleadings; and further, in all cases in which an application to a judge has been made under the preceding rule, and any count, plea, avowry, or cognisance, allowed as aforesaid, upon the ground that some distinct subject-matter of complaint was bona fide intended to be established at the trial in respect of each count, or some distinct ground of answer or defence in respect of each plea, avowry, or cognisance so allowed, if the court or judge, before whom the trial is had, shall be of opinion that no such distinct subject-matter of complaint was bona fide intended to be established in respect of each count so allowed, or no such distinct ground of answer or defence in respect of each plea, avowry, or cognisance so allowed, and shall so certify before final judgment, such party so pleading shall not recover any costs upon the issue or issues upon which he succeeds, arising out of any count, plea, avowry, or cognisance with respect to which the judge shall so certify.

Cases within the Rule.] In an action by grantee of a corporation for dues, it was held that plt. could not have two counts for the same sums, the one claiming them as metage fees, and the other as a port duty (Jenkins v. Treloar, 1 M. & W. 16; S. C. 4 Dowl. 690). Two counts on the same agreement were disallowed, the one describing deft. as liable jointly with another person, and the other as solely liable (Cholmondeley v. Payne, 3 B. N. C. 708; 4 Sc. 418; S. C. 5 Dowl. 638). And, two counts on the same promissory note, one alleging the promise to plt. and a deceased partner, and another to plt. alone (Kinglake v. Pickham, 1 W. W. & H. 301). But see a case in which the Q. B. allowed two counts on a guarantee, one describing it as absolute and the other as conditional (1 P. & D. 661; S. C. 9 Ad. & E. 126). So, a count on a demise will not be allowed with a count for use and occupation (Arden v. Pullen, 9 M. & W. 430; S. C. 1 Dowl. N. S. 612). And where in an action arising out of a horse race, two counts were introduced, one upon the Newmarket and the other upon the Ludlow races, the court ordered one to be struck out (Anon. cited 3 Dowl. 778). So, where in one count plt. declared that E. T. was possessed of shares in a railway, and that deft. promised plt. that he was authorized by E. T. to sell them, whereas he was not; and in another, that deft. bargained with plt. to sell the shares, and promised to transfer them within a reasonable *time, this was considered a violation of the rule (Roy v. Bristol, 2 M. & W. 241; 5 Dowl. 452; S. C. 1 Jur. 168). So two [*224] counts on a policy of insurance will not be allowed, one alleging the loss to have been occasioned by the barratry of the master, and the other by the perils of the sea (Blyth v. Shepherd, 1 Dowl. N. S. 880; S. C. 9 M. & W. 763; 6 Jur. 489). And, where a special count on a charter-party, from which it appeared that a certain number of days of demurrage were allowed, alleged as a breach, a detention beyond the demurrage days, but contained no breach for nonpayment of demurrage, the court refused to allow with it a common count for demurrage (Temperley v. Browne, 1 Dowl. N. S. 310; S. C. 6 Jur. 150).

Cases not within the Rule.] On the other hand, a count for double rent is allowable, together with a count for use and occupation (Thornton v. Whitehead, 1 M. & W. 14; 4 Dowl. 747); Laurence v. Stephens, 1 Gale, 164; but see S. C. 3 Dowl. 777); these being distinct subject-matter of complaint. And it seems that, by analogy to this case, a count for the treble value of tithes not set out would be allowed, together with a count for tithes bargained and sold, though the contrary was once ruled (see Lawrence v. Stevens, 3 Dowl. 777; but see the observation of Parke B., in Thornton v. Whitehead, supra). A count in detinue for a bill or note, is allowable with a count for the amount of the same bill or note (Kirkpatrick v. England (Bank), 8 Dowl. 881). In an action against a shipowner for the loss of goods, one count alleged a contract to carry from Dublin to London, and there to deliver; and another to take care of the goods at the wharf in London, and carry them thence to plt.'s place of business; and the court refused to strike out either (James v. Bourne, 4 B. N. C. 420; 6 Sc. 231; 6 Dowl. 603). Tindal, C. J., in giving judgment in this case, said, "Undoubtedly if we were to take in their more general sense the words of the rule, counts founded on one and the same principal matter of complaint, the allowing the two to stand together would appear to be a violation of the rule, because it is impossible not to see that the subject-matter of complaint in both counts is that the goods were not delivered by the deft., but taking the whole of the instances given in connexion with the rule, I think it means that if there be a second and distinct contract in respect of the same subject-matter, the count on such contract may stand, and that it would be an unnecessary extension of the rule to strike it out. Here the first count is to carry goods on a contract from B. to D. and from D. to L., the second count relates to the same subject-matter so far as the goods are concerned, but it is on a separate and distinct contract as to the deft.'s undertaking, that is to carry goods from the place of their landing at the port of L. to the plt.'s place of business. The instances given in the rules themselves show that a distinct subject-matter of complaint means in cases of contract a separate contract." (James v. Bourne, 4 B. N. C. 420). So, a count on a charter-party, whereby deft. agreed that a certain ship should sail to Honduras, take on board a cargo of mahogany, and proceed to London or Liverpool, and deliver the same, alleging, as a breach, that part of the cargo was not taken on board according to the agreement, was allowed to stand, with a count averring that in consideration that plt. had caused certain goods to be taken to and loaded on board deft.'s vessel in the bay of Honduras, deft. promised that due and proper care should be taken of them until they were loaded on board the said vessel, and that while in deft.'s custody they were lost (Vaughan v. Glenn, 8 Dowl. 396; S. C. 5 M. & W. 577; see also Bleaden v. Rasallo, 9 Dowl. 857; 3 Sc. N. R. 564; S. C. 3 Man. & G. 116). Each *of the common counts is, for the purposes of pleading and costs, [*225] considered as a separate count (Jourdain v. Johnson, 2 C. M. & R. 564). See the construction of these rules, 3 Ch. G. P. 400).

Precedents.

To prevent the unnecessary prolixity of statement which formerly prevailed in declarations, it is ordered, by Rule of T. T. 1 Will. IV., "That if any declaration in assumpsit hereafter filed or delivered being for any of the demands mentioned in the Schedule of forms and directions annexed to this order, or demands of a like nature, shall exceed in length such of the said forms set forth, or directed in the said Schedule, as may be applicable to the case; or if any declaration in debt, to be so filed or delivered for similar causes of action, for which the action of assumpsit would lie, shall exceed such length, no costs of the excess shall be allowed to the plt. if he succeed in the cause; and such costs of the excess as have been incurred by the deft. shall be taxed and allowed to the deft., and be deducted from the costs allowed to the plt."

And it is further ordered, that, on the taxation of costs, as between attorney and client, no costs shall be allowed to the attorney in respect of any such excess of length; and in case any costs shall be payable by the plt. to the deft. on account of such excess, the amount thereof shall be deducted from the amount of the attorney's bill.

For the Schedule of forms on Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, see those titles.

Common Counts.

Whereas the deft. on — was indebted to the plt. in £—— for the price and value of goods then* bargained and sold [or sold and delivered] by the plt. to the deft. at his request.

And in £——, for the price and value of work then* done, and materials for the same provided by the plt. for the deft. at his request.

And in £——, for money then* lent by the plt. to the deft. at his request.

And in £——, for money then* paid by the plt. for the use of the deft. at his request.

And in £——, for money then* received by the deft. for the use of the plt.

And in £——, for money found to be due from the deft. to the plt. on an account then* stated between them.

General conclusion.

And whereas the deft. afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, in consideration of the premises respectively, promised to pay the said several moneys respectively to the plt. on request; yet he hath disregarded his promises, and hath not paid any of the said moneys, or any part thereof, to the plt.'s damage of £——, and therefore he brings suit, &c.

Directions as to general conclusion.

If the declaration contain one or more counts against the maker of a note, or the acceptor of a bill of exchange, it will be proper to place them first on the declaration, and then in the general conclusion to say, "promised to pay the said last-mentioned several moneys respectively."

For the forms of other counts, common and special, which are too numerous to be inserted here, see 2 Ch. Pl. 7th ed., Ch. Jun. by Pearson.

Pleas.

Pleading Rules.] By the Pleading Rules of H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 11, it is ordered that—

* This word is now unnecessary (see ante, p. 182). The words "and then," originally introduced, have been omitted in conformity with the rule of H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 8; post, "DECLARATION."

"1. In all actions of assumpsit, except on bills of exchange and *promissory notes, the plea of non assumpsit shall operate only as a denial in fact of the express contract or promise alleged, or of the matters of fact from which the contract or promise alleged may be implied by law.

"Ex. gr. In an action on a warranty, the plea will operate as a denial of the fact of the warranty having been given upon the alleged consideration, but not of the breach; and, in an action on a policy of insurance, of the subscription to the alleged policy by the deft., but not of the interest, of the commencement of the risk, of the loss, or of the alleged compliance with warranties.

"In actions against carriers and other bailees, for not delivering or not keeping goods safe, or not returning them on request, and in actions against agents for not accounting, the plea will operate as a denial of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, and of such bailment or employment as would raise a promise in law to the effect alleged, but not of the breach.

"In an action of indebitatus assumpsit, for goods sold and delivered, the plea of non assumpsit will operate as a denial of the sale and delivery in point of fact; in the like action for money had and received, it will operate as a denial both of the receipt of the money and the existence of those facts which make such receipt by the deft. a receipt to the use of the plt.

"2. In all actions upon bills of exchange and promissory notes, the plea of non assumpsit shall be inadmissible. In such actions, therefore, a plea in denial must traverse some matter of fact; ex. gr. the drawing, or making, or indorsing, or accepting, or presenting, or notice of dishonour of the bill or note.

"3. In every species of assumpsit, all matters in confession and avoidance, including not only those by way of discharge, but those which show the transaction to be either void or voidable in point of law, on the ground of fraud or otherwise, shall be specially pleaded; ex. gr., infancy, coverture, release, payment, performance, illegality of consideration either by statute or common law, drawing, indorsing, accepting, &c., bills or notes by way of accommodation, set-off, mutual credit, unseaworthiness, misrepresentation, concealment, deviation, and various other defences, must be pleaded."

The plea of non assumpsit is admissible in an action against an executor on a banker's cheque drawn by his testator (Rolleston v. Dixon, 14 L. J. 304, Ex.; 2 D. & L. 892).

Form of Plea.] The general rules as to pleas here apply (post, "PLEAS"). The general issue in form denies the undertaking or promise in manner and form, as stated in the declaration. The omission of the usual words, "or promise," does not render the plea a nullity (3 D. & R. 621). A plea of not guilty only is bad on demurrer, though aided by verdict (Marshall v. Gibbs, 2 Stra. 1022; Ca. t. Hard. 173). A plea of nil debet is a mere nullity (Barnes, 257; Brennan v. Egan, 4 Taunt. 165). This plea is now abolished (Reg. Gen. H. T. 4 Will. IV.; see Faulkner v. Chevell, 5 Ad. & E. 213; Spencer v. Swannell, 3 M. & W. 155). As to the forms of special pleas, see the various titles of defences throughout this work.

Effect of Non Assumpsit to Common Counts.] The plea of non assumpsit, as applied to the common indebitatus counts, denies, 1st, the fact, that the goods were sold and delivered to, or that the work was done, or the money was paid, &c.; and 2ndly, that it was done, paid, &c. under circumstances which made the deft. a debtor at law to the plt. for the amount; and 3rdly, if so, that the time of payment had arrived when the action commenced. Hence, the deft. may give in evidence under non assumpsit, partnership with the plt. *in the transaction (Worrall v. Grayson, 1 M. & W. 166; S. C. 4 Dowl. 718; Pearson v. Skelton, 1 M. & W. 504; Payne v. Hales, [*227] 5 M. & W. 598; S. C. 7 Dowl. 859; see Gregory v. Hartnoll, 1 M. & W. 183; S. C. 4 Dowl. 695). In indebitatus assumpsit by one ship-owner against another for contribution to damages recovered from the plt. for the loss of goods of a third party, the deft. may show that the loss arose from the plt.'s negligence (Gregory v. Hartnoll, sup.); to an action for work and labour, or goods sold and delivered, that the goods were worthless, or that the work done turned out of no value (Cousins v. Paddon, 2 C. M. & R. 547; Hill v. Allen, 2 M. & W. 283; S. C. 5 Dowl. 471; Hayselden v. Staff, 5 Ad. & E. 153; S. C. 6 N. & M. 659; Bracey v. Carter, 12 Ad. & E. 373; see Dicken v. Neale, 5 Dowl. 176; 1 M. & W. 556; Nicholls v. Wilson, 11 M. & W. 107; Hill v. Featherstonehaugh, 7 Bing. 569; Shaw v. Arden, 9 Bing. 287; Gill v. Laughner, 1 Tyrw. 124; Huntley v. Bulwer, B. N. C. 111). Or it was agreed to be done for nothing (Jones v. Nanney, 5 Dowl. 90; S. C. 2 Gale, 24; Jones v. Read, 1 N. & P. 18; 5 Dowl. 216; S. C. 5 Ad. & E. 529; Groundsell v. Lamb, 2 Gale, 28, S. C. 1 M. & W. 352; Hill v. Allen, 2 M. & W. 283; 5 Dowl. 471; S. C. 1 Jur. 44; see Cleworth v. Pickford, 7 M. & W. 314; S. C. 8 Dowl. 873; Bradshaw v. Hayward, 1 C. & M. 591). There are two cases in which a party is precluded from recovering for work and labour; one where work which is useful has been performed unskilfully, the other where work which is useless for the object in view has been performed even skilfully (Hill v. Featherstonehaugh, 7 Bing. 569; see Lewis v. Samuel, 8 Q. B. 685); to a count for goods sold and delivered, that they were not according to sample and were returned, see Gardner v. Alexander, 3 Dowl. 146; or, that no delivery took place; or, that deft. paid for them at the time, and no credit was given (Bussey v. Barnett, 9 M. & W. 312; 1 Dowl. N. S. 646); or, that they were not sold on the credit of deft., but on the credit of another person (see Crawshay v. Barry, 1 M. & G. 235); or that they were delivered in part payment of a debt due from plt. to deft. (Wilson v. Story, 4 Jur. 463); or, that a machine was sold, to be paid for, if it worked well (Groundsell v. Lamb, supra); so, in an action for work as an attorney, that deft. was unqualified (Parker v. Riley, 3 M. & W. 230); that the contract was void by the statute, 29 Chas. II. s. 17, for want of a note in writing, &c. (Buttmer v. Hayes, 7 Dowl. 489; 3 Jur. 704; Eastwood v. Kenyon, 3 P. & D. 276; Leaf v. Tuton, 10 M. & W. 393; 2 Dowl. N. S. 300; S. C. 6 Jur. 690; Freeken v. Tomlinson, 1 M. & G. 772); to an action for money had and received, that the money though received by the deft. was received for the use of another, and not of the plt. (Clark v. Dignam, 3 M. & W. 478; 2 Jur. 419); Solly v. Neish, 2 C. M. & R. 355); to an action for use and occupation, that before the rent became due pl. evicted him (Prentice v. Elliott, 5 M. & W. 606; S. C. 7 Dowl. 819); or that the premises were in mortgage when deft. took them, and that the mortgagee had given him notice not to pay any more rent to the plt. (Woodhouse v. Burnett, 2 B. N. C. 385); or, it seems, in an action for board and lodging of deft.'s wife, that she committed adultery (see Symes v. Goodfellow, 2 B. N. C. 532); under this plea also the deft. may show that the goods were sold, work done, money lent, &c. on a credit which had not expired at the time the action was commenced (Hayselden v. Staff, 5 Ad. & E. 153; S. C. 6 Nev. & M. 659; overruling Edmunds v. Harris, 2 Ad. & E. 414; S. C. 4 Nev. & M. 182; Maude v. Mesham, 6 Dowl. 570; 3 M. & W. 502; S. C. 2 Jur. 701; Smith v. Cole, 4 Dowl. 571); and, generally, any defence which shows a liability different from, and incompatible with, that declared on, is admissible on non assumpsit (Morgan v. Pebrer, 3 B. N. C.

457; Jones v. Nanney, 5 Dowl. 90; *Waddilove v. Barnett, 2 B. N. C. 538; Brind v. Dale, 2 M. & W. 775; Lyall v. Hegins, 5 Q. B. 529); or a contract with a material provision not mentioned in the declaration (Nash v. Breeze, 11 M. & W. 352). The nonjoinder of co-contractor, as plt. may be shown, or the misjoinder of either a co-plt. or co-deflt., for this is a variance (see "VARIANCE").

Assumpsit against E. and H. attorneys, for money had and received. Plea, that plt. had retained and employed E. as his attorney, and was indebted to him for work, and thereupon plt. and defts. agreed that, in lieu of the sole retainer of E. defts. should be jointly retained and employed by plt. as his attorneys, and that they should have a lien upon all moneys which they should receive for plt. in the course of such employment, to the amount of all debts that then were, or thereafter should be, due from plt. to E. solely, or to defts. jointly, in respect of the said retainers and work respectively; and that they should hold and apply the same on account and in discharge of such debts to E. or to defts. jointly, and thereout pay to E. and to defts. the said debts respectively. Averment, that defts., on such joint retainer, did work for plt.; there became due, and was still due from him to them, in respect thereof, a certain sum, which, together with the said debt to E. exceeded the amount claimed in this action; that defts. received the amount so claimed to the use of plt.; and, under and by virtue of their said retainer and employment, and subject to the said lien, and held and applied part thereof on account and in discharge of the debt due to E. and paid him the same, and the residue on account, and in discharge of the debt due to the defts. and paid themselves the same: held, a bad plea, as substituting a different contract for that declared upon, and consequently amounting to the general issue (Williams v. Vines, 6 Q. B. 355).

Where an article is warranted, and the warranty is not complied with, the vendee has three courses open to him, 1st, he may refuse to receive the article; 2dly, he may receive it and bring a cross action for the breach of warranty; 3dly, he may give in evidence, in reduction of damages, the breach of warranty in any action brought by the vendor for the price (Street v. Blay, 2 B. & Ad. 456; see Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 M. & W. 399; Olivant v. Bayley, 3 Q. B. 288; Parsons v. Sexton, 4 C. B. 899; Poulton v. Latimore, 9 B. & C. 259; see Gompetz v. Denton, 1 C. & M. 205; see also O'Kell v. Smith, 1 Stark. 107; Jordan v. Norton, 4 M. & W. 159; Young v. Cole, 3 B. N. C. 730; Lorrymer v. Smith, 1 B. & C. 1; see this subject discussed in Cutter v. Powell, 2 Smith's L. Ca. 16, et seq.)

What Defences must be Specially Pleadet.] But any defence which admits the contract, and which seeks to avoid its effect, for some matter which is the subject of proof on the part of deflt., such as usury, fraud, gaming, infancy, coverture, &c. (see per Parke, B., in Leaf v. Triton, 10 M. & W. 397); or which shows it to be defeated, or, satisfied by matter subsequent, must be specially pleaded. Hence, to an action for money had and received, the deflt. cannot give in evidence, on non assumpsit, that it was received in respect of an illegal wager (Martin v. Smith, 6 Dowl. 639; 4 B. N. C. 436; 6 Sc. 268; 2 Jur. 376); nor, in an action for work and labour, that the contract was void as against public policy (Clutterbuck v. Coffin, 4 Sc. N. R. 509; 1 Dowl. N. S. 479; S. C. 6 Jur. 131. See "ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION"). An agreement to put an end to a suit for nullity of marriage, on the ground of impotency, is not contrary to public policy (Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 405). In Martin v. Smith, 4 B. N. C. 436, the question was raised whether the coverture of the plt. need be pleaded specially [*229] in assumpsit, and Tindal, C. J., and Parke, *and Coltman, Js., seemed to be of opinion that it need not (see Moss v. Smith, 1 Man. & G. 228). On a specialty it cannot be pleaded in bar, but only in abatement (Bendix v. Bateman, 12 M. & W. 97; see "ABATEMENT"). Nor for goods sold and delivered, that they were such as the law prohibits the sale of (Fenwick v. Laycock, 1 Q. B. 414; 1 G. & D. 27; S. C. 5 Jur. 459; and it makes no difference that the illegality is disclosed on the plt.'s own case (Ib.; see Daintree v. Hutchinson, 10 M. & W. 85; S. C. 6 Jur. 736); illegality must be pleaded. Thus, that an attorney was guilty of maintenance in the services in respect of which he sues (Potts v. Sparrow, 1 B. N. C. 594; see "ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION"). In an action for demurrage that plt. defrauded the customs (Alcock v. Taylor, 6 Nev. & M. 296); so, failure of part of the consideration must be pleaded (Head v. Baldrey, 6 Ad. & E. 670); so, the merger of a simple contract in a specialty subsequently given (Weston v. Foster, 2 B. N. C. 693); so, if a subsequent account be stated upon which deft. relies (Fidgett v. Penny, 1 C. M. & R. 108); so, in use and occupation that the mortgagee required the deft. to pay him the rent after it became due (Waddilove v. Burnett, 2 B. N. C. 385). A plea to an action for not accepting shares in a foreign undertaking and paying for them; that the contract was made in France, plt. and deft. residing therein; that, by the law of France, a person, who has neither the property nor the actual nor constructive possession of a thing, cannot sell it, and that the shares were at the time when, &c., the property of F., held by him in his own right, and not the property, nor in the actual nor constructive possession of the plt., amounts to the general issue (Hannui v. Goldner, 11 M. & W. 849). To a special assumpsit the deft. pleaded a plea showing a partial failure of the consideration for the promise alleged; held, a complete answer to the action (Head v. Baldrey, 2 Nev. & P. 217; Chater v. Beckett, 7 T. R. 201; Thomas v. Williams, 10 B. & C. 664). Where it is doubtful whether a statutory objection to the contract can be rendered available under the plea of non assumpsit, the court will allow it to be specially pleaded (Smith v. Dixon, 4 Dow. P. C. 571). In an action for goods sold, &c., plea that they were sold under a contract which was afterwards rescinded, held bad, as admitting an executed contract, and attempting to avoid it by a release not under seal (Edwards v. Chapman, 1 Gale, 376). Puffing at an auction must be specially pleaded (Teeley v. Crew, 6 C. & P. 671). That a contract was made on a Sunday must be specially pleaded (Peate v. Dicken, 1 M. & R. 423. See "SUNDAY").

In an action on an attorney's bill, the objection that it was not delivered a month before action cannot be taken on the general issue, but must be specially pleaded (Lane v. Glenny, 2 N. & P. 258; 7 Ad. & E. 83; S. C. 1 Jur. 475; Robinson v. Rowland, 6 Dowl. 271; 2 Jur. 136); nor that plt. was not duly qualified to practise (Hill v. Sydney, 7 Ad. & E. 956; 3 N. & P. 161; S. C. 2 Jur. 416; see Eyre v. Shelley, 6 M. & W. 269; 8 Dowl. 185; S. C. 4 Jur. 415; see Sherwood v. Hay, 5 Ad. & D. 388); nor, that the work consisted of the preparation of an illegal deed (Potts v. Sparrow, 1 Sc. 578; 1 B. N. C. 594; 3 Dowl. 630; see post, "ATTORNEYS"; see also Friebriezer v. Duerr, 1 B. N. C. 266; Bolton v. Caghlán, 1 B. N. C. 640; Martin v. Smith, 4 B. N. C. 436). Usury must be pleaded at least unless the contract or deed declared on, be on the face of it usurious (Ferguson v. Sprang, 1 Ad. & E. 576; see "USURY"); but in an action by an apothecary, for his fees, his want of qualification need not be pleaded, but it is incumbent on him to prove it on the general issue (see ante, "APOTHECARY").

The 57 Geo. III. c. 99, s. 53, enacts that any difference arising [*230] between *any rector and his curate touching the stipend or allowance appointed to such curate, under the provisions of the act, or the payment or arrears thereof, shall be summarily determined by the bishop; and by s. 74 no other jurisdiction shall be exercised in any case where jurisdiction is given by this act; held, in assumpsit by a curate against his rector for arrears of salary; 1st, that these provisions of the statute were properly pleaded in bar, and not to the jurisdiction; 2ndly, that the plea need not state the nature of the difference which arose (West v. Turner, 7 Nev. & P. 612).

By a recent rule of court (R. M. 1 Vict.) payment cannot in any case be given in evidence, unless specially pleaded (see "PAYMENT").

Effect of Non Assumpsit to Special Counts.] As in the case of an indebitatus count, so when pleaded to a special count, non assumpsit denies the making of the promise as alleged, and that it was made upon the alleged consideration. Consequently, under this plea, deft. may avail himself of any material variance, in the statement either of the consideration or the promise (see Beech v. White, 4 P. & D. 399; 12 Ad. & E. 668; S. C. 5 Jur. 116; Kemble v. Mills, 2 Sc. N. R. 121; S. C. 9 Dowl. 446; Wright v. Newton, 3 Sco. 595; Sutherland v. Pratt, 11 M. & W. 296; Brydges v. Lewis, 3 Q. B. 603; Lyall v. Higgins, 12 Law J., N. S. 241); or, give in evidence any matter which tends to disprove either (Raikes v. Todd, 1 P. & D. 138; Bennion v. Davison, 8 M. & W. 179). The failure of part of the consideration whereby the whole contract failed must be specially pleaded. He may also avail himself of any legal objection to the means or document by which plt. proposes to prove the contract. Hence, in an action on an agreement, bill, &c., he may object that the instrument is not properly stamped (Dawson v. Macdonald, 2 M. & R. 26); and, with this view, may, in an action on a cheque, show that the cheque was post-dated (Field v. Woods, 2 N. & P. 117; 7 Ad. & E. 114; 6 Dowl. 23; S. C. 1 Jur. 496; see "BILLS OF EXCHANGE"). So, in an action on a guarantee, or other contract within the Statute of Frauds, he may object that it was not in writing, as required by the statute (Buttermere v. Hayes, 5 M. & W. 456; S. C. 7 Dowl. 489; Eastwood v. Kenyon, 3 P. & D. 276; S. C. 4 Jur. 1081; Head v. Baldray, 11 Ad. & E. 441; 6 Ad. & E. 459). So in the case of a demise for three years, a writing must be proved, not merely on a special traverse of the demise, but where the denial of a demise is included in the general issue (Buttermere v. Hayes, 5 M. & W. 461, 462); so, also, that a contract within the 17th sect. of the Statute of Frauds for the sale of goods above the value of 10*l.* was in writing, and that there was an acceptance of part (Johnson v. Dodgson, 2 M. & W. 653; Elliott v. Thomas, 3 M. & W. 173; Fricker v. Tomlinson, 1 Man. & G. 772). So in the case of an agreement to answer for the debt of another (Eastwood v. Kenyon, supra); and a special plea of the statute is but an argumentative denial of the facts alleged in the declaration (Leaf v. Tuton, 2 Dowl. N. S. 300).

Where a declaration in assumpsit describes the terms of the contract in language denoting that a particular act which the plt. has engaged to do is to be dependent on or concurrent with an act or acts to be done on the part of the deft., if from the position of the parties or from the nature of the agreement such act is to be considered as intended to constitute a condition precedent, the proper course is to plead non assumpsit and give the special matter in evidence (Kemble v. Mills, supra; per Maule, J.).

But, under non assumpsit, deft. cannot show that the contract was not binding in law, by reason of plt.'s being already bound to do that [*231] which was the alleged consideration for deft.'s promise *(Passenger v. Brooks, 1 Sc. 560); for this is not in denial, but in confession and avoidance (see Bennion v. Davison, supra; Raikes v. Todd, supra). So, where the declaration averred that plt. had composed and written certain music, and as such composer had a right thereto, and that, in consideration of the premises, and that plt. would sell such right to deft. the latter promised to buy it, it was ruled, by Tindal, C. J., that deft. could not, upon non assumpsit, contend that plt. was not the author, or had not the right (De Pinæa v. Pophill, 8 C. & P. 78). So, where he consideration is alleged as an executory one, and plt. avers performance, deft. cannot, in this plea, deny the performance (Gibson v. Harris, ib. 378). Nor can a breach be disproved on this plea (Smith v. Parsons, 8 C. & P. 199). Nor can he object, at the trial on non assumpsit, that the contract is void for illegality, although it so appears on the face of the declaration (Daintree v. Hutchinson, 10 M. & W. 85; S. C. 6 Jur. 736).

In an action on a special agreement the deft. may, under non assumpsit, avail himself of a defence arising from an alteration in the contract, made without his consent, after it was entered into, provided that the plt. has declared upon it as altered (see Cock v. Coxwell, 2 C. M. & R. 291; and see Clifford v. Parker (Lady), 3 Sco. N. R. 233; Cariss v. Tatterson, 3 Sco. N. R. 257). A defence to an action on a guarantee, that, subsequently to the execution of it, and whilst it was in the possession of the plt. a seal was affixed to the deft.'s signature, so as to make the instrument purport to be a deed, must be specially pleaded (Davidson v. Cooper, 11 M. & W. 778). A subsequent alteration by agreement of the contract declared on, must be pleaded specially (Heath v. Durrant, 13 Law J., N. S., Exch. 95). Where a guarantee, on production at the trial, appeared to have been altered in a material part, and so vitiated, it was held that deft. could not take the objection on non assumpsit, the declaration describing it as it was before the alteration (Hemming v. Trenery, 1 P. & D. 661; S. C. 9 Ad. & E. 26; see Langton v. Lazarus, 5 M. & W. 629; Harden v. Clifton, 1 Q. B. 522; see "ALTERATION"). And, if a parol contract, once complete and binding, be afterwards merged by the execution of a deed between the parties, the merger must be specially pleaded; but if there never was a complete parol contract, as where the writing was only signed as the draft of the deed and the latter was afterwards executed, deft. may, in an action on the parol agreement, show this matter on non assumpsit (Filmer v. Burnby, 2 Sco. N. R. 689; 9 Dowl. 666; S. C. 2 M. & G. 529).

If the defence be that the contract was with A., not with the plt., the fact of payment by the deft. to A. is not impertinent to the issue, for it shows that the defence is a bona fide one, and not a pretext to avoid payment of the debt (Gerish v. Chartier, 1 C. B. 13). The deft. may show that the contract was made abroad, and good by the lex loci (Hannuic v. Goldner, 11 M. & W. 849). He may show that the contract was made on a different consideration from that stated in the declaration (Lyall v. Higgins, supra).

The deft. under non assumpsit may show that there was not any contract save under seal (Filmer v. Burnby, 2 Man. & G. 529; Edwards v. Bates, 2 D. & L. ante; see Atty v. Parish, ante). So he may show that the contract was not entered into with the plt. (Sutherland v. Pratt, 11 M. & W. 296). In an action against an attorney for negligence, such plea puts in issue the fact of his having been retained as an attorney (Aldis v. Gardner, 1 C. & K. 564). Where plt. declared that in consideration that the plt. would give the deft. a horse and 2*l.*, the deft. promised, &c.; non assumpsit; held, that plt. was not bound to prove the delivery of the horse or payment of the 2*l.* (Smith v. Parsons, 8 C. & P. 200, n.). *Plt. declared that in consideration he had sold and delivered twenty [*232] tons of best Dutch lead to the deft., the latter had promised to deliver to the plt. prussiate of potash to the same amount, averring the delivery of the twenty tons, &c. Breach, that deft. would not deliver the full quantity of potash. Plea, non assumpsit; held, that as deft. had not pleaded that plt. had not delivered best Dutch lead, he could not show the inferiority of the quality (Pegg v. Stead, 9 C. & P. 636). In an action on a warranty, breach, unsoundness; held, that deft. could not, under non assumpsit, show that the horse was sound (Smith v. Parsons, 8 C. & P. 199). A plea denying the identity of the contract made, and that declared on, amounts to the general issue (Smith v. Dixon, 7 Ad. & E. 1). In assumpsit for money paid; plea, 1st, that the money was paid to the use of the deft. in manner, &c., videlicet, as one-sixth part for the damages and costs recovered against the plt. as owner of a vessel, of which the plt. was part-owner to the extent of one-sixteenth share for the loss of certain goods shipped, &c., and which loss was alleged in the action to have happened through the negligence of the plt. by his servants, &c.; whereas the loss was not only caused by the negligence, &c., of the plt. by his servants, but plt., by his own personal and wilful misconduct, &c., contributed to the loss; 2ndly, that although deft. was the legal owner of one-sixteenth part of the said vessel, yet he did not concur with the plt. and the other part-owners in the employment of the vessel in that voyage; but that the said voyage was undertaken and carried on for the profit and advantage of the plt., and certain other persons separate and distinct from the deft., and without his having been concerned, or having in any way participated, in the adventure: held, that both pleas amounted to the general issue (Gregory v. Hartnoll, 1 M. & W. 183). Where a known and ascertained article is ordered and sent, it is no answer to an action for the price of it to show that it does not answer the purpose for which it was ordered (Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 M. & W. 399; Ollivant v. Bayley, 5 Q. B. 288; Parsons v. Sexton, 4 C. B. 899).

In an action against a carrier, deft. cannot, under non assumpsit, object that the goods were of more than 10*l.* value, and that no notice thereof was given pursuant to the statute 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 68 (Syms v. Chaplin, 5 Dowl. 429; 5 Ad. & E. 634; S. C. 1 N. & P. 129); but must plead this defence specially. So, where a warranty is given subject to a condition that it shall terminate at twelve the next day unless in the mean time the purchaser give notice of unsoundness, this condition must be pleaded specially (Smart v. Hyde, 1 D. N. S. 60; S. C. 8 M. & W. 723).

A declaration stated, that before making the promise thereafter mentioned, the plt. had brought an action in the Exchequer against the deft. to recover a certain sum of money; that issues in fact had been joined between the parties, and notice of trial given; that in consideration that the plt. would forbear further proceedings until the 14th of December, the deft. promised to pay the money and costs on that day; and that in the event of his not paying a judge's order should be drawn up to secure payment. There was also a count on an account stated. Pleas, first, to the first count, that the plt. never had any cause of action in the action in the Exchequer, which he well knew; secondly, to both counts, that the original action was brought on two cheques, and that the judge's order was made on certain terms (setting them forth); that the promise in the first count mentioned was deduced from that order, and that the promise in the second count was deduced from the order ascertaining the amount of costs due on taxation, and that the order was afterwards set aside: held, upon general demurrer, that the former *plea was good, and, on special demurrer, that the second plea [*233] was bad, as amounting to the general issue. Quære, if it had been objected on special demurrer that the former plea did not show the deft. to be in a condition successfully to defend the action in the

Declaration upon an agreement whereby it was contracted that the plt. should supply, and the deft. receive, certain bales of wool, and alleging as a breach the refusal of the deft. to receive. Plea, that the wool contracted for was to be according to sample, but the wool tendered was inferior to the sample: held, on special demurrer, that the plea was not bad, as amounting to non assumpsit (Sieveking v. Dutton, 4 D. & L. 197; 2 C. B. 331).

In an action on a special contract for non-payment of stakes won by the plt. on a race which was run, subject to a condition that the decision of the committee, on any dispute that might arise, should be final, it seems that a defence that a dispute has arisen, which was pending before the committee, who have not made a decision, must be specially pleaded (Walmesley v. Matthews, 3 Man. & G. 133). A merger of the contract on which the action is brought in a deed under seal must be pleaded specially (Filder v. Burnby, 2 Man. & G. 529).

Stamp.] Where a written agreement is declared upon, or must be proved, and a stamp is essential, this plea in effect puts in issue the sufficiency of the stamp, because the statute not only enacts that the agreement unless duly stamped shall be unavailable, but shall not be admissible in evidence. The plt. will, therefore, be nonsuited for want of a stamped instrument to support his declaration. A plea of the want of a stamp is bad (Haward v. Smith, 4 B. N. C. 684); and if a statute expressly require a fact to be proved by the plt. as part of his case, as the Apothecaries' Act requiring proof of the plt.'s certificate, or that he was in practice before a certain day, then the want of such qualification need not be pleaded to an action for the amount of a bill (Morgan v. Ruddock, 1 H. & W. 505; 4 Dowl. 311; Shearwood v. Hay, 5 Ad. & E. 383; Wagstaffe v. Sharpe, 3 M. & W. 531); and the plt. is equally bound to show his certificate, or previous practice, where (in debt) deft. has pleaded as to part nunquam indebitatus, and a tender to the residue (Wills v. Langridge, 5 Ad. & E. 383; see "APOTHECARY"). It seems that if an act of parliament give a party a general form of declaration, and enact that it shall only be necessary to prove certain matters in support of it, the plea of the general issue requires the plt. to prove all such matters. Where the plt. declared in special assumpsit that deft. held lands under a lease from E. on certain terms set forth, and that the reversion came to the plt., that deft. in consideration of an abatement of rent promised to hold on the same terms in all other respects, but that he broke the terms, and the deft. pleaded non assumpsit, plt. not proving an express contract with him: held, that he could not prove an implied one without producing the original lease, which could not be used as such evidence without being properly stamped (Wallis v. Broadbent, 4 Ad. & E. 877).

If deft. be entitled to a verdict, on the ground that no contract exists, the verdict must be against him on inconsistent pleas, which assume that there is a contract, as payment, &c. (Gregson v. Ruck, 4 Q. B. 737). But where there is no such inconsistency, the deft. may prove his special pleas for the sake of the costs, for which reason awards, finding for deft. on pleas which deny as well as pleas which confess the contract, are not necessarily repugnant (Beaufort v. Welch, *10 Ad. & E. 527; Cooper [*234] v. Langdon, in error, 10 M. & W. 785).

Replication.] The plt., in his replication to a special plea, must either confess and avoid the matters alleged, or traverse them; and, in the latter case, he must, as a general rule, take issue on some single material proposition, and cannot traverse the whole (see Steph. Pl. 251—275; 1 Ch. Pl.; Regil v. Green, 1 M. & W. 328; and see "REPLICATION"). The exception is, when the plea contains simply matter of excuse for the non-performance of deft.'s promise, and in that case the general replication de injuriâ, which traverses all the material averments in the plea, is admissible, subject to the limitations laid down in Crogate's case, 8 Co. 76 a (Mead v. Farrer, 1 M. & W. 65; Griffin v. Yates, 2 B. N. C. 579; Crisp v. Griffiths, 2 C. M. & R. 159; Humphreys v. O'Connell, 9 D. P. C. 213; "REPLICATION," "TRESPASS"). But this is the only form of general traverse which it seems is allowable, even where the plea contains merely matter of excuse. A replication, "that the said plea and the statements therein contained in manner and form as the same are therein pleaded are not true, in substance and fact," was holden bad on special demurrer, inasmuch as it traversed the immaterial as well as the material allegations in the plea (Mitchell v. Cragg, 10 M. & W. 367; and see Griffin v. Yates, 2 B. N. C. 579). On the other hand, plt. is not obliged to adopt the general replication; he may, if he pleases, select some two or more material allegations in the plea and take issue upon them, leaving the rest admitted (Garten v. Robinson, 2 D. N. S. 41).

When de injuriâ proper or not.] This replication is only admissible when the plea confesses the promise, and the breach of it, and sets up an excuse for such breach. A plea which admits a contract in fact, either express or implied, and seeks to avoid it on the ground of illegality or fraud, is a plea in excuse, and may be traversed by the replication de injuriâ. Therefore, where to an action for work and labour the deft. pleaded that the work was done by the plt. as a broker, and that the plt. was not licensed to act as a broker; held, that de injuriâ was a good replication (Bennet v. Bull, 1 Ex. R. 593). Therefore, where to a declaration for not paying for books sold and delivered, by bills at certain dates with security, according to conditions of sale, which were set out, deft. pleaded a custom that upon such sales the security need not be given unless required, and that plt. did not require it, it was held that a replication de injuriâ to this plea was improper, as the plea in effect denied the promise (Whittaker v. Mason, 2 B. N. C. 359; S. C. 2 Sc. 567). And where to an action by the drawer of a bill against the acceptor, deft. pleaded that he accepted the bill in blank, and consented that plt. should fill it up as a bill at two months, whereas he had made it payable at a month, the plt. replied de injuriâ, this was holden bad for the same reason (Fisher v. Wood, 1 D. N. S. 54; 5 Jur. 933; see also, Solly v. Neish, 4 Dowl. 248; Parker v. Riley, 6 Dowl. 375; Elwell v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 5 M. & W. 669; S. C. 8 Dowl. 225).

Again, where, to an action by indorsee against acceptor, deft. pleaded that, before the commencement of the suit, plt. indorsed the bill to A. who, thence until and after the commencement of the suit, was and still remained the holder; and that deft. was, and still is, liable to pay it to him; the replication de injuriâ was holden inadmissible, on the ground that the plea denied instead of excusing the breach of the non-payment of the bill accord[ing] to its tenor and effect (Schild v. Kelpin, 8 M. & W. 673; 9 Dowl. 803; S. C. 7 Jur. 874).

So, if the plea amount to anything more than matter of excuse, this form of replication is not allowable. Hence, de injuriâ cannot be replied when the plea sets up a discharge by matter subsequent, as award and satisfaction after breach (see Jones v. Senior, 4 M. & W. 123; 6 Dowl. 701; Crisp v. Griffiths, 3 Dowl. 752); but, where it shows matter of discharge arising before breach, as where, to an action against the acceptor of a bill, deft. pleaded that he accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, of which

plt. had notice—that, before the bill became due, the drawer delivered to plt. other bills, upon an agreement that plt. should forbear to sue him upon the bill in the declaration mentioned, until default should be made in payment of the others—this being clearly matter of excuse, de injuriâ may be replied (Reynolds v. Blackburn, 2 N. & P. 136; 6 Dowl. 19; S. C. 7 Ad. & E. 161; see Humphrey v. O'Connell, 9 Dowl. 213; 7 M. & W. 371; S. C. 5 Jur. 271; Whitehead v. Walker, 9 M. & W. 506; S. C. 1 Dowl. N. S. 600; and see other cases, post, “BILLS OF EXCHANGE”).

A declaration in assumpsit charged the deft., in the first two counts, as the acceptor of two bills of exchange; and in other counts, for money lent, money paid, interest, and money due upon an account stated. The deft. pleaded, as to the first and second counts, and as to 852*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* parcel of the moneys in the third and subsequent counts mentioned, that the bills were respectively drawn and on account of the sums they severally represented, parcel of the said sum of 852*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* and for no other consideration; that after they respectively became due, and before the commencement of the suit, the deft. and one P. transferred certain stock of the value of 416*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in full satisfaction and discharge of the sum of 416*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* parcel, &c., and of the causes of action in the declaration, so far as they related to the said sum of 416*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*; that the deft. gave the plt., and the plt. took and received from the deft., three several bills of exchange for 145*l.* 4*s.* each, and that the plt. accepted and received the stock and bills in full satisfaction and discharge of the said sum of 852*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*, and of the causes of action in the declaration mentioned, so far as they related thereto. To this plea the plt. replied de injuriâ: held, that inasmuch as the plt. set up matter in discharge, and not in excuse, the replication de injuriâ was improper (Barnes v. Price, 1 C. B. 214).

The deft. pleaded to work and labour, that the claim was for work done by plt. as master of a boat used by defts. as common carriers, and that it was agreed that plt. as master, &c., should be answerable for all pilferings for goods under his charge, and that the amount should be deducted from his wages, and pleaded as a set-off, and then showed a pilfering of wine, and claimed the set-off; held, the replication de injuriâ was bad. It seems the plea amounted to the general issue (Cleworth v. Pickford, 8 D. P. C. 873). It seems that to a plea showing a prima facie case of a promise, but avoiding it by showing a want of consideration, a replication that deft. broke his promise, without the cause alleged, is good on general demurrer (Noel v. Rich, 2 C. M. & R. 360).

It seems to have been considered, in one case, that a plea, showing that the contract was illegal ab initio, could not be properly traversed by the general replication (see Parker v. Riley, 3 M. & W. 230; S. C. 6 Dowl. 375); but the contrary has been recently decided (Scott v. Chappelow, 2 D. N. S. 78; 6 Jur. 464, nom. Scott v. Taylor). This replication is not applicable in assumpsit where the plea does not admit the promise stated in the declaration (Whitaker v. Mason, 2 B. N. C. 359).

De injuriâ* is a good replication to a plea of the Tipling Act (24 Geo. II. c. 40, s. 12), pleaded to a declaration for goods sold [*236] and delivered (Lansdale v. Clarke, 16 Law J. 246, Exch.).

When the plea alleges matter in the nature of title or interest, or authority from the plt., or matter of record, de injuriâ, in the general form, is improper (Crogate's case, 8 Co. 76 a). And, in such cases, the plt., if he wish to put in issue such matter, must confine himself to a simple traverse thereof: but if he admits it to be true, he may, by qualifying the general replication, apply it to all the other allegations (Steph. Pl. 265). See form of his replication, post, “REPLICATION.”

An objection to the replication, on the ground that it is inapplicable, must be taken on special demurrer (Curtis v. Headfort (Marquis of), 6 Dowl. 497; Parker v. Riley, ib. 375, overruling Hooker v. Nye, 1 C. M. & R. 258). On general demurrer, the replication will be held sufficient.

The usual form of a replication de injuriâ, is that deft., of his own wrong, and without the cause alleged, broke his promise modo et formâ, but the words, "of his own wrong," may safely be omitted (Watson v. Weeks, 6 Nev. & M. 752; S. C. 5 Ad. & E. 237).

Evidence for Plaintiff.

The right or obligation to begin depends on the form of the issue, and the test has been said to be not on which side the affirmative lies, but which side will be entitled to a verdict if no evidence be given.

Under non assumpsit.] Upon this issue the plt. must prove the contract as laid, involving both the promise and the consideration; but, neither the inducements, nor any of the averments subsequent to the statement of the promise are put in issue by non assumpsit (see ante, p. 186 et seq.; see proof of damage, infra). The contract must be proved to be one binding on all the defts., though all but one have suffered judgment by default (see ante, p. 171 et seq.).

If the action be on a written instrument, the original must be produced, properly stamped, or evidence be provided to show that it is destroyed, lost,* or, in the deft.'s possession; and in the last case, a notice to produce it must be given a reasonable time before the trial (see Doe d. Phillips v. Morris, 4 N. & M. 598; 3 Ad. & E. 46; S. C. 1 H. & W. 226); where, however, the plt. can establish his case without disclosing the fact that there was a written contract relating to the subject-matter of the action, he will not be precluded from recovering by the deft. showing it, but the latter must produce, and prove it, as part of his case (Magnay v. Knight, 1 M. & G. 944; S. C. 4 Jur. 1088; Stephens v. Pinney, 2 Moo. 349; S. C. 8 Taunt. 327).

If the contract be not admitted under a judge's order (see "ADMISSIONS," ante, p. 61), and there be no attesting witness, the deft.'s handwriting thereto must be proved in the usual way (see "HANDWRITING"). If there be an attesting witness, he must be called, or a sufficient excuse shown for his absence (see "ACCOUNT STATED," "PLEAS"). It is not necessary that the witness should recollect the transaction. It is enough if he recognizes his own handwriting, and *states that he should not have signed the attes-[*237] tation if he had not seen it executed (Doe d. Counsell v. Caperton, 9 C. & P. 112; Doe d. Smyth v. Claxton, 11 Moo. 347; Burling v. Paterson, 9 C. & P. 570). If he deny his attestation, or disavow having seen the instrument executed, evidence of deft.'s handwriting is admissible (Talbot v. Hodson, 7 Taun. 251; 2 Marsh. 527; Ley v. Ballard, 3 Esp. 173, n.; Fitzgerald v. Elsee, 2 Camb. 635; Lennox v. Dean, ib. 636. n.; Burrows v. Lock, 10 Ves. 474).

The rule is the same where it is necessary to prove the plt.'s signature, and that is attested by a witness. Evidence that deft. admitted the signature to be his, will not dispense with calling the attesting witness (Call v. Dunning, 4 East, 53; Rex v. Harringworth, 4 M. & S. 350; Abbott v. Plumbe, Doug. 216); nor will it suffice to prove the execution by another person, who was present at the time (Breton v. Cope, Peake, 31; Higgs v. Dixon, 2 Stark. 180; Manver v. Postan, 4 Esp. 239); as to what does or does not constitute the party an attesting witness (see Lloyd v. Freshfield, 2 C. & P. 325; Parke v. Mears, 2 B. & P. 217; Doe d. England (Bank) v. Chambers, 4 Ad. & E. 410; 6 N. & M. 539; S. C. 1 H. & W. 749; Powell v. Blackett, 1 Esp. 97; McCraw v. Gentry, 3 Camp. 232).

* What is sufficient proof of this, see Tulley v. Exeter (Bishop), 4 Bing. 290; S. C. 12 Moo. 591; McGately v. Aston, 2 M. & W. 206; S. C. 2 Gale, 238; Harper v. Hart, 5 Jur. 1007; Deacon v. Fuller, 6 C. & P. 74; Brewster v. Sewell, 3 B. & A. 296; Miller v. Miller, 2 Sc. 123; 2 B. N. C. 76; 1 Hodg. 187; Minshall v. Lloyd, 2 M. & W. 450.

There are two exceptions to the rule which requires the testimony of an attesting witness. 1st. Where deft. himself claims an interest under the contract, and produces it at the trial, pursuant to notice, the plt. need not call the attesting witness, nor, of course, give any evidence of the execution of the instrument. Hence, in an action by the vendee against the vendor of an estate, to recover back the deposit, the deft. having produced the contract, pursuant to notice, it was ruled not to be necessary to prove it (Bradshaw v. Bennett, 5 C. & P. 48; S. C. 1 M. & R. 143; see also Pearce v. Hooper, 3 Taunt. 60; Orr v. Morrice, 3 B. & B. 139; Doe d. Tyndale v. Heming, 6 B. & C. 28; Doe d. Wilkins v. Wilkins, 5 N. & M. 434; S. C. 1 H. & W. 574; Bowles v. Langworthy, 5 T. R. 366; Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C. M. & R. 782; 5 Tyr. 309). But where the document was obtained from deft. some time before the trial, so that the plt. might have been prepared to prove the execution, it was held, that he was bound to call the attesting witness (Vacher v. Cocks, 1 B. & Ad. 145; see Leith v. Post, 1 Esp. 196); and, in cases where deft. does not claim an interest under the document, plt. cannot proceed without the regular proof, though the deft. produces it at the trial, and plt. was not until then aware who the attesting witness was (Gordon v. Secretan, 8 East, 548; overruling Rex v. Middlezoy, 2 T. R. 41; Johnson v. Lewellin, 6 Esp. 101; Richards v. Frankum, 9 C. & P. 221). To obviate this difficulty, an application to inspect and take a copy should be made before the trial (see Lush's Pr. Index; Archb. Pr. Index).

2ndly. The second exception is, where the document being in deft.'s possession, he refuses to produce it at the trial, after sufficient notice. In this case, the plt. being let in to give secondary evidence, need not call the attesting witness, to prove the execution of the original, but may prove it by other means (Poole v. Warren, 3 N. & P. 693; 8 Ad. & E. 582; S. C. 3 Jur. 23; Cook v. Tunswell, 8 Taunt. 450; Jackson v. Allen, 3 Stark. 74; Burnet v. Lynch, 6 B. & C. 589; S. C. 8 D. & R. 368; Doe d. Rowlandson v. Wainwright, 1 N. & P. 8; S. C. 5 Ad. & E. 509).

To excuse the absence of an attesting witness in cases where proof of the execution is necessary, plt. must show, 1st, Either that the witness is dead, or insane (Currie v. Child, 3 Camp. 283; Bennett v. Taylor, 9 Ves. 381); which must be proved by some person who knows the fact. The illness of the witness is no sufficient ground for letting in secondary evidence (Harrison v. Blades, 3 Campb. 457; *nor (according to Cronk v. Frith, 9 C. & P. 197; 2 M. & R. 262) is the fact that he has become [*238] blind (but see Wood v. Drury, 1 Ld. Raym. 734; Pedler v. Page, 1 M. & R. 258, contra). 2nd, Or, that he is out of the jurisdiction (Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 266). That he is in Ireland, or any other place beyond the reach of a subpoena, is enough (Hodnett v. Forman, 1 Stark. 90; Doe d. Counsell v. Caperton, 9 C. & P. 112). A temporary absence from the kingdom is sufficient (Prince v. Blackburn, 2 East, 250). Where on search at the Admiralty it appeared that the witness was serving in the navy, it was held, that his absence was sufficiently accounted for, though it was not shown where he was (Parker v. Hoskins, 2 Taunt. 233; see Wyatt v. Bateman, 7 C. & P. 586). And where a witness had set out to leave the kingdom, this was held sufficient, though the vessel had been driven back, and was at the time of trial in an English port (Ward v. Wells, 1 Taunt. 461).

The fact of the witness's absence should be proved by some relative or other person who can speak to it from his own knowledge. The witness's statement, while in this country, of where he lived, which was offered with the view of showing that inquiries had been made there, and that the answer received was that he was in America, was holden inadmissible, and it was ruled that the person in whose house he lived should be called (Doe d. Beard v. Powell, 7 C. & P. 617; and see Doe v. Johnson, 2 Ch. 196). 3rd, Or that a bona fide and diligent inquiry has been made for the witness and that he cannot be found, or it cannot be ascertained who he is (Crosby v. Percy, 1 Taunt. 364; Willman v. Worrall, 8 C. & P. 380; Doe d. Clark v. Trapaud, 1 Stark. 281; Keeling v. Ball, Peak. Add. Ca. 88). It is a question for the court whether the search is sufficient (see Morgan v. Morgan, 9 Bing. 359; 2 M. & Sc. 491; but see Bampton v. Paulin, 4 Bing. 264; 12 Moo. 497). What is or not sufficient (see these cases, and Wardell v. Fermor, 2 Campb. 282; Evans v. Curtis, 2 C. & P. 296; Pytt v. Griffith, 6 Moo. 538; Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 East, 183; Kay v. Brookman, 3 C. & P. 555; S. C., M. & M. 286; Burt v. Walker, 4 B. & A. 697; Hill v. Phillips, 5 C. & P. 356). Several answers to inquiries made respecting a witness, such as, that nothing is known concerning him, are admissible; but statements of particular facts are not, if the party who made them is capable of being called (Doe v. Johnson, 2 Ch. 196; Doe d. Beard v. Powell, 7 C. & P. 617). 4th, If the witness had since the attestation become infamous (Jones v. Mason, 2 Str. 833), or if he had such an interest as disqualified him from being called as a witness (Swire v. Bell, 5 T. R. 371; Hovill v. Stephenson, 5 Bing. 493; S. C. 3 M. & P. 146; Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 East, 183), secondary evidence might be given.

Where the absence of the attesting witness has been sufficiently accounted for it will suffice to prove the handwriting of the deft., or that of the witness; but in the latter case reasonable evidence of the identity of the deft. must be given (Whitlock v. Musgrove, 1 C. & M. 511; 3 Tyr. 541; Middleton v. Sandford, 4 Campb. 34; Parkins v. Hawkshaw, 2 Stark. 239). Where it was shown that the deft. was present in the room when the contract was signed; this was holden sufficient evidence of identity without proving the deft.'s handwriting (Nelson v. Whittall, 1 B. & A. 19).

If there were two attesting witnesses the absence of both must be accounted for, in order to let in secondary evidence, and where this is done proof of the handwriting of one of them is sufficient (Adam v. Kerr, 1 B. & P. 360; Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 East, 183). Where both may be produced it is not necessary to call more than one, except in cases of doubt or suspicion.

Agency.] Where the contract was made by an agent of the deft. [239*] *proof of the agency must be given, either by calling the agent himself, or by some other means.

Interlineation.] If there appears to be any erasure or interlineation in the instrument, evidence should be provided to explain for what purpose, and when it was done.

Proof of Damages.] The plt. must in all cases be prepared to prove the amount of the damages he has sustained; and, as ancillary thereto, the facts alleged as constituting the breach for which the action is brought. He will, at all events, upon proof of the contract, be entitled to nominal damages, and the jury are not restricted to these (Hey v. Wyche, 6 Jur. 559); but they cannot give higher damages than the amount laid in the declaration (Cheveley v. Morris, 2 Bl. 1300; Tidd, 870—897, 927; see the different heads throughout the work.

Money Demand.] Where the action is brought for a mere money demand, a jury can hardly be warranted in giving more or less than the amount of that demand, if deft. does not by his defence show it may be reduced (Bac. Abr. Damages, D, 1; James v. Morgan, 1 Lev. 111). In some cases, interest will be added to the principal (post, "INTEREST").

Liquidated Damages or Penalty.] Where the parties stipulate for a liquidated sum to be paid as damages, the jury are bound to give damages to the full amount of that sum (Farrant v. Olmuis, 3 B. & A. 692; Barton v. Glover, Holt, C. 43—46; Lowe v. Peers, 4 Burr. 2292). But, where they stipulate merely for a penalty to be paid, the jury may give less than the amount of such penalty; or, if plt. do not proceed for the penalty, they may even give more (Harrison v. Wright, 13 East, 343; Barton v. Glover, Holt, C. 44; Winter v. Trimmer, 1 Bla. 395; but see Wilbeam v. Ashton, 1 Campb. 78). It should be observed, that by proceeding for the penalty which plt. recovers, he cannot recover beyond that penalty (Ib.). With respect to what stipulation amounts to an agreement to consider the sum more as liquidated damages than a penalty, it has been said, by Heath J., in Astley v. Weldon, 2 B. & P. 353: "It is very difficult to lay down any general principle in cases of this kind; but I think there is one which may be safely stated. Where articles contain covenants for the performance of several things, and then one large sum is stated at the end to be paid upon breach of performance, that must be considered as a penalty; but where it is agreed that, if a party do such a particular thing, such a sum shall be paid by him, there the sum stated may be treated as liquidated damages." And, Chambre, J., observed: "There is one case in which the sum agreed for must always be considered as a penalty, and that is where the payment of a smaller sum is secured by a larger." Where the word "penalty" is introduced, and there is no other term explaining it, it is in general clear that the sum is only to be treated as a penalty (Smith v. Dickenson, 3 B. & P. 630; Harrison v. Wright, 13 East, 345). On the other hand, where the words "liquidated damages," or their equivalent, are used, and there are no other explanatory words, the sum can scarcely ever be considered as a penalty (Barton v. Glover, Holt, C. 43). In deciding the point, however, the whole of the agreement, and the evident intention of the parties, must be regarded (Davies v. Penton, 6 B. & C. 222; 9 D. & R.); the courts always inclining to treat the sum rather as a penalty (Holt, C. 43). In a late important decision on this subject, *where A. agreed with B. to sell him the good-will of A.'s business, and to demise him his [*240] house in which the business was carried on, for which B. was to pay 800*l.*, and to take furniture and fixtures at a valuation, and they were afterwards valued at 174*l.*, 400*l.* was paid to A. at the time of executing the agreement, and B. agreed to accept and pay two bills of exchange, one for 400*l.*, payable twelve months after date; and the other for 174*l.*, payable two months after date; and A. agreed not to carry on the business within five miles of the house: and, for the true performance of this agreement, each of them did thereby bind himself to the other of them in the penal sum of 500*l.*, to be recovered for breach of the agreement in a court of law, as and by way of liquidated damages: it was held, that this sum was a penalty (Davies v. Penton, 6 B. & C. 216). And where it was agreed "by and between the parties, that either of them neglecting to perform this agreement according to the true intent and meaning hereof, shall pay to the other of them the full sum of 200*l.* of lawful, &c., to be recovered in any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster," the court held this more as an agreement for a penalty than liquidated damages (Astley v. Weldon, 2 B. & P. 346). On the other hand, where it was agreed between plt. and def. that the latter should take an assignment of the house of the former, and that either party not fulfilling all and every part of the agreement should pay to the other 500*l.*, "thereby settled and fixed as liquidated damages," the court held, that, on breach of the agreement, by omission to take an assignment, the def. was liable to pay the whole 500*l.*, and that it was not a mere penalty (Reilly v. Jones, 1 Bing. 302; S. C. 8 Moo. 244). Where the agreement was, "I do hereby promise Mrs. C. L., that I will not marry with any other person besides herself: if I do, I agree to pay her 1000*l.* within three months next after I shall marry any body else," it was held, that the sum specified formed the sole measure of damages, as fixed and liquidated between the parties (Lowe v. Peers, 4 Burr. 2225). A reservation of "50*l.* per acre for every acre converted into tillage, &c." is in the nature of liquidated damages (Farrant v. Olmius, 3 B. & A. 692; 4 Burr. 2228; Birch v. Stephenson, 3 Taunt. 498). And so, where two persons agreed to perform certain work in a limited time, "or to pay a stipulated weekly sum for such time afterwards as it should remain unfinished," it was held, the jury must give such weekly payments, they being in the nature of liquidated damages (Fletcher v. Dyche, 2 T. R. 32).

Unliquidated Damages.] Where the action is brought for the recovery of general and unliquidated damages, and not for a mere money demand, the amount of such damages is entirely in the province of the jury, who may take into consideration any consequential injury arising from the breach of the contract. If the damages given be excessive, the court will sometimes grant a new trial (Tidd, 940); but not so if they be too small; at least, it seems very unusual so to do, unless, indeed, in actions on mere money demands, or on inquisitions (Ib.). Where several distinct causes of action, one of which is not ascertainable, are stated in one count in assumpsit, general damages may be given (Ring v. Roxbrough, 2 C. & J. 418).

Consequential Damages.] With respect to what consequential damages the jury may take into consideration, they must be such as will be warranted by the fair, legal, and natural result of the breach of def.'s agreement (ante; Vicars v. Wilcocks, 8 East, 1; Flower v. Adam, 2 Taunt. 314; Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229; S. C. 9 Moo. 435). They must, if they be not the necessary *result of such breach, appear upon the declaration, and [*241] be proved accordingly (Ward v. Smith, 11 Pr. 19). If the buyer of a horse, with a warranty, relying thereon, re-sell him with a warranty, and, being sued thereon by his vendee, offer the defence to his vendor, who gives no direction as to the action, the plt. defending that action is entitled to recover the costs thereof from his vendor, as part of the damage occasioned by his breach of warranty (Lewis v. Peake, 7 Taunt. 153; S. C. 2 Marsh. 431). But not where he might, by a reasonable examination, have discovered the unsoundness before he sold it (Wrightson v. Chamberlain, 7 Sc. 598; see Pennell v. Woodburn, 7 C. & P. 117; Penley v. Watts, 3 B. & C. 533; S. C. 5 D. & R. 442; Walker v. Halton, 10 M. & W. 249; S. C. 2 D. N. S. 263; Short v. Kalloway, 11 Ad. & E. 28). In such action, if the horse is returned, the measure of damages is the price paid for him (Caswell v. Coare, 1 Taunt. 566); or perhaps the actual value, supposing it had been sound (Cox v. Walker, cited 6 Ad. & E. 523); if not returned nor resold, the measure is the difference between that and the real value; if it has not been tendered, plt. cannot recover for its keep (Caswell v. Coare, 1 Taunt. 566); but, if it has, he may recover such expenses for such time as would be reasonably required to resell it to the best advantage (McKenzie v. Hancock, R. & M. 436; Ellis v. Chinnock, 7 C. & P. 169); and, if he has resold it, he is entitled also to recover the difference of price (Chesterman v. Lamb, 4 N. & M. 195; 2 Ad. & E. 129). But he cannot recover the profit which he would have made if the warranty had been true (Walker v. Moore, 10 B. & C. 416); at least, not without showing mala fides in deft. (Ib.), nor the expense of a certificate of unsoundness from the veterinary college (Clare v. Maynard, 1 N. & P. 701; 6 Ad. & E. 519; S. C. 1 W. W. & H. 274; King v. Rice, 2 Chit. Rep. 416). So, where the deft., a broker, contrary to the orders of the plt., his principal, purchased goods of an inferior quality, per quod one J. S., who had commissioned the plt. to purchase the goods for him, sued the plt. for the bad quality of the goods, and recovered damages and costs, it was held that the measure of damages was not the mere difference in price between the two kinds of goods, but the amount of the damages and costs recovered in the action against the plt. (Mainwaring v. Brandon, 8 Taunt. 202; S. C. 2 Moo. 125). The court, however, compelled the plt. to give this undertaking: namely, that he should assign the goods to the deft., or sell and account with him for the net proceeds thereof. And, in an action for the breach of a warranty of a chain cable, the plt. may recover the value of the anchor to which the cable was attached, on proving that the cable was broken, and that the crew slipped it, in order to avoid danger (Borradaile v. Brunton, 2 Moo. 582; S. C. 8 Taunt. 535). In an action for not accepting goods sold, plt. may, after a reasonable time, resell them, and the measure of damages will be the difference of price (Maclean v. Dunn, 4 Bing. 722; 1 M. & P. 761); or, if not resold, the difference between the contract-price and the market-price on the day when they were tendered for acceptance (Philpotts v. Evans, 5 M. & W. 475). In an action for not delivering goods, the measure is the difference between the contract-price and that which goods of a similar quality and description bore on the day when they ought to have been delivered (Gainsford v. Carroll, 4 D. & R. 161; S. C. 2 B. & C. 624; Leigh v. Paterson, 2 Moo. 588; Humble v. Mitchell, 3 P. & D. 141; 11 Ad. & E. 205; S. C. 3 Jur. 1188; Startup v. Colazzi, 2 C. M. & R. 165; S. C. 5 Tyrw. 697; Boorman v. Nash, 9 B. & C. 145); and, in some cases, warehouse-room, &c. (Greaves v. Ashlin, 3 Camp. 427). Where a person who had contracted for the purchase of an estate, but had not obtained a conveyance, put up the estate for sale in lots by *auction, and engaged to make a good title by a certain day, which he was unable to do, as [*242] his vendor never made a conveyance to him: held, that a purchaser of certain lots at the auction might, in an action for not making a good title, recover not only the expenses which he had incurred, but also damages for the loss which he sustained by not having the contract carried into effect (Hopkins v. Grazbrook, 6 B. & C. 31). On the other hand, where the vendor on a similar contract had some, though not a sufficient, title to the estate, and, on an objection being made to the title, offered to convey the estate with such title as he had, or to return the purchase-money with interest, it was held that no damages for the loss of the bargain were recoverable (Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 Bla. 1078; commented on in 6 B. & C. 33; and see Johnson v. Johnson, 3 B. & P. 167; Palm. 364). So, extra costs are not recoverable as consequential damage (Hathaway v. Barrow, 1 Camp. 151-2; Sinclair v. Eldrid, 4 Taunt. 7; Webber v. Nicholas, M. & M.; Jenkins v. Biddulph, 4 Bing. 160; and see other instances, post, "CASE") matters of great importance to the parties, and others matters of little or no importance, a stipulation for liquidating damages generally, upon any violation of the agreement, shall not be carried into effect. Aliter, if the agreement specify the particular stipulation or stipulations to which the liquidated damages are to be confined (Kemble v. Farren, 6 Bing. 14; recognised in Horner v. Flintoff, 9 M. & W. 678).

Measure of Unliquidated Damages.] With respect to the measure of the damages, it has been held, in an action on a warranty, if there has been no offer to return the goods warranted, the measure of the damages is the difference between the price fixed and the real value (Caswell v. Coare, 1 Taunt. 566; Germaine v. Burton, 3 Stark. 32). In an action of assumpsit for not delivering goods upon a given day, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract-price and that which goods of a similar quality and description bore on or about the day when the goods ought to have been delivered (Gainsford v. Carroll, 2 B. & C. 624; S. C. 4 D. & R. 161; Startup v. Corlazzi, 2 C. M. & R. 165; S. C. 5 Tyrw. 697; Leigh v. Paterson, 2 Moo. 588; S. C. 8 Taunt. 540). In an action against the vendor of land, for refusing to complete, the plt. is entitled only to such damage as he has actually sustained, and not the amount of the purchase-money (Laird v. Payne, 7 M. & W. 474; S. C. 8 Dowl. 860). And on a failure of a contract to replace stock, it seems, though the measure of damages is the price at the day when it ought to have been replaced, or at the day of the trial, at the option of the plt. (M'Arthur v. Seaforth, 2 Taunt. 257; Shepherd v. Johnson, 2 East, 211; Harrison v. Harrison, 1 C. & P. 413; Forrest v. Elwes, 4 Ves. 493; Vaughan v. Wood, 1 M. & R. 403); yet the highest price at any intermediate day cannot be given (M'Arthur v. Seaforth, 2 Taunt. 257). And if, after the appointed time to replace the stock, and while the market was rising, deft., offered to replace the stock, the criterion of damages would be the value of the stock at the time of the tender, and not the increased value at the time of the trial (Shepherd v. Johnson, 2 East, 211). In an action for not replacing stock, it is no legal damage that plt. was prevented completing an advantageous contract he had entered into (1 Ch. Pl. 296). Upon a contract to replace stock and pay dividends in the mean time, although the jury give damages for the value of the stock and the amount of the damages, yet, on affirmation of the judgment in error; the measure of increase is not the further damages that [*243] may have accrued, but interest upon the *damages given as the value of the capital stock (Dwyer v. Gurry, 7 Taunt. 14; see "Stock").

In an action for not accepting railway shares, the measure of damages is the difference between the price on the day when they ought to have been accepted, and that on the day when they were re-sold by the vendor, such re-sale being within a reasonable time (Stewart v. Cassidy, 8 M. & W. 160). Where the contract was for about 300 quarters (more or less) foreign rye, shipped on board a particular vessel coming from Hamburgh: the vessel brought 345 quarters, and the seller refused to deliver any part, unless the purchasers would accept the whole: held, that they were not bound to accept the whole (Cross v. Eglin, 2 B. & Ad. 106).

If the deft. have pleaded a set-off, but at the trial fail to prove it, or offer no evidence in support of it, the plt., if he think proper, may deduct the amount of it from the sum he proves to be due to him, and take a verdict for the balance. But there is no necessity for him to do this, and though no such reduction be made the deft. is ever after estopped from bringing an action for the demand included in his plea of set-off (Eastmere v. Lawes, 7 Sco. 461; but see Laing v. Chatham, 1 Camp. 352). If the deft. have not pleaded a set-off no deduction should be allowed for any demand which he may have against the plt. (1 Ch. Arch. 414, 439, n. d). If the deft. prove part of the plea of set-off, or other plea which cannot be construed distributively, the deft., except in certain cases, is not entitled to a verdict upon the issue raised upon such plea, but though this is the case the jury should allow the part proved in reduction of damages (Eastmere v. Lawes, supra; Moore v. Batten, 7 Ad. & E. 485; Barnes v. Butcher, 9 C. & P. 725; Lord v. Ferrand, 1 D. & L. 630).

As to what deft. may prove in reduction of damages, post, p. 244.

Under Special Plea or Defence.] Where an issue is taken on a special plea, and the general issue is also pleaded, the plt. must not only be prepared to prove all that is required of him by the general issue, but also what is required of him on the issue taken on the special plea. When the special plea is pleaded without the general issue, so as to admit all the other facts but what are denied by such special plea, then no proof of such admitted facts need be adduced (see ante, 39, 40); and the proof will, in general, then consist of an answer to the special plea and the amount of damages.

Who to begin to prove Issue.] With respect to when the burden of proving the issue lies on the plt., these general rules may be laid down: that the party who asserts the affirmative is bound to prove the issue (Calder v. Rutherford, 3 B. & B. 302; Ross v. Hunter, 5 T. R. 33); that, when the presumption of law is in favour of the affirmative, it is not necessary for the party asserting it to prove the same, and the disproof of it lies on the other party, although it involve a negative (2 Selw. N. P. 709); that, when the issue involves a charge of culpable omission, the party making the charge must prove it, although he must prove a negative; for the other party shall be presumed innocent till proved guilty (1 Roll. 83; Williams v. E. I. Comp., 3 East, 193-9; Rex v. Hawkins, 10 East, 216). And, lastly, that where a party seeks to support his case by a particular fact which lies peculiarly within his own knowledge, the onus of proving such fact, though it involve a negative, will lie upon him (Apothecaries' Company v. Bentley, R. & M. 159; Spieres v. Parker, 1 T. R. 144; Rex v. Stone, 1 East, 650; see further, post, "EVIDENCE").

The proofs under, and in answer to, a special plea or defence, must *necessarily depend on its nature and the particular issue [*244] taken; they will be found under the different titles of defences throughout the work (see those titles).

Evidence for Defendant.

We have already seen under what plea deft. may avail himself of his defence (ante, p. 226); and the evidence should be adduced accordingly. We have also seen upon whom the burden of proving the issue lies (ante, supra).

Defences.] The usual defences consist in denying, or rather disproving:—
1. The plt.'s ability to sue, as being a bankrupt, alien enemy, under coverture (see those titles); or, legal interest in the contract (ante, p. 226); or, that others should have been joined with him in the action (ante, p. 161, post, "PARTNERS"); or, that too many parties, plts., have sued (ante, p. 66, post, "PARTNERS"); or, that plt. is a mere assignee of the contract (ante, p. 167; and see as to what deft. may successfully show, as a defence in this respect, in actions at the suit of executors and administrators, heirs, devisees, assignees of bankrupts, insolvents, and husband and wife, post, those titles). 2. The deft.'s inability to contract, or personal protection from the contract sued on, as being an infant, feme covert, lunatic, or, drunk (see those titles); or, that he never entered into the express or implied contract (ante, p. 226); or, that the defts., in an action against several, did not jointly contract (ante, p. 722; post, "PARTNERS"); or, that the plt. and deft. were partners in the contract sued on (ante, p. 226, post "PARTNERS"); or, that he is a mere assignee of the contract (ante, p. 167; and as to what defences of this nature deft. may avail himself of, in actions against executors and administrators, bankrupts, insolvents, husband and wife, see those titles). 3. That the action is misconceived, and should not have been in assumpsit (ante, p. 231); or, that it is brought too soon (Mussen v. Price, 4 East, 146; Lee v. Risdon, 2 Marsh. 495; post, "GOODS SOLD, &c."). 4. That the contract or consideration was not such as that stated in the declaration, or what is proved in evidence (see ante, p. 272, and post, "VARIANCE"); or that it is not binding for want of a stamp (post, "STAMP"); or for want of consideration (ante, p. 266, et infra); or that the contract or consideration was illegal at common law or by statute (ante, p. 228, and post, "ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION," and the various titles referred to). 5. That the plt. has not performed a condition precedent, or that he has not performed it as stated in the declaration (ante, p. 201, &c.); or that the deft. has not been ever requested to perform an act which he ought to have been (ante, p. 210); or has not had a notice he ought to have had (ante, p. 213). 6. That the deft. has performed the contract, as by payment, or tender (see those titles.) 7. That deft. has been excused performance by reason of the contract being altered (ante, p. 230, and "ALTERATION"), or rescinded (post, "RELEASING CONTRACT"), or released or discharged by award and satisfaction, a negotiable security given, award, judgment recovered, former recovery, foreign attachment, releases, &c. (see those titles); or higher security given (and post, "DEED"); or that it has become impossible or illegal to perform the contract (ante, p. 224); or that deft. is discharged by his bankruptcy and certificate (post, "BANKRUPTCY"); or under the Insolvent Act (post, "INSOLVENT"); or by the Statute of Limitations, or set-off (see those titles).

Since the Pleading Rules, H. T. 4 Will. IV. the deft. must by plea expressly deny the consideration, or plead specially the want of adequate consideration (see Graham v. Pitman, 3 Nev. & M. 37; Kinder v. [245] Smedley, 5 Nev. & M. 138); so also the illegality of consideration (Barnett v. Glossop, 1 B. N. C. 633). Ante, p. 288, see "ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION."

Reduction of Damages.] The deft. should be prepared, as far as he can, to reduce the plt.'s damages, in the event of his being entitled to any. We have already seen as to what proofs plt. may show for the purpose of supporting his damages, and deft. should therefore be prepared, as much as possible, to disprove them. He should show all he can as to his having complied with the contract; as, by having offered to complete it before action brought, or the like (see Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East, 211). He may, it seems, reduce the damages by showing a partial failure by plt. of the consideration. Thus, though there be an agreement that a specific sum of money shall be paid for the performance of a work or act, the claim may be reduced by showing that the work or materials or act were not according to the agreement; and it appears, indeed, that the damages may be reduced in toto, and the whole demand defeated, by showing that the work is not so adequate, or totally inadequate, to answer the purpose for which it was undertaken to be performed, and that the deft. has derived little or no benefit from the act (Duncan v. Blundell, 3 Stark. 6; and see ante, p. 226). But, in such cases, and where the plt. does not go on a quantum meruit, and especially where the object is only to reduce the damages, the deft. should give the plt. notice of the intended defence, so that he may not be taken by surprise (Basten v. Butter, 7 East, 479; Germaine v. Burton, 3 Stark. 32); but, if he sue on a quantum meruit, the very form of his own declaration gives him notice that the adequacy of the consideration may be disputed (see Basten v. Butter, supra; per Ellenborough (Lord), C. J.). Proving the service of such notice, see post, "NOTICE."

In the case of a sale of goods, where there is a stipulated price, and a warranty as to the quality, the vendee may retain the goods, and set up their inferiority in reduction of damages, although he has not offered to return them or given any notice to vendor (Cormack v. Gillis, 7 East, 480; Fielder v. Starkin, H. Bl. 17). Where the claim is on a quantum meruit, the deft. may, without notice, reduce the damages, by showing that the work or act was improperly done, and he may entitle himself to a verdict by showing its total inefficiency, and that he has derived no benefit from it (Farnsworth v. Garrard, 1 Campb. 38; Fisher v. Samuda, ib. 191; Denew v. Daverell, 3 Campb. 451; Okell v. Smith, 1 Stark. 108; Ch. Contr. 169; 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 14). If, however, a bill of exchange have been accepted for the work done, the bad quality and partial insufficiency do not form a ground for reducing the amount claimed (1 Camp. 40, n.; Tye v. Gwynne, 2 ib. 346; 3 ib. 38; Moggridge v. Jones, 14 East, 486; Archer v. Bamford, 3 Stark. 175; Ch. Contr. 169). And, according to the case of Hopkins v. Appleby, 1 Stark. 477, if a vendee, &c., of goods deprive the plt. of the means of ascertaining their real value, by using them or otherwise, the deft. cannot reduce the damages. But see Poulton v. Lattimore, 9 B. & C. 259; 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 17. In an action for use and occupation, where there has been a partial eviction or deprivation by the landlord of the full enjoyment by the deft. of the property demised, the deft. should be prepared to prove that fact, for the plt. will only be entitled to damages commensurate with the advantage the deft. may have actually derived from the occupation of the estate (Tomlinson v. Day, 5 Moo. 558; Hall v. Burgess, 5 B. & C. 338; 8 D. & R. 67).

To prevent a circuity of action and unnecessary litigation in cases *of partial failure of consideration, defts. have been allowed [*246] of late, instead of being compelled to resort to a cross action, to show; in reduction of damages, such partial failure of consideration, particularly in cases where the party has had notice of such intended defence (Basten v. Butter, 7 East, 484; Havelock v. Geddes, 10 ib. 564; Wilbeam v. Ashton, 1 Campb. 78; Fisher v. Samuda, ib. 190; Denew v. Daverell, 3 ib. 451, 452; Germaine v. Burton, 3 Stark. 32; Okell v. Smith, 1 Stark. 108—9; Lewis v. Cosgrave, 2 Taunt. 2; Templar v. McLachlan, 2 N. R. 136; Bragg v. Cole, 6 Moo. 114; Ch. Contr. 464, 568, 569, 743; 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 14, n.; Poulton v. Lattimore, 9 B. & C. 259; Cousens v. Paddon, 2 C. M. & R. 547; Groundsell v. Lamb, 1 M. & W. 353; Baillie v. Kell, 4 B. N. C. 638; Street v. Blay, 2 B. & Ad. 459; see Dicken v. Neale, 1 M. & W. 556); under the general issue, since the N. R. H. T. 4 Will. IV. (Hill v. Allen, 2 M. & W. 283, p. 226); but this principle does not extend to an independent tort (Francis v. Baker, 10 Ad. & E. 643). And this defence, it seems, will not be allowed in an action on an attorney's bill, or for freight, unless it goes to the extent of denying that any benefit at all had been derived (see Mondell v. Steele, 8 M. & W. 871); and the measure of damages will be to the extent of the difference between the agreed price or alleged value at the time of the delivery as reduced by the breach of contract, but if there be any further damages besides those so allowed in abatement of the price, plt. must bring a cross action (Mondell v. Steele, 8 M. & W. 858; and see Rigge v. Burbidge, 15 M. & W. 598). Thus, where in an action on a contract to build a ship the deft. gave in evidence, in reduction of damages, the breach of contract by the plt.; he was not allowed to give evidence of any claim for damages on account of necessity for subsequent repairs; which must be sued for in another action (Mondell v. Smith, supra).

With respect to the quantum of reduction, "where a party engages to do certain specified work on certain specified terms, and in a certain specified manner, but, in fact, does not perform the work so as to correspond with the specification, he is not of course entitled to recover the price agreed on in the specification, nor can he recover according to the actual value of the work, as if there had been no special contract. What the plt. is entitled to recover is the price agreed on in the specification, subject to a deduction, and the measure of that deduction is the sum it would take to alter the work, so as to make it correspond with the specification" (Thornton v. Place, 1 M. & Rob. 219). The rule is, that if the contract be not faithfully performed, the plt. shall be entitled only to recover the value of the work, and the materials supplied (Chapel v. Hicks, 2 C. & M. 214; see Street v. Blay, supra; see Farnsworth v. Gerrard, 1 Camp. 38, where it is said that the claim shall be co-extensive with the benefit, see ante, "COMMON COUNT," p. 225). Where a servant or agent having been wrongfully dismissed, waits till the expiration of the term for which he was hired, and then sues in indebitatus assumpsit, the master may show in reduction of damages, that he hired himself in the mean time to another master (see Cumming v. Columbine, 6 Dowl. 373; Speck v. Phillips, 5 M. & W. 279): as to how far he is entitled to his intermediate earnings, see Thompson v. Havelock, 1 Camp. 529; Diplock v. Blackburne, 3 Camp. 43; see Patmore v. Colburn, 1 C. M. & R. 65.

Plt.'s count alleged a readiness and willingness to adopt a contract which was to be performed on the 1st July, 1835, but it appeared that no steps were taken by them until January, 1838; held, that the length of time was unreasonable, and the abandonment of the contract might be inferred (Lawrence v. Knowles, 5 B. N. C. 399). In *an action by an attorney [*247] for his fees, negligence by him is no answer to the action, and is only the subject of a cross-demand (2 N. R. 136); unless, indeed, the negligence has been such as to deprive the plt. of all benefit, and the charges sought to be recovered have been incurred by the plt.'s want of proper caution (Montriou v. Jeffries, 2 C. & P. 113; S. C. R. & M. 317; Dax v. Ward, 1 Stark. 409; Mondell v. Steele, supra; post, "ATTORNEY"). In an action by a surgeon, &c., for his bill, if the deft. can prove that he was rather injured than benefited in his health, in consequence of any gross unskilfulness or carelessness on the part of the plt., the latter cannot succeed (Duncan v. Blundell, 3 Stark. 6; ante, "APOTHECARY"). And an agent cannot recover his commission if the principal derive no benefit whatever from the acts of the plt. (Stewart v. Kahle, 3 Stark. 161; ante, "AGENT").

Judgment.] The judgment in favour of the plt. is that he recover a specified sum assessed by a jury, or on reference to the master, for his damages, which he hath sustained by reason of the deft.'s non-performance of his promises and undertakings, and for full costs of suit, to which the plt. is in all cases entitled in this action, though the damages be under forty shillings, unless the judge certify to take away costs under the statute 43 Eliz. c. 6, or unless the plt. ought to have proceeded in an inferior court (see the County Court Act); and although it is a rule that the court will look to the whole record, and give judgment according to the truth there disclosed, however irregular the mode of pleading may be, yet the court cannot pick out of various parts of the record a different cause of action from that for which the plt. proceeds (Le Brett v. Papillon, 4 East, 502; Chumley v. Winstanley, 5 East, 266; Head v. Baldrey, 6 Ad. & E. 469).

Form of Remedy.

AN attorney has various remedies for his costs. 1. He has a lien on all the deeds, papers, &c., of his client which come to his hands professionally (Stevenson v. Blakelock, 1 M. & S. 535; Rex v. Sankey, 6 N. & M. 839); and this right continues though the claim be barred by the Statute of Limitations (Spears v. Hartley, 3 Esp. 81; Higgins v. Scott, 3 Esp. 413 j); and extends not only to the debt, but also to the costs of an action brought for its recovery (Lambert v. Buckmaster, 2 B. & C. 616). 2dly. Having procured his bill to be taxed, (if it be in a court of Common Law,) he may obtain an order for judgment for the amount certified to be due (stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 72, s. 43); or, if the order direct the client to pay the amount found to be due, he may make such order a rule of court, and issue execution thereon (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18; see Neale v. Postlethwaite, 4 P. & D. 623; 1 Q. B. 245; S. C. 5 Jur. 747). 3dly. By action of debt or assumpsit.

For costs in bankruptcy incurred after the choice of assignees, the solicitor has an alternative remedy by petition to the Court of Review (Ex parte Hartop, 1 Rose, 449); but not for costs before the choice of assignees (Anon. Buck, 475; but see 1 G. & J. 35, contra).

Until the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 72, an attorney or solicitor need not have delivered his bill prior to commencing an action, unless such bill contained charges for business done at Law or in Equity (as to what items were taxable, see Lush's Pr. Index, "Costs;" 1 Archb. Pr. Index, "Costs");

[*249] nor need an executor or assignee of an *attorney have previously delivered a bill (Ib.); but, by that stat. (sec. 37), it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of the act (22 Aug. 1843), no attorney or solicitor, nor any executor, administrator, or assignee of any attorney or solicitor, shall commence or maintain any action or suit, for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements, for any business done by such attorney or solicitor, until the expiration of one month (calendar, sec. 48) after such attorney or solicitor, or executor, administrator, or assignee of such attorney or solicitor, shall have delivered unto the party to be charged therewith, or sent by the post to, or left for him, at his counting-house, office of business, dwelling-house, or last known place of abode, a bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements; and which bill shall either be subscribed with the proper hand of such attorney or solicitor (or in the case of a partnership, by any of the partners, either with his own name or with the name and style of such partnership), or of the executor, administrator, or assignee of such attorney or solicitor, or be enclosed in, or accompanied by, a letter subscribed in like manner, referring to such bill," &c.

"Provided, that it shall be lawful for any judge of the superior courts of law or equity to authorize an attorney or solicitor to commence an action or suit for the recovery of his fees, charges, or disbursements against the party chargeable therewith, although one month shall not have expired from the delivery of a bill as aforesaid, on proof to the satisfaction of the said judge that there is probable cause for believing that such party is about to quit England" (Ib.).

An attorney's demand may, as before this statute, be the subject of set off, although it has not been delivered at all (Martin v. Winder, Doug. 189, n.; see Lester v. Lazarus, 2 C. M. & R. 665).

Form of Pleadings.

The declaration, &c., is now in the same form as in actions by other persons. Sect. 35 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, does not prevent a country attorney, admitted and enrolled in the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, but not in the Court of Exchequer, from recovering his fees for business done in the Court of Exchequer in the name of his London agents, who were duly admitted and entitled to practise as attorneys in that court (Hulls v. Lea, 2 New Prac. Cas. 362; 11 Jur. 891). An attorney may still sue in the superior courts of law at Westminster for business done by him as an attorney, and will be entitled to his full costs of suit, though the amount recovered be less than 20*l*. (Nixon v. Johnson, 10 Law T. 232, Q. B.). It is usual to describe shortly the nature of the business done, as in the following precedent; but the common count for work and labour, or work, labour, and materials, will probably, in most cases, suffice (Skin. 217; Ambrose v. Rowe, 2 Show. 421; Fisher v. Snow, 3 Dowl. 27). It is usual to state the plt.'s capacity of attorney, and that he did the work in that character (Sid. 9 Ed. 325; Ch. Contr. Index). An attorney may, if he sues in person and in his own court, always lay and retain the venue in Middlesex (Yardley v. Roe, 3 T. R. 573; Pye v. Leigh, 2 W. Bl. 1065; Mounsey v. Watson, 7 B. & C. 683); but, if he sues by attorney (Harrington v. Page, 2 Dowl. 164; Lawless v. Timms, 3 Dowl. 707), or jointly with an unprivileged person, or as executor, assignee, &c. (Newton v. Rowland, Raym. 533; Robarts v. Mason, 1 Taunt. 254; Newton v. Harland, 4 Bing. N. C. 406), the deft. may change the venue as in other cases.

Since the 2 & 3 Will. IV., c. 39, the Uniformity of Process Act, an attorney does not waive his privilege of laying the venue in Middlesex by omitting to describe himself as an attorney in the declaration Williams v. Powell*, 10 Jur. 966, Q. B.); nor by suing in person, without [*250] naming himself as attorney on the record (Cutts v. Surridge, 4 D. & L. 373, Q. B.; 16 Law J. 2, Q. B.). And, if the venue be laid in any other county, though by inadvertence, the court will not allow the attorney to change it to Middlesex (Lewis v. Shelley, 7 Taunt. 146; S. C. 2 Marsh. 426); but the deft. may change it on the common affidavit (2 Vent. 47; Seamen v. Ling, 2 Salk. 688; Bradshaw v. Burton, 7 Dowl. 329). Where the business was done on deft.'s credit for a third person (see Hayward v. Fiott, 8 C. & P. 59; Grissell v. Robinson, 3 B. N. C. 10); see Scarce v. Whittington, 2 B. & C. 11), the question of credit is one for the jury, and it is not a question of usage (Hayward v. Fiott, supra). If a third party were responsible in the first instance, he is only liable on a special count upon a written guarantee under the statute of Frauds (Noel v. Hart, 8 C. & P. 200).

Precedents.

Indebitatus count for an attorney's fees.

(The commencement of this count in Assumpsit is as ante; in Debt, as post, "DEBT") for the work and labour, care, diligence, journeys, and attendances of the plt., by him before then done, performed, and bestowed, as the attorney and solicitor of and for the deft., and upon his retainer in and about the prosecuting, defending, and soliciting of divers causes, suits, and business of and for the deft., and for certain fees due and of right payable to the plt., in respect thereof; and also for other the work and labour, care, diligence, journeys, and attendances of the plt., by him, before then done, performed, and bestowed in and about the drawing, copying, and engrossing of divers conveyances, deeds, documents, and writings, for the deft., and in and about other the business of the deft., for him, and at his request. (Conclusion in assumpsit as ante, p. 225; in debt, post, "DEBT." The above form should be altered, if there were no suit, &c. prosecuted, or no deeds, &c., prepared, according to the facts).

Indebitatus count by an agent against an attorney.

(The commencement in Assumpsit is as ante, p. 225; in Debt, as post, "DEBT.") for the work and labour, care and diligence, journeys and attendances, of the plt., by him, the plt., before that time done, performed, and bestowed, for the deft., as the agent of the deft., and upon his retainer, and at his request, in and about the prosecuting and defending of divers suits, causes, and business, for the deft., and for fees due and of right payable to the plt., in respect thereof.

Pleas.

General Issue.] The plea of non assumpsit, or nil debet, is proper where it is intended to put the plt. on proof of his retainer, and that the business charged for was in fact done for the deft.; also, to raise the defence that the business was done so negligently and unskillfully as to be useless (Hill v. Allen, 2 M. & W. 283; 5 Dowl. 471; 1 Jur. 44; see, as to the nature of this defence, Shaw v. Arden, 9 Bing. 287; Hill v. Featherstonehaugh, 7 Bing. 569; Temple v. McLacklan, 2 N. R. 136; Cliffe v. Prosser, 2 Dowl. 21), or, that it was done under an indemnity against costs (Hill v. Allen, supra), or gratuitously (Ashford v. Price, 3 Stark. 185); and, where deft. paid into court a sum sufficient to cover the expenses out of pocket, it was held, that he might, on the issue of damages ultra, show that the work was agreed to be done on those terms (Jones v. Reade, 5 Dowl. 216; 5 Ad. & E. 529; S. C. 1 N. & P. 18).

The objection that no special bill, or no such bill as the statute requires, was delivered a month before action, must be specially pleaded, and cannot be taken advantage of on the general issue* (Taylor v. Hodgson, [*251] 14 Law J. 310, Q. B.; Lane v. Glenny, 7 Ad. & E. 83; Robinson v. Rowland, 6 Dowl. 271). It is an issuable plea (Wilkinson v. Page, 1 D. & L. 913; see ante, p. 248, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37). But if the deft. have given a bill or note for the charges, the above plea would afford no defence to an action on the bill (Jeffreys v. Evans, 14 M. & W. 210). The deft. pleaded that the plt. did not deliver "one month" before bringing the action, a signed bill of his fees, "pursuant to the statute in such case made," "contrary to the form of the statute." The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, requires a bill to be delivered "one month" before bringing an action, and by the interpretation clause "month" is declared to mean "calendar month." Held, on special demurrer, that the word "month" in the plea was to be taken to mean "lunar month;" that the words "pursuant to the statute," &c., would not enable the court to construe it as a "calendar month;" and that as the act required a delivery a "calendar month" before the action, the plea was bad as tendering an inconclusive and immaterial issue. Quere, if the plea was not also bad as being an argumentative averment, that the plt. did not deliver, one "calendar month" before bringing the action, a signed bill, &c. (Parker v. Gill, 3 D. & L. 21, Q. B.) So, the defence that no bill was delivered, or not a proper bill; or, that the month had not elapsed, must be pleaded (Lane v. Glenny, 2 Nev. & P. 258; 7 Ad. & E. 83; 1 Jur. 475; Robinson v. Rowland, 6 Dowl. 271; S. C. 2 Jur. 136; see Shearman v. Hay, 5 Ad. & E. 388). Under statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, a plea which asserts the non-delivery of an attorney's bill, &c., but does not also assert that it was not sent by post, is insufficient on special demurrer (Flower v. Newton, 11 Jur. 875, Q. B.; 9 Law T. 312); or, that the plt. was uncertificated. A plea that an attorney had not obtained or entered his certificate is bad on demurrer, as involving two distinct allegations (Eyre v. Shelley, 6 M. & W. 274; see also Williams v. Jones, 1 G. & D. 649; and see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 35); so that he was not an attorney of the court must be pleaded (Hill v. Sydney, 7 Ad. & E. 956; 3 Nev. & P. 161; S. C. 2 Jur. 416; Arden v. Tucker, 4 B. & Ad. 815); or, that the business was done in furtherance of an illegal transaction (Potts v. Sparrow, 3 Dowl. 630; Tabram v. Warren, 1 Tyrw. & G. 153), &c. must be specially pleaded. Maintenance must be specially pleaded (Fidson v. Parker, 11 M. & W. 675; see "ILLEGALITY"). See a plea to an action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill that it was given to drawer, an attorney, for work; that he was not admitted, and that it was indorsed to plt. after it was due, Middleton v. Chambers, 1 M. & G. 97.

Where the costs, for recovery of which the action was brought, were incurred for bringing an action, and preparing an assignment at deft.'s request, evidence was offered to show that the deed, which was an assignment of goods from S. to the deft., was fraudulently antedated, in order to gain a priority over a bona fide execution against S.'s goods; and that the action was one of trespass, brought, in consequence of this deed, against the sheriff, for seizing under the execution against S. Pearson objected that this evidence was not admissible under non assumpsit; but Tindal, C. J., admitted it, as it went to show that plt.'s services were entirely useless, and he left it to the jury to say whether the plt. was aware of the facts when he prepared the deed (Roberts v. Barber, Ch. Pl. by Pearson, 226).

Evidence for Plaintiff.

The plt. must, upon non assumpsit or nil debet, prove his retainer by deft., and that he has performed the work and business charged *for. He should also be prepared with evidence of the reasonableness of [*252] the charges, or prove that the bill was delivered a month before action, and, in this case, as the deft. might have had it taxed, he will not be allowed to question the fairness of the charges at the trial (Williams v. Frith, 1 Doug. 189; Hooper v. Till, 1 Doug. 198; Anderson v. May, 2 B. & P. 237); where two bills had been delivered, the latter of which contained additional items, as well as increased charges, it was held that the delivery of the first bill was conclusive evidence against an increase of charge on any item contained in it, and strong presumptive evidence against any additional items (Loveridge v. Botham, 1 B. & P. 49).

Proof of Plaintiff's Retainer by Defendant.] The plt. should prove that deft. retained him as an attorney, to do the business in question. This may be done by the production of deft.'s written instructions, by letter or otherwise, and proving the handwriting, &c.; or, by calling plt.'s clerk, or other person who heard deft. give instructions, or admit the retainer. But in an action against a corporation the plt. must show a retainer under seal (Arnold v. Poole (Mayor), 4 Man. & G. 860). It will be sufficient evidence of a retainer, that, after an award made, deft. directed plt. to do the needful, though plt. was not employed in the first instance (Dawson v. Lawly, 4 Esp. 65). Proof of a retainer to commence a suit which is afterwards abated by a plea of nonjoinder, is sufficient evidence of a retainer to commence another action against the parties named in the plea of abatement (Crook v. Wright, R. & M. 278). The retainer may sometimes be inferred from the deft.'s acquiescence in the plt.'s services; or, from his voluntarily availing himself of such services. If the father of the deft. employed the plt. to defend a suit for deft., to prove that fact, and that deft. knew of the retainer, and does not disapprove of it, is sufficient (Cameron v. Baker, 1 C. & P. 268). Proof of a judge's order, referring the bill to be taxed, and of the deft.'s undertaking to pay what shall appear to be due, and the master's allocatur, is sufficient evidence of the retainer and of the business having been done (Lee v. Jones, 2 Camp. 496). So, proof of deft.'s attending the taxation of the plt.'s bill, and not objecting to the items, is sufficient (Warren v. Cunningham, Gow, 71). Where one attorney does business for another, the attorney who does the business universally gives credit to the person who employs him, and not to the client for whose benefit it is done: if, therefore, the attorney in such case intends not to be personally responsible, it becomes his duty to give express notice that the business is to be done on the credit of the client, and it furnishes no defence that the business was known by the plt. to be done for the benefit of the client (Scrace v. Whittington, 2 B. & C. 11; 3 D. & R. 195). In an action against two defts., it seems that, if the business was not done for the joint benefit, the mere proof of a joint parol employment, and a joint promise to pay, will not suffice, as the case would fall within the Statute of Frauds, requiring such retainer to be in writing (Hellings v. Gregory, 1 C. & P. 627). Plt. should, therefore, in such action, be prepared to prove that there was a joint benefit: and see further, as to proof in actions on guarantees, post, "GUARANTEE." But, if A. and B., being arrested on a bill of which one is drawer, and the other acceptor, go to an attorney, and request him to defend them, and he does so on their joint application, there is sufficient consideration to support a joint promise to pay; consequently, to sustain a joint action against them (Hellings v. Gregory, 1 C. & P. 627).

In an action by A. and B., who were attorneys, against surveyors of highways of a parish for business done in procuring an order of *ma-[*253] gistrates to divert highways in the parish, and on an appeal against that order, it appeared that A. and B. in their bill charged for drawing a resolution of a parish meeting held before the order was applied for, which resolution stated that the order was to be applied for "at the instance and at the expense of the B. and C. Railway Company:" held, that A. and B. must be considered to have undertaken the business on these terms, unless there was an express employment of them by the defts., and on their credit, of which there ought to be direct proof (Spurrier v. Allen, 2 C. & K. 210). One partner has no implied authority to retain an attorney to appear and defend an action for himself and co-partners (Hambridge v. De La Crouce, 10 Jur. 1096).

No proof of plt.'s actually being an attorney, or of his having taken out the annual certificate, is required (Berryman v. Wise, 4 T. R. 367). Proof of his being retained as such suffices (Pearce v. Whale, 5 B. & C. 38; 7 D. & R. 512). The disproof lies on deft. (Ib. post). See further, as to proof of the deft.'s retainer, post, "WORK AND LABOUR;" ante, "ASSUMPSIT," "ADMISSION."

For costs, &c., in bankruptcy, before the choice of assignees, the petitioning creditor is liable (Hartop v. Jukes, 2 M. & S. 438; Ex parte Hartop, 1 Rose, 449; Hart v. Biggs, Holt, C. 245; Hart v. White, ib. 376; Bowles v. Per-ring, 5 Moo. 290; 2 B. & C. 457); the assignees are not (Ib. 4 D. & R. 621; 1 G. & J. 35); and, where the petitioning creditor was afterwards made assignee, and the action was brought against him and the other assignee jointly, it was holden the plt. could not recover (Finchett v. Howe, 2 Camp. 278; Tarn v. Heys, 1 Stark. 278). So, where the solicitor who sued out the commission was retained by the assignees, and (having made out and delivered his bill to them, as well for the business done before the choice of assignees as for that done after) was paid by them a sum of money on account generally, it was holden that he was bound (as the assignees themselves would have been) to appropriate the sum so received to the payment of that portion of the bill for which the petitioning creditor was liable; and that, therefore, in an action by the petitioning creditor against him for the amount of a private debt, he could not, under those circumstances, set off the amount of the petitioning creditor's costs of the commission, for they were already satisfied (Phillips v. Dicus, 15 East, 248). In another case, indeed, it was holden at nisi prius, that where assignees retain the same solicitor that sued out the commission, they make themselves liable to him for the costs, as well before as after the choice of assignees, as upon an original retainer (Tarn v. Heys, Holt, 378; S. C. 1 Stark. 278; Arch. B. L. 219). He may recover his bill for issuing a fiat in bankruptcy against a person who employed him so to do, but was not petitioning creditor, although no assets are received (Pocock v. Russen, M. & M. 357).

Justices in quarter sessions having confirmed an order of removal, made from the parish of C. to parish of L., upon a preliminary objection a rule nisi was obtained to enter continuances, and hear appeal, a copy whereof was served upon two of the defts., B. D. and R. T., who at the time, and at the commencement of the suit, were the churchwardens of C. R. T. afterwards signed a retainer to plt. to act for parish of C., but subsequently countermanded it; R. D. did not interfere. Before argument of the rule J. D. and W. E., the other defts. were elected overseers, and R. D. and R. T. churchwardens. Before argument, plt.'s clerk saw J. D. repeatedly about the rule; he also saw the other deft., W. E., who was not so active about the rule. The bill of costs was delivered to one of the defts., and they all expressed a readiness to pay, but said there was a grudge in the parish: held, that the defts. were not liable (Marsh v. Davies, 1 Exch. 668).

In a declaration against a public officer of an insurance and loan company, the second count stated, that it was agreed between the company and the plt. that, from the 1st of January then next, the plt., as the attorney of the said company, should receive a salary of 100*l.* per annum, in lieu of rendering an annual bill of costs for general business, &c.; and, in consideration that the plt. had promised to fulfil the agreement on his part, the company promised to fulfil the same on their part, and to retain and employ the plt. as such attorney. Breach, that the company refused to employ the plt. as such attorney, and wrongfully dismissed him, and thence refused to employ him, or to pay him the salary: held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, reversing the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, that such count was good upon motion in arrest of judgment; and that the agreement therein set forth was one which created the relation of attorney and client, and amounted to a promise, on the part of the defts., to continue that relation at least for one year (Elderton v. Emmings, 4 C. B. 498, n. (17); Law J. 307, C. P.; 6 C. B. 150).

Proof of the Work and Business being done.] After proof of the retainer, the performance of the work and business must be proved. This may be done by the plt.'s clerk, or other person who has acted and can speak of the causes and business in respect of which the charges are made, and who can prove the main items (Esp. Dig. 10). It is not the practice to require proof of every item. It seems, however, the plt. should adduce the best possible proof of the main items; and, therefore, in an action to recover the expenses of procuring the execution of a bail-bond, and other charges connected with it, the court held the plt. could not recover any part of his claim, without producing the bond itself in evidence (Swinford v. Green, 3 Stark. 135). In some cases, the necessity of actual proof *of the business being done may be dispensed with, as by proving the deft.'s admis- [*254] sion of it: thus, proof of a judge's order referring the bill to be taxed, and the deft.'s undertaking to pay what shall appear to be due, and of the master's allocatur, will be sufficient evidence of the business having been done (Lee v. Jones, 2 Camp. 496; see further, post, "WORK AND LABOUR;" ante, "ADMISSIONS."

Proof of Delivery of Bill, when necessary.] If the action was commenced before the passing of the late act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements at law or in equity, the plt. must prove the delivery of a bill thereof to deft., or that it was left for him at his dwelling-house, or last place of abode one month before the action was commenced; the bill being written in a common legible hand, and in the English tongue (except the law terms and names of writs), and in the words at length (except times and sums), the bill being also inscribed with the proper hand of the plt. (2 Geo. II. c. 23, s. 23; 30 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 75, &c.).

With respect to what items rendered a bill necessary to be delivered under the above acts, they were all such as were incurred in respect of business done in any court of law or equity (see Harpur v. Williams, infra).

In an action by the solicitors of a proposed railway company against A., a member of the provisional committee, for work done by them for the company before, whilst, and after A. was a member, a delivery of a signed bill, addressed to the committee to B., an earlier member of the committee, at his place of business, and containing some items incurred before A. became a member, is not a sufficient delivery to charge A. (Edwards v. Lawless, 6 C. B. 329; 5 Railw. C. 357; 6 D. & L. 105).

An action was brought by an attorney against a provisional committee for the amount of his bill of costs. The offices of the company were in Moorgate Street, and upon the office door was a plate with their name on it. On the 5th of January, 1846, none of the deposits having been paid, the company died a natural death, and it did not appear that the deft. was ever at the office after that date. On the 28th of September following the plt. delivered his bill, directed to the company, at the offices. The plate was then on the door; and the bill was given to a person who appeared to be a clerk: held, by Wilde, C. J., and Williams, J., that this was not a delivery of the plt.'s bill at the deft.'s office of business, and by Coltman, J., and Maule, J. contra, that it was (Blandy v. De Burgh, 5 Railw. C. 361; 18 Law J., C. P. 2; 12 Jur. 1005).

Whether in an action for business done by an attorney, there has been a sufficient bill and delivery thereof unto the party to be charged therewith, depends upon the circumstances of each case (Gridley v. Austen, 13 Jur. 680; 18 Law J., Q. B. 337).

The plt., an attorney, proved the delivery of his bill to the deft., accompanied by the following letter to him:—"As Mr. J. H. has left your house, I beg to hand you my account, which I hope will be found satisfactory." Mr. J. H. was a relation of the deft., and the business done had reference to procuring a separation between her and her husband: held, not a sufficient delivery to the party to be charge (Ib.). But, where the deft. was one of the managing committee of a railway company, and the plt. an attorney, having applied to the managing committee for payment of his bill was by them referred to the solicitor of the company, to whom, after some correspondence, he sent his bill, headed, "Northampton, Lincoln, and Hull Railway to R. D. (the plt.), debtor:" held, a sufficient delivery of the bill within the statute (Daubney v. Phipps, ib.).

In an action on an attorney's bill where the issue was, that no signed bill had been delivered to the deft., a delivery of the bill at the dwelling-house of the deft. to his servant, is evidence of a delivery to the deft. (McGregor v. Kelly, 18 Law J., Exch. 391).

What Bill taxable.] A charge merely for suing out a writ of dedimus potestatem (Ex parte Prickett, 1 N. R. 266), or "for taking instructions, drawing affidavit, swearing the same, and money for oath" (Winter v. Payne, 6 T. R. 646); or, for business done in the Insolvent Court, in procuring the discharge of an insolvent (Smith v. Whattleworth, 4 B. & C. 364); or obtaining a bankrupt's certificate (Collins v. Nicholson, 2 Taunt. 231; Ford v. Webb, 3 B. & B. 241); or for business done at quarter sessions (Ex parte Williams, 4 T. R. 496; Clarke v. Donovan, 5 ib. 694; Silvester v. Webster, 1 Dowl. P. C. 708); or in a criminal suit at the Court of Great Sessions in Wales (Lloyd v. Manna, Tidd, P. 330; but see 2 Mer. 500); or in the Court of Review (Ware v. Adams, 1 W. W. & H. 77); or in the County Court (Wardle v. Nicholson, 1 N. & M. 355; 4 B. & Ad. 469); or in holding a court leet as steward of a manor (Lethbridge v. Luxmore, 1 D. & R. 511; 5 B. & A. 398); or, for business done under an extent (R. v. Collingridge, 3 Price, 280; R. v. Bartridge, 1 Tidd, P. 330); or for attending and advising on an action that had been brought against the client (Smith v. Taylor, 1 Dowl. P. C. 212; 7 Bing. 259); or for "attending and examining deft.'s proposed bail," and "attending the plt. in several actions commenced against deft., and arranging with him to take cognovits therein" (Watt v. Collins, R. & M. 284; S. C. 2 C. & P. 45); or for attending a lock-up-house, and obtaining deft.'s release, and filling up the bail-bond (Fearne v. Wilson, 6 B. & C. 86; 9 D. & R. 157); or for drawing a warrant of attorney, and attending deft. respecting it, although deft. never executed it (Wilson v. Gutteridge, 3 B. & C. 157; S. C. 4 D. & R. 738; Weld v. Crawford, 2 Stark. 538; 4 Camp. 68; Painter v. Tonsell, 8 Sco. 453; sed vide Burton v. Chatterton, 3 B. & A. 488); rendered a bill necessary to be delivered within the statute; and it made no difference, though the plt. proceeded only for the costs out of pocket (Miller v. Towers, Pea. 102).

What Bill not taxable.] On the other hand, the plt. needed not to prove a delivery of his bill to recover a charge not taxable, or where the court had not power to tax; as where a charge was wholly for conveyancing (Tidd, P. 329; Hooper v. Till, Doug. 199, n.; B. N. P. 145); or for preparing an affidavit of petitioning creditor's debt and bond, &c., the affidavit not having been sworn, and no commission ever having *issued (Bur- [*255] ton v. Chatterton, 3 B. & A. 488; Wilson v. Gutteridge, 3 B. & C. 158); or for searching at judgment office to ascertain whether satisfaction of a judgment had been entered on the roll, whether issue had been entered, and whether it had been docketed, in an action between A. and B. (Fenton v. Correa, R. & M. 262; S. C. 2 C. & P. 45); or for parliamentary business (Tidd, P. 329; 3 Ves. & B. 21; 4 Price, 279); aliter, as to judicial business before the House of Lords (4 Price, 279); or for negotiating an annuity (Weld v. Crawford, ib.; 2 Stark. 532); or for paying debt and costs pursuant to undertaking (Prothero v. Thomas, 1 Marsh. 539; S. C. 6 Taunt. 196); or for proceedings before the Lord Chancellor, as a visiter upon a royal foundation (Ex parte Dann, 9 Ves. J. 547); or for business in the Middlesex Court of Requests (Becke v. Wells, 1 C. & M. 75; 3 Tyr. 193); or under a commission of bankruptcy (Hamilton v. Jones, 4 Moo. & P. & P. 868; 7 Bing. 232; 1 Dowl. P. C. 209; Crowder v. Davies, 3 Y. & J. 433); or, for attending upon and concerting measures with the attorney of an opposing creditor to resist the discharge of an insolvent (Crowder v. Davies, 3 Y. & J. 433); or for serving subpœnas (Presidder v. Smith, 2 Jur. 205; 1 W. W. & H. 51); or for procuring an appearance to be entered by a proctor in the Consistory Court (In re Morris, 2 Ad. & E. 582); or for attendances to advise on matters subsequent to the conclusion of an action,

i. e., as to an execution upon a judgment (Pepper v. Yeatman, 5 Dowl. P. C. 155); or for preparing the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment under the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74; (In re Branson, 5 Dowl. P. C. 623; 4 Sco. 539; 3 B. N. C. 783); or for inquiries respecting the transfer of stock, and preparing a notice to the solicitor of the bank to file a bill in consequence of a distringas being entered to prevent a transfer (Nicholas v. Hayter, 2 Ad. & E. 348); or for working a country commission of bankruptcy (Harpur v. Williams, 9 Dowl. P. C. 618; 2 M. & G. 815; 3 Sco. N. R. 97; or for disbursements in a cause in respect of which he does not mean to make any charge to his client (Sparrow v. Johns, 3 M. & W. 600; 6 Dowl. P. C. 554).

The 12 Geo. II. c. 13, s. 6, having enacted that the 2 Geo. II. c. 23, should "not extend to any bill of fees, charges, and disbursements due from any attorney, or solicitor, or clerk in court;" but that they may use such remedies between themselves as before, an attorney was not bound to deliver a signed bill a month before he sued another attorney (Ford v. Maxwell, 2 H. Bl. 580); provided the deft. was an attorney at the time of the commencement of the action, though not so at the time of the work being done (Windsor v. Herbert, 7 M. & W. 375; 9 Dowl. P. C. 237). For the same reason a town agent was not bound to deliver a signed bill a month before he sued thereon (Hill v. Sydney, 7 Ad. & E. 956; Dixon v. Plant, Dougl. 199, n.; Bridges v. Francis, Pea. 1; Nelson v. Garfuth, 1 Esp. 221; Sandys v. Hornby, 4 C. & P. 520); nor was it taxable (Weymouth v. Knipe, 3 Biag. N. C. 387; Carden v. Bull, 4 Q. B. 611; 7 Jur. 847). But, though where the deft. was an attorney, the plt. was exempted from the operation of the 2 Geo. II. c. 23; yet he was bound to deliver a signed bill some time before the commencement of the action, pursuant to 3 Jac. I. c. 7 (Milner v. Crowdall, 1 Show. 338; Hemming v. Wilton, 4 C. & P. 318; cor. Tenterden, C. J.). In the cases In re Geddy, 2 D. & L. 915, and In re Simons, 3 D. & L. 156, it has been held that agency business is still virtually excepted out of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. But where one attorney employed another to defend an indictment, the bill delivered by the latter to the former was held taxable (Billing v. Coppock, 1 Ex. 14); so that it would seem the bill ought to be delivered. The 2 Geo. c. 23, was confined to the business done in the King's courts of record at *Westminster (Regnal v. Smith, 2 B. & Ad. 469; 1 Dowl. P. C. [*256] 334), and the 2 Geo. II. c. 23, to the attorney himself; and therefore his personal representatives were not bound to deliver a signed bill for business done by him (1 Barnard. 423; And. 276; Barrett v. Moss, 1 C. & P. 4; Lester v. Lazarus, 2 C. M. & R. 667; Williams v. Griffith, 10 M. & W. 125). But now assignees and personal representatives are bound to deliver bills (see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, ante, p. 248).

Damages.] The plt. undertook a prosecution for perjury on deft.'s behalf and agreed not to charge him full costs except money out of pocket. He disbursed 105*l.* towards carrying on the proceedings, but by negligence preferred a defective indictment, and the prosecution failed: held, that he could not recover against deft. for disbursements (Lewis v. Samuel, 8 Q. B. 685). Deft. in the course of the proceedings advanced plt. 100*l.* for carrying them on, and he applied it accordingly: held, that deft. could not set off the 100*l.* as money received by plt. to his use (Ib.). Where by consent of parties a verdict is taken for a sum named for damages, and also all costs to which plt. had been put relating to the subject-matter of the cause as between attorney and client without being subject to taxation, that agreement is to pay such a sum for costs as would be considered fair and reasonable on taxation in a liberal way, and not by the ordinary rule (Young v. Walker, 16 M. & W. 446).

Where Items in Bill do not require delivery.] There appeared to be, till lately, some uncertainty as to whether the plt. may recover for items which did not require a delivery of a bill, where there were also other items which did require it; but the distinction appears to be that he might recover such items, where they had no reference to the business of an attorney, and he had delivered no bill at all before action, but that he could not where they had such reference, and he had delivered a bill before action (see Mowbray v. Fleming, 11 East, 285; Winter v. Payne, 6 T. R. 645; Hill v. Humphreys, 2 B. & P. 343; 1 Camp. 439, n.). Therefore, where plt. had delivered no bill at all before the action brought, but afterwards delivered a bill of particulars, he was held entitled to recover for money paid to his client's use, having no reference to his business of an attorney, although other items in the particulars were taxable (Mowbray v. Fleming, 11 East, 285). So, where he could not recover for professional business on account of not having delivered a bill pursuant to 3 Jac. I. c. 7, he was allowed to recover for money lent (Hemming v. Wilton, 4 C. & P. 318); but if he lent it for the purpose of paying costs he could not recover (Smith v. Taylor, 7 Bing. 259). And a disbursement by an attorney, in consequence of his undertaking to pay the debt and costs, is not a disbursement in reference to his business of an attorney (Prothero v. Thomas, 6 Taunt. 196; S. C. 1 Marsh. 539); nor is money lent (Hemming v. Wilton, 4 C. & P. 318). On the other hand where a single item in the bill delivered required such delivery, the bill should, be proved to have been regularly delivered before plt. could recover any item in it, having reference to the business of an attorney (Wilson v. Gutteridge, 3 B. & C. 157; S. C. 4 D. & R. 738; Winter v. Payne, 6 T. R. 545; Hill v. Humphreys, 2 B. & P. 343; 3 Esp. 254; Margerum v. Sandysford, 3 Bro. C. C. 233). And, where no bill was delivered before action, but after action brought, particulars of demand containing some taxable items were delivered, it was held that the plt. could not recover for an item not taxable, if such item were in respect of business done, or money paid to the client's use in his character of attorney (Wardle v. Nicholson, 4 B. & Ad. 469). But it seems now settled that where a bill is delivered according to the statute, containing various taxable items, some items of which are sufficiently described according to the statute, the plt. may still recover the residue of his bill (Drew v. Clifford, R. & M. 280; 2 C. & P. 69; Waller v. Lacy, 1 Sco. N. R. 186; 1 M. & G. 54). Where an attorney did business of a taxable nature, and other business clearly not so, he ought to make out only one bill for both (Doe d. Palmer v. Roe, 4 Dowl. P. C. 95); and he cannot bring an action for the non-taxable business alone, but must deliver his whole bill under the statute (Thwaites v. Mackerson, 3 C. & P. 341; R. & M. 199, per Tenterden, C. J.; S. P. Benton v. Garcia, 3 Esp. 149); and if he receive payments on account generally, without specific appropriation, he cannot apply them to the taxable items only, so as to deprive the debt. of the benefit of taxation quoad the residue of the bill (James v. Child, 2 C. & J. 678; 2 Tyr. 732).

*But, as we have seen, ante, p. 248, by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, the power of taxing bills now extends to bills for any business [*257] done by an attorney or solicitor, therefore in all such cases a bill must be delivered, sent, or left in manner required by that section. But it would seem, by analogy to the old act, the plt. is not put upon proof of the delivery of a bill without a special plea (see Lane v. Glenny, 7 Ad. & E. 83).

An agreement by a client with his attorney to pay him at a certain specified rate for business to be done is not binding, or, at least, is not conclusive upon the client (Drax v. Scroope, 2 B. & Ad. 581).

An attorney's bill cannot be recovered on an account stated, though the amount has been admitted without proof of the delivery of the bill (Eicke v. Nokes, 1 Moo. & R. 359; Brooks v. Bockett, 16 Law J., N. S., Q. B. 178). He may, however, recover on a promissory note given for the amount (Jeffreys v. Evans, 14 M. & W. 210).

Proof of Delivery of Bill a Month before Action.] The deft. pleaded plea to this effect. The stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, interpretation clause, requires a delivery a calendar month: held, on special demurrer, that the word month in the plea meant lunar month, and that the words pursuant to the statute would not enable the court to construe it a calendar month, and that the plea was bad (Parker v. Gill, 5 D. & L. 121).

Set-off.] A bill, in order to be set-off, need not be delivered a month before trial, but merely in time for the plt. to tax it before trial (Martin v. Winder, Doug. 198, n.; Bulmer v. Birkett, 1 Esp. 149); in Murphy v. Cunningham, 1 Anst. 198, a regular delivery was held necessary, though Martin v. Winder was cited. The deft., under a plea of set-off, put in an account rendered to him by plt., by which he charged himself with items due to deft. On the other side of the account were items due to plt. for costs as an attorney, but for which no signed bill was proved to have been delivered, and which left a balance due to plt.: held, that the plt. was entitled to avail himself of the amount of the bill of costs, as the non-delivery of a signed bill did not extinguish the debt, but only prevented an action being brought to recover it (Harrison v. Turner, 16 Law J. 295, Q. B.; 11 Jur. 817).

By the late act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, it is enacted, "That from and after the passing of this act, no attorney or solicitor, nor any executor, administrator, or assignee of any attorney, or solicitor, shall commence or maintain any action, or suit, for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements, for any business done by such attorney or solicitor, until the expiration of one month after such attorney or solicitor, or executor, or administrator, or assignee of such attorney or solicitor, shall have delivered unto the party to be charged therewith, or sent by the post, or left for him at his counting-house, office of business, dwelling-house, or last known place of abode, a bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements, and which bill shall either be subscribed with the proper hand of such attorney or solicitor," &c., &c. (See infra).

Few questions can arise, under this act, as to what items require the delivery of a bill, as the act includes all "fees, charges, and disbursements for any business done by such attorney or solicitor."

By this clause, also, the personal representatives of an attorney or solicitor are bound to deliver a bill.

This act repeals (schedule 1), among other acts, the 3 Jac. I. c. 7; 2 Geo. II. c. 23; and 12 Geo. II. c. 13; and, therefore, a bill must be delivered in the usual way, though the deft. is an attorney or solicitor (see p. 255).

But an agency bill is not taxable now, any more than it was before the late statute (per Coleridge, J., in Simons v. Peacock, 9 Jur. 711; 14 Law J., N. S., Q. B. 296; and In re Gedge, 2 D. & L. 915; 9 Jur. 470; see ante, p. 255).

[*258] Mode of proving Delivery of Bill.] The delivery is usually *proved by the person who delivered the bill, or by deft.'s admission of the receipt of it (ante, "ADMISSIONS"). Where a bill was produced, with an indorsement upon it, in the handwriting of a deceased clerk of the plt., whose duty it was to have delivered the bill, purporting that he had delivered a copy on a particular day, and the indorsement was proved to have existed at that date, it was held that the entry was prima facie evidence of the delivery of the bill (Champneys v. Peck, 1 Stark. 404; ante). Proof that the bill was enclosed in a letter, and put into a box in the office from which the postman invariably took letters every day, is sufficient evidence of sending (Skilbeck v. Garbett, 7 Q. B. 846; see "HEARSAY EVIDENCE," "SECONDARY EVIDENCE"). The delivery may be proved by a copy or duplicate original, without any notice to produce the bill delivered (Anderson v. May, 2 B. & P. 237); for the bill delivered is in the nature of a notice of demand and action (Colling v. Treweek, 6 B. & C. 399; Vincent v. Slaymaker, 12 East, 377); and a copy of the bill, though not signed by the plt., the original of which only was signed, and delivered to the deft., is admissible in evidence, without proof of notice to produce the original (Colling v. Treweek, 6 B. & C. 399); but, in a case where no copy of the bill was either proved to have been made, or produced in evidence, and the plt. attempted to prove the delivery by reading the items of charge from plt.'s books, from which the bill was stated to have been copied, such mode of proof was held inadmissible (Philipson v. Chace, 2 Camp. 110). In the late act of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, there is a proviso in these words: "Provided also, that it shall not in any case be necessary, in the first instance, for such attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator, or assignee of such attorney or solicitor, in proving a compliance with this act, to prove the contents of the bill he may have delivered, sent, or left, but it shall be sufficient to prove that a bill of fees, charges, or disbursements, subscribed in the manner aforesaid, or enclosed in, or accompanied by, such letter as aforesaid, was delivered, sent, or left in manner aforesaid; but, nevertheless, it shall be competent for the other party to show that the bill so delivered, sent, or left, was not such a bill as constituted a bona fide compliance with this act."

Contents of Bill.] The bill may be proved by a copy or duplicate original, without any notice to produce the bill delivered (Anderson v. May, 2 B. & P. 237; Colling v. Treweek, 6 B. & C. 394). Under the 2 Geo. II. c. 13, s. 5, the bill should be written in a common legible hand, in English, and in words at length, except, &c., as ante, 254. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, contains no provisions of this kind. Under the former act, however, such abbreviations as were "common and intelligible" might be used (Reynolds v. Caswell, 4 Taunt. 194), as "declon.," "instrons.," "confec.," "afft.," "attg." (Froud v. Stillard, 4 P. & C. 51). The bill must state the items severally, and not charge a sum in the lump, as, "an action brought," &c., and costs of, taxed at 57*l.* 13*s.*" (Drew v. Clifford, R. & M. 280; Reynolds v. Taplin, 6 Dec. 1826, cor. Abbott, C. J. Guildhall; Waller v. Lacy, 1 Sco. N. R. 186; 8 Dowl. P. C. 563). A mistake in the date of items, which does not mislead, will not render the delivery ineffectual, "as the object of the act is, that the bill might be capable of being taxed" (Williams v. Barber, 4 Taunt. 806). And, though plt. cannot recover a particular item, because it is not sufficiently described according to the statute, yet he may recover for those which are (Drew v. Clifford, R. & M. 280; 2 C. & P. 60; Waller v. Lacy, supra). Under the 2 Geo. II. c. 23, the bill should specify by name the cause in which the business was transacted (Lewis v. Primrose, 8 Jur. 982; *13 Law J., N. S., Q. B. 268; 6 Q. B. 265; Englehart [*259] v. Moore, 15 M. & W. 598; Martindale v. Falkner, 2 C. B. 706; Ilmeyer v. Marks, 17 Law J. 165, Ex.: this was formerly doubted, see Lester

v. Lazarus, 4 Dowl. P. C. 397; Lane v. Glenny, 2 Nev. & P. 258); and show, either by the heading or by the accompanying letter, the party charged (Taylor v. Hodgson, 3 D. & L. 115).

A solicitor's bill of costs directed to E. Gannon, headed "Yourself v. Round," but indorsed "Hancock v. Round," contained various items referring to the purchase of property under a decree of the Court of Chancery, in a cause of Hancock v. Round. Some of the items referred to proceedings in Chancery, and no proceedings in any other court were alluded to: held, that by reasonable intendment, the name of the cause, and the court in which the business had been done sufficiently appeared in the bill, and that it was sufficient under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37 (Sargent v. Gannon, 18 Law J., C. P. 220). An attorney is bound to specify in his bill as well any court as the name of any suit in which the business charged for was done (Ivimey v. Marks, 16 M. & W. 843). Such bill is an entire thing, and if the same bill blend charges for work done, in a court of equity, with charges for that apparently done in some court of common law, without pointing out which, the charges in such bill for equity business, though correctly stated, cannot be recovered (Ib.).

Signature to Bill.] Before the late act the bill should be subscribed by the plaintiff, in his own name (Tomlinson v. Clark, 4 Moo. 4; Wild v. Crawford, 2 Stark. 583); or, in the case of a partnership, by one of the partners, in the name of the firm (Smith v. Brown, 1 Cr. & J. 542); or, "for self and partner" (Owen v. Scales, 2 Dowl. N. S. 304). Under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, it will be sufficient if it "shall either be subscribed with the proper hand of such attorney or solicitor (or, in the case of a partnership, by any of the partners, either with his own name or with the name and style of such partnership); or of the executor, administrator, or assignee of such attorney; or be enclosed in, or accompanied by, a letter subscribed in like manner, referring to such bill."

Under this act, where an unsigned bill of costs was sent by an attorney which did not on the face of it charge any person, but was accompanied by a letter signed by the attorney, referring to the bill, and charging the debt with the amount of it, it was held that the letter and bill should be read together, and that this was a sufficient delivery (per Wightman, J., in Taylor v. Hodgson, 14 Law J., N. S. Q. B. 310; S. C. 3 D. & L. 115; 10 Jur. 355).

Proof of Delivery of Bill to Defendant.] Before the late act, if plt. rested his case on proving a delivery to deft.; he should prove a personal delivery to him, or his agent expressly authorized by him to receive it (Finchett v. How, 2 Camp. 277). Where the bill was delivered to deft.'s attorney, and deft. afterwards attended the taxation in person, it was held that he thereby recognized the attorney as his agent (Warren v. Cunningham, Gow, 73). And where a party in a cause, having changed his attorney in the progress of it, a judge's order was afterwards obtained by the second attorney for the delivery to him of a bill signed by the first attorney, a delivery to him was held sufficient (Vincent v. Slaymaker, 12 East, 372; and see further proof as to agency, post, "PRINCIPAL AND AGENT"). It should be proved that the bill was left with the deft., or his authorized agent; for, where the plt. delivered the bill at due time to deft., who acknowledged the debt, and said he would pay it, but that he did not know what to do with the bill, upon which the plt. took it back again, it was held he could not recover (Brooks v. Mason, 1 H. Bl. 290). But it should seem, if plt. proved deft.'s refusal to receive the bill, or his request to take it back, the enactment of the statute would be satisfied (Ib.). Showing and explaining the bill without a regular delivery is not sufficient (Crowder v. Shee, 1 Camp. 437).

Delivery at Defendant's Abode.] If the plt. could not prove a personal delivery to the deft., or to his authorized agent, he should prove that the bill was left for deft. at his dwelling-house, or last place of abode. Proof of the bill having been left at deft.'s counting-house will not suffice (Hill v. Humphreys, 2 B. & P. 342; S. C. 3 Esp. 254). Proof of delivery at deft.'s last apparent place of abode will suffice; and it is no answer for deft. to show that he had left that place of abode, unless he prove that he had a later known place of abode (Wadeson v. Smith, 1 Stark. 324). But proof of delivery at a particular place not *shown to be his abode, [*260] and that he afterwards gave the bill to his present attorney, who attended the taxation of costs, is not enough (Eirke v. Nokes, M. & M. 303). But see Eggington v. Camberledge, 1 Exch. 271, where it was held that the delivery of a bill by a local attorney to the general attorney of a company, who submitted it to the provisional committee a month before action, was sufficient. It is now sufficient if the plt. shall prove that he has delivered the bill "unto the party to be charged therewith, or sent it by the post to, or left it for him at his counting-house, office of business, dwelling-house, or last known place of abode," &c. (see ante, pp. 248, 257).

Where, under this clause, an attorney sent a bill for parish business to the deft., who had been an overseer, when the law-suit commenced, and who directed it to be commenced, but had been out of the office for two or three years before the suit was over, and the bill was not headed against him, and was accompanied with a letter which merely stated, "I enclose you a bill against your parish for the costs in (naming the matter). I have several other bills against the parish, and shall be obliged by their early discharge." The Court of Exchequer held, that as neither the bill nor the letter pointed to the deft. as the party to be charged with the payment of the costs, there had not been a delivery "to the party to be charged therewith" (Upton v. ———, Michaelmas Term, 1846).

In an action on an attorney's bill, a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the bill was misdirected (Welsh v. Silwell, 11 Jur. 471, Q. B.).

Delivery to one of several Defendants.] When there are several defts., it will be sufficient to prove a delivery to one of the acting parties, jointly liable, as it will be presumed that he had authority from the others to receive the bill (Crowder v. Shee, 1 Camp. 437); and therefore it is sufficient for him to deliver his bill to the person who gave the instructions (Finchett v. How, 2 Camp. 277); but, if he deliver the bill to a party who never intermeddled in the retainer, it will be insufficient (Ib.). Where an attorney has been jointly retained by several defts., to defend several suits brought against each, but in the subject-matter of which they had a joint interest, a delivery to one will be sufficient in an action against all (Oxenham v. Lemon, 2 D. & R. 461); and a plea by one of the want of delivery to him is bad on special demurrer (Kiteley v. Schofield, 6 Jur. 1059, Q. B.). It is apprehended that the late act, in requiring a delivery of the bill "unto the party to be charged therewith," has not altered the law in this respect. If an attorney be retained by the surveyor of highways, the bill should be delivered to him and not to the rate-payers, it seems (In re Barber, 14 M. & W. 720).

Proof of Delivery of Bill one Month before Action.] Plt. must prove the delivery of his bill one month at least before bringing his action. The former statute required a lunar month (Hurd v. Leach, 5 Esp. 161, Crook v. M'Tavish, 1 Bing. 167), exclusive of the day on which the bill was delivered, and of the day on which the month expired (Blunt v. Heslop, 3 Nev. & P. 553; 8 Ad. & E. 577; 9 Dowl. P. C. 982). The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, ss. 37 & 48, requires a calendar month.

The writ of summons, which, by the 2 Will. IV. c. 39, s. 12, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 3, must bear date on the day on which it is issued, is now to be considered the commencement of the action for all purposes (Alston v.

Underhill, 2 C. & M. 492; Thompson v. Decas, 1 C. & M. 768; [*261] 3 Tyrw. 427; Rees v. Morgan, 3 Nev. & M. 205); and, as the exact date of its issuing is mentioned on the nisi prius record *(R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. c. 22, s. 1), the time of commencing the action cannot be disputed at nisi prius (3 Chitty's Gen. Prac. by Lush. 678).

As to the mode of proving the commencement of the action formerly, see Webb v. Pritchett, 1 B. & P. 263; Rhodes v. Gibbs, 5 Esp. 163; Harris v. Orme, 2 Camp. 497, n.; 2 Saund. 1 b, n.

Proof of Reasonableness of Charges.] The bill cannot be taxed at the trial. As to when it may be taxed now, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, ss. 37, 38, &c.; as to when it might be taxed formerly, see Tidd, 333; ante, p. 254. If the action was commenced before the passing of this statute the plt. should prove the reasonableness of his charges, as in other actions for work and labour (post, "WORK AND LABOUR"). But, if the charges be for business done in court, and they be taxable, this does not seem necessary: for, if the business was really done, and which must be proved at the trial, the delay of the deft. for more than a month in objecting to the quantum, is an admission that he thinks it reasonable; and he will not be allowed to dispute the reasonableness of the items at the trial (Williams v. Frith, 1 Doug. 197; Hooper v. Till, 1 Dougl. 198; Anderson v. May, 2 B. & P. 237; 7 Price, 234; Lee v. Wilson, 2 Ch. R. 65).

This principle applies to every action commenced since the passing of the above act. If the bill has been taxed, it is sufficient to give in evidence a judge's order to tax it, the deft.'s undertaking to pay what should be due, and the master's allocatur (Lee v. Jones, 2 Camp. 496); but, if the order to tax were obtained by the plt., it is not evidence against the deft. (King v. Kype, 1 W. W. & H. 87). The plt.'s delivery of his bill is conclusive evidence against him as to an increase on any of the items charged in it (Lee v. Jones, 2 Camp. 496); and it is strong presumptive evidence against additional items; but, if there are any real errors or omissions they may be explained and rectified (Leveridge v. Botham, 1 B. & P. 49). If no bill have been delivered, and the plt. plead non assumpsit only, or pay money into court, it should seem that the reasonableness of the charges may be disputed; so, if the action be brought before the lapse of a month from the delivery, the reasonableness of the charges may be considered as open to dispute, but the verdict in such case would be taken subject to taxation.

The Master's allocatur is strong but not conclusive evidence under the plea of nunquam indebitatus, that no more is due (Beck v. Cleaver, 9 Dowl. P. C. 111). Where the plt. charged for specific attendance on certain days, and a further sum for several attendances, Lord Tenterden, C. J., directed the jury to deduct the latter sum from the amount of the bill (Rawson v. Earle, 4 C. & P. 44). The jury may discard an item for work entirely useless; though not, if only partly useless (Shaw v. Arden, 1 Dowl. P. C. 705; 2 Moo. & S. 341).

Evidence for Defendant.

Under the general issue (non assumpsit, or nunquam indebitatus), the deft. may show that the plt. has conducted the business with such want of care or skill (see post, "ACTION AGAINST ATTORNEY FOR NEGLIGENCE"), as to be altogether useless to him (Hill v. Allen, 2 M. & W. 283; 5 Dowl. P. C. 471; Symes v. Nipper, 12 Ad. & E. 337, n.; Bracey v. Carter, 12 Ad. & E. 373; Hill v. Featherstonhaugh, 7 Bing. 569; 5 Moo. & P. 541); or, that he has not exercised "reasonable diligence and skill;" and whereby plt. has, through his inadvertence and want of proper caution, incurred the costs sought to be recovered (Montriau v. Jefferys, R. & M. 317; Farnsworth v. Gerrard, 1 Camp. 38; Denew v. Daverell, 3 ib. 452); or that the plt. agreed only to charge the money out of pocket (Parker v.

*Harcourt, 5 East, 249; and see Jones v. Reade, 5 Ad. & E. 529; [*262] and he is bound by such agreement although he was misled by his client's statement as to his right of action (Thwaites v. Mackerson, 3 C. & P. 341; see Lewis v. Samuel, 10 Jur. 429; 15 Law J. 218, Q. B.). If an attorney undertake to charge a plt. only costs out of pocket "in case the damages or costs should not be recoverable," and the plt. recover, but the deft. becomes insolvent, the attorney is not limited to costs out of pocket (In re Stretton, 14 M. & W. 806). An attorney is not entitled to recover even for money paid, if he have agreed to do the work on the terms of no cure no pay (Taylor v. Tenant, 6 Law T. 413, Q. B.); or, that plt. conducted the cause for nothing; and evidence that, when the attorney's agent went before the master to have the bill taxed, he admitted such was the case, will suffice for this purpose (Ashford v. Price, 3 Stark. 185); or, that the work was done under an indemnity from the plt. against costs and expenses (Hill v. Allen, p. 261); or, that plt. agreed to be paid in gross for prosecuting the action in respect of which the charges which plt. seeks to recover were incurred, as such agreement would be champerty (Com. Dig. Attorney, B, 14; Hob. 117; Tidd, 326); or, that he did not retain the plt., and have the benefit of his advice and judgment. Thus, where the plt. had an office at a distance from his own residence, at which he carried on business by a clerk, who practised in his name, and to whom he allowed one-third of the profits, and the deft. knowing nothing of the plt. employed the clerk to conduct an action for him, it was held that the plt. was rightly nonsuited in an action to recover the costs of that action which had been so carried on by his clerk, as the deft. had never seen or communicated with the plt. on the subject, and the plt. lived at such a distance from the clerk, as to prevent his conferring with and directing the clerk, who was therefore left without instructions, and acted according to his own judgment (Hopkinson v. Smith, 7 Moo. 237; S. C. 1 Bing. 13; Taylor v. Glassbrook, 3 Stark. 75); and see post, "ACTION AGAINST AN ATTORNEY FOR NEGLIGENCE"). If a client sue in formâ pauperis he can only recover money out of pocket (Philips v. Baker, 1 C. & P. 533). He may show that the work was done by an unqualified person in the plt.'s name (Parker v. Riley, 3 M. & W. 230). A corporation may object that the retainer is not under the corporate seal, as no corporation can appoint an attorney by parol, except the Corporation of London (Arnold v. Poole, 4 M. & G. 860); and the appointment by the latter corporation is enrolled in the several courts at Westminster on each 9th November.

Where Negligence is not a Defence.—But negligence is not a defence, unless the work is altogether useless (Templer v. McLachlan, 2 N. R. 136; Shaw v. Arden, 1 Dowl. P. C. 705; 9 Bing. 287); the client's remedy in such case being only by cross action (Ib.); and useless in consequence of plt.'s negligence solely (Dax v. Ward, 1 Stark. 409); or the charges have been created by plt.'s want of proper caution (Huntley v. Bulwer, 6 N. C.

111; Bracey v. Carter, 12 Ad. & E. 373); and this is evidence on non assumpsit (Ib.); even though the promise was to pay costs out of pocket (Lewis v. Samuel, 8 Q. B. 685). And so, if the deft.'s object in the former suit were unjustifiable delay, as not filing a plea in abatement, plt.'s neglect is no defence (Johnson v. Alston, 1 Camp. 175).

A declaration in assumpsit for negligence by attorneys, alleged the retainers of the deft.'s as the attorneys of the plt., and the breach of a promise by them "to use due and proper care and diligence in and about ascertaining the title of the said G. R. to the said lands, tenements, and premises, and to take due and *proper care that the same should be sufficient [*263] security for such repayment of the said sum of 610*l.* 6*s.*;" and assigned for damage, "that the said supposed title and estate, and interest of the said G. R. in and to the said lands, tenements, &c. by reason of the negligence and improper conduct of the defts. in the premises, were not, nor are, nor will be, any sufficient security for the said sum," &c. Held, that the meaning of the word "security" was to be determined by the fact that the defts. were retained as attorneys, that it therefore imported, not sufficiency of present value, but sufficiency of present title; and, consequently, that a nonsuit, ordered by the judge who tried the case, on the ground that evidence of a promise to ascertain value was not given, must be set aside, and a new trial had (Hayne v. Rhodes, 8 Q. B. 342; 15 Law J. 137, Q. B.; 10 Jur. 71). The plt. had been retained by the deft. to bring an action for a false imprisonment against a constable and a person who had acted as a magistrate. The action was brought against the constable only, and not within the time limited by the statute. The constable pleaded not guilty, by statute, but the record was made up without the words "by statute" being inserted in the margin. The then plt. in consequence obtained a verdict at the trial, but which was subsequently set aside by the court, as it appeared that the plea had contained the words "by statute" in the margin. The plt.'s attorney, the now plt. had thereupon consented to a nonsuit, and a moiety of the costs had been levied upon the now deft. In an action by the attorney for his costs in that action, it was held, that he was not entitled to recover, on the ground of the gross negligence in the matter (Saffery v. Wray, 6 Law T. 183).

It is said to have been determined in the C. P., that, though the deft. has neglected to supply the plt. with money to conduct a cause, and for which reason the plt. would not proceed in it, and quitted the suit before trial, still the plt. could not bring an action for his bill (14 Ves. 272). But it has been held that it is no defence that plt. refused to go on with a suit in Chancery if deft. did not supply him with money (Rowson v. Earl, M. & M. 538); for if the attorney give reasonable notice he is at liberty to discontinue the conduct of a cause on a refusal to supply him with money, and may recover for the work done (Vansandau v. Browne, 9 Bing. 402; see Wadsworth v. Marshall, 2 Cr. & J. 665; Hoby v. Built, 3 B. & Ad. 350). But it lies on the attorney to show satisfactorily why he has abandoned the cause (Nicholls v. Wilson, 11 M. & W. 106). If an attorney, through inadvertence or inexperience, incur useless trouble, he cannot recover for it (Hill v. Featherstonhaugh, supra; Hill v. Allen, supra). Negligence is not a defence, if the error committed was such as a cautious man might fall into (Montriau v. Jefferys, 2 C. & P. 113, Abbott, C. J.); as, where the attorney had brought an action on an agreement which a conveyancer had advised to be valid (Potts v. Sparrow, 6 C. & P. 749, Tindal, C. J.). So, where an attorney prepares a document which is illegal, but with regard to the legality of which there was reasonable doubt, he may recover for preparing it (Ib.); at all events the illegality must be pleaded (Potts v. Sparrow, 1 B. N. C. 594); unless the work thereby becomes wholly useless (see Tabram v. Warren, 1 Tyw. & G. 153; Roberts v. Barber, Ch. Pl. by Pear. 225). So, where a dispute, between A., a married woman, and C. D., was referred to arbitration; and, after the reference had proceeded some time, additional matter was submitted by the attorneys for the parties, C. D.'s attorney signing the submission in his presence, and A. B.'s attorney in the presence of C. D.'s attorney, but without any authority from her, and the award was afterwards set aside, it was held that C. D.'s attorney was not guilty of such negligence, in not requiring to see the *authority of A. B.'s attorney, as to disentitle him to recover the costs of the arbitration (Edwards v. [*264] Cooper, 3 C. & P. 277, and see post, "ACTION AGAINST AN ATTORNEY FOR NEGLIGENCE"). An attorney employed generally has no power to sue, merely to defend (Wright v. Castle, 3 Mer. 12).

We have already seen how far deft. may dispute the reasonableness of the plt.'s charges ante, p. 260). By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 3, no person shall act as attorney, or solicitor, or as such, shall commence, or carry on, or defend any action or proceeding in his own name, or the name of another, in any court of law, or equity, or act as attorney or solicitor in any cause or matter heard before judges of assize, oyer and terminer, quarter sessions, justices, or commissioners of revenue, unless duly admitted, enrolled, and qualified.

As to the defence, under the plea of want of certificate under the 37 Geo. II. c. 90, s. 31, see ante, p. 264, and Pearce v. Whale, 5 B. & C. 38; 7 D. & R. 512; or, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 26, by which it is enacted that no attorney or solicitor practising without a stamped certificate shall maintain an action for any fee, reward, or disbursements for business done by him as attorney whilst without such certificate (Hill v. Sydney, 7 Ad. & E. 596; as to form of such plea see Eyre v. Shelly, 6 M. & W. 274; Williams v. Jones, 1 G. & D. 649); or, under the plea of being in prison, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 31, by which it is enacted that no attorney or solicitor shall prosecute or defend suits in his own or another's name whilst in prison, nor sue for fees, rewards, or disbursements, in respect of any business done by him whilst such prisoner. Before this act, an attorney might recover his fees for continuing or defending an action while he was in prison (Noel v. Hart, 8 C. & P. 230; Noel v. Parkes, 2 Jur. 108, Q. B.).

It was not, before the late act, a defence to a bill for suing out a commission of bankrupt that an attorney of Q. B. was not a solicitor in Chancery (Wilkinson v. Diggell, 1 B. & C. 158). But, by s. 27 of the above act, solicitors only can now practise in bankruptcy. A solicitor of the equity side of the Exchequer could not practise in Chancery, nor recover for business done there (Vincent v. Holt, 4 Taunt. 452, where the case of Meddowcroft v. Holbrooke, 1 H. Bl. 50, was denied to be law). An attorney may recover a bill for issuing a fiat in bankruptcy against a person who employed him so to do, but was not petitioning creditor, although no assets are received (Pocock v. Russen, 1 Moo. & M. 357).

By section 36 no person not duly admitted as attorney or solicitor shall sue for fees, &c., on account of any proceedings carried on by him in the county court.

An attorney of one court may, with the consent, and in the name of an attorney of another, practice in the latter court. But if he practise there in his own name he cannot recover his fees (Latham v. Hyde, 1 C. & M. 128; Hockley v. Bantock, 2 Myl. & K. 437). Nor can partners recover a bill of costs for work done in a court of which one of them is not an attorney (Arden v. Tucker, 1 Moo. & R. 191).

Liability for Acts of Negligence.] The declaration stated that plt. employed deft. as attorney to sue H. for a sum of money, and that it was his duty to use proper care in conducting the suit; yet he did not use proper care in this, that having as such attorney sued out writs for the recovery of the said money, and for the purpose of saving the Statute of Limitations, he did not "duly file" the said writs with the proper officer according to the practice of the court, whereby the action was barred: held, that although the 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 39, s. 10, did not in terms require such writs to be filed, yet the word "file" in the declaration might have the sense of bringing the writs to the office, and in that sense would be included in the word returned in the statute, and such filing would be a necessary part of the practice in saving the statute, and that such direction was right (Hunter v. Caldwell, 10 Q. B. 69). That the question of negligence in not complying with the practice of the court was a question of fact for the jury under the judge's direction as to the law (Ib.). That there was no ground for arresting the judgment, as if there could be any sense in the word "file," in which case it was deft.'s duty to file the writs, the declaration was good after verdict (Ib.; 12 Jur. 285); that the duty was sufficiently shown, and the breach well assigned (Ib.). The declaration contained the usual allegation of retainer, &c., to use due care in ascertaining the title of R. to lands which were to be charged as security, for payment of 600*l.* by R. to plt., and to take due care that the same should be sufficient security for the payment of the 600*l.*, and in consideration, &c., defts. promised plt. to use due care, &c.: held, that the undertaking of deft.'s as laid, did not comprehend any inquiry into the value of the lands (Hayne v. Rhodes, 8 Q. B. 342).

Agency Business.] In cases of agency the agent universally gives credit to the attorney who employs him, and not to his client; in such cases, therefore, it is the duty of the attorney in order to limit his liability to give express notice that the business is to be done on the credit of the client, and it will be no defence that the agent knew that the business was done for the benefit of the client (Scarce v. Whittington, 2 B. & C. 11; ante, p. 252).

Statute of Limitations, see post, "LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF."] The *contract to conduct a suit is entire, and where the suit ended [*265] within six years, the statute is no bar for the business which was done more than six years ago (Harris v. Osborn, 2 C. & M. 629; Martendale v. Falkner, 2 C. B. 706; Rothery v. Munnings, 1 B. & Ad. 17).

Deft. employed plt. an attorney, in several transactions, and among others in procuring him money to pay off a mortgage. In an action on plt.'s bill of costs, it appeared by items in the bill that he had made applications in several quarters for this purpose but without success, after which he wrote to plt. informing him what had been done, and requesting to know his wishes. This item bore date more than six years before the action brought. The next, dated within six years, was, "Paid the postage of your answer." By subsequent items it appeared that further endeavours were made by plt. to raise the money. Ultimately it was obtained: held, that the transaction was not one in which the attorney's employment was continuous: and that the latter items did not draw after them the previous ones, so as to take these out of the Statute of Limitations (Phillips v. Broadley, 9 Q. B. 744).

II. ACTIONS AGAINST, FOR NEGLIGENCE.

Form of Remedy.

The form of remedy against an attorney or solicitor, for negligence, is by action of assumpsit for breach of promise, or case for violation of the implied duty, though the former is the more usual remedy (Reece v. Rigby, 4 B. & A. 209; Swannell v. Ellis, 1 Bing. 347; Russell v. Palmer, 2 Wils. 328; Pitt v. Yalden, 4 Burr. 2060; Shilcock v. Pasma, 7 C. & P. 289; Lampkin v. Phipos, 8 C. & P. 478). It was formerly thought, where the deft.'s conduct was grounded in fraud, and where he could avail himself of the Statute of Limitations, that case was the proper and more advisable form of remedy (Brown v. Howard, 2 B. & B. 73; S. C. 4 Moo. 508, 532; Short v. M'Carthy, 3 B. & A. 626); but the decision, in Howell v. Young, 5 B. & C. 259, that the statute runs from the time of the misconduct, not from the time its consequences are discovered, shows that such a defence is equally available in either case. Assumpsit is also often advisable for the sake of inserting the money-counts, which may, in some cases, enable the client to recover back the money he has paid for the business done, when there is a total failure of consideration (5 Pet. R. 602). In some cases, where the negligence or unskilfulness has been very gross, the court whereof deft. is an attorney will interfere (Sayer, 50, 169; Tidd, 81). It seems that an action for negligence lies, though there is no proof of special damage (Godefroy v. Jay, 7 Bing. 413; 5 M. & P. 284).

Where the attorney of a deft., in custody on final process, obtained the consent of the plt.'s attorney not to charge him in execution in the term in which that step ought to have been taken, on the false representation that he had the deft.'s authority to take no advantage of it, and gave an undertaking to that effect; which, however, did not state the proceedings were stayed at deft.'s request, pursuant to the rule of court; and the deft., not being charged in the proper term, was afterwards discharged on the ground of the above omission in the undertaking; it was held, that the deft.'s attorney was not liable to the plt. for the damages accruing from the false representation, as the damages laid arose from the informality of the undertaking (Hewitt v. Melton, 1 C. M. & R. 232; 4 Tyr. 1003).

The personal representative of an attorney is liable in case for his negligence (Wilson v. Tucker, 3 Stark. 154; D. & R. N. P. C. 30).

[*266]

The observations as to the declaration in assumpsit (ante, p. 179 to 226) must be here attended to. It is necessary, in the declaration, either to state that deft. was retained for reward, or that deft. was retained at his request, or that he was retained as an attorney, which, of itself, implies a consideration (Dartnell v. Howard, 4 B. & C. 345; 6 D. & R. 438; Bourne v. Diggle, 2 Ch. R. 312; Elsee v. Gatward, 5 T. R. 143; Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909). A count in a declaration against an attorney stated that the plt. was desirous of lending 400*l.* on good security; that the deft. had notice of such desire; and that he falsely and fraudulently representing that a certain security was good and sufficient, induced and persuaded the plt. to lend the said 400*l.* upon such security, whereby the plt. lost a large sum of money. Held, sufficient, after verdict, without stating any employment by the plt. of the deft. as an attorney for the purpose (Williams v. Jay, 11 Law T. 85, Q. B.).

A declaration in assumpsit stated that the deft. was an attorney, and that in consideration that the plt. would retain him as such attorney in action of tort of B. against L. the deft. promised to fulfil his duty as such attorney, and about prosecuting the said action and recovering damages. That the deft. did, under the said retainer, commence an action against L. in which judgment was obtained against him for 56*l.* That the deft. afterwards, as such attorney for obtaining satisfaction of the said damages, sued out a fi. fa. against L. to which the sheriff returned that he had levied 9*l.* part of the damages, nulla bona as to the residue. That the deft., as such attorney as aforesaid, for obtaining satisfaction of the said residue, issued a ca. sa. under which L. was imprisoned, and paid the residue of the damages to the gaoler, who paid the same to the deft., as such attorney as aforesaid; and before he received the same, he sent, as such attorney as aforesaid, to the gaoler a discharge of L. out of custody, by virtue whereof he was discharged. Breach, that though the deft. received the said damages, and plt. paid to him, as such attorney as aforesaid, his costs of prosecuting the said action, he did not pay over to B., or the plt., the residue of the said damages: held, that this declaration was bad on special demurrer, for not showing distinctly that the money was received by the deft. under his original retainer by the plt. in his action against L. (Bevins v. Hulme, 15 M. & W. 88; 3 D. & L. 722; 15 Law J. 226, Ex.).

Where the declaration in assumpsit, by an administrator, stated that the intestate had retained the deft. as his attorney, to investigate and procure a good title of an estate about to be purchased by him, and assigned for breach that he did not do so, but accepted a bad and defective title; on demurrer to the declaration for not alleging that he undertook to ascertain and procure a good title in his professional character as an attorney, it was held, that it being alleged that the intestate employed him as an attorney, it must be implied that he was bound to fulfil his duty as such (Knight v. Quarles, 4 Moore, 532; 2 B. & B. 102). So, if the declaration state that the plt. retained the deft., an attorney, to see if a certain security was good; that he accepted the retainer, neglected his duty, and represented the security to be good; that the plt. advanced his money upon it; that it was bad; by means of which the plt. lost his interest, it is sufficient (Howell v. Young, 5 B. & C. 259; 8 D. & R. 14): and, where the declaration in assumpsit stated the plt. having retained the deft. at his request to lay out 700*l.* in the purchase of an annuity, the deft. promised to lay it out securely; that the plt. delivered the money to him for that purpose; and that he laid it out insecurely; [*267] it *was held, after verdict, that the consideration for the promise was sufficiently laid (Whitehead v. Greetham, 2 Bing. 464; 10 Moo. 183).

It is unnecessary to state of what court the deft. was an attorney, and, if stated, it must be strictly proved (Green v. Jackson, Pea. 237); and this, though the deft. plead as an attorney of the court (Browne v. Diggles, 2 Ch. R. 311). It is also unnecessary to state any more of the former proceedings than absolutely necessary, and a variance will be fatal (Lee v. Ayreton, Pea. 119; Brown v. Jacobs, 2 Esp. 726; Green v. Rennet, 1 T. R. 656; 2 Ch. Pl. 274). In one or more counts, it is advisable to state the particular act which it was deft.'s duty to have performed (2 Ch. Pl. 372, n.); and other counts should be added, stating the duty generally (Rep. t. Hardw. 309). Plt. must show that the injury sustained resulted from the negligence of deft. In a declaration, stating that plt. had employed deft. to conduct an action of ejectment for the recovery of premises forfeited to the plt., by the tenant's neglect to repair, and it was alleged that it was referred to an arbitrator, who was to decide what repairs should be done, &c., and that the arbitrator was ready to proceed, but that deft. neglected to attend him, and it was objected that it was not shown that the arbitrator would have found repairs to have been necessary, or have awarded it in favour of the plt., if the reference had proceeded, the declaration was held sufficient, as it appeared that the arbitrator was competent to decide what repairs ought to have been done, but was prevented by deft.'s negligence (Swannell v. Ellis, 1 Bing. 347). In 2 Ch. Pl. 274, n., it is said, "though usual, it is not advisable or necessary to allege that the party against whom the action was depending was indebted," &c. But if it should seem that it cannot be the duty of an attorney to exercise his skill and diligence against a party who was not indebted, or unless the party was indebted, it would seem that a count would be bad for not alleging that the plt. had sustained any damage (Dartnell v. Howard, supra).

Formerly, the declaration, instead of the usual conclusion, concluded with the words, "and, therefore, he prays relief, &c.;" the omission of these words, however, was not a cause for demurrer (Andr. 247). They are not now inserted. The new rules prohibit the use of two counts for carelessness, &c., in the one transaction; it is therefore expedient to lay the cause of action in a general form.

As to when the heir or executor should sue for negligence, in investigating the title to an estate, see Knights v. Quarles, ante, p. 266; 2 Lev. 26; 1 Ventr. 176.

As to where the venue should be laid against an attorney or solicitor, for improperly instituting proceedings in Chancery, see Lyde v. Rodd, 1 Bro P. C. 60.

See a count for negligence in defending a cause at the trial (Hoby v. Built, 3 B. & Ad. 350; Reece v. Righy, 4 B. & A. 202; Godefroy v. Jay, 7 Bing. 413); for investing plt.'s money upon an insufficient annuity security (Whitehead v. Cheetham, 2 Bing. 464; Treson v. Pearson, 3 B. & C. 799; Wilson v. Tucker, 3 Stark. 154; Kemp v. Burt, 4 B. & Ad. 424); for suffering a client to execute an unusual covenant on assigning a term (Hansard v. Ullithorne, 10 Bing. 491); for not taking proper measures to obtain a prisoner's discharge from custody (Shilcock v. Pasman, 7 C. & P. 289). By an executor of an executor of an attorney for his carelessness in the investigation of the sufficiency of an annuity purchased by plt.'s testator (Ch. Pl. by Pearson, 70).

Declaration.

(Commencement, ante, "ASSUMPSIT"). For that whereas heretofore, to wit, on, &c. [day of retainer or about it], in consideration that the plt., at the request of the deft., had then retained and employed the deft., as then being an attorney, to prosecute and conduct a certain action of [trover] in the court of, by, and at the suit of the plt., against one E. F., for a certain cause of action, to wit, for taking away and converting to his own use certain goods and chattels of the plt.; for reasonable fees and reward to be therefore paid by the plt. to the deflt., he, the deflt., then promised the plt. to use due and proper care and skill in and about his prosecuting and conducting the said action for the plt.; nevertheless, the deflt., not regarding his said promise, did not, nor would, use due and proper care and skill in and about his prosecuting and conducting the said action for the plt., but, on the contrary thereof, prosecuted and conducted the same action to trial in so careless, unskillful, and improper a manner [to wit, in not having a certain instrument before then prepared by the deflt., and purporting to be a sale and assignment of the said goods and chattels by the said E. F. to the plt., stamped according to law, so that the same might have been given in evidence on the said trial of the said action]; that the plt., by the said neglect and default of the deflt. in that behalf, was hindered and prevented from giving the same instrument in evidence upon the trial of the said cause, and by reason thereof was afterwards, to wit, on, &c. [day of nonsuit or about it], compelled to suffer himself to be nonsuited in the said action, whereby he was not only hindered and prevented from recovering his damages from the said E. F., by reason of his taking away and converting the said goods and chattels as aforesaid, but hath also been forced and obliged to pay, and hath paid, to the said E. F., a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of £ , for his costs and charges in and about his defence of the said action; and hath also paid to the defendant another large sum of money, to wit, the sum of £ , for his costs and charges for the prosecution and conduct of the said action.

Special counts.

The declaration must so necessarily agree with the peculiar facts of each particular case, that it would be of little or no practical utility to give other forms. See precedents of declaration against an attorney for negligently conducting a cause to trial without evidence, 2 Ch. Pl. 273, 500; for not obtaining judgment as soon as he ought, Ib. 276; for not giving note to a prisoner, whereby he was discharged, Ib. 278; for not examining the title to an estate bought by plt., Ib. 279; for taking a defective security from the grantor of an annuity, Ib. 280, 501; for not putting in bail, whereby plt. was obliged to pay the debt, Ib. 276; for not putting in a sufficient plea to an action, Ib. 277; for not appearing, and for suffering judgment, Ib. 278; for negligence in investing a security, Ib. 282, 502; the like at the suit of an administrator, 4 T. B. Moore, 532; for allowing a client to execute an unusual covenant for title, without explaining the nature thereof, 10 Bing. 491; for disclosing defects in his client's title, 3 Bing. 235; 3 Sco. 614. For other forms, see 2 Went. 290 to 307; for forms of pleas generally, see "ASSUMPSIT" and "CASE."

Pleas.] As to the pleas in assumpsit and case generally, see ante, "ASSUMPSIT," and post, "ACTION ON THE CASE." Pleas, 1st of non assumpsit, and 2ndly, that deflt. used due diligence and took proper measures, &c., admit the prefatory averments of the declaration; but throw on the plt. the proof of the retainer and negligence (per Alderson, B., in Shilcock v. Passman, 7 C. & P. 289). Non assumpsit puts the deflt.'s retainer expressly in issue (per Cresswell, J. Aldis v. Gardner, 1 C. & K. 564). The plea of not guilty in case would deny the breach of duty charged as neglect, misconduct, &c., but not the retainer of the deflt. in the character alleged.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

[*239] Retainer.] The plaintiff, in general, must prove his retainer, the *purpose for which deflt. was retained, the deflt.'s negligence, and plt.'s damages. The plt. must prove that he retained the deflt. to act as his attorney in the business. This may be done by evidence of a direct retainer, or from deflt.'s conduct in the business, or from his admission. If the declaration alleges deflt. to be an attorney of a particular court, such allegation must be strictly proved by direct evidence, either by proof that deflt. acted as an attorney of the court (Berryman v. Wise, 4 T. R. 366); or proof of an examined copy of the roll of attorneys (Ib.; Rex v. Crossley, 2 Esp. 526); or by the book of admissions from the Master's Office (Ib.); or, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 21—24, by the register kept by the Law Society.

Where the plt. alleged that deflt., then being one, &c., of the Court of Great Sessions of Chester, and gave notice to deflt. to produce his admission, and it not being produced, the attorney's bill was offered to prove the averment; per Ld. Kenyon, "had plt. stated him generally to have been employed as an attorney. the evidence would have been sufficient, but this bill does not prove him to be an attorney of that court" (Green v. Jackson, Pea. 237; Berryman v. Wise, 4 T. R. 366); nor would it, in such case, be sufficient proof that the deft. put in his plea as an attorney of that court; but it is not necessary to prove that deft. has taken out his certificate (Jones v. Stevens, Stark. Ev. App. 130).

Proof of Inducement and Purpose of Retainer.] The proof as to this must necessarily depend on the particular averment (ante, p. 252) and the nature of the pleadings (see ante, p. 250, and Shilcock v. Passman, 7 C. & P. 289). In an action for negligence, whereby plt. lost his debt, and was nonsuited, if it be averred that the deft. in the former action was indebted to the plt., it must be substantially proved, and it would be a fatal variance if it appear that such deft. was a married woman (Lee v. Ayrton, Pea. 119). If proceedings in an action are alleged to have taken place prefatory to the deft.'s retainer, the same must be substantially proved (post, "RECORD," "PROCESS"); unless admitted by the pleadings. Formerly, great strictness was required in the proof; as, where in an action for negligence in not prosecuting the plt.'s debtor to judgment, the return of the writ on which the debtor was arrested was laid in the 24th year, whereas the writ appeared, on being produced, to be returnable in the 25th year, it was held a fatal variance, though the day of the return was laid under a videlicet (Green v. Rennett, 1 T. R. 656); so, where, "to prove an allegation that the said Southal was arrested," &c., a writ was produced with the name Suthall, it would seem to have been a fatal variance, as the doctrine of idem sonans is only applicable to pleas in abatement (Brown v. Jacobs, 2 Esp. 726); so, if there was an addition to the name stated in the declaration, which was not in the writ, it was fatal; aliter, if in the writ, and omitted in declaration (ib.). These objections are now only the ground of amendment (see post, "AMENDMENT"). In actions for negligence in business not in a court, as taking defective securities or the like, the prefatory inducements should be proved substantially as stated; unless admitted (ante) by the pleadings. See "ADMISSIONS."

Proof of Negligence.] The plt. must prove deft.'s neglect, or breach of duty. The principal duties of an attorney or agent, are care, skill, and integrity, and if he be not deficient in any of these essential requisites, he is not liable for any error or mistake arising in the exercise of his profession (Tidd, 80). There must be gross negligence, or unskilfulness, otherwise the attorney is not liable (Purvis v. Landell, 12 Cl. & Fin. 91; Bulmer v. Gilman, 4 Man. & G. 108; Godefroy v. Dalton*, 6 Bing. 461; [*270] Kemp v. Burt, 4 B. & Ad. 424; Frankland v. Cole, 2 C. J. 590; see Arch. Pr. 8th ed. 68; Ch. Contr. Index, "Attorney"), and the fact of his having acted on counsel's opinion is not conclusive that there was not gross negligence, &c. (Ravenga v. Mackintosh, 2 B. & C. 693; Kemp v. Burt, supra; Godefroy v. Dalton, supra). An attorney is not liable in case of reasonable doubt, for a mere error in judgment, and where he has not been guilty of lata culpa or crassa negligentia (Pitt v. Yalden, 4 Burr. 2060; Raikie v. Chandless, 3 Camp. 17; Kemp v. Burt, 1 Nev. & M. 262; 4 B. & Ad. 424; Laidler v. Elliott, 5 D. & R. 635; 3 B. & C. 738). Thus, before the point had been fully settled, that the grant of an annuity is void, unless the trusts of the annuity-deeds be recited in the memorial, it was held that such an omission did not amount to prima facie evidence of a gross negligence (Raikie v. Chandless, supra). So, where in order to prove an allegation "that judgment had been signed by default, and such other proceedings had, that final judgment was signed and execution issued," the attorney, under the advice of counsel, produced only the prothonotary's book, and not the record, or a proper copy of the judgment, whereby the plt. was nonsuited (Godefroy v. Dalton, 6 Bing. 460; 4 M. & P. 149). So, where he drew up an agreement, under the advice of a conveyancer that it was valid, and he afterwards sued upon it, and it was then upon demurrer declared void on the ground of champerty (Potts v. Sparrow, 6 C. & P. 749). On the other hand, as the attorney undertakes to bring to the exercise of his profession a reasonable degree of skill and diligence (Lamphier v. Phipos, 8 C. & P. 475), he is liable for any injury arising from the want of a reasonable degree of either skill or diligence (Hart v. Frame, 3 Jur. 547; 1 Rob. 595; 6 Cl. & Fin. 193); as, for proceeding against apprentices for misconduct upon the wrong section of a statute, which applied to servants and not to apprentices (lb.); or, for neglecting to have a witness in court, previous to the trial whereby plt. was nonsuited, as it was held he ought to have ascertained that the witness was in attendance, or, if he knew that he could not attend, to have withdrawn the record (Reece v. Rigny, 4 B. & A. 202-4). So, where deft. was employed to ascertain the sufficiency of securities, and he relied upon a partial extract from a will, without examining the original, and thereby a damage accrued to plt., he was held liable (Wilson v. Tucker, D. & R., N. P. C. 30; S. C. 3 Stark. 154). So, where he took on himself to exercise his own judgment upon difficult points of law, as arising on an intricate conveyance, &c., for it was his duty "to state the deeds to counsel, &c., otherwise he must draw conclusions at his peril" (per Bailey, J., Ireson v. Pearman, 3 B. & C. 812-3; 5 D. & R. 687). It seems, he ought himself to peruse a title on the part of his client before he sends it for counsel's opinion (Drax v. Scroope, 1 Dowl. P. C. 69; 5 B. & Ad. 581). Where he neglected to charge a deft. (a prisoner) in execution, whereby the deft. was superseded, or where he neglected to declare in due time, he was held liable (Russel v. Palmer, 2 Wils. 325; Pitt v. Yalden, 4 Burr. 2061); so, he is liable for not entering or docketing a judgment within a reasonable time, whereby the presumption arises that the debt was satisfied (Flower v. Bolinbroke, 1 Str. 639); or, for bringing an action within a court of limited jurisdiction, knowing that the circumstances which gave the right of action arose out of the jurisdiction (Williams v. Gibbs, 6 Nev. & M. 788; 2 H. & W. 241). Where deft. is employed as an attorney to invest money on a copyhold security, he is liable, if such security turns out defective and invalid semble (Brown v. Howard, 4 Moo. 508).

[*271] So, where he was employed by a vendor to settle on his part the *assignment of a term, and he allowed the vendor to execute an unusual covenant without explaining the liability thereby incurred, he is responsible for consequent loss, notwithstanding that the vendor himself was aware at the time of the assignment of the fact, in respect of which he afterwards incurred liability on the covenant (Stannard v. Ullithorne, 10 Bing. 401; 4 Mōb. & S. 359). So, he is responsible for not taking steps to set aside an irregular order to dismiss his client's bill in Chancery, though the order was obtained while the cause was in the hands of another solicitor, whom he was appointed to replace (Frankland v. Cole, 2 C. & J. 590). So, he is liable for disclosing defects in his employer's title (Taylor v. Blacklow, 3 Bing. 235; 3 Sc. 614).

Not liable.] An attorney is always liable if he act contrary to the plt.'s express or implied instructions, as he may defend, but not institute, a suit, without express instructions (3 Mer. 12). But an attorney is not liable to an action for not filing a dilatory plea, when instructed so to do, merely for delay (Johnson v. Alston, 1 Camp. 176; Pierce v. Blake, 2 Salk. 515); nor is he liable for the absence, neglect, or want of attention of counsel (Lowry v. Guilford, 5 C. & P. 234); nor is he liable if his diligence would have been ineffectual: thus, he is not liable for negligence in conducting a suit against excise officers for a seizure, if it appear that such seizure was lawful (Aitchison v. Madock, Pea. 162); nor for negligence in suing a married woman (Lee v. Ayrton, Pea. 119). But deft. must show the diligence would have been ineffectual (Bourne v. Diggles, 2 Ch. R. 311). Thus, in an action against an attorney for negligently letting judgment go by default, it lies on deft. to show that there was good ground for so doing, and not on the plt. to show that there was a good defence to the action (Godefroy v. Jay, 7 Bing. 413; 5 M. & P. 284). The attorney is not liable if his client took the responsibility on himself (Wilson v. Tucker, 3 Stark. 154; S. C., D. & R., N. P. C. 30). The question of negligence is for a jury (Reece v. Righy, 4 B. & A. 202; Shilcock v. Passman, 7 C. & P. 289).

Mode of proving Negligence.] The proof of the negligence must vary according to the statement of the facts of plt.'s case in the declaration, and which must always be consulted in framing the evidence. The parties to the transaction in which the negligence took place, are good witnesses (Hunter v. King, 4 B. & A. 209). Where the question is, whether the deft. has been guilty of gross negligence, contrary to the known and usual practice, those who are conversant in the same kind of practice may be examined as witnesses on either side (Russell v. Palmer, 2 Wils. 328). If there have been express instructions to deft., the same should be proved. Where the proceedings in a former action form the ground-work of the action against the attorney, such proceedings should be produced, or the necessary steps taken to give secondary evidence of them (Parry v. Collis, 1 Esp. 399; post, "SECONDARY EVIDENCE"). To prove a judgment by default, a writ of inquiry, final judgment, and execution, the prothonotary's book and allocatur are not sufficient, but an examined copy of both judgments should be produced (Godefroy v. Jay, 5 M. & P. 149; 6 Bing. 460). So, in support of an action for neglecting to have a witness at a trial where plt. was nonsuited, the plt. must prove, by calling such witness or otherwise, that the witness was a necessary and material one, that his attendance might have been procured, and that plt. was nonsuited (Reece v. Righy, 4 B. & A. 202). And, in an action for the loss of a debt through deft.'s negligence, plt. must establish the existence of such debt, and, if he has obtained a judgment to recover it, that will be evidence of the debt, and he ^{*}should prove the judgment by an examined copy of it from the judgment-roll. If the [*272] former deft. has been arrested on mesne process, and the action is against the deft. for negligence, whereby the former deft. was superseded, besides proving the debt, the writ should be produced, or an examined copy, if it has been returned, and the actual time of commitment should be proved by the books of the prison: the grounds of the discharge will be shown by means of the supersedeas or order of discharge (2 Stark. Ev. 134-5). If the action is against the deft. for neglecting to charge the former deft. in execution, whereby he was superseded, besides the evidence of the retainer and the judgment, the plt. should prove he was committed to prison, and which is evidenced by the books from the prison where deft. was in custody. The plt. should also prove the grounds upon which deft. was superseded, and which will be done by producing the supersedeas, or order for his discharge (Russell v. Palmer, 2 Wils. 327). If the action be for negligence in completing a conveyance, where there is a defect in the memorial of an annuity, in consequence of which it is set aside, the plt., to prove the defect, after having proved the retainer of the deft., his conduct of the business, and the execution of the deeds which should be produced, should prove the rule of court, or deny it to be set aside, and an annexed copy of the affidavits used upon the motion (2 Stark. Ev. 135). So, if the plt. has been evicted in consequence of a defect in title, arising from the deft.'s negligence, he should produce the deeds, and prove the execution of them, and the payment of the money, and show that he has been evicted by proof of the judgment in ejectment, the execution of the writ of possession, producing the writ, or an examined copy, if it has been returned (Ib.).

Damages.] As the question of negligence is a question to be collected by the jury from the facts, under the direction of the judge, it will be for them to measure the compensation in proportion to the plt.'s injury sustained from the deft.'s breach of duty (Reece v. Righy, 4 B. & A. 202; Russel v. Palmer, 2 Wil. 328; Swannell v. Ellis, 1 Bing. 347). If plt. has been put to any costs or expenses in consequence of deft.'s negligence, the plt. should prove the payment of them, as stated in the declaration (post, "PAYMENT"). In an action for negligence, whereby the plt. lost his debt, he should, if possible, be prepared to show the probability that he would have recovered the whole of the debt, if the deft.'s negligence had not prevented it, as by giving evidence of the circumstances and solvency of the party indebted to him.

Evidence for Defendant.

This will depend much on the nature of the pleadings. The deft. ought to bring forward all the evidence he can, to meet the charge in the declaration. It is a good answer to the action, that deft.'s diligence would have been ineffectual, but the burden of such proof lies on the deft. (Bourne v. Diggles, 2 Ch. R. 311; ante, p. 271). An attorney may show that he acted from such an error or mistake as a cautious or prudent man might make, and that he was not deficient in reasonable skill and diligence (Montriau v. Jefferys, R. & M. 320; ante, p. 270); so, it is a sufficient defence that a mistake in practice arose from the ambiguous meaning of a rule of court (Laidler v. Elliott, 3 B. & C. 738; 5 D. & R. 635); or, from a doubtful construction of a statute, as whether the trust in an annuity-deed must be particularly set forth in the memorial, before the point had been decided (Raikie v. Chandless, 3 Camp. 17). And it would be a sufficient defence for an attorney to show that his neglect was occasioned *merely by not [*273] following instructions for unjustifiable delay, or some illegal object, as for not filing a plea in abatement for that purpose (ante, p. 271; Johnson v. Alston, 1 Camp. 176; 4 Moo. 508); or, for not giving previous notice of the commencement of a suit against excise-officers, it being proved that the seizure was legal (Aitcheson v. Madock, Pea. 162). As to other defences, see the various titles throughout this work, and ante, p. 262, as to what degree of negligence does not prevent an attorney from recovering his fees.

I. ACTIONS BY, AGAINST EMPLOYER.

Form of Remedy, p. 273.Auction Duty, p. 273.Compensation for Services, p. 273.Precedents, p. 273.Declaration, p. 273.Pleas, p. 274.Evidence for Defendant, p. 274.Form of Remedy.

The form of the remedy, pleadings, and evidence, are, for the most part, the same as those in actions of this nature by an agent ("AGENT," ante, p. 86).

Auction Duty.] He is not bound to demand the auction duty at the close of each particular bidding (Wilson v. Carey and Cunningham, 11 M. & W. 368); and may recover it on knocking down a lot to a person who bid in collusion with the seller and unknown to the plt., for the purpose of enhancing the price, and at the close of the day's sale refused on that ground to complete the purchase (S. C. 10 M. & W. 641).

Compensation for Services.] He cannot recover, except by special agreement, a per centage which exceeds a fair remuneration for his trouble (Malsby v. Christie, 1 Esp. N. P. C. 340). Where being employed by a party in possession of goods to sell them, he does so, and pays him the proceeds, and is afterwards sued by the real owner, who recovers the value against him, he may recover over from the party who employed him the sum which he was obliged to pay to the real owner for debt and costs (Adamson v. Jarvis, 12 Moo. 241 ; 4 Bing. 66).

Precedents.

Assumpsit by, for his services.

In the Q. B. (or C. P., or Ex. of P.) On the day of A. D. 1850.

London, } A. B., by E. F. his attorney, or ("in his own proper person"), complains of to wit. { C. D., who has been summoned to answer the said A. B., for that, whereas the def., on the day in the year of our Lord was indebted to the plt. in the sum of £ for work and labour, care, diligence, and attendance of plt., done, performed, and bestowed as an auctioneer and appraiser, in and *about the selling and disposing of, and endeavouring to dispose of, by auc- [*274] tion, and otherwise, divers goods, lands, houses, buildings, hereditaments and premises (or chattels, and effects), for the deft., and on his retainer and request, and in and about the appraising and valuing divers other goods, chattels, and effects, for the def., and at his request, and in and about other business of the deft., for him, and at his request, and for divers journeys, and attendances before then made, performed, and given by the plt., in and about the business of the deft., and for him, and at his like request; and whereas the deft. afterwards, on the day and year aforesaid, in consideration of the premises respectively, promised the plt. to pay him the said money on request, yet he hath disregarded his promise, and hath not paid the said sum, or any part thereof, to the plt.'s damage of £ , and therefore he brings suit, &c.

Auction Duty.] See declaration in debt for (Wilson v. Carey, 10 M. & W. 641). An auctioneer who paid the duties on a sale of lands by auction (where the lands were bought in at the sale, and the commissioners of excise refused to remit the duties), was held entitled to recover back the amount from his employer, in an action for money paid. That action is maintainable in every case in which the plt. has paid money to a third party at the request, express or implied, of the deft. with an understanding express or implied to repay it; and it is not necessary that the deft. should have been relieved from a liability by the payment (Brittain v. Lloyd, 14 M. & W. 762). In an action on the case for employing to sell property which deft. had no right to sell, receiving the proceeds, and not reimbursing plt. when afterwards compelled, after action, to pay the real owner the value and costs, &c.; see Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66; 12 Moo. 241.

Pleas.] To debt for auction duty, that it was a condition of sale that the purchaser should pay down the auction duty immediately after the sale, and that the plt. neglected to demand it. (See form in Wilson v. Cary, supra, and, replication, ib.)

Evidence for Defendant.

If the action be for commission for the sale of an estate, proof by deft. of plt.'s negligence or unskilfulness, whereby the sale becomes nugatory, will defeat the plt.'s claim to recover any compensation for his services (Denew v. Daverell, 3 Camp. 451; McCle. 25; see further, "AGENT," ante, p. 86; "ATTORNEY," "WORK AND LABOUR").

II. ACTIONS BY, AGAINST THIRD PERSONS.

The form of the remedy, pleadings, and evidence, are mostly the same as those in actions of this nature by an agent ("AGENT," ante, p. 86 et seq.). An auctioneer, however, having possession, coupled with an interest in the goods which he is employed to sell, arising from his lien and responsibility. &c., is thereby invested with a special property in them, and may maintain assumpsit for the proceeds of the sale, even though he sold them at the house of the owner of the property, and advertised them as his (Williams v. Millington, 1 H. Bl. 81; Farebrother v. Simmons, 5 B. & A. 333; Coppin v. Walker, 7 Taunt. 237; S. C. 2 Marsh. 497, 501; "AGENT," ante, p. 90). But where being employed by a supposed executrix, he sold goods of a testator but before payment the real executrix demanded payment from the buyer, it was held that he could not recover from the buyer, though the latter had promised expressly to pay him on being allowed to take away the goods, and was so allowed (Dickenson v. Naul, 4 B. & Ad. 638). Where h [*275] sells *premises, and obtains a cheque for £100 as a deposit, which the purchaser subsequently refuses to pay, there having been a wilful misrepresentation in the description of the premises, he cannot, if there be a proper plea of want of consideration, recover on the cheque (Mills v. Oddy, 3 Dowl. P. C. 728; 2 C. M. & R. 103; 6 C. & P. 728; 5 Tyr. 571).

III. ACTIONS AGAINST, BY EMPLOYER.

The form of remedy, pleadings, and evidence, are for the most part the same as those in actions of this nature against an agent ("AGENT," ante, p. 91). Where the conditions of sale, were "that the goods should be sold to the best bidder," and a party, who had no other connexion with the sale, sent a horse to the auctioneer with written directions not to let him go under 15*l.*, but he was sold for less, the owner could not recover the difference from the auctioneer, as a buying in of the horse for him would have been a fraud upon the sale; but it would have been otherwise if the auctioneer were directed to set him up at 15*l.* and not lower (Bexwell v. Christie, Cowp. 395).

Bound to Account.] Where the plt., being in possession of the goods of an intestate, under a bill of sale, employed the deft. to sell them, and he did so, and upon receiving notice from the widow of the deceased not to pay the plt. until all the creditors came in, he refused to account: he was held bound to account to the plt., and even if he would have been at liberty to set up the jus tertii, yet he was liable, no title being shown by him in any third person: administration had not been taken out (Crosskey v. Mills, 1 C. M. & R. 298); see a form of assumpsit for selling on credit, Ferrars (Earl) v. Robins, 1 Gale, Rep. 70. An auctioneer who delivered goods without receiving the price from the purchaser, was held liable in the above form for the full produce of the goods (Brown v. Staten, 2 Ch. Rep. 353). He cannot sell on credit without express authority (Brown v. Staten, infra).

IV. ACTIONS AGAINST, BY THIRD PERSONS.

The form of remedy, pleadings, and evidence, are, for the most part, the same as those in actions of this nature against agents ("AGENT, ante, 103).

In Action to recover Deposit received by him, and Interest thereon.] The form of remedy, and pleadings, and evidence, are nearly similar to those in actions by and against vendor and purchaser (post, "VENDOR AND PURCHASER"). An auctioneer employed to sell an estate, who receives a deposit from the purchaser, is a mere stakeholder, liable to be called upon to pay the money at any time, and therefore, though he may make interest by it, he is not liable to pay it to the vendor on the completion of the contract (Harrington v. Hoggart, 1 B. & Ad. 577). An auctioneer is the agent of both parties, and a deposit on a sale that goes off may be recovered from him personally, but if it be paid to the vendor's solicitor, who receives it as such, the action should be against the vendor and not the solicitor (Bamford v. Shuttleworth, 11 Ad. & E. 926). An auctioneer, though he is authorized to receive the deposit, has no general authority to receive the purchase-money (Sykes v. Giles, 5 M. & W. 645). Where a sale by auction is advertised or stated by the auctioneer to be "without reserve," the employment by the vendor of a puffer to bid for him, without notice, renders the sale void, *and entitles the purchaser to recover back his deposit from the auctioneer (Thornett v. [*276] Haines, 15 M. & W. 367; 15 Law J., 230, Exch).

In trover, by the assignees, for selling a bankrupt's property, it would seem that the auctioneer should be allowed for rent paid to the landlord, and a reasonable sum for the expenses of the sale, but not the expenses of carrying the goods away, "as that is part of the aggression complained of" (Grimshaw v. Atterwell, 8 C. & P. 6); but is not the sale also "part of the aggression complained of"?

Declaration.] If the action be merely for the deposit, the common count for money had and received will suffice (Burrough v. Skinner, 5 Burr. 2639; Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 Bl. R. 1078; Gray v. Gutteridge, 1 Moo. & R. 614). But, if plt. declare on the contract of sale for special damage, as for expenses, whether in examining titles, performing journeys, &c., or for interest, he must state them specially in his declaration (Maberly v. Robins, 5 Taunt. 625; S. C. 1 Marsh. 260; Walker v. Constable, 1 B. & P. 307; Richards v. Barton, 1 Esp. 268; see form against an auctioneer, Lee v. Munn, 8 Taunt. 54). Where plt. discovers that the vendor had no title, or a doubtful one, to what deft. sold; as, if he furnished an abstract of the estate, which appeared defective on the face of it, or bad in law, plt. may declare generally (Wild v. Fort, 4 Taunt. 334; Maberly v. Robins, 5 ib. 625).

Evidence for Plaintiff.

Proof of Defendant's Liability.] The liability of an auctioneer to third persons stands on the same principle as that of other agents ("AGENT," ante, p. 103; Spittle v. Lavender, 2 B. & B. 452; S. C. 5 Moo. 272). His not disclosing his principal renders him personally liable (Hanson v. Roberdeau, Pea. 120; though he afterwards offer to give the name of his employer (Franklin v. Lamond, 11 Jur. 780; 16 Law J. 221, C. P.); so he is personally liable if he act under a void authority, or knowingly mislead the plt. in the purchase, or the like (ante, "AGENT;" Farebrother v. Simmons, 5 B. & A. 333; Waring v. Hoggart, R. & M. 39; Stevens v. Adamson, 2 Stark. 422). The plt. having bought shares of the defts. at an auction, certificates of which were then delivered to him, subsequently applied to them for a transfer of the shares. A letter from the defts. in answer thereto, stating that they acted only as agents in the matter, and offering to give the name of the vendor, was held evidence of exonerating the plt. from tendering a deed of transfer for execution. The declaration described the sale as one sale of three hundred shares to the plt.; the evidence was that the plt., as the highest bidder, purchased, by auction, the shares in three separate lots of one hundred each, at three separate prices. Certificates of all the shares were handed to the plt. with a bill of parcels made out by the defts.'s clerk, in which the shares were described as three hundred, sold at the aggregate price: held, that the evidence showed that it was to be treated as one entire sale, and that there was, therefore, no variance (Franklin v. Lamond, 11 Jur. 780; 16 Law J. 221, C. P.).

In an action against the auctioneer to recover back the deposit, which he is bound to retain till a proper title is made out, plt. should adduce the usual evidence of the sale by auction and purchase, the payment of the deposit to deft., pursuant to the particulars delivered by deft., which is usually done by deft.'s receipt (post, "VENDOR AND PURCHASER," "RECEIPT"), and the defect of title. The particulars of the sale should be produced and proved, and that they were delivered by the deft. at the time and place of sale, [*277] and they will be sufficient evidence of the terms of the sale; and, if they have not been complied with by the deft., plt. has an immediate right to recover the deposit, as money had and received (post, "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED"); but, if the thing sold were to be delivered by a given time, or a good title shown to an estate within a given period, plt. should prove that he applied for the thing sold, and that the time for delivering it had elapsed; or, for an abstract of the title to the estate at the specified time, and that he could not obtain it (post, "VENDOR AND PURCHASER").

If the deft. is not bound to retain the deposit till such title is made out, he may, in answer, show a payment over to the principal; unless, indeed, it appear in evidence that the deft. knew of the defect of title in the premises, or that his principal had no right to the money (Edwards v. Hodding, 5 Taunt. 815; Horsfall v. Handley, 8 ib. 136). And, as to what is not a sufficient payment over, see "AGENT," "MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED." Where an auctioneer does not disclose the name of his principal at the time of the sale, he renders himself personally liable to the purchaser, though he has paid over the money to the principal (Hanson v. Roberdeau, Pea. 120; see Franklin v. Lamond, ante, p. 276). "It is of great consequence to the public that auctioneers, who take upon themselves to describe in their particulars the property to be sold, should truly describe it, for the buyers act on the faith of those descriptions" (5 B. & A. 259); per Abbott, C. J.). So, an auctioneer putting up premises for sale is bound to know how they are circumstanced: and, therefore, where premises were in a dilapidated state, and the landlord had given notice to the lessee that he would re-enter (under such a covenant in the lease) if they were not put into repair, and the auctioneer sold the premises without communicating the notice to the purchaser, he was permitted to recover the deposit from the auctioneer, although he knew the dilapidated state of the premises at the time of the sale, and it did not appear that the auctioneer knew of the notice of re-entry having been given (Stevens v. Adamson, 2 Stark. 422). And, where a lessee of lands, subject to a covenant against certain obnoxious trades, with a proviso for re-entry, grants under-leases of houses erected on the land, not containing a similar covenant and proviso: held, that the purchaser thereof might recover back his deposit from the auctioneer, owing to such omission; as it was his duty truly and honestly to represent that which he was to sell (Waring v. Hoggart, R. & M. 39).

In an action to recover interest, plt. should be prepared to show, in addition to the usual proof of the sale, payment of the deposit, defect of title, &c.; either that deft. is liable as a principal, or else that he personally made use of the deposit, or a demand made on him to return it, after the defective title discovered (Lee v. Munn, 8 Taunt. 45; S. C. 1 Moo. 881; Farquhar v. Farley, 7 Taunt. 594; Edwards v. Hodding, 5 Taunt. 815; 1 Marsh. 377; Nelson v. Aldridge, 2 Stark. 435; Gaby v. Driver, 2 Y. & J. 549). As to expenses, see post, "VENDOR AND PURCHASER."

What it is.] Whatever damage or loss is incurred by any particular part of a ship or cargo for the preservation of the rest is considered general average; that is, the several parties interested in the ship, freight (Du Costa v. Newenham, 2 T. R. 407; Williams v. London Assurance, 1 M. & S. 318), or cargo, shall contribute their respective proportions to indemnify the owner of the particular part for the damage which has been incurred for the good of all.

What held not to be the Subject of General Average.] Hence, it appears that, in order to constitute a general average, the whole adventure must have been in jeopardy. A ship, laden with coals and wheat (which were the subject-matter of insurance), was forced by stress of weather into a port in Ireland, where the people, who were suffering from a great scarcity of corn at the time, took the government of her from the captain and crew, and weighed her anchor, by which she drove on a reef of rocks where she was stranded; and they compelled the captain to sell all the corn, except about ten tons, at about three-fourths of the invoice price. The ten tons were damaged in consequence of the stranding, and it became necessary that they should be thrown overboard. The ship afterwards arrived at her destination with the remainder of the cargo, which was about 25% worth of coals. It was held that the loss sustained was not a general average, because the whole adventure had never been in jeopardy, there being no pretence for saying that the people who took the corn intended any injury to any other part of the cargo except the corn, and that therefore the plts. could not call on the rest of the owners to contribute their proportion as upon a general average (Nesbitt v. Kensington, 4 T. R. 783). Also, the mere suffering a loss will not suffice—there must be something done; and therefore, if the goods be cast out of the ship by the violence of the waves, or be damaged in a storm, or the like, or be taken by a pirate or enemy, the owner must bear the loss (Postw. Dict. tit. "Average;" Marsh. In. 463; Mod. 297). So the loss must evidently conduce to the preservation of the ship and cargo; and therefore if, upon an apprehension of an enemy, some goods are landed and secured on shore, and the rest taken, the owner of the goods taken shall not have average of the goods saved: for the salvage of these is not the cause *of the [*279] taking of the rest; nor the taking of those the cause of the salvage of the goods saved (Show. P. C. 20). So, if the goods are thrown overboard out of caprice or the like, the owner must bear the loss (12 Co. 63). But there is no occasion for any consultation previous to the jettison (Berkley v. Presgrave, 1 East, 228). The jettison must be for the purpose of escape or of saving the ship and cargo, by lightening her and increasing her speed, and so, when the captain of a vessel, in order to prevent dollars from falling into the hands of an enemy, by whom he was about to be attacked, threw them into the sea, and was immediately captured, the loss was considered not to be a general average (Batter v. Wildman, 3 B. & A. 398).

So, the ship and the rest of the cargo must be actually saved on that occasion, for if the ship perish in the storm, there shall be no contribution for such goods as may happen to be saved, because the object for which the goods were thrown overboard was not obtained. But if the ship, being once preserved by such means, and continuing her course, should afterwards be lost, the property saved from the second accident shall contribute to the loss sustained by those whose goods were cast out on the former occasion (Marsh. In. 463). If it be necessary to take a part of a cargo out in boats for the general benefit, in order to lighten a vessel and enable her to pass over a bar at the mouth of a river, &c., and such goods be lost, the owner is entitled to contribution; but he would not be liable to contribute if the goods, &c., remaining in the ship be lost during the separation (Sheppard v. Wright, 1 Show. P. C. 18). If the master, for the preservation of the cargo, when in danger of storm or capture, ran his ship on a rock, shallow, or strand, and the ship be afterwards got off, the damage, thus voluntarily done to both ship and cargo, and the expense of recovering and unloading her, and the value of the goods thrown overboard to enable her to float and to continue her voyage for the benefit of all concerned, are, properly, general average (Ab. Sh. by Shee, Sergt. 490).

The loss must be occasioned in the sole object of preserving both ship and cargo; and this object must be in view at the time of the loss. Where a mainmast was broken in a heavy gale, by carrying an unusual press of sail, in order to escape from an enemy to whom the ship had struck, it was held not a subject of general average (Covington v. Roberts, 2 N. R. 371). So, the act causing the loss must not be such as may be fairly considered part of the adventure, nor the property claimed for be used for the very purpose for which it must have been intended; as where a ship, being unable to escape from a privateer, resisted, beat the privateer off, reached her port, and delivered her cargo in safety, it was held, that the expense, neither of repairing the hull and rigging, nor of curing the men wounded in the conflict, nor of the ammunition, was the subject of general average (Taylor v. Curtis, 6 Taunt. 608; 4 Camp. 337). So, where a vessel put into port for safety, in order to repair a damage occasioned by a storm, neither the costs of repair, nor the wages and provisions of the crew during her detention, nor the damage occasioned to the ship and tackle by her standing out to sea with a press of sail in tempestuous weather, which was necessary in order to avoid being driven on shore and stranding, were held the subject of general average (Power v. Whitmore, 4 M. & S. 145).

An injury done by one ship to another, or to its cargo, without fault in the persons belonging to either ship, is to be equally borne by the owners of the two vessels (Ab. Sh. 354).

What held to be the Subject of General Average.] The expenses of repairing and refitting a vessel do not seem to form, strictly, the subject of general average; but it has been held, where a vessel was in-* [*280] jured by collision with another, and the captain was in consequence compelled to cut away part of the rigging, that the repairs absolutely necessary to enable her to complete her voyage are the subject of general average (Plummer v. Wildman, 3 M. & S. 482), a deduction being made on account of so much of the repairs as was of lasting benefit to the ship (Ib.). So, it has been held that the tackle sacrificed for the security of a vessel in a storm, and the expenses incurred in saving her from total destruction, pilotage, port-duties, charges, and expenses incurred by taking a ship into port, to avoid an impending peril, and for the safety of the cargo, and the expense of extraordinary assistance to preserve and secure a ship from the violence of a storm, at its entrance into the port of destination, are to be sustained by general contribution (Birkely v. Presgrave, 1 East, 220). It seems that, in order to determine whether expenses incurred in consequence of a ship being obliged to go into port are to be considered as general average, the cause which compelled her, whether it were the violence of the elements, or a collision with another ship, is not material (Plummer v. Wildham, 3 M. & S. 482). If it be necessary to unlade the goods, in order to repair the damage done to a ship by collision with another vessel, so as to enable it to complete and prosecute the voyage, it would seem that the expense of unlading, warehousing, and re-shipping the goods, should be sustained by general contribution (Plummer v. Wildman, 3 M. & S. 482; 1 Rol. Abr. 289; Da Costa v. Newnham, 3 T. R. 438). Articles made use of by the master and crew upon the particular emergency, and out of the usual course, for the benefit of the whole concern, and other like expenses, are, it has been said, subjects of general average (lb.). But it is said, in a work of authority, if a ship should necessarily go into an intermediate port for the sole purpose of repairing such a damage as is in itself a proper object of general contribution, possibly the wages, &c., during the period of such a detention, may be considered as general average, on the ground that the company should follow the nature of its principal; and that, for the additional expense of the wages, and maintenance of the crew, incurred while a ship has been waiting for convoy, general contribution has been allowed (Ab. Sh. 497). The wages and maintenance of the crew during the detention of a ship by the orders of a sovereign power, do not, it seems, form the subject of general average (see Abbott, 499; per Buller, J., Da Costa v. Newnham, 2 T. R. 407).

Where an average had been settled on a different principle in a foreign port to which the ship was destined, and the merchant had in order to obtain his goods been obliged to contribute to expenses to which he would not have been contributory by the law of England, it being proved that the average was settled according to the law of the country, the merchant was not allowed to recover back from the master the money so paid, though both parties were British subjects, and the ship a British ship (Simonds v. White, 2 B. & C. 805; see Ab. Sh. 508). A merchant who had paid a contribution to an average settled in Portugal, shall not recover the amount on a policy of insurance in the usual form, it not being proved that the adjustment was made according to the known law and usage of the foreign country, otherwise than by a recital in the decree of the foreign tribunal by which the average had been settled, and which the court did not deem to be evidence of that fact (Power v. Whitmore, 4 M. & S. 141).

By a covenant by the owner of a chartered vessel to keep it in repair during the term, it seems he excludes himself from the claim he would otherwise have against the chartered party on a general average, arising out of repairs (Jackson v. Charnock, 8 T. R. 509).

*If in the act of jettison, or in order to accomplish it, other goods [*281] are destroyed or damaged, the value of these must be included in the general contribution.

If goods are delivered by way of ransom (when it is legal), the owner is entitled to contribution (Marsh. In. 461).

Form of Remedy.

General average may be recovered by action in assumpsit, wherein each party must, in general, sue separately (Birkely v. Presgrave, 1 East, 220; Dodson v. Wilson, 3 Camp. 480; Price v. Noble, 4 Taunt. 123). But the parties entitled to it may proceed in a court of equity, which course of proceeding is frequently advisable, if the account be very complicated; in equity all the parties join (Dodson v. Wilson, 3 Camp. 480). As to the lien for it, Ab. Sh. 247; Simons v. White, 2 B. & C. 811; 4 D. & R. 375.

Form of Pleadings.

Special counts are usually inserted in the declaration, stating the particular circumstances of the loss; but this seems unnecessary, and the indebitatus count would suffice. The plea is the general issue; any other defence deft. must plead specially. See "ASSUMPSIT," and the various titles of references throughout the work.

Precedents.

Indebitatus assumpsit for general average.

(Indebitatus assumpsit, or in debt, as usual: "ASSUMPSIT," "DEBT.") For certain general average then due, and payable from the deft. upon, for, and in respect of, divers goods and merchandises, of him, the said deft., having been before that time carried and conveyed by the said plt. in and on board of a certain ship or vessel, called E—, in and during a certain voyage from F— to G—, for the deft., and at his request; and in respect of certain losses, damages, and expenses, by the said plt. incurred in and about the preservation of the said ship and cargo, and the said last-mentioned goods and merchandises, from damage and loss during the said last-mentioned voyage. And being so indebted, &c. (Conclusion as ante, "ASSUMPSIT;" post, "DEBT," common counts.)

See another form, 2 Ch. Pl. 50; special declaration for, by owner of ship, where anchor, &c., cut away, Ib. 152; the like where ship entangled in shore, Ib. 160; the like where ship, damaged by storms, was laid on beach, and bilged, Ib. 161; statement of average losses on policies, Ib.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

The plt. must prove his ownership of the vessel or goods upon which the loss or expenses were incurred; that the property lost formed the subject of general average; that such loss or expense arose from something done, for the sole purpose and with the intent (causa et mente) of benefitting and preserving the whole; that the common concern was benefitted by the loss or expense, and that the deft.'s property, in respect of the preservation of which the average is claimed, is of a nature bound to contribute its value, and that deft. was its owner; and, lastly, the damages.

Proof of the Plaintiff's Ownership of the Ship or Goods.]*

Slight evidence of this would, it seems, suffice, the plt.'s title not [*282] being disputed. It would be evidenced prima facie by plt's being in possession. Proof of deft.'s delivery of the goods to plt. as the owner of the vessel would suffice. If the deft. should dispute plt.'s title, and he is not estopped from so doing, plt. should be prepared to prove strict legal title. See also title "INSURANCE," under the New Rules.

Proof that the Loss or Expense was incurred.] The evidence for which must depend on the nature of the loss or expense. The log-book should be produced and proved, and some witnesses, present at the loss, subpoenaed (see index, "LOG-BOOK"). The master usually draws up an account of the jettison, and verifies the same by the oath of himself, and some of his crew, as soon as possible after the arrival at any port. If this has been done, the same should be produced and proved.

Proof that the Property lost formed the Subject-matter of General Average.] Anything that is lost, or expense incurred, for the benefit of the whole concern, will form the subject-matter of general average. Average has been allowed for slaves thrown overboard (Brown v. Stapleton, 4 Bing. 122). By the practice of this country and France, goods stowed upon the deck of the ship are excluded from the benefit of general average (Ab. Sh. 487; but see Da Costa v. Edmonds, 4 Camp. 142; Gould v. Oliver, 4 B. N. C. 134; see also S. C. 2 Sc. N. R. 241; 2 Man. & G. 208; Milward v. Hibbert, 3 Q. B. 120). "The practice," says Lord Denman in this case, "appears to have been not to lay it down as a rule of law that, for goods stowed on deck, the owner of them shall be excluded from the benefit of general average, but to receive the evidence of commercial men respecting the usage of the trade, and the general understanding of those engaged in it, and in insuring, which may obviously vary, and require from time to time fresh evidence and different explanations" (see 5 Vict. sess. 2, c. 17). When an entire ship is taken to freight by a merchant, and the master, without his consent, wrongfully takes on board the goods of other persons, and such goods are afterwards cast overboard, to lighten the vessel, the merchant freighter is not bound to contribute to the loss. If, in the act of jettison, or in order to accomplish it, other goods in the ship are broken, or damaged, or destroyed, the value of those also must be included in the general contribution (see Ab. Sh. 487; Sheppard v. Wright, 1 Show. P. C. 18). And where goods are delivered by way of ransom, in some cases, the owner is entitled to contribution (Ab. Sh. 487). An injury done by one ship to another, or to its cargo, without fault in the persons belonging to either ship, is to be equally borne by the owners of the two vessels (Ab. Sh. 487).

Expenses incurred in relation to, and for the sole purpose of, the common good and preservation of the whole, frequently form the subject of general average.

Proof that the Loss or Expense was done and incurred for the purpose, and with the intent, causâ et mente, of benefitting the Whole.]—This must be proved in the same way as the last, by the log-book, and witnesses present (Price v. Noble, 4 Taunt. 123; Birkley v. Pesgrave, 1 East, 220). It would be of little utility to enter into a detail of all the numerous cases on this point; so much depending on the particular facts of each case [*283] (see Ab. Sh. Average; Park. Ins.; Stevens on Average; 3 Ch. Com. L. 433 to 440).

Proof that the Common Concern was benefited.] It need not be proved that the deft.'s property derived an absolute and perfect safety by an arrival or delivery at the port of destination, or the like. Proof of a temporary safety obtained by the losses suffices (Ab. Sh. Average.)

Proof that the Defendant's Property, in respect of which the Average is claimed, is bound to contribute.] The ship and freight gained in the voyage must contribute (Williams v. London Assurance Company, 1 M. & S. 318), but not the ammunition of the ship (Ab. Sh. Average); nor its provisions, even where the cargo consists only of passengers or convicts (Brown v. Stapleton, 4 Bing. 119; 12 Moo. 334; Park. Ins. 217). It has been held, that the freight should contribute in respect of a loss occurring in an outward voyage, in a case where a ship was chartered out and home, and the freight was payable according to the quantity of the homeward cargo, and upon the ship's safe arrival (Williams v. London Assurance Company, 1 M. & S. 318; 1 Edw. 210). All merchandise conveyed in the ship for the purposes of traffic, and part of the cargo, to whomsoever they belong, and however small their weight or value, are bound to contribute (Ab. Sh. Average); but things belonging to, and attached to, the persons of the passengers, and taken on board for private use, do not contribute (Brown v. Stapyleton, 4 Bing. 122). It is not, however, every object of value which is liable to a contribution, but only such stores as are termed merces, which word has never been held to extend to provisions, but includes only the cargo put on board for the purposes of commerce (lb.). Passengers or crew do not contribute for their safety (lb.). The owner of slaves must contribute for their safety; but received convicts are not considered as cargo, and cannot be brought into contribution (Ab. Sh. Average; Brown v. Stapyleton, 4 Bing. 122). Sailors do not contribute from their wages, except for the ransom of the ship (lb.). The lenders upon bottomry and respondentia do not contribute (1 Holt. Ship. 323; 2 ib. 201).

Proof that Defendant was Owner of the Property for which he is to contribute.] General evidence of this will suffice; such as possession, his shipping the goods. &c., or his admissions of the ownership.

Proof of Value of the Defendant's Property.] This must be proved, though slight evidence will suffice to throw the disproof on deft. If the average be claimed in respect of the ship and freight, the contribution must be made according to the value of the ship at the end of the voyage, and the clear amount of the freight or earnings of the voyage, after deducting the wages of the crew, and other expenses of the voyage (Ab. Sh. Average). The value of goods at the time of plt.'s loss should be proved.

Proof of Value of Plaintiff's Property, and mode of Contribution.] The value of the plt.'s property at the time of the loss, or the expenses in respect of which the average is claimed, must be proved. The amount of the value of goods must be estimated at the clear price they would have fetched at the place of destination, where the average is adjusted after the ship's arrival at the place of *destination. But if the [*284] ship, in consequence of any misfortune to be sustained by general average, be compelled to return to its lading port, and the average be immediately adjusted, in this case the goods contribute only according to the invoice price, for the price of sale is unknown. And as to the furniture of the ship, inasmuch as the new articles furnished will, in general, be of greater value than those lost, it is usual to compound the difference, by deducting one-third from the price of the new articles (Ab. Sh. Average). And the same very learned writer concludes, as to the mode of contribution, with the following example: "Supposing, therefore, a general average to be settled, upon the ship's arrival at the port of destination, according to the above principles, it is necessary, in the first place, to take an account of the several losses which are to be made good by contribution; in the second place, to take another account of the value of all the articles that are to contribute, in which must be included the value of the goods, &c., thrown overboard, &c.; for otherwise, the proprietors of those goods, &c., will receive their full value, and contribute nothing towards the loss." The value of the freight of the goods, &c., thrown overboard, should be included (lb.). The loss is to be calculated between the owner of the ship and the owner of the goods, according to the law of the port of discharge, and therefore an action will not lie here to recover back money paid at St. Petersburg, according to the law of Russia, although the consignor and consignee of the goods, and the owner of the vessel, are British subjects, and by the law of England an average loss would not be payable under the circumstance (Simonds v. White, 4 D. & R. 375; 2 B. & C. 805; and see Smith v. Macneil, 2 Dowl. 538). The proportion of the amount of the several shares is usually settled by the broker or ship-agent; but such settlement is not conclusive (2 Holt, Ship. 200).

Evidence for Defendant.

The evidence for the defence will consist in the disproof of plt.'s case, the whole burden of the case lying on plt.

How Defendant may avail himself of.

In all actions where accord and satisfaction is a good defence an award may be pleaded in bar (Com. Dig. Acc. D 1; Blake's case, *6 Rep. [*285] 43 b; Bac. Ab. Arbit. G). In assumpsit, debt on simple contract, and action on the case, this defence might formerly be given in evidence under the general issue, non assumpsit or nil debet (Ingram v. Milnes, 8 East, 445, Allen v. Harris, 1 Raym. 122; Bac. Abr. Arbit. G; see also 2 Esp. N. P. C. 504; 2 Moo. 30; and 8 Taunt. 146); but in trespass it should be pleaded specially (Parsloe v. Baily, 2 ib. 1039; 6 Mod. 221). But since R. G. H. 4 Will. IV. it must be pleaded specially in all cases (see Milner v. Allen, C. & J. 47). It will be a good plea in trespass, though the award be not submitted by the plt. and deft. alone; as where, in an action against A., he pleaded award for the same cause between the plt. on one side, and A. and another jointly on the other side (Tomlinson v. Ar-riskin, Com. Rep. 328); and award made between one of several trespassers and the plt. is a bar to an action against the others (Peytoe's case, 9 Rep. 78; Com. Dig. Pleader, 3 M. 13). The award must be pleaded; even where it was made a rule of court a second action would not be stayed on motion (Decas v. Jay, 4 Moo. & P. 285; 6 Bing. 319). If a man pay money on a void award, and it be accepted, it may be pleaded as an accord and satisfaction (Bacon v. Dubarry, 1 Salk. 70).

Form of Pleadings.

Plea.] This, as in a declaration, usually commences with a statement of the submission, and includes such other statements, as far as the award, as are necessary to sustain the declaration on it (post, see 1 Ch. Pl. 290). Where the award is pleaded in bar of a trespass, a place must be laid as to where the submission was made (Hare v. George, Cro. Eliz. 66). Most of the precedents state the deft.'s performance of the award; but this was till lately thought unnecessary where each of the parties had mutual remedies (Gascoyne v. Edwards, 1 Y. & J.; Croft v. Harris, 19 Carth. 187; Kyd, 390, 392; Allen v. Harris, 1 Raym. 122. 1032; 6 Mod. 222); but, in indebitatus assumpsit for tolls or other debt, a plea of award to pay 13*l.* was held bad on demurrer, for want of averring payment or a tender of the sum awarded (Allen v. Milner, 2 Tyr. 113; 2 C. & J. 37; Gascoyne v. Edwards, supra; Whitehead v. Tattersall, 1 Ad. & E. 491; see Edwards v. Baugh, 11 M. & W. 641); though in assumpsit for unliquidated damages, or in trespass for damages, such a plea would seem good, the remedy being changed (Ib.). Where the award is for a collateral thing (Parsloe v. Bailey, 1 Salk. 76; S. C. 6 Mod. 222); or where it is to be performed at a day not yet arrived (1 Rol. 267, l. 30; Lutw. 56; Com. Dig. Accord. D, 2). But where the time of the performance is past, and the parties have not mutual remedies, deft. must aver a performance (1 Roll. 267, l. 25-27; Dighton v. Whiting, Lutw. 56). It is not enough to say the deft. was always ready to perform it (Ib.). Deft. may allege an excuse for the performance, by reason of plt.'s act, as if the deft. tender the money at the day, and plt. refuses to accept it (1 Roll. 267, l. 40; Dighton v. Whiting, supra; Russell v. Williams, ib. 283); if the award be bad on the face of it the plt. may demur. To an action for not delivering some hops pursuant to contract it was held that an award of mutual releases alone could not on a reference of all matters in difference be pleaded in bar without averring that the deft. had executed a release; a readiness to execute is not sufficient (Freeman v. Bernard, 1 Salk. 69; Clapcott v. Davy, 1 Ld. Raym. 611). A plea that the causes of action in the declaration have been referred to arbitrators and are still under their consideration, and that a reasonable time for making their award has not yet elapsed, is bad in bar; and if not commencing or concluding in abatement, cannot be treated as a *plea in abatement (Harris v. Reynolds, 14 Law J. N. S., Q. B. 241; 9 Jur. 808). [*286] As to pleading puis darrein continuance, Story v. Bloxham, 2 Esp. 804; Lowes v. Kermond, 8 Taunt. 146. In pleading a parol award it is not necessary to set forth the exact words, it is sufficient to show the effect and substance of what was awarded by word of mouth (Hanson v. Liversedge, 2 Vent. 242; Tomlinson v. Arriskin, 1 Com. Rep. 329). An award which does not extend to the whole of the things demanded, is not a good plea to an action on the demand (Clapcott v. Davy, 1 Ld. Raym. 611; Farrer v. Bates, Al. 4; Bac. Arbit. G.). To an action on a bond for money, the deft. pleaded that after the money became due the plt. and deft. by parol submitted to an award, that arbitrator awarded deft. to pay a certain sum, and that he tendered the sum; held bad on demurrer, as the debt was due by specialty (Luddington v. White, Sty. 350).

Replication.] The plt. may deny the award, or reply any other matter, which we shall hereafter consider under what the deft. may plead to an action on the award (post); or that the subject-matter of his action was not included in the reference, though the terms of such reference were general, of all matters in difference, and the causes of action were subsisting at the time of the reference (Ravce v. Farmer, 4 T. R. 146; and post, "JUDGMENT"); or deft. may now assign that the matters in dispute mentioned in the declaration are different to the matters referred. A replication in replevin justifying a distress under a power to distrain given by an award, is a departure from an avowry, relying on the common-law right to distrain for rent-service (Pascoe v. Pascoe, 3 Bing. N. C. 898).

Precedents.

Plea of submission to arbitration, and award thereon.

Commence as usual, see "ASSUMPSIT, PLEAS IN.") Saith, that after the making of the said several promises in the said declaration mentioned, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c., (date of submission),* divers differences having arisen and being then depending respecting the same by and between the plt. and the deft.,  for the settling and adjusting of which said several differences, they, the said plt. and deft., by two several writings obligatory, bearing date, to wit, the same day and year last aforesaid, reciprocally bound each other in the penal sum of £100, to be paid to each other, with conditions to the said bond annexed, to make void the same, if the said plt. and deft., their respective heir and assigns, did, &c., as by the said several respective bonds and conditions, reference being thereunto respectively had, will more fully and at large appear: and the deft. in fact says, that the said arbitrators above named, having taken upon themselves the burden of the arbitration aforesaid, betwixt the said plt. and the said deft.; and having deliberately considered what had been alleged and offered by each of the said parties, afterwards and within the said time above limited for the making of their said award, to wit, on, &c., made their award in writing of and concerning the premises so referred as aforesaid, under their hands in writing, ready to be delivered to the said parties; by which said award, after making all allowances to the plt., they, the said arbitrators, found the plt. to be in arrear to the deft. in the sum of £60; and awarded and ordered the plt. to pay to the deft., or his order, the said sum of £60, in ten days after the date of the said award, as by reference, &c.; and the deft. saith, that though the said ten days had elapsed before the commencement of this suit, the said sum, or any part thereof, has not yet been paid; and this he is ready to verify.

Another form.

Another Form.] (*Commencement as usual down to ), the plt. and deft., by mutual bonds of submission, bearing date the _____, did agree to refer to [*287] A. C. and B. D., as arbitrators, as well as certain differences which had then arisen between them the said plt. and deft., as also all and all manner of actions, (&c. as in the bonds); and the said plt., and deft. did thereby then agree in all things well and truly to stand to, obey, abide, (&c., stating the operative part of the submission; then state any enlargements of the time for making the award, as stated in the award): And the said A. C. and B. D. afterwards, and within the time so limited for making their award as aforesaid, to wit, on _____, having taken upon themselves the burthen of the said reference, and having heard, examined, and considered the allegation, witnesses, and evidences of both the said parties, did make their award in writing, of and concerning the premises, and of and concerning the said premises and undertakings in the said declaration mentioned, and did thereby then award (here set out the award); as by the said award, reference being thereunto had, will more fully appear; (then, if the deft. have performed his part of the award, he may aver the performance thus:) And the deft. in fact says, that after the making of the said award, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on _____, he the said deft. did _____ (stating the performance): And this he, the deft., is ready to verify, &c.

Another Form.] *Commencement as in 1st Precedent down to ; they mutually submitted themselves and did then refer the said matters in difference to the award, order, and arbitrament of A. B., and agreed that the decision of the said arbitrator should be final, so as the said award should be made in writing ready to be delivered to the said parties, or such of them as should desire the same on or before the _____ day of _____, then next, and the deft. further saith, that afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, in consideration that the deft. had then promised the plt. to perform and fulfil the said award in all things to be contained therein on the part of the deft. to be performed and fulfilled, he the said plt. then promised the deft. to perform and fulfil the said award in all things to be contained therein on the plt.'s part to be performed and fulfilled, and the deft. further saith that the said A. B. took upon him the burden of the said arbitration, and having duly considered and examined the said subject-matter in difference between the plt. and deft. he the said A. B. did then make and publish his award and umpirage in writing under his hand, of and concerning the premises ready to be delivered to the said parties, and did thereby then award and declare of and concerning the said matters in difference so referred, that the deft. should pay the plt. the sum of £ on the day of then next, as by the said award, reference being thereunto had, will more fully appear. Verify.

See form of a Plea of Reference by Agreement, 3 Ch. Pl. 794.

If the award is to be merely denied, the replication may be thus :—

Replication denying the Award.

Says that the said arbitrators did not make any such award of and concerning the premises, as the said deft. hath, in and by his plea in that behalf alleged; and this he prays may be inquired of by the country, &c.

Replication denying the reference to Arbitration.] That the plt. and deft. did not submit themselves to, or agree to refer or refer the said matters in difference to the award, order, or arbitrament of the said A. B. in manner, &c., as the deft. hath in his said plea alleged; conclude to the country, &c.

Evidence for Defendant.

Award, &c.] The deft. should be prepared to prove the submission, and the award, as directed post, p. 303 (see Spooner v. Payne, 1 C. B. 628; 16 L. J. 225, C. P.). Some part of this evidence may be dispensed with by the plt., on his replication admitting it. With *respect to the proof of the performance, that depends on the fact whether performance is [*288] necessary, and which may be collected from the preceding observations relative to the plea.

Effect of.] An award, regularly made under the submission of the parties, precludes a party to it from afterwards proceeding on the subject-matter concerning which the award is made (Campbell v. Twemlow, 1 Pri. 81; Bailey v. Lechmere, 1 Esp. 375). Thus, where the amount of damages on a breach of covenant was submitted to arbitration, the award unimpeached was held conclusive (Whitehead v. Tattersall, 1 Ad. & E. 491; see Day v. Bonnin, 3 B. N. C. 319; Bird v. Cooper, 3 Dowl. 148; Bac. Abr. Arbit. E.; Stonehewer v. Farrar, 9 Jur. 203; Price v. Price, 9 Dowl. 334; Williams v. Mouldsdales, 7 M. & W. 134.) It is conclusive of all matters within the scope of the submission, though they were not in fact brought before the arbitrator (Dunn v. Murray, 9 B. & C. 780; Dicas v. Jay, 6 Bing. 519; Smith v. Johnson, 15 East, 213; Collins v. Powell, 2 T. R. 756); and cannot become the subject of inquiry under a subsequent submission (Trimingham v. Trimingham, 4 Nev. & M. 786). In all actions where accord is a good bar, so is arbitrament, though the converse does not hold (Com. Dig. Accord. D; Bac. Abr. Arbit. G; ante, p. 284). An award of a collateral matter is a good defence (Parsloe v. Bailey, 1 Salk. 76; 6 Mod. 221). It is no defence if the award be void (Dighton v. Whitting, Lutw. 57; Russell v. Williams, ib. 283; Carth. 188); or to do a thing, the performance of which the party cannot be compelled to do (1 Roll. 266, l. 35 to 45); or, if the award does not give a new duty, but only discharges the old demand by release, &c. (Freeman v. Bernard, 1 Salk. 69; S. C. 1 Raym. 247). It is no defence in actions real, nor in actions founded solely on a deed, nor solely upon a statute or record (Com. Dig. Accord, D, 2). As arbitrators are not agents to state an account, but judges to decide disputes, an award is not evidence as an account stated (Bates v. Townley, 12 Jur. 606; see Keen v. Batshore, 1 Esp. 194). Where an award ascertained the value of some furniture, &c., adopted and acted on by the deft., it was held evidence of an account stated (Salmon v. Watson, 4 Moore, 73). In an action of ejectment, a previous award respecting the title to the land is conclusive evidence of the right (Doe v. Horner, 8 Ad. & E. 235; Doe v. Rosser, 3 East, 15; Doe v. Roper, Woodf. 788; see Richards v. Bassett, 10 B. & C. 657). Assumpsit against executor, plea "plene administravit," an award on a submission between the plt. and deft. as executor, respecting the matters in difference between the plt. and the testator, which ascertains the amount due from the testator's estate to the plt., but does not direct the deft. to pay it, cannot be offered by the plt. in evidence as an admission of assets by the deft. to defeat the plea (Pearson v. Henry, 5 T. R. 6). But if the arbitrator order the executor to pay the amount, the award will, it seems, be conclusive evidence of assets in his hands, which he will not be permitted to contradict (Worthington v. Barlow, 7 T. R. 453). An award will not affect any rights of action, unless such rights were included in the matters referred to the arbitrators; and, therefore, an award made upon a reference of all matters in dispute between the parties, is no bar to a cause of action subsisting against the deft. at the time of the reference, upon proof by plt. that the subject-matter of such action was not laid before the arbitrators, nor included in the matters referred (Com. Dig. Accord, D; Al. 6; Ravee v. Farmer, 4 T. R. 146; Golightly v. Jellicoe, in notis, 6 T. R. 610). So, where the deft. owed the plt. a sum of money for arrears of an annuity *for which he gave him a cognovit, but disputed plt.'s claim to [*289] other sums due on a partnership account between them, and on the same day that a cognovit was given, both parties referred the accounts and all matters in dispute, but no question respecting the arrears was raised before the arbitrators; held, that the claim on the cognovit was not a matter in difference at the time, and that the plt. was not precluded by the award in his favour, or a release of all demands in general terms executed by him pursuant to it, from proceeding to enforce the cognovit (Upton v. Upton, 1 Dowl. 400). Where a landlord sued his tenant for rent and on the money counts, and gave particulars for money had and received for a quantity of stone quarried and carried away by the deft., and at the trial took a general verdict, but for the amount of the rent only; and having brought a second action in case for quarrying and carrying away the same stone, delivered a few days before the trial of the first action, a particular exactly corresponding with the particular delivered on the count for money had and received in the action, the recovery in the first was held no bar to recovery in the second action (Hadley v. Green, 2 C. & J. 374). But where an action for salary and for damages for dismissal from service was referred, and the plt. gave evidence of dismissal, but claimed no damages for it before the arbitrator who awarded only the amount of the salary, the award was a bar to a second action for damages for the dismissal (Dunn v. Murray, 9 B. & C. 780; and see Bagot v. Williams, 3 B. & C. 238; Bowden v. Horne, 7 Bing. 716; see post, evidence for plt., "JUDGMENT RECOVERED"). If it is supposed such an answer will be set up, deft. should be prepared to prove the cause of action was referred, and that the arbitrators took it into their consideration (Smith v. Johnson, 15 East, 214, 215). As to the necessity of proving deft.'s performance, post, 299. The effect of an award to pay a sum of money, is to create a debt from one party to the other, and is the subject of an action, or is proveable under a commission of bankruptcy (7 Pri. 309; Bac. Abr. Arbit. G). But neither personal nor real property is transferred by the mere force of an award; and, therefore, where it is awarded that one person shall convey certain land to another, though an action will lie for not conveying the land, it was held that the land itself did not pass by the mere force of the award (1 Roll. 270; Marks v. Marriot, 1 Raym. 115); and where, on a reference by landlord and tenant, the arbitrator awarded that a stack of hay, left upon the premises by the tenant, should be delivered up by himself to the landlord, upon the tenant being paid a certain sum, it was held that the property in the hay did not pass to the landlord on his tender of the money, by mere force of the award, against the consent of the tenant, who refused to accept the money, or deliver up the hay (Hunter v. Rice, 15 East, 100; Gunton v. Nurse, 2 B. & B. 447; S. C. 5 Moo. 259). However, where the arbitrator's powers are created by statute, it will have the effect of a legislative conveyance: as, in the case of commissioners, to set out, allot, and apportion certain land to different persons, the allotments, when duly made, pass an absolute right of property to those persons in whose favour the award is made (Johnson v. Hodson, 8 East, 39); but it must appear that the commissioners have pursued their authority, or it will not be binding; therefore, where the commissioners, under an inclosure act, were directed to make an award respecting the boundaries of a parish, and to advertise a description of the boundaries so fixed, and they were to be inserted in their award, and to be binding, final, and conclusive, but the boundaries mentioned in the award varied from those which had been advertised, it was held that the award *was not binding as to the boundaries, as the commissioners [*290] had deviated from their authority (Rex v. Washbrook, 4 B. & C. 732; 7 D. & R. 221). So, if they go beyond their powers, the award will be void pro tanto (Thorpe v. Cooper, 5 Bing. 129). But a right to any species of property may be ascertained, so as to give the party in whose favour it is made a possessory remedy for the recovery of it (Ib.): thus, in an action of ejectment, when the lessor of the plt. and the deft. had before referred their right to the land to an arbitrator, who had awarded in favour of the lessor, it was held that the award precluded the deft. from disputing the lessor's title (Doe v. Rosser, 3 East, 15). But parties who submit their right to arbitration, can only bind themselves, and the parties claiming under them, as the award cannot be received as evidence of a right, as against strangers (Rex v. Cotton, 4 Camp. 444). So, an award made on an ejectment brought by A. against a mortgagor, after mortgage, is not evidence for A. on an ejectment brought by the mortgagee against him (Doe v. Webber, 1 Ad. & E. 119); but where the right to a watercourse and a question of boundary were referred by a submission between A. and his tenant B. on the one side, and C. a neighbouring landowner on the other; the award was held admissible evidence on both points in a subsequent action by C. against B., although B. had in the mean time become tenant of the same land to another landlord, under whom he now justified, and who was not shown to be in privity with A. (Breton v. Knight, Winton, S. A. 1837; cor. Tindal, C. J., confirmed in Scacc. on motion for new trial (Roscoe, N. P. 153). And, on an issue between plt. and an execution creditor of B., whether growing crops belonged to B., an award made between plt. and B., touching the crops, just before the execution, was held admissible as against the deft. (Thorpe v. Eyre, 1 Ad. & E. 926). And it may be as well to observe, that a prospective agreement to refer all matters in dispute which may hereafter arise, cannot be shown as a defence to an action for the recovery of such disputed matter, for the superior courts will not suffer themselves to be ousted of their jurisdiction by the private agreement of the parties (Thompson v. Charnock, 8 T. R. 139; and see 2 B. & P. 131). The judgment of an usurped jurisdiction is not admissible as an award without proof of mutual submission (Rogers v. Wood, 2 B. & A. 245).

But it is only as against the parties to the award, or those claiming under them, that an award has any force at all (Evans v. Rees, 10 Ad. & E. 151; Doe v. Webber, 1 Ad. & E. 119; R. v. Fontainebleau, 17 Law J. 187; Q.B.; see R. v. Cotton, 3 Camp. 444; Manning v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 12 M. & W. 237). But in an action of false imprisonment against a servant of East India Company, the deft. was allowed to give in evidence, in mitigation of damages under the general issue, a release given by the plt. to the East India Company, in pursuance of an award between the plt. and the company, in which plt. was awarded a large compensation for injuries done him by the company's servants, particularly by deft., the matters in difference in terms comprehending the claim in the action (Shelling v. Farmer, 1 Stra. 646). An award respecting the right to a chattel, deposited with the arbitrator, precludes the party against whom the award is made from suing the arbitrator in trover for refusing to deliver up the chattel to him, for the award deciding against him is evidence that the withholding the chattel is no unlawful conversion (Gunton v. Nurse, 5 Moo. 259; see further, Brett v. Beales, 1 Moo. & M. 416; Doe v. Boulter, 6 Ad. & E. 675). Where a tenant under a lease was served with notice under an award, made [*291] between two parties, who had claimed rights (paramount *to that of his lease) to enter and possess the lands to recover arrears of rent-charge, attorned and paid rent to the one whose claim the award recognised; held, on proof of these facts, that he became tenant to the latter from year to year (Doe v. Boulter, supra). The parties referred a dispute as to the right to a farm to the decision of an arbitrator, who awarded against the one who had received rent, as landlord, from the tenant, and notice of the award was given to the tenant; and, with the sanction of the other party, the tenant was directed in future to pay his rent to the successful party as his landlord afterwards, the former landlord distrained on the tenant for rent; held, in replevin, that though the tenant is estopped from saying that his landlord had no title, yet he was at liberty to prove these circumstances, to show that his landlord's title had determined, and that the loser was estopped from setting up his title of landlord, having himself induced the tenant to pay rent to another person (Downes v. Cooper, 2 B. & B. 256). See more fully as to the effect of an award, Russell on Awards, 465—472.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

The plt. must be prepared to support his defence, to defeat the award: see the evidence for deft. in an action on award, post, 305. When an award is given in evidence, the opposite party may impeach its validity (Whitehead v. Tattersall, 1 Ad. & E. 491). Thus, where deft. offered an award in evidence made on a reference of all matters in difference, the plt. may prove that on some of the matters referred the arbitrator has not awarded (Ingram v. Milnes, 8 East, 444); and though a submission by rule of court, referring an action and an award on the action generally, is prima facie evidence of a good award; yet the deft., under a plea of no award, may show that there were several issues in the action referred which were not determined by the award (Dresser v. Stansfield, 14 M. & W. 822). And the court will award a new trial if the evidence be rejected (Ravee v. Farmer, 4 T. R. 146; but see Shelling v. Farmer, 1 Stra. 646). And as the mistaken misconduct of the arbitrator can not be pleaded, so it can not be given in evidence (Wills v. Macarmick, 2 Wills. 148; Dyer v. Dawson, cited 1 Coop. C. C. 420, n.; Swinford v. Burn, Gow. N. P. 5; Johnson v. Darrant, 2 B. & Ad. 935; but see Matson v. Trower, Ry. & M. 17). Where a submission provided that if the arbitrator should award that the defts. (executors) should purchase the plt. an annuity, he should, and might, award it, with a proviso that in case of the deficiency of assets the sum should abate. The award was made without any proviso. It was held before the new rules, that on non assumpsit on the award the defts. might prove a deficiency of assets, as the arbitrator ought to have inserted the proviso (Crump v. Adney, 1 C. & M. 355). If the subject-matter of the present action was not included in the reference and award, plt. should be prepared to prove it, either by showing it was not a matter in difference at the time of the reference, or that the arbitrators could not have taken it into their consideration (Smith v. Johnstone, 15 Ea. 214, 215; Ravee v. Farmer, 4 T. R. 146; Golightly v. Jellicoe, 6 T. R. 610). The arbitrator himself may be called to prove the latter fact (Martin v. Thornton, 4 Esp. 180).

Form of Remedy.

An award may be enforced by action as of right, whether the submission be by parol, by writing not under seal, by bond, by deed, by judge's order, order of Nisi Prius, rule of Court, or order of Equity (Hodsden v. Harridge, 2 Saund. 62 b. n.; Winter v. White, 3 Moo. 674; Ferrer v. Ovin, 7 B. & C. 427; Tomlin v. Fordwich (Mayor), 6 Nev. & M. 594; Still v. Holford, 4 Campb. 17; Stalworth v. Inns, 13 M. & W. 466; Wharton v. King, 1 Moo. & R. 96; Bonner v. Charnton, 5 Ea. 139; Tremenhere v. Tresilian, 1 Sid. 452; Carpenter v. Thornton, 3 B. & A. 52; Dowse v. Cox, 3 Bing. 20).

The mode of enforcing an award by the party in whose favour it is made varies according to the form of the submission. Where the submission is made a rule of court, the party may proceed in the summary mode of attachment (Hull v. Mister, 1 Salk. 83; Tidd, 865); and, if a verdict has been taken for the party's security, he may enter up judgment thereon, and take out execution (Ib.; Lee v. Lingard, 1 East, 401; Grimes v. Naish, 1 B. & P. 480; and Hayward v. Ribbans, 4 East, 310). The party has also a remedy, in some cases, by a bill in equity for a specific performance; he has also a remedy by action, which is the remedy to be here considered. The party cannot proceed both by action and attachment at the same time (Badley v. Loveday, 1 B. & P. 81; And. 299; Ca. t. Hard. 106). The deft., being taken under an attachment for non-performance of award, went to prison, perversely declaring that he would rather go to gaol than pay. The plt. then commenced an action upon the award; and on motion that he might be compelled to discontinue, or the deft. might be discharged out of custody, the court ordered him to be discharged, on giving a bond to the plt., with sureties to the master's satisfaction, conditioned to the same effect as in the case of a recognizance of bail (Lonsdale (Earl) v. Whinnay, 1 C. M. & R. 591; 3 Dowl. P. C. 263; 5 Tyrw. 203). *An action may be [*293] maintained against executors as such, on an award, directing them to pay money out of deceased's assets (Dowse v. Cox, 3 Bing. 20). It may be as well here to observe, that a party cannot be sued on a prospective agreement to refer all matters in dispute which may hereafter arise, for not so referring, semble (Tattersall v. Groote, 2 B. & P. 131; Thompson v. Charnock, 8 T. R. 139).

Assumpsit.] When the submission is by parol, or by writing not under seal, the party failing to perform the award may be sued in assumpsit; the submission to refer raising an implied undertaking that each party shall perform his part (Lupart v. Wilson, 11 Mod. 170; 2 Saund. 62. b. n.; Purslow v. Bayley, 2 Ld. Raym. 1039; Squire v. Greville, 6 Mod. 34); and assumpsit lies whether the submission be by order of nisi prius (Bonner v. Charlton, 5 East, 139), or a judge's order (Still v. Halford, 4 Camp. 19; Carpenter v. Thornton, 3 B. & A. 57; Wharton v. King, 1 M. & R. 96). A revocation of a submission to arbitration not under seal is, in effect, a breach of agreement to stand to, obey, abide, perform, &c., an award, and for which assumpsit lies (Brown v. Tanner, M'Cle. & Y. 405; Warburton v. Storr, 4 B. & C. 103; 6 D. & R. 213). On an award to do a collateral act, and not for the payment of money, and when the submission is without deed, assumpsit is the only remedy (2 Saund. 62 b. n. 5); and it is the only remedy on an award, by submission not under seal, for payment of money by instalments, all of which are not due (Rudder v. Price, 1 H. Bl. 554; 2 Saund. 336 n. 6; Coke v. Whorwood, ib. 547). Where two persons assigned to the plt. all debts due to them, and gave him a power of attorney to receive and compound for them, under which he submitted to arbitration the matters in difference then subsisting between his principals and the defts., he and the defts. mutually promising to abide by the award, and the arbitrators awarded him a certain sum, it was held, that he might maintain assumpsit on the award in his own name (Banfill v. Leigh, 8 T. R. 571). See dictum of Dallas, C. J., that the deft. cannot dispute the validity of an award in an action, Swinford v. Bevin, Gow, 5. Bayley, B., is reported to have said that indebitatus assumpsit will lie on an award (Crump v. Abney, 1 C. & M. 355). Where A. and B. jointly and severally promised to perform the award, and the award directed A. to pay one sum, and B. another sum to the plt., an action of assumpsit was held to lie against A. and B. jointly, for they are jointly liable for the sums awarded to be paid by each (Mansell v. Berredge, 7 T. R. 352; see Genne v. Tinker, 3 Lev. 24; Johnson v. Wilson, Willes, 248; Cumberland (Duke) v. Errington, 5 T. R. 522). Where a party dies pending a reference, and the award directed payment to be made by his executors out of his assets, held that assumpsit lay against his executors (Dowse v. Cox, 3 Bing. 20). If a party assign his contingent interest under an award pending the reference, the action must be brought in the name of the original party (Day v. Smith, 1 Dowl. 460). But, where the debts due to a firm are assigned to a trustee, with a power of attorney to receive and compound for the same, he may sue in assumpsit on an award made on a submission between himself, as attorney of the firm, and a debtor to it, respecting matters in difference between the latter and the firm, nor need he make profert of the deed in his declaration, as it is pleaded merely by way of inducement (Banfill v. Leigh, 8 T. R. 571).

Debt. [*294] "An action of debt lies on an award for a sum of money [*294] *awarded upon a submission, either by rule of court, or by deed, or by writing not under seal, or by parol" (2 Saund. 62 b, n.; Freem. 410, 5; Dilley v. Polhill, 2 Stra. 923; Hawkins v. Colclough, 1 Burr. 276; Purslow v. Baily, 2 Ld. Raym. 1039). Six partners entered into two bonds of submission; in one, three of them gave a joint and several bond to the other three, conditioned to perform the award respecting all differences between the partners or any of them, and the three latter gave a similar bond to the former, the arbitrator awarded that one of the three former should pay a certain sum to one of his co-obligors; held, that debt lay on the award at the suit of one against the other, although no action on the bond would so lie (Winter v. White, 1 B. & B. 350). Debt now lies against an executor (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, ss. 13, 14; see Riddell v. Sutton, 5 Bing. 200). But, to maintain this action on the award, the whole of the money awarded must be due; for, if it be payable by instalments, and any of them are unpaid, it cannot be supported (Rudder v. Price, 1 H. Bl. 547); and, on an award for the performance of a collateral act, debt will not lie (Purslow v. Baily, 2 Ld. Raym. 1041); nor can it be supported against executors or administrators upon an award made in the lifetime of their testator or intestate, when the submission is not under seal, as they might have waged their law (Hampton v. Boyer, Cro. Eliz. 557; Freeman v. Bernard, 1 Salk. 69). But, where the parties are bound in a penal sum to perform the award, and it is made within the limited time, an action of debt lies on the bond for the non-performance of the award, whether the award be to pay money, or to perform a collateral act, or for another breach of the condition, as, for a revocation of the submission; and it has been held, that, where the parties bound under a submission by bonds agreed that the time should be enlarged to a future day, and such agreement was, within the period limited for the award, indorsed under seal (Browne v. Goodman, 3 T. R. 592); on the bonds of submission, the indorsement operated as a defeasance, and that debt on the bond would lie for non-performance of an award, made within the enlarged time, but after the original time had expired (Gregg v. Talbott, 2 B. & C. 179; S. C. 3 D. & E. 446); and that though one of the parties die before the expiration of the period (Tyler v. Jones, 3 B. & C. 144; 4 D. & R. 740). By a countermand or revocation of the power of the arbitrator, the bond is forfeited, and debt lies (8 Co. 82; and see Milne v. Gratrix, 7 East, 608; Oliver v. Collins, 11 ib. 367; Marsh v. Bulteel, 5 B. & A. 507; S. C. 1 D. & R. 106). Where the parties entered into an agreement, not under seal, to refer a dispute to the arbitration of C. S., and bound themselves mutually in a penalty for the true and faithful observance and performance of the award to be made by C. S., it was held, that the penalty was incurred by a revocation of the submission (Warburton v. Storr, 4 B. & C. 103; S. C. 6 D. & R. 213; Brown v. Tanner, 1 M. & Y. 464).

Where the submission is by bond, debt on the bond is preferable to debt on the award, for it casts upon the debt. the necessity of discharging himself from the penalty by showing performance of the condition, and relieves plt. from proof of a mutual submission which he must allege and prove, if traversed, in order to support the latter form of action (Ferrer v. Oven, 7 B. & C. 427). Where the original submission is by bond, though the time be enlarged by deed, an action for non-performance of the award may be maintained on the bond, for the alteration does not defeat the bond (Greig v. Talbot, 2 B. & C. 179). If the time be enlarged by agreement not under seal, and the award be made beyond the original time, but within the substituted period, no action lies on the bond, but assumpsit *may be brought [*295] on the new submission by enlargement in case obedience to the award be withheld (Brown v. Goodman, 3 T. R. 592, n.).

Covenant.] Where the submission is by deed, with covenants to perform the award, covenant lies on such submission for the non-performance of the award; though debt will lie only for the non-payment of the money; or, where the submission has been revoked, covenant will lie against the party revoking such submission (Marsh v. Bulteel, 5 B. & A. 512; S. C. 1 D. & R. 106; Charney v. Winstanley, 5 East, 266; Tomlin v. Fordwich (Major), 6 Nev. & M. 594); Though the judgment on covenant is only interlocutory on a judgment by default in an action of covenant for the non-performance of an award, the court will refer it to the master, to compute what is due for principal and interest on the award (Meggison v. ———, cited 1 Tidd, 618). Where debt. has revoked his submission, and the award has not been made, there seems to be no objection in assumpsit or covenant on the submission to join a count for the revocation with a count on the award, and the judge at N. P. will not compel the plt. to elect on which count he will rely at the trial, and if debt. prove the revocation, in order to defeat the claim on the count on the award, the plt. will have his damages on the other (Browne v. Tanner, 1 C. & P. 651; Marsh v. Bulteel, supra).

The preferable Remedy.] When the award is merely for the payment of money, and the whole sum is due, debt is the most advisable form of remedy, as the judgment is final; whereas, in assumpsit, and covenant, it is interlocutory; and debt on the award itself is in one respect preferable to debt on the arbitration-bond, inasmuch as breaches must be assigned or suggested under the 8 and 9 Will. III. c. 11, s. 8 (Welsh v. Ireland, 6 East, 613; see 2 Saund. 61, 127), but as, by declaring on the award, the plt. takes upon himself the onus of proving a mutual submission: whereas, by declaring on the bond, he transfers the burthen of proof to the debt., for it then lies on the latter to discharge himself from the penalty by showing a performance of the conditions, the latter course seems preferable (per Bailey, J., in Ferrer v. Oven, 7 B. & C. 427). If there be any other demand more properly the subject of an action of assumpsit, which may be joined with the demand on the award, it is as well to declare in assumpsit.

Form of Pleadings.

Declaration—In Assumpsit, or Debt, on the Award.] The pleadings in these two actions are so nearly similar that the observations, as to the form, may be classed under one head. The venue is transitory. The venue cannot be changed on the common affidavit (Whitburn v. Staines, 2 B. & P. 355; Stanway v. Hestop, 3 B. & C. 9; 2 Arch. P. 958). It is usual to commence the declaration with a concise statement of the existing differences; but it does not seem necessary to state the subject-matter of such differences (2 Saund. 61 h. n. 1; see 2 Ch. Pl. 145, 255). The declaration should state the mutual submission upon which the promise or liability is raised (ib.; Dilley v. Polhill, 2 Stra. 923; 11 Mod. 170); and the terms thereof, either in its very words or legal effect, should be stated accurately. But, in debt, an averment of mutual promises is bad on special demurrer, since it makes the action an action of debt to perform an award when made, and not an action of debt on the award itself (Sutcliffe v. Brooke, 15 Law J., Ex. 118; 3 D. & L. 302). The omission of anything conditional, and affecting the award, as, "that the same shall be in writing," or under the hand and seal, or before *two witnesses, is fatal (2 Saund. 62, n. 3; [*296] Everard v. Patterson, 2 Marsh, 304; S. C. 6 Taunt. 625; Winter v. White, 1 B. & B. 350; Henderson v. Williamson, 1 Stra. 116; Hinton v. Cray, 3 Keb. 512; Wilson v. Constable, 1 Lutw. 536). It is not, in general, necessary to state the submission was in writing, nor by bond (Bell v. Simpson, 2 Wils. 10). In debt, a variance in the statement of the parties to the submission bond would be fatal (3 Moo. 674). The award must be pleaded as made within the time limited, and it will suffice if such time be laid under a videlicet (Skinner v. Andrews, 1 Saund. 169; Bissex v. Bissex, 3 Burr. 1730). In debt, on an award made under a judge's order, with power to enlarge the time for making the award, the enlargement, if any, should be stated according to the facts. The precise day of the enlargement need not, though it is best, to be stated (Swinford v. Burn, Gow, C. 6). If the enlargement was irregularly made, the irregularity is waived by the appearance of the parties before the arbitrator after the enlargement (Re Hick, 8 Taunt. 694; Halden v. Glasscock, 8 D. & R. 161; Lawrence v. Hodgson, 1 Y. & J. 16). It must be stated that the award was made, and that according to the effect of the condition and submission (Hanson v. Liversedge, 2 Vent. 242; Bussfield v. Bussfield, Cro. Jac. 577). No more of the award should be stated than that part, the non-performance of which the plt. complains of and is relative to the case; but a condition precedent, qualifying the terms of the award, should be stated (2 Saund. 62 b, n. 5; Perry v. Nicholson, 1 Burr. 278; 2 Ld. Kenyon, 557; Leake v. Butter, Litt. Rep. 312; Wood v. Wilson, 3 C. M. & R. 241; Filford v. French, 1 Sid. 160; Foreland v. Marygold, 1 Salk. 72). It would seem unnecessary to show, in the declaration, that the arbitrator has awarded on matters referred on which no breach is assigned (Tomlin v. Fordwich, 6 Nev. & M. 594; 5 Ad. & E. 147; 2 H. & W. 172). Where it is alleged that the award was made "of and concerning the premises," the court will presume that the arbitrator has decided all the matters referred, at least until the contrary be shown (Craven v. Craven, 7 Taunt. 642; Doyley v. Burton, 1 Ld. Raym. 533). Where the submission is according to the ordinary clause, "that the award shall be made in writing, &c., or ready to be delivered to the parties, &c., or such of them as shall require the same, on or before a certain day," it is unnecessary to state that it was ready to be delivered, though usual so to do (Bradsey v. Clyston, Cro. Car. 541; 1 Saund. 327 b. n. See Rousby v. Manning, 3 Mod. 331; Doyley v. Burton, 1 Ld. Raym. 533; Anon. 2 Ld. Raym. 989; Bussfield v. Bussfield, Cro. Jac. 577; Freeman v. Bernard, 1 Ld. Raym. 247; Robinson v. Calwood, 6 Mod. 82; Oates v. Bramhill, 6 Mod. 176; Jenkinson v. Allisson, 1 Frem. 418). Where the submission requires the award to be made in writing, under the hand and seal, &c., it is sufficient to allege it to have been made under the hand and seal, &c., as it must necessarily be intended to be in writing (Carth. 159; 2 Sid. 38). Where the submission was "so that the arbitrators made their award in writing under their hands," it was held insufficient to aver "that the arbitrators duly made their award in writing," and judgment was reversed for want of the words "under their hands" (Everard v. Paterson, 6 Taunt. 625; S. C. 2 Marsh. 304). And where the submission is that the award shall be in writing under the hand and seal, &c., it is not sufficient to aver that it was in writing merely, without alleging that it was under the hand and seal, &c., as the submission required (Henderson v. Williamson, 1 Str. 116; 1 Bulst. 110; Swallows v. Girling, Cro. Jac. 278; 2 Saund. 62, n. 3). The award must appear to be mutual and certain (Gray v. Gwennap, 1 B. & A. 106; 1 Saund. 327 a, n. 2); and, if the defect of the award appear on the declaration, *it will be bad on demurrer, or after verdict. Plt. need [*297] not show the time or place of the award made (2 Brown, 137), nor make a profert of the award (Dod v. Herbert, Sty. 459; Perry v. Nicholson, 1 Burr. 278; Hodsden v. Harridge, 2 Saund. 62 b, n). It is usual to aver that the deft. had notice of the award; but such an averment has been held not to be necessary, because the deft. may take notice of the award, as well as the plt. (2 Saund. 62 a, 4). "If, however, it be provided that the award should be notified to the parties, it is no award until notice be given" (Ib., Child v. Herden, 2 Bulst. 144; see Brooke v. Mitchell, 6 M. & W. 473). The statement of the non-performance of the award must be according to the fact (see further, as to the breach, post, 182-3). Where the act, the breach of which is the ground of action, is to be done on a particular day, it ought to be averred that the day had elapsed before the commencement of the suit, for the courts may not set aside a demurrer on this ground as frivolous (Naters v. Sutton, 11 Jur. 87; Owen v. Waters, 2 M. & W. 91; Sheppard v. Sheppard, 3 D. & L. 199; Granger v. Dacre, 12 M. & W. 431; Abbot v. Aslett, 1 M. & W. 209). It is not necessary to aver a demand of payment of the money awarded to be paid, though it is to be paid at a given time or place (Rowe v. Young, 2 B. & B. 233); but where, by the award, the plt., on performing some collateral act, as, on giving a covenant, or the like, is to be paid a sum of money, at a certain time or place, it must be stated in the declaration that the plt. was ready at the place to perform his part of the award (Phillips v. Knightly, Fitz. 53; 1 Barn. 84; see Lambard v. Kingsford, Lutw. 558; Rodham v. Stroher, 3 Keb. 830; Rowe v. Young, supra). If the award be to pay a sum "on request," the declaration must allege an express request, the averment "though often requested" is not sufficient (Waters v. Bridge, Cro. Jac. 639; see Birks v. Tippet, 1 Saund. 32). If an action be brought on an award directing one of the parties to pay the expenses of the reference, and that the other should repay them on demand, it would seem that an averment of payment and of a request for repayment is necessary (Driver v. Hood, 7 B. & C., 494). A declaration in debt on an award by the assignees of an insolvent need not allege that the submission to arbitration was with consent in writing of the major part of the creditors (Sutcliffe v. Brooke, 3 D. & L. 303). Where the arbitrator directed payment to be made by the executors of the assets of a party dying during the reference; in assumpsit against the executors the declaration stated that they had had notice of the award, and that by reason thereof they became liable as executors to pay according to the tenor of the award, and that being so liable the executors aforesaid (not as executors) promised to pay the amount according to the tenor of the award; held, an averment of a promise by them as executors to pay the amount out of the assets, and not a mere personal promise for which there was no consideration stated, nor is it necessary to aver that the executors had any assets (Douse v. Cox, 3 Bing. 30). Before the

R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV., which prohibits two counts for the same subject-matter, it was the practice to insert counts on the original debt, and on an account stated, under which it was said plt. might recover if he failed on the other counts (Kingston v. Phelps, Pea. 227; Keen v. Batshore, 1 Esp. 194; Bailey v. Leckmere, ib. 377; Pearson v. Henry, 5 T. R. 6); and he would not be put, at the trial, to elect on which set of counts he would rest his case (Brown v. Tanner, 1 C. & P. 651; M'Cle. & Yo. 464). Bayley, B., is reported to have said, that "It is quite clear that indebitatus assumpsit will lie on an award (Crump v. Adney, 1 C. & M. 355. See "ASSUMPSIT."

Pleas in Assumpsit.*] The general issue, as in other actions of assumpsit, will in most cases suffice. As to the general issue in [*298] assumpsit, see ante, pp. 226, 227). In the present case it would seem to put in issue only the entering into the submission, though whether under the principle of White v. Beech, 10 Law J. 4, ante, it would not throw on the plt. the burden of proving all the facts from which the promise or contract would be implied, is a question deserving of attention. The safe course is to plead the general issue, and also the several special matters on which the deft. relies, unless these come clearly within the general issue. A plea that the arbitrators had made their award, and that the deft. on the last day for making the award required them to deliver it to him, but that they had neglected and refused so to do, was held supported by evidence that the arbitrators had made their award on the day, but had refused to deliver it to the deft. as it was not stamped, and to entitle the deft. to a verdict in his favour in an action on the arbitration bond (Wilson v. Wilson, cited; Veale v. Warner, 1 Saund. 327 e, n. m); quare, whether this might not have been given in evidence under the plea of no award (Dresser v. Stansfield, 14 M. & W. 822).

In Debt.] Nil debet being abolished, and nunquam indebitatus being the general issue in actions of debt on simple contract other than bills of exchange, &c. (quare, whether debt on award is debt on simple contract, Hodsdon v. Harridge, 2 Saund. 64-7), and having only the same operation as non assumpsit in indebitatus assumpsit, the deft. must plead specially any defence not admissible under that issue (see Riddell v. Sutton, 2 Moo. & P. 345; see more, post, "DEBT").

Declaration in Debt or Covenant on the Deed of Submission.] The principles which govern these two actions are the same as in other actions on bonds and deeds (see "DEBT," "COVENANT"). In debt on the bond, plt. may either set out the condition and the award, and assign breaches thereof in his declaration, or simply declare on the bond itself, like a common money-bond, reserving the statement of the award and breach for the replication; and this is the best course, unless it be apprehended deft. will let judgment go by default (1 Saund. 58, n. 1; 2 Saund. 187 a, 2). In covenant, the preceding observations on the action of assumpsit and debt on the award itself, will for the most part be applicable. In declaring for revoking the arbitrator's authority, the breach must be stated according to the fact.

Pleas.] As in other actions of debts on bond and covenant, the party should plead specially any matter of defence (post, "DEBT," "COVENANT"). The usual pleas are non est factum, no award made, or "nul agard," performance, &c.

The plea of non est factum can only put the bond of submission in issue. The plea of no award made should be adopted where no award has, in fact, been made, or even where an award has been made, but not according to the submission, or which is bad from any defects appearing on the face of it (Fisher v. Pimbley, 11 East, 188; 2 Rich. C. P. 44; Dresser v. Stanfield, 14 M. & W. 822; Gisborne v. Hart, 5 M. & W. 50; but see Praed v. Cumberland (Duke of), 4 T. R. 588; Hicks v. Cracknell, 3 M. & W. 72; Spooner v. Payne, 16 Law J. 225, C. P.). If, in debt, on the arbitration bond, it appear on oyer that the condition is to abide by the award of arbitrators, and in case they make no award within a certain time, of an [*299] umpire, the *plea denying the award should allege that neither the arbitrators nor the umpire made an award (Hinton v. Cray, 3 Keb. 512).

Matters in excuse of performance or discharge should be pleaded specially (Hanson v. Boothman, 13 East, 22). Where the deft. impeaches the award for matter extrinsic, as, for not embracing all the matters submitted, the proper course is to add a plea stating such defects (Fisher v. Pimbley, 11 East, 188; Mitchell v. Staveley, 16 East, 58). If the arbitrators have not decided all matters referred to them, or the award is not final or certain, but such defects do not appear on the face of the award, the facts constituting such defects must be specially pleaded, to show it to be inconclusive or uncertain (Cargey v. Aitcheson, 2 B. & C. 170; 3 D. & R. 433; S. C. 2 Bing. 199). A plea that the award did not adjudicate on all matters submitted is not sufficient, unless it aver also that there were other matters in difference besides those adjudicated upon (Pery v. Mitchell, 12 M. & W. 792; 14 Law J., N. S. Ex. 88). But in Dresser v. Stansfield, 14 M. & W. 822, it was held, that a special plea setting forth that some issues were joined in the cause referred, and showing that the award had not decided them, and was therefore not final, was bad on special demurrer, as being an argumentative plea of no award; at all events for not concluding with a special traverse, "and so, that there was no award of and concerning the premises" (see Linsey v. Ashton, Godb. 255). The plea should aver notice to the arbitrators of the matters omitted from decision (Elson v. Rolfe, 2 Smith, 459). In debt on arbitration bond, deft. pleaded the condition of the bond, set forth the award in its terms, and averred that a question as the deft.'s right to indemnity from the plt. against certain liabilities was a matter in difference, and brought before the notice of the arbitrators, and that they had not in their award given directions touching the same; held good on demurrer (Mitchell v. Staveley, supra); distinguished from Dresser v. Stansfield, on the ground that in that case the objection came from the party who stated the award (per Parke, B., and per Alderson, B). There was a prima facie case by the bond which the deft. had to answer, by showing an award which was invalid. If there are two or more arbitrators, it would seem that the award should be executed by all at the same time, as it is in the nature of a judicial act (Stalworth v. Inns, 14 Law J., N. S. Ex. 81). If either of the parties on the last day request the arbitrators to deliver the award, and they refuse and neglect to do so, the bond is void, and the deft. should plead the matter specially (3 Mod. 301; 1 Saund. 327 b, n.). Deft. should also plead a countermand of the submission; and, in such a plea, it need not be alleged deft. gave notice to the arbitrators (Vynior's case, 8 Co. 162; Marsh v. Bulteel, 5 B. & A. 507; 1 D. & R. 106). It seems that the collusion, or other misconduct of the arbitrators, in avoidance of the award, cannot be pleaded (Wills v. Maccarmick, 2 Wils. 148; 1 Saund. 327 a, n. (3); Graelrook v. Davis, 5 B. & C. 534; 8 D. & R. 295); nor can a parol agreement to waive the award (Braddock v. Thompson, 8 East, 344; 1 Saund. 327 a, nn. 3, 30, 31; see Brazier v. Bryant, 3 Bing. 167). Where the award directed an executrix to pay a sum of money, a plea by her that there was no admission or evidence of assets before the arbitrator, was held ill on general demurrer, as imputing misconduct to the arbitrator, for directing a personal representative, who had no assets, to pay the debts of the deceased would be unjust (Riddell v. Sutton, 5 Bing. 200); nor can a revocation of the arbitrator's authority in breach of the condition of the bond (Vynior's case, supra); but it has been held that a plea that deft. revoked the authority of the arbitrator before the *award was made, is a good answer to any claim on the award, when the submission is one [*300] that cannot be made a rule of court, and so not within the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 39, prohibiting revocation in such cases. The marriage of a female party to the submission may be pleaded as a revocation of the arbitrator's authority (Charnley v. Winstanley, 5 East, 266). It seems that it is a good plea to an action of debt on an award that a foreign attachment in London issued the same day the money was payable, and that by virtue of it the money awarded was attached in the deft.'s hands the day after, but this would not be a good plea to an action of debt on the bond, because the penalty was due when the money was not paid by the day (Ingram v. Barnard, 1 Ld. Raym. 636; see Robbins v. Standard, Sid. 327; see Coppell v. Smith, 4 T. R. 312; Bulsteel v. Marsh, 5 B. & A. 507; and 5 Taunt. 452); nor that the arbitrator has proceeded on a mistake (Johnson v. Durant, 2 B. & Ad. 931; Ashton v. Poynter, 1 C. M. & R. 738); Hall v. Hines, in re, 2 M. & G. 847); nor, where no time is fixed for the arbitrator to make his award, can it be pleaded that he made no award within a reasonable time, as the parties might have revoked their authority after requesting the arbitrators to proceed within a reasonable time (Curtis v. Potts, 3 M. & S. 147). Deft. may plead a tender or set-off to this action (Ingram v. Barnard, 1 Ld. Raym. 636).

Tender of rent awarded to be paid must be pleaded to have been made on the land, and at the last hour of the appointed day (Furser v. Prowd, Cro. Jac. 423; post, those titles); or the Statute of Limitations (see post, that title). By 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 3, "all actions of debt upon any award where the submission is not by specialty," shall be commenced and sued within three years after the end of the session in which the act passed, or within six years after the cause of such action, but not after.

The plea of performance, after craving oyer of the bond, sets out the award without the recitals, according to the terms of the award, and the non-performance of a condition precedent, if any (see precedents in Hanson v. Boothman, 13 East, 23; 3 Ch. Pl.). Where an award comprehends all things submitted, the plea should state a performance of the whole award on deft.'s part, or a tender and refusal, which is tantamount; as, where, in debt on bond conditioned that the deft. and two others should perform an award, the deft. pleads an award that he should pay 20s. to the plt., and each of the others 20s., and that he paid 20s. to the plt., but says nothing as to the sums to be paid by the other two, which he ought to have done, inasmuch as he is answerable for the whole money, the plea is insufficient, and the plt. has no necessity to assign a breach (1 Saund. 324 a, n. 3, Genn v. Tinker, 3 Lev. 24). The deft. cannot plead performance generally, but he must show the award, and how he has performed it (Anon. F. Moo. 3, pl. 9; 6 Mod. 3). It suffices for deft. to allege that he performed as much as the award required him to perform (2 Bulst. 93). If the award direct a party to pay the rent mentioned in a certain indenture, a plea of performance need not set forth the indenture, a general reference to it will suffice; but, if the award direct it to be paid in such a manner, and at such times as is expressed in the indenture, then it must be set out at length; so, of an award directing the payment of money bequeathed by will (Anon. 1 Vent. 87; Hugh v. Chadwick, 2 Keb. 667).

If plt. set out an award bad on its face, as stated in the pleadings, the deft. should demur.

Replication.] If the deft. plead a bad plea, plt. should demur. [*301] *If the deft. show the award imperfectly in his plea, plt. should show it properly in his replication (1 Saund. 326). In a replication to debt on bond to perform an award, if deft. plead no award, the plt. must set forth the whole award, and assign a breach of it (2 Saund. 62; Fisher v. Pimbley, 11 East, 188). A replication showing an award to pay 16*l.* 10*s.* and costs, and assigning as a breach the non-payment of the 16*l.* 10*s.* only, has been held good on demurrer to a plea of no award (Fox v. Smith, 2 Wils. 267). In setting out the award, it must be alleged to have been made according to its form and substance, &c., and in pursuance of the submission (ante, p. 296). It is also usual, in stating the award, to allege that it is made of and concerning the premises; and, it is said, that such allegation supplies all averments that the award is conformable to the submission in the matters referred (1 Saund. 324, n. 2). To avowry for rent deft. pleaded that avowant had not any reversionary interest in the premises. Replication, a power of distress given by the award of an arbitrator to whom all matters in difference had been referred. Held ill, without averring that the arbitrator had authority to confer a power of distress, or that the right to distress was one of the matters in difference (Pascoe v. Pascoe, 3 B. N. C. 898). If the breaches in an action on an arbitration-bond be not assigned in the declaration, plt. must suggest or assign them under the statute of 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 11, if deft. lets judgment go by default (Welsh v. Ireland, 6 East, 613); or pleads non est factum, or any other plea not leading to an issue on the breaches (6 East, 613; 2 Ch. R. 298; S. C. Homfray v. Rigby, 5 M. & S. 60, ante, p. 301). The breach may generally be assigned in the terms of the award (Willcocks v. Nicholls, 1 Pri. 109); but all matters necessary to constitute the breach must be distinctly stated (Serra v. Fyffe, 1 Marsh. 441; 1 Saund. 103 d). But it is not necessary to add disjunctive words, as, paid or caused to be paid (Aleberry v. Walby, 1 Stra. 231; 1 Saund. 234 c, 6). Where the breach of condition is deft.'s revocation of the arbitrator's authority, it should be so assigned; as, after a revocation, the authority of the arbitrator ceases, and the award subsequently becomes a nullity; consequently, the setting out the award, and assigning a breach, would be negated by evidence (Vynior's case, 8 Rep. 162; Marsh v. Bulteel, 5 B. & A. 507); and it is unnecessary to allege that the arbitrator had notice of the revocation (Ib.). And, though the breach be informally stated, yet the court will give judgment, if it appear sufficiently on the record (Charnley v. Winstanley, 5 East, 266). Where a condition precedent is to be performed by plt., he must aver its performance, or an excuse (3 Ch. Pl.). The want of assigning a breach is matter of substance; and, if admitted, or a bad breach assigned, it will be bad on general demurrer, or even after verdict (1 Saund. 103, n.; 1 Hob. 233).

As to the conclusion of a replication, it would seem, that where the deft. pleads performance he should conclude to the country; "and where the deft. pleads no award made, and the plt. replies, setting out an award, it seems clear, since the case of Fisher v. Pimbley, 11 East, 188, that such replication must conclude with an averment, in order that the deft. may have an opportunity of pleading in his rejoinder matter which shows the award to be void in law" (1 Saund. 327, n. b, h), though it was formerly thought otherwise (Ib., n. 1).

Rejoinder, &c.] This must be consistent with the plea, and not disclose any new matter, as it would then be a departure from the plea.
 *Thus, where to debt on bond the deft. pleaded no award made, [*302] plt. replied and showed an award, and the deft. rejoined that other matters were referred, of which the arbitrators had not taken any notice, &c. The court adjudged that the rejoinder was a departure from the plea" (Harding v. Holmes, 1 Wills, 122; 2 Saund. 84 c, n. 1; but see n. c. 84 d, where it is stated, "that, after a plea of no award made, the deft. may in his rejoinder show an award void in law," citing Fisher v. Pimbley, 11 East, 188; Dudlow v. Watchhorn, 16 East, 41, &c.). Where the deft. pleads general performance of the award, a rejoinder of special performance or an excuse for non-performance would be a departure (Co. Lit. 408). "If the replication set out the whole award, and it be void in law, the deft. should demur; if it set out only a part, omitting that which makes the award void, the deft. should set out the whole in his rejoinder, and demur" (1 Saund. 327 b, n. g; Fisher v. Pimbley, 11 East, 183). After a plea of no award, and a replication setting out an award to pay money, and alleging non-payment, the deft. cannot rejoin payment without being guilty of a departure (Henton v. Cray, 3 Keb. 512).

Precedents.

Declaration in assumpsit on a parol submission to an award.

[For commencement, post, "DECLARATION."] For that whereas, before and at the time of the making of the agreement hereinafter mentioned, certain differences had arisen, and were depending between them the plt. and the deft. (see ante, 295), and thereupon, heretofore, by a certain agreement then made by and between the said plt. and deft. for the putting an end to the said differences, it was amongst other things mutually and reciprocally agreed by and between the said plt. and deft., that the said matters in dispute between them should be, and the same were thereby referred to the final award and determination of E. F., so as he should make his award in writing ready to be delivered to the said parties, or such of them as should require the same on or before the _____ day of _____ then next, and thereupon afterwards, to wit, on the day and year first mentioned, in consideration of the premises, and that the plt., at the request of the deft. had then undertaken and promised the deft. to perform and fulfil the said agreement and the award in all things therein contained, on his, the plt.'s part and behalf, to be performed and fulfilled; the deft. then undertook and promised the plt. to perform and fulfil the same in all things therein contained, on his, the deft.'s, part and behalf, to be performed and fulfilled. And the plt., in fact, says, that the said E. F., having taken upon himself the burthen of the said arbitration, afterwards, to wit, on, &c. (day of award, or about the time), did make and publish his award (in writing), of and concerning the said differences, so referred as afore-said, ready to be delivered to the said parties, and did thereby declare and award, find and determine, that there remained a balance due from the deft. to the plt. of £ _____, and he did therefore thereby award, order and direct that the deft. should pay to the plt. the said balance on or before the _____ day of _____ then next; yet the deft., although often requested so to do, hath not paid the said sum of £ _____, or any part thereof, to the plt. although the time for payment thereof hath elapsed. (Add account stated and breach).

Pleas.] For forms of pleas and replications, see 3 Ch. Pl., Ch. jun. by Pearson, and Russell on Awards and Arbitrators.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

Before the new rules an award might generally have been given in evidence under non assumpsit, and it would seem it may so still, on a count on the original debt, when the award only settles the *amount of the claim, but does not change its nature (Allen v. Milner, C. & J. 47; Kingston v. Phelps, 1 Pea. N. P. 299).

The Submission.] In an action on the award, plt. must prove the submission by all parties, if traversed, and the execution of the award (Ferrer v. Oven, 7 B. & C. 427; see Brazier v. Jones, 8 ib. 124; Antram v. Chase, 15 East, 208; Kingston v. Phelps, 1 Pea. N. P. 299); and that deft. was bound by it. When the submission is by parol, it should be proved by witnesses present on the occasion. Proof of the parties submitting to be examined by an arbitrator or umpire, as to the matter in dispute, would be strong evidence of the submission (Matson v. Trower, R. & M. 17). Proof of submission by an agent or attorney will suffice (Dyer, 216; Cayhill v. Fitzgerald, 1 Wils. 28; Burrell v. Jones, 3 B. & A. 47; Bac. Abr. Arbit. C.; Filmer v. Delber, 3 Taunt. 486); but not by a partner (Stead v. Salt, 3 Bing. 103); and, as to who may submit to arbitration, see 3 Ch. Com. L. 640. Where the submission is by writing, not under seal, it should be produced, and proved, as in other cases (post, "WRITTEN EVIDENCE"). If the submission were by deed, the deed must be produced, and proved, as in other cases (post, "DEEDS"); and, where the deed is signed by several parties, submitting several disputes by the same instrument, it would seem that it is necessary to prove the execution of all the parties to the submission, as the consideration for each entering into the submission was, that the disputes of each party should be settled, not only as to one, but as to all (Antram v. Chase, 15 East, 209; 1 Ph. Ev. 380). If the award have been made by reference, under a judge's order, or an order of nisi prius, which has been made a rule of court, the production of the original rule of court is of itself sufficient prima facie evidence, without further proof (Still v. Halford, 4 Camp. 17; Bernie v. Read, 8 Q. B. 79); and, if the action be brought in the same court, an office-copy of the rule will suffice (ib.; post, "RULE OF COURT"); but, if the submission be expressly denied, it should be proved by a subscribing witness, and the rule of court by which, pursuant to the agreement, it was made a rule of court, is not sufficient (Bernie v. Read, 14 Law J., N. S., Q. B. 247; 9 Jur. 620; 7 Q. B. 79). Where an award ordered the deft. to sign a memorandum, by which he undertook not to pirate the plt.'s inventions, it is sufficient evidence of his having submitted to the arbitration to show that he had signed a memorandum in terms according with the directions of the award (Stuart v. Nicholson, 3 Bing. N. C. 113).

It was said in a case, decided previously to the New Rules, that if the submission had been obtained by fraud, and an action had been brought on the award, the deft. might plead no submission, and prove the fraud in evidence, which would authorize him to treat it, as no submission, or that he might plead no award, and show that the submission was obtained by fraud (Sackett v. Owen, 2 Ch. R. 39).

Arbitrator's or Umpire's Authority.] This must be proved by the submission. If the award be made by an umpire, authorized to be called in by the submission, his appointment should be proved; the recital in an award signed by the two arbitrators is not sufficient evidence of the appointment (Still v. Halford, 4 Camp. 19).

Time for making the Award.] The award must be proved to have taken place according to the terms of the submission, within the limited [*304] time (1 Saund, 327 b, n. 3). If the time has been *enlarged according to the submission, plt. need not prove the precise day of the enlargement, as stated in the declaration (Swinford v. Burn, Gow. C. 6). Proof of enlargement by the consent of deft.'s attorney will suffice to bind deft. (7 Pri. 644). In a case where there was a proviso in the judge's order for the reference, that the award should be made by a certain time, but that, if the arbitrator should not then be prepared, the time might be enlarged as he might require, and a judge of the court think reasonable and just, it was held that the time for making the award was proved to have been enlarged, by the arbitrator's indorsing on the order, on the day preceding the expiration of the original time; that he required further time, though the judge's order, granting that further time, was not obtained till a subsequent day (Reid v. Fryatt, 1 M. & S. 2). Proof of an enlargement, by mutual consent, does not cure the objection of the award being made after the time limited by the submission, which was by bond (Brown v. Goodman, 3 T. R. 592, n.). If no time be limited for making the award, plt. should show that the arbitrator made it within a reasonable time, or a time acquiesced in by deft. (Curtis v. Potts, 3 M. & S. 147).

The Award itself must be produced, duly stamped (Preston v. Eastwood, 7 T. R. 96); see, where an adjusted partnership account was treated as an award, and held to require a stamp (Car v. Smith, 7 Jur. 600, Q. B.). The execution of the award must be proved by the attesting witness, if any, or by proof of his death, and his hand-writing; and, in that case, by other evidence of the arbitrator's hand-writing. In an action of debt or covenant, if deft., by his pleadings, does not deny the award set out, plt. need not prove it.

If the deft., by his plea, deny that the arbitrator did make and publish his award, &c., the production of the award, and of the rule of court is sufficient prima facie evidence to support the issue on the part of the plt., until the validity of the award is impeached by evidence dehors on the part of the deft. (Gisborne v. Hart, 5 M. & W. 50; 7 Dowl. P. C. 402). If the declaration set out a submission to three, the award of the three or any two of them to be final; and then an award by two, and issue is taken upon this; the award executed by the two, though purporting to be executed by the three, was held to support this issue for the plt. (White v. Sharp, 12 M. & W. 712; 1 D. & L. 1030); and the allegation in the award that it was executed by all three was treated as surplusage (Ib.). The award ought to be signed by the arbitrators in the presence of each other (Stalwarth v. Innes, 13 M. & W. 466; 2 D. & L. 428); if not so signed, it will not be enforced by rule or attachment (Ib.).

Breach.] The breach of the award must be proved, as stated, unless deft., by his pleadings, admit it. \ Plt. need not prove deft. had notice of the award, unless that be a condition to its performance (2 Saund. 62 a, n.). If the award enjoin the performance by the plt. of any collateral act, as a condition precedent to his suing for the recovery of a sum of money, payable at a particular time or place, he must prove that he has done such act, and made a demand of the money, or attended at the time and place directed (Everard v. Paterson, 2 Marsh. 304; S. C. 6 Taunt. 625).

Damages.] These will be ascertained by the evidence of the breach. If the award be of money due on a balance of accounts to be paid on a particular day and place, if plt. prove a demand at such time and place, he will get interest (Pinhorn v. Tuckington, 3 Camp. 468; Marson* [*305] v. Barber, Gow. 18; Russell on Awards, 490).

Variance.] Six partners entered (three and three) into two mutual bonds of submission to arbitration, each three undertaking to the other three for the performance of the award: in the recitals in the bonds, the differences were stated to be depending between the above-bounden three and the above-named three; but, in setting out the bond in the declaration, the differences were laid to be depending between the six partners collectively. Held, that it was no variance (Winter v. White, 3 Moo. 647 ; 1 B. & B. 350).

Evidence for Defendant.

Defence.] As to the defences allowable under the general issue on assumption and debt, and non est factum, see those titles respectively. Under them, in the present case, it would seem that the deft. may avail himself of a variance between the award declared upon and that produced in evidence, or any variance in the description of the parties to the deed (Winter v. White, 1 B. & B. 350; 3 Moo. 674); and, by analogy, to the cases decided on assumpsit in general, and bills of exchange in particular (see those heads), of the want of a stamp, (Jerv. N. Rules, 130), but not of an alteration of the instrument since its execution (Hemming v. Trenery, 9 Ad. & E. 926). Under the plea of no award, he may take advantage of any material variance between the award produced and that set forth in the pleadings (1 Saund. 327 b, n. 3; Foreland v. Marygold, 1 Salk. 72). All other defences must be specially pleaded.

Special Bail, p. 319.

No Process as that stated in Declaration, p. 319.

Debt levied on Principal, p. 319.

Ease and Favour, p. 319.

Form of Remedy.

By the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 1, no person can be arrested on mesne process from any inferior court, or from any superior court, unless (s. 3) a judge issue a special order for the purpose, on being satisfied, by affidavit, that the plt. has a cause of action against the deft. to the amount of 20*l.*, and that the deft. is about to quit England. The deft. arrested on the capias so issued is to remain in custody till he *deposits the amounts endorsed [*307] on the writ, with 10*l.* for costs, or gives a bail-bond to the sheriff, according to the former practice of the superior courts (s. 4).

The form of remedy by action on a bail-bond is debt. The action may be brought in the name of the sheriff or the assignee, if it has been assigned under the 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 20. Several actions against the bail and principal, separately, at the same time, are not allowed, unless for some good reasons, as that the parties cannot be served with process, &c. (Key v. Hill, 2 B. & A. 598; S. C. 1 Ch. R. 337, Abbott, C. J. diss.; 8 Pri. 174). The action cannot be brought pending a rule to bring in the body (R. G. H. T. 4 Will. 4, r. 23). The action by the assignee must be still brought in the same court from whence the process issued on which the bail-bond was taken (Chesterton v. Middlehurst, 1 Burr. 642; Walton v. Beat, 3 ib., 1923; Barnes, 92, 117; Morris v. Rees, 3 Wils. 348; Jerv. N. Rules, 66, n. a) but the auction by the sheriff may be now brought in any court (R. G. H. T. 2 Will. IV. r. 28; Jerv. N. Rules, 66; 1 Dowl. P. C. 286). An attorney by entering into a bail-bond in another court, waives his privilege (Barnes, 117; 3 Wils. 348; 2 Bla. R. 838; 1 H. Bl. 631). Though the action be brought in the wrong court it is no defence under the plea of non est factum (Wright v. Walmsley, 2 Camp. 396). An application may be made to set aside the proceedings (Ib.), or deft. may plead in abatement to the jurisdiction (Ib.; 8 Pri. 176); or demur, (Ib.). It was formerly holden that a plt. had no remedy on the original consideration, whilst he retained his right to sue on the bail-bond, after assignment to him (Tidd 301; 1 Ch. R. 394, n.).

but a plt. who now takes an assignment of a bail-bond executed under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 3, 4, may proceed upon it and in the original action against the deft. at the same time (Betts v. Smyth, 2 Q. B. 113; 1 G. & Dav. 284; 6 Jur. 342; Ede v. Collingridge, 11 M. & W. 61; 2 Dowl. N. S. 764; 12 Law J. N. S. 247; 7 Jur. 203). Proceedings on the bail-bond may be stayed on payment of costs in one action, unless sufficient reason be shown for proceeding in more (R. G. H. T. 2 Will. IV. r. 30); but it is too late to make the application when the actions have proceeded to verdict (Johnson v. McDonald, 2 Dowl. 44). The court may, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 6, order a bail-bond to be delivered up to be cancelled (Needham v. Bristow, 1 Dowl. N. S. 700; 4 Sco. N. R. 773; 4 M. & G. 262); but will not do so on affidavit that the deft. has rendered himself to goal according to the condition (Ridler d. Belton v. Chappelow, 1 Dowl. N. S. 637; 6 Jur. 375).

The 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, which authorizes the assignment of the bail-bond, enables the courts to give the parties such relief "as is agreeable to justice and reason" (s. 20). Hence, where the bail are prejudiced by delay (see Piggott v. Fresh, 3 B. & P. 221; Collett v. Bland, 4 Taunt. 715); or, the plt.'s giving time to the deft. without their consent (Surman v. Bruce, 10 Bing. 444), the courts will stay the proceedings; and, where the proceedings are regularly commenced, they will be stayed upon payment of costs and such other terms as may be just (see Govett v. Johnson, 2 B. & P. 465), after bail is put in and perfected, or the deft. rendered (Meysey v. Carnell, 5 T. R. 534; Standen v. Blakie, 13 Pri. 114; McCle, 44), a sufficient deposit paid into court, &c., &c. (see Lush's Pr. Index, Bail-bond). It was formerly held not too late to apply after judgment obtained on the bail-bond and execution issued (Lepine v. Barrett, 8 T. R. 223). Where regular proceedings on a bail-bond are stayed, it is on the implied condition that the deft., in afterwards pleading to the original action, shall plead to the merits only (Dowson v. Levi, 4 B. & A. 598).

Evidence for Plaintiff.

Declaration. The general rules as to declaration in debt here prevail (see "DEBT"). If the action be at the suit of the sheriff, the declaration is simply on the bond, without setting forth the condition, and such bond is not within the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 11, s. 8, requiring a suggestion of breaches (Moody v. Pheasant, 2 B. & P. 446). If the action be at the suit of the assignee, the condition of the bond and breaches are stated, to show why the plt. may sue as assignee.

Formerly, if the bond was assigned after the first day of term, the declaration should be entitled specially, or it would be demurrable (Pugh v. Robinson, 1 T. R. 116; Dickenson v. Plaisted, 7 T. R. 474); now it follows the general course with regard to entitling. The venue, being transitory, may be laid in any county, the declaration stating the assignment to have been made in that county (Gregson v. Heather, 2 Stra. 727; S. C. 2 Raym. 1455; Fort, 366; Impey, 6). Quære, whether, when the action is brought in a different county from that in which the arrest was made, the assignment should not now be laid with a special venue.

Although the action is brought by an executor of the assignee, it may be in the debet and detinet (1 Selw. N. P. 597). As to the sheriff's description, infra. Where the plt. declared in the commencement of his declaration, as assignee of the sheriff, and then set forth a bond to himself, it was held no ground of demurrer (Reynolds v. Walsh, 1 C. M. & R. 580; 5 Tyr. 202; 3 Dowl. P. C. 441). The bond being joint and several, a joint action may be brought against all the parties, or a separate action against each, or even a joint action against two out of three (Knowles v. Johnson, 2 Dowl. P. C. 653).

The writ in the original action should be stated accurately. The day as laid of the issuing it may be either the day of the teste, or actual issuing, or any other day about the time, if laid with a videlicet. The statement of the court, out of which the writ issued, should be correct (Impey v. Taylor, 3 Moo. & S. 166; Mill v. Pollow, 1 Moo. 19; S. C. 7 Taunt, 271). The usual allegation of the court, at the issuing of the writ, then and still being at Westr., is unnecessary, and sometimes improper, as where the writ is stated, without a videlicet, to have been sued out in vacation (Hart v. Hingeston, 5 Burr. 2586; Lockett v. Plummer, 5 Moo. 538; S. C. 2 B. & B. 659). The name of the person against whom the writ is stated to have been issued must be accurately stated (Scandover v. Warne, 2 Camp. 270; Amey v. Long, 1 Camp. 14; Brown v. Jacobs, 2 Esp. 726; Large v. Attwood, 1 D. & R. 55.) Where it was averred in the declaration, that, by a writ of latitat, the sheriff was commanded to take one "F. J., by the name of J. J.," an examined copy of the latitat was given in evidence, commanding the sheriff to take "J. J." The bail-bond was signed by the principal "F. J., arrested by the name of J. J.," and the plts. offered to prove that this person was their debtor, whom they intended to hold to bail. Lord Ellenborough said, "The writ must speak for itself. I cannot hear, that, instead of A. B., mentioned in the writ, it was meant that the sheriff should arrest X. Y.," and the plts. were nonsuited (Scandover v. Warner, 2 Camp. 270, disapproved of by the court in Finch v. Cocker, infra; Wilks v. Lorck, 2 Taunt. 309). Where the declaration stated that the writ was against the said W. Cocken, by the name of William Cocker, the judgment was arrested, on the ground that such misnomer on the writ made the arrest illegal, and the bail-bond void, there not being an averment that the deft. was known as well by one name as by the other (Finch v. Cocken, 3 Dowl. *678); semble, that such an averment would have made that declaration good (lb.). But where a declaration in case against a [*309] sheriff for taking an insufficient bail-bond, and releasing the debtor, contained such averment, but the writ described him without the alias, a plea traversing that the deft. had notice of the party being as well known by the one name as the other, was held a good answer to the action (Brunskill v. Robertson, 2 P. & D. 269). Where the declaration stated that the sheriff was commanded to take the said deft., Thomas Attwood, to answer the plt., of a plea of trespass, "and also to a bill of the said plt., against the said deft.," it was holden on special demurrer, to be clearly defective, in not showing against whom the writ was issued; but the court gave leave to amend, on payment of costs (Large v. Attwood, 1 D. & R. 551). But where the declaration stated that, by the writ, the sheriff was commanded to take W. P. and one S. P., and him and the said S. P. safely keep until he should have given bail, &c.; and that the sheriff took a bail-bond, conditioned for the appearance of W. P. alone, it was held that the variance could not be taken advantage of on general demurrer (Grottick v. Phillips, 3 Moo. & S. 132; 9 Bing. 721). But, quære, if it had been special (lb.). Where a latitat against D. and two others was stated as a latitat against D. and John Doe, it was ruled no variance (Hendray v. Spencer, 1 T. R. 238). A writ directed generally to the sheriff of a county, may be described in pleading, as directed to the individual who was in fact the sheriff of the county when the writ issued: therefore, when the declaration stated that a person sued out a writ, directed to C. Smith, esq., and Sir R. Phillips, knt., sheriffs of the county of Middlesex, it was held sufficient (Batchelor v. Salmon, 2 Camp. 525); but, as the two officers in that county constitute but one sheriff, it has been held to be demurrable to describe them as sheriffs (MS. Middlesex (Sheriff of) v. Barnes, 2 Raym. 1135; Bac. Abr. Shf. K. 162). The return day of the writ should formerly, when writs had return-days, be stated accurately (Everett v. Tunnard, 2 Ch. R. 624; 2 B. & B. 659; S. C. 1 Moo. 538); that to the ac etiam part being sufficient. In Tidd's Supplement, A. D. 1833, p. 292, it is suggested, that after the asterisk in the annexed form, the writ throughout should be inserted to the teste (see it so in 2 Ch. Pl. 322); and, in 3 Dowl. 678, the reporter states it as the usual course. All the memoranda on the writ are also sometimes set out (see Grottick v. Phillips, 3 Moo. & S. 133). We do not see the necessity for departing from the former practice in this respect, and have framed the annexed form accordingly.

The indorsement for bail should be stated accurately. Where the writ states the indorsement to levy the sum, together with the sheriff's poundage, officers' fees, and other legal charges, and incidental expenses attending the same, and the writ, when produced, is to levy the sum, together with the sheriff's poundage, officers' fees, &c., it is a fatal variance (Stiles v. Rawlins, 5 Esp. 133; *but see Cousins v. Brown, R. & M. 292). But, where the declaration stated the writ to have been indorsed for 24*l.*, and the writ produced was indorsed for 24*l.* and upwards, besides, &c., it was held by Abbott, C. J., to be no variance (Williams v. Middlesex (Sheriff of), cited 2 Ch. Pl. 447 b). It is not necessary to aver that the writ on which the deft. was arrested was issued on an affidavit of debt, and indorsed with the sum sworn to (Sharpe v. Abbey, 5 Bing. 193; 2 Moo. & P. 312; S. P. Dorrington v. Bucknell, 11 Moo. 445; and see Wilcoxon v. Nightingale, 4 Bing. 501; 1 Moo. & P. 279; and Arundell v. White, 14 East, 224, confirming Whiskard v. Wilden, 1 Burr. 330, on the same point, though disapproved of in Hill v. Hall, 2 N. R. 202). *Such an averment is usual, but it is better [*310] omitted, as it will require to be supported by proof (Webb v. Herne, 1 B. & P. 280; Whiskard v. Wilden, 1 Burr. 330; 2 Moo. 602, post).

The delivery of the writ to the sheriff, and the arrest, are next stated, but it is not necessary to state the arrest, and, if stated, it is not traversable: for the words of the statute, 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 20, "and the sheriff taketh bail from such person, against whom such writ, bill, or process, is taken out," are general enough to include the case where the party has not been arrested (Watkins v. Parry, 1 Stra. 444; Haley v. Fitzgerald, ib. 643; 2 Saund. 59 a; Taylor v. Clow, 1 B. & Ad. 223). The day of arrest need not be averred (Evans v. Moseley, 4 Tyr. 172; 1 C. & M. 190); but it must be while the writ is in force (2 Saund. 60 a).

The bail-bond must next be stated, and this accurately. The date of it should be stated accurately, if plt. profess so to do. Formerly, if the bond were taken by the sheriff after the return-day of the writ it was void (Pullein v. Benson, 1 Ld. Raym. 352), on non est factum (Thompson v. Rock, 4 M. & S. 338). If it were now taken after the expiration of the writ, it would be void for the same reasons, and semble in arrest of judgment upon the same plea, if the objection appeared upon the face of the record; if not there, should be a special plea. So it is void if executed before the condition is filled up (per Ellenborough, Powell v. Duff, 3 Camp. 181; 2 Saund. 60; but see Fexira v. Evans, 1 Anstr. 228, n). It is a nullity, if executed without filling in blank spaces left for the name of the party to whom the copy of the writ has been delivered, and for the name of the party upon whose putting in special bail the bond is to be void (Holding v. Raphael, 5 Nev. & M. 655; 1 H. & W. 571). If it appears by the declaration that the bond is void by the provisions of the statute 23 Hen. VI. c. 9, the declaration will be bad, either upon a general demurrer, or upon arrest of judgment, after verdict upon a plea of non est factum (Samuel v. Evans, 2 T. R. 569; Thompson v.

Rock, 4 M. & S. 338); if it appear on craving oyer of the bond, the deft. may demur (per Buller, J., 2 T. R. 569). The bond is void if there be not any condition (Graham v. Crawshaw, 3 Lev. 74); or an impossible condition (Samuel v. Evans, supra), or a condition other than that prescribed by the statute (Rogers v. Reeves, 1 T. R. 418). It is now the practice to set out the whole condition of the bond verbatim; before the Uniformity of Process Act, it was sufficient to state it according to its legal effects (Waugh v. Russell, 1 Marsh. 217; Shaw v. Lee, 2 Stark. 76); and, where the condition was, that the party should appear before the King at Westr., and the writ to appear before the King, wheresoever, &c., it was held to be an immaterial variance (Jones v. Blain, 9 East, 55). So, where the declaration stated the condition to be that the deft. should appear and answer the plt. "according to the custom of his Majesty's Court of Common Bench here," and these words were not in the bond (Bowfellow v. Steward, 3 Moo. 314). But where the writ was to appear before H. M. justices of the bench at Westr., and the condition before the King at Westr., it was held fatal, being different courts (Renalds v. Smith, 6 Taunt. 651; S. C. 2 Marsh. 258; 2 Saund. 60). But, where the declaration stated the issuing from the Common Pleas of a writ for the arrest of the principal, and bringing his body "before the justices of our said Lord the King, at Westr.," &c., to answer, &c.; and also to answer, &c., "according to the custom of his said Majesty's Court," &c., and alleged the condition to be for the appearance of the principal, "according to the exigency of the said writ in the said court," &c.; and also to answer, &c., "according to the custom of his said Majesty's Court of *Common Bench;" and the condition proved at the trial was for the appearance of the principal "before our said Lord the King, at [*311] Westr.," &c., to answer, &c.; and also to answer "according to the custom of the King's Court of Common Bench:" it was held that there was not any material variance (Crofts v. Stockley, 5 Bing. 32; 2 Moo. & P. 81; 3 C. & P. 281). "The Bench at Westr.," means the Common Pleas (Impey v. Taylor, 3 M. & S. 166; 1 Moo. 19; 7 Taunt. 271). Where the writ was to answer the plt. in a plea of debt for three hundred and twenty pounds, or in a plea of trespass, with an ac etiam, and the condition was to answer the plt. in a plea of debt or trespass generally, or without mentioning the plea at all, the variances were holden to be immaterial (Villiers v. Hastings, Cro. Jac. 286; Kirkebridge v. Wilson, 2 Lev. 123; 2 Show. 51; T. Jones, 137, 138; 6 Mod. 122; 10 Mod. 327; Tidd, 223; but see More v. Finch, 2 Lev. 177, semble contra); for the statute only requires a bond conditioned for the deft.'s appearance, and the description of the plea is merely surplusage. And, where the sheriff, upon an original writ in a plea of trespass on the case on promises, took a bail-bond conditioned for the deft.'s appearance, to answer the plt. in a plea of trespass, the court held it to be valid (Owen v. Nail, 6 T. R. 702; and see Luckett v. Plummer, 2 B. & B. 659; S. C. 5 Moo. 350). But where the condition was stated to be to answer in a plea of trespass upon promises, and the words "upon promises" were not in the bond, it was held a fatal variance (R. & M., N. Pr. C. 93). So, where the writ in trespass was to appear before the Lord the King at Westminster, and the condition was to appear before the justices of the King's Bench at Westminster (Kirkbride v. Dyke, 2 Lev. 180; S. C. T. Jones, 46; Lawson v. Haddock, 2 Vent. 237, 238), the bond was holden good; and, where the writ by original was returnable before the Lord the King wheresoever he shall then be in England, and the condition was without the words wheresoever, &c., the court gave judgment for the plt. in an action upon the bond, saying, they would understand that, by appearing before the King was meant before the King in his court, and not before the King in person (Shuttleworth v. Pilkington, 2 Stra. 1155—6). So, where the condition of the bond, in an action by original, was to appear before the King at Westminster, it was deemed sufficient (Jones v. Blain, 9 East, 55; but see Marsh v. Blackford, 1 Ch. R. 323). In general, if a bail-bond were good in substance, it could not be avoided for any trifling informality or variance of the condition from the writ, in the description of the plea, or the time and place of appearance, or of the sum (Atkinson v. Saunderson, 4 Doug. 254; 1 Tidd, P. 223).

The breach of the bond, by reason of the non-performance, should be stated according to the words in the condition. Under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, the only condition in the bail-bond now is, that the deft. "do cause special bail to be put in for him to the said action, in her Majesty's said court, as required by the said writ" (see form of bail-bond in Chit. G. P. by Lush, 298); i. e., "within eight days after the execution thereof on him, inclusive of the day of such execution." This renders it unnecessary for us to notice the many cases on this head with reference to the former state of the law. If the deft. do not cause special bail to be put in within the eight days next after the arrest, inclusive of the day of such arrest, the plt. may proceed upon the bail-bond on the 9th day (Hilary v. Bowles, 2 Dowl. P. C. 201); unless, by the 8th and 9th being holidays, the deft. had till the 10th to put in bail (Alston v. Underhill, ib. 26; 3 Tyr. 427; 1 C. & M. 492). So he may proceed, if notice of bail having been put in be not given in due time (Grant v. Gibbs, 3 Dowl. 409; 1 Hodges' Rep. 56); but not, if there be only an informality in the notice (R. v. Middlesex (Sheriff of), 3 Tyr. 448; [*312] 2 Dowl. 5; Wigley v. Edwards, 2 C. & M. 320; 4 Tyr. 235).

A render into actual custody will not discharge the bail-bond (Hodson v. Mee, 5 Nev. & M. 302; 3 Ad. & E. 765; 1 H. & W. 398; Ridler v. Bilton v. Chappelow, 1 Dowl. N. S. 637; 6 Jur. 375).

In stating the assignment, the date, if professed to be stated without a videlicet, should be according to the fact. The assignment may be alleged to have been made in a county different from that in which the bail-bond was given (Gregson v. Heather, 2 Stra. 727; 2 Ld. Raym. 1454; Fort. 366); but quære if the bond must not be assigned in the sheriff's bailiwick (Impey, 16; Dalt. 22). It suffices to state the assignment was made according to the statute, without stating it was sealed or witnessed (Daves v. Papworth, Wiles, 408-9; 2 Saund. 61 b; Lease v. Box, 1 Wils. 121); or, if it be stated to be witnessed, it is not necessary to state the names of the witnesses (Ib.). If the assignment appear on the declaration to have been attested by one witness only, it will be demurrable (Wiles, 409, n.). But a declaration stating that the sheriff, "by an indorsement on the said writing obligatory, duly made and sealed with the seal of the office of the said sheriff, assigned the said writing obligatory to the said plt. according to the form of the statute," without saying that the assignment was under the hand of the sheriff, and executed in the presence of two witnesses, was held good on special demurrer (Lewis v. Parkes, 3 M. & W. 133; 6 Dowl. P. C. 93; M. & H. 321). As the assignment is not by deed, a profer is unnecessary (Lease v. Box, 1 Wils. 121). The assignment is good, though the sheriff be out of office (Selw. N. P. 600).

The declaration should state that the money is due from the bail, and not from the principal; for, where it concluded, "whereby an action hath accrued to the plt. to demand and have of the principal" (instead of the bail), and stated non-payment by the principal, it was held bad on special demurrer" (Morgan v. Sargent, 1 B. & P. 58).

Bail-Bond.] Debt on a bond given by a surety under the 1 & 2 Vict. c.

110, s. 8. Plea, that after making the bond the plt. brought an action against the principal, and took and detained him in execution, according to the practice of the Court of Queen's Bench, in respect of the said debt; that from the time of recovering such judgment until the arrest, he, the principal, was always ready and willing to render himself according to the course and practice of the Court of Queen's Bench; and that, by reason of his detention in execution, he was, by the practice of the said court, exonerated and discharged from rendering himself according to the said condition: held, on special demurrer, that the plea was bad, as it did not distinctly allege either that the principal did surrender, according to the condition of the bond, or that such surrender was made impossible by the act of the plt. (Hayward v. Bennett, 5 D. & L. 480; 5 C. B. 593; 12 Jur. 120).

Pleas.] The general rules as to pleas in debt here prevail (post, "DEBT"). Nil debet is not now allowed (see post, "DEBT").

Non est factum.] Deft. may plead non est factum, and show under it a material variance between the bond and condition, as set forth in the declaration (Morgan v. Edwards, 2 Marsh. 96; S. C. 6 Taunt. 394; Baker v. Newbiggen, R. & M. 93, supra). But, objections that the bond is void by erasure, alteration, cancelling, &c. (Whelpdale's case, 5 Co. 119; Co. Lit. 356, n., ante, p. 113); or by matter of fact that voids it in law: as coverture (12 Mod. 609; Lambert v. Atkins, 2 Camp. 272; post, "DEBT"); lunacy (Yates v. Boen, 2 Stra. 1104; Faulder v. Silk, 3 Camp. 126); drunkenness (B. N. P. 172; post, "DRUNKENNESS"); delivered as an escrow (Stotes v. Pearson, 4 Esp. 255, post); that it was dated and taken after the return-day of the writ (Thompson v. Rock, 4 M. & S. 338; Samuel v. Evans, 2 T. R. 569); or that the condition was not filled up when it was made (Powell v. Duff, 3 Camp. 181; see Com. Dig. Fait. A, 1), which could be formerly raised on non est factum, must now be pleaded. Intrinsic matter, which showed that the deed was voidable, as that it was not made according to the 23 Hen. VI. c. 9, or that there was no process to arrest the deft. (Say, 116), should in general be pleaded, even before the New Rules. The circumstance of the action being brought in the wrong court, as we have seen, cannot be taken advantage of under this plea (ante).

The irregularity should be made a ground of motion to set aside *the proceedings, or deft. should plead in abatement or demur [*313] (ante, 307, and infra). If the bond or condition be incompatible with the 23 Hen. VI. c. 9, and the defect appear on the declaration, it need not be pleaded; and the objection will be bad, even after verdict (Samuel v. Evans, 2 T. R. 569). So, if it be not made to the sheriff, or other officer, by the name of his office and county (Noel v. Cooper, Palm. 378); but where it was laid solvendum eidem vice-comiti et assignatis, it was well enough (ib.). So it is bad, if made to a sheriff's bailiff (Rogers v. Reeves, 1 T. R. 422); or to the serjeant-at-arms of the House of Commons (Norfolk v. Elliot, 1 Lev. 209). But it is good, if made to the marshal of the Queen's Bench (Bracebridge v. Vaughan, Cro. Eliz. 66).

The mere practice of the court cannot be pleaded (Sherry v. Powell, 1 D. & R. 50; Sandon v. Proctor, 7 B. & C. 800), if the practice do not go to the merits of the defence (Dudlow v. Watchhorn, 16 East, 39; but see Hayward v. Bennett, 17 Law J. 182, C. P.); such a plea neither avoids nor denies the facts in the declaration. The mode of taking advantage of irregularities in practice, is by application to the court, or plea in abatement (5 Moo, 168; Ball v. Swan, 1 B. & A. 393). The deft. cannot plead that the cause was out of court for want of a declaration before the assignment of the bond was taken (Sampson v. Brown, 2 East, 442).

Matters of defence in equity (Scholey v. Mearns, 7 East, 153; O'Kelly v. Sparkes, 10 East, 377), or merely founded on the discretion of the court, cannot be pleaded (2 East, 442; Hayward v. Ribbans, 4 ib. 311; 7 ib. 153; Wright v. Walmsley, 2 Camp. 396); thus, it cannot be pleaded that the action is brought for the benefit of, or as trustee for, the sheriff's officer (Scholey v. Mearns, 7 East, 147; and see Offly v. Warde, 1 Lev. 235); or that the principal has become bankrupt and got his certificate (Alridge v. Harper, 10 Bing. 125). Or that the debt was levied on principal since the commencement of the action.

The deft. (bail) may plead that there was no process issued against the principal. In an action against the original debtor, on a bond given under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8; held, that a plea alleging that no writ of capias ad satisfaciendum had issued in the original action was a good plea. Held, also, that where the declaration alleged that the deft. did not render himself, according to the terms of a judge's order, a plea averring that such order had been obtained ex parte by the plt. was bad, and that the proper course for the deft., if it had been irregularly obtained, was to apply to set it aside. Held, also, that where the declaration alleged that a judge's order had been made for the render within a given time, which time had been extended till the 5th day of Term by a subsequent judge's order, and that a rule nisi had obtained within that period, calling on the plt. to show cause on a subsequent day why the deft. and his bail should not have further time to render, and that in the mean time proceedings against the deft. and his bail should be stayed, a plea, alleging that upon that rule nisi a rule absolute was made on the 22d day of Term, directing a render within a given period, and that a subsequent render was made within that time, was a good plea. Held, also, that such a bond was not a bond within 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, ss. 52, 56, and that the plt.'s claim was not barred by the bankruptcy of the deft., and his certificate after the commencement of, but before judgment obtained in, the original action. Held, also, that a plea stating that an action had already been brought by the plt. for recovery of the sum mentioned in the [*314] bond at the time the bond was given, was no plea to *an action on a judgment obtained in another action subsequently commenced (Hinton v. Acraman. 15 Law J. 52, L. P.; 10 Jur. 203).

It may be pleaded, that the bond was taken for ease and favour, contrary to 23 Hen. VI. c. 9, after the return of the process (Com. Dig. Plead.; 2 W. 25). This plea is necessary, if the bond is dated after the return of the writ (ante, 312). And in the plea, the statute need not, nor should, be set forth (Samuel v. Evans, 2 T. R. 569); if set forth and misrecited, a variance will be fatal (Smith v. Jeffreys, 6 T. R. 776; Boyce v. Whitaker, Doug. 94).

It may be pleaded by bail, in an action by the assignee, that the principal was taken under an attachment for non-payment of costs (Lewis v. Morland, 2 B. & A. 56; 4 Price, 23); or for not putting in an answer (Meller v. Paley, 1 Nev. & M. 696); but not in an action by the sheriff (Morris v. Heyward, 6 Taunt. 569).

The deft. may, in an action by the assignee of the sheriff, plead generally that the bond was not assigned according to the statute (Dawes v. Papworth, Willes, 408; 2 Saund. 61, n.). See evidence to support issue on it (post).

The usual plea, that the assignment is not stamped, is no longer sustainable, since the 5 Geo. IV. c. 41.

A plea that there was no proper affidavit of debt made in the action against the principal (Hume v. Liversedge, 1 Car. & M. 332; 1 Dowl. P. C. 660; 3 Tyr. 257); or that there was no affidavit filed, is bad on special demurrer (Knowles v. Stevens, 1 C. M. & R. 26; S. C. 4 Tyr. 1016; nom. Snow v. Stevens, 2 Dowl. P. C. 664).

A plea must conclude to the country, or with a verification, since R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 9 (Knowles v. Stevens, 1 C. M. & R. 26).

The plea that special bail was put in, according to the condition of the bond, has superseded the former plea of comperuit ad diem, and is governed by the same principles. The latter plea should be concluded with a verification by the record (1 Leon. 90; see post).

Replication.] See the general rules as to post, "DEBT."

To the plea of comperuit ad diem, plt. might have replied nul tiel record (Lill. Ent. 498; 1 Saund. 92; 2 ib. 69). When the record was of the same court, the replication ought to conclude with giving a day to deft. (Cremer v. Wicket, Carth. 517; S. C. 1 Raym. 550); but, when of another court, then it should conclude with the usual prayer and verification (Sandford v. Rogers, 2 Wills. 113; Newbury v. Stradwick, Com. Rep. 533). The replication in C. P., if it gave a day for producing the record, made a complete issue, and deft. could not afterwards demur (see Tipping v. Johnson, 2 B. & P. 302; Jackson v. Wickes, 7 Taunt. 30; S. C. 2 Marsh. 354).

To the plea of no process against principal, plt. may reply the process as stated in the declaration (see Jackson v. Wickes, 2 Marsh. 354; sed vide Samuel v. Evans, 2 T. R. 576).

To the plea of ease and favour, if the action be at the suit of the sheriff, plt. should pray an enrolment of the bond; and, after setting it out, state he was sheriff, and deft.'s arrest, and that the bond was made to the plt. as sheriff, and traverse the ease and favour (Carth. 301, 302; 1 Saund. 9; 2 Saund. 60). In an action by the assignee, plt. should reply, stating the bond was duly executed, and denying the ease and favour, concluding to the country; it is not necessary to make a formal traverse of the ease and favour (see 1 Saund. 163, n.; Com. Dig. Plead. 2, n. 25).

Declaration on bail-bond by the assignee against the principal or bail, where the first writ was by capias.

In the Q. B. (C. P., or Ex. of P.) On the _____ day of _____, in the year of our Lord 1850.

Middlesex, to wit, (venue transitory). John Nokes, assignee of C. D. and E. F., sheriff of the county of Middx., according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, by A. B. his attorney, (or, in his own proper person,) complains of Joseph Styles, who has been summoned to answer the plt. in an action of debt, and the plt., as assignee aforesaid, demands of the deft. the sum of _____ (the amount of the penalty in the bond) of lawful money of Great Britain, which he owes to, and unjustly detains from him. For that whereas the plt. heretofore, to wit, on _____ (the teste, or day of issuing writ), in the year of our Lord _____ according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and under and by virtue of a special order of _____ (naming the judge), one of the judges of one of her Majesty's superior courts at Westmr., to wit, the court of our lady the Queen, before the Queen herself (according to the fact), caused to be issued out of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench (or, "Common Pleas," or, "Exchequer of Pleas," at Westmr., in the county of Middx., against the deft. (or, if the declaration be against one of the bail, say, "against one A. B.") a certain writ of our lady the Queen, called a capias, directed to the sheriff of _____ and bearing date, &c., &c., by which said writ, our said lady the Queen commanded the said sheriff to take the said deft., if he should be found in his bailiwick, and him safely keep, until he should have given him bail, or made deposit with him according to law, in an action upon promises (or, in an action of debt, as the case may be) at the suit of the plt., or until the said deft. should, by other lawful means, be discharged from his custody by order of (the judge who made the order). Which said writ afterwards, and before the delivery thereof to the said sheriff of the said county of Middx., to be executed as is hereinafter mentioned, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, was marked and endorsed for bail for £—, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided; and which said writ, so indorsed, afterwards, to wit, on the day and year first aforesaid (it is immaterial) was delivered to the said C. D. and E. F., who then, and from thence, until, and at, and after eight days after the execution of the said writ, were sheriff of the said county of Middx., in due form of law to be executed. By virtue of which said writ, the said C. D. and E. F., so being sheriff as aforesaid, afterwards, and within one calendar month from the date thereof, including the day of such date, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, and within their bailiwick, as such sheriff, took and arrested the deft. (or A. B.), by his body, and then and there had and detained him in their custody, as such sheriff, at the suit of the now plt., for the cause aforesaid. And the said C. D. and E. F. thereupon, and on the execution of the said writ, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, delivered a copy of the said writ, together with every memorandum and notice subscribed thereto, and all indorsements thereon, to the said J. S. And the deft. (or A. B.) being so arrested, and in custody of the said C. D. and E. F., so being sheriff as aforesaid, by virtue of the said writ, at the suit of the now plt., the said C. D. and E. F., afterwards, and within eight days next after the execution of the said writ, inclusive of the day of such execution, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid (the date of bail-bond), as such sheriff took bail for the said deft. (or A. B.) causing special bail to be put in for him to the said action, in her Majesty's said court, as required by the said writ, and according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided; and, on that occasion, the deft. (or, if the action be against one of the bail, say, "the deft., as bail and surety for the said A. B.") then and there, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, by his certain writing obligatory, commonly called a bail-bond, sealed with the seal of the deft., and now shown to the court of our said lady the Queen, before the Queen herself here (or, in C. P., before her Justices of the Bench, or, in the Exchequer, before the Barons of the said Exchequer), the date whereof is the same day and [*316] year last aforesaid, acknowledged himself to be *held and firmly bound to the said —, so then being sheriff of the said county of Middlesex as aforesaid, as such sheriff, in the penal sum of £—, of good and lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid to the said sheriff, or their certain attorney, executors, administrators, or assigns, with and under a certain condition thereunder written, whereby (set out the condition verbatim. It is generally as follows:—) after reciting that the said Joseph Styles was, on the day of then instant, taken by the said sheriff in the bailiwick of the said sheriff, by virtue of the Queen's writ of capias, issued out of her Majesty's court of —, bearing date at Westr., the day of then instant, to the said sheriff directed and delivered, against the said J. S., in an action upon promises (or, an action of Debt, according to the fact.) at the suit of the now plaintiff, being the said writ above-mentioned, and that a copy of the said writ, together with every memorandum and notice subscribed thereto, and all indorsements thereon, was, on the execution thereof, duly delivered to the said J. S., and he was, by the said writ, required to cause special bail to be put in for him in the said court, to the said action, within eight days after execution thereof on him, inclusive of the day of such execution, it was conditioned, that if the said J. S. should cause special bail to be put in for him in the said action, in her Majesty's said court, as required by the said writ, that then the said obligation should be void, otherwise should be and remain in full force and virtue; as by the said writing obligatory, and the condition thereof, reference being thereunto had, may more fully and at large appear. And the plt. in fact saith, that the deft. (or, A. B.) did not cause special bail to be put in for him to the said action, in her Majesty's said court, as required by the said writ, in the condition of the said writing obligatory mentioned, according to the exigency of the said writ, but therein wholly failed and made default, whereby the said writing obligatory became forfeited; and the plt. further saith, that the said writing obligatory being so forfeited, and the money therein specified remaining unpaid and unsatisfied to the said sheriff, the said C. D. & E. F., so being sheriff of the said county of Middx. as aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, on, &c. (date of the assignment), at the request of the said John Nokes, the now plt., and the plt. in the said suit, by an indorsement on the said writing obligatory duly made, and sealed with the seal of office of sheriff of the said county of Middx., assigned the said writing obligatory to the plt., according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided. By means whereof, and by force of the statute in such case made and provided, an action hath accrued to the plt., as assignee of the said C. D. and E. F., so being sheriff of the said county of Middx., as aforesaid, to demand and have of and from the said deft. the said sum of £—, above demanded. Yet the deft. (although often requested so to do) hath not as yet paid the said sum of £—, above demanded, or any part thereof, to the said C. D. and E. F., before the said assignment, or to the plt., assignee as aforesaid, or either of them, since the said assignment, but hath hitherto wholly neglected and refused so to do, and still doth neglect and refuse to pay the same, or any part thereof, to the said plt., as assignee as aforesaid; to the damage of the said plt., as assignee as aforesaid, of £—: and therefore he brings his suit, &c.

Other forms of declaration.

See other forms of declaration on bail-bond on attachment out of Chancery, Morris v. Haward, 2 Marsh. 280; see 2 Ch. Pl. 325, 7th edit.: at the suit of assignee of sheriff of County Palatine of Chester, Ib., 456, 5th edit.; of Lancaster, 5 Wentw. 574; and other precedents, Petersdorff's Index, "Bail-Bond."

Plea—no writ of capias against principal.

[Plea of Non est factum, see post, "DEBT"]. Because he says, that no writ of capias, as in the said declaration mentioned, wherein the said E. F. could and might be arrested and held to special bail was sued and prosecuted out of the said court, by and at the suit of the said A. B., in the said suit, in the said condition mentioned, before the making of the said alleged writing obligatory. And this, &c. (Conclude with a verification as post, "DEBT.")

Special bail.

[Actio non, as post, "PLEAS."] Because he says, that the said E. F. did cause special bail to be put in for him to the said action in the said court, *within eight days after the execution of the said writ on him, inclusive of the day of such execution, [*317] to wit, on, &c., in the said condition of the said writing obligatory mentioned, according to the form and effect of the said condition, as by the record of the said bail so put in, remaining in the said court of our said Queen, more fully appears. And this, &c. (Conclude with a verification by the record as post. "PLEAS.")

Other Forms of Pleas.

See other forms of pleas, denying issuing of writ of summons, as stated 3 Ch. Pl., Index, "Bail-Bond;" no affidavit made, Ib.; debt levied against principal, Ib.; ease and favour, Ib.; that bond was given to sheriff on attachment against deft. for non-payment of costs, 4 Price, 23; and other pleas, 7 Wentw. 613-4.

See replication, denying ease and favour, 3 Ch. Pl. 1177.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

[Non est factum.] Under this plea, plt. will have to prove the execution of the bond in the usual way (1 Selw. N. P. 601; post, "DEED"). The delivery, signing, and sealing, as well as deft.'s identity, must be proved (post, "DEED"). The bailiff who made the caption is a competent witness to prove the execution, if he witnessed it at deft.'s desire (Honeywood v. Peacock, 3 Camp. 196). If any defence, besides the mere execution of the bond, be expected under this plea, and which deft. can avail himself of under it, plt. should be prepared to rebut it. In debt, on specialty, this plea shall operate as a denial of the execution of the deed in point of fact only, and all other defences shall be specially pleaded, including matters which make the deed absolutely void as well as those which make it voidable (R. G. H. T. 3 Will. IV.).

[Special Bail.] This plea seems to be governed by the same principles as applied to the old plea of comperuit ad diem, the issue on which was tried by the record (Austen v. Fenton, 1 Taunt. 23; Whittle v. Oldaker, 7 B. & C. 478), and lay principally on deft.; and, if it could be decided by the date of the appearance, the court would order the day of the appearance to be entered on the filacer's book, according to the truth (Austen v. Fenton, supra; 2 Hammond, 901). If bail have not justified, the court will, from the same reason, cause their recognisance to be taken off the roll, because it testified a falsehood, the truth of which the sheriff would otherwise have no opportunity of controverting. The deft. must prove the fact of his having put in special bail by production of the record: as, the roll; showing the recognisance of the bail, the filacer's book, the bail-piece, &c., according to the practice of the court in which the action is brought.

No Process against Principal.] Plt. must be prepared to prove this by production of a transcript of the writ taken from the record, and prove it by a witness, who has compared it with the original, or who has examined the copy, whilst another read the original (M'Neil v. Perchard, 1 Esp. 263; Rolf v. Dart, 2 Taunt. 52; Reid v. Morgison, 1 Camp. 470).

That there was no such Process as stated in Declaration against Principal.] The plt.'s evidence in support of this plea will be similar to the last. Under it deft. may take advantage of a variance (see ante, 309; post, 319).

No affidavit.]* If deft. plead there is no affidavit of the cause [318*] of action made, plt. should produce and prove an office-copy in the usual way (see "AFFIDAVIT;" 2 Moo. 62; Webb v. Hearne, 1 B. & P. 280; Whiskard v. Wilder, 1 Burr. 330). The original affidavit must be produced, if the declaration state it to have been made by any particular person (Webb v. Hearne, 1 B. & P. 291; 2 Moo. 61).

Debt levied on Principal.] The burden of proof on this plea lies on deft. (post, 319).

Ease and Favour.] The burden also of proof in this plea lies on deft. (see post, 319.) Plt. should be prepared to disprove the plea by showing the time of execution of the bonds.

Plea denying Assignment.] In proving this plea, it must be shown that the injunctions of 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 20, were strictly complied with; that it was done in the presence of "two or more credible witnesses," by the sheriff, or other officer, putting his hand and seal to it. It is sufficient if the under-sheriff does it in the name of the high-sheriff; and there is no necessity to prove his appointment, as it will be presumed that the under-sheriff has authority to do so virtute officii (Doe d. James v. Brawn, 5 B. & A. 243); and in the case of an assignment of a replevin-bond, it was held sufficient, though neither done by the sheriff or under-sheriff, but a person accustomed to act in the sheriff's office (Middleton v. Sandford, 4 Camp. 36). In Kelson v. Fagg, 1 Stra. 60, it is stated, that the assignment could not be done by the under-sheriff's clerk; but, in a later case, where it appeared in evidence that the bond had been assigned to the plt. by one of the under-sheriff's clerks, Lord Mansfield, C. J., was of opinion, that the seal to the assignment, being the seal of office, was sufficient to prove its validity, whoever signed it (Harris v. Ashbey, 1 Selw. N. P. 599, n.). The witnesses must be disinterested; therefore, neither the plt. himself, nor the sheriff, nor, it seems, the under-sheriff, are "credible" within the act (White v. Barrack, 1 M. & W. 424). It is enough to indorse and attest it in the presence of two credible witnesses; there need not be any attestation by them (Pillips v. Barber or Barlow, 1 Sco. 322; 1 Bing. N. C. 439); the plt. is not a credible witness (White v. Barrack, 1 M. & W. 424; 5 Dowl. P. C. 64; 2 Gale, 57).

Sum Recoverable.] The amount which the plt. is entitled to recover is not limited to the sum sworn to and costs, but the bail are liable to pay the plt. the whole debt, for which the plt. might have had judgment against the original deft., to the full extent of the penalty in the bond (Orton v. Vincent, Cowp. 71; Mitchell v. Gibbons, 1 H. Bl. 76; Peters v. Morgan, 2 Raym. 1564; 1 East, 91, n.; Stevenson v. Cameron, 8 T. R. 29). And, it seems, that where bail were let in upon terms to try the cause, the money levied to abide the event, and the bail-bond to stand as security, the bail were not liable beyond the penalty, though the debt and costs exceeded it after the trial, and the plt.'s debt would have been fully covered when the bail was first let in to try upon terms (2 Smith, 364). Each of the bail is liable for his own costs, as well as to costs in the first action (2 Saund. 61, n.).

Evidence for Defendant.

Non est factum.] The burden of proving the bond, as we have seen, lies on the plt. If deft. have any evidence in disproof, he should adduce it. If there be a variance, or the stamp be insufficient, plt. [*319] will be nonsuited under this plea. As to evidence that the bond was taken after the expiration of writ, see infra, evidence under "Ease and Favour." As to evidence of alteration, ante, 113 (see "BOND," "COVERTURE," "LUNACY," "DRUNKENNESS").

Special Bail.] This plea, like that of comperuit ad diem, is to be tried by the record; the proof lies on the deft. (ante, 317).

No such Process as stated in Declaration issued against Principal.] Plt. must prove the process. Under this plea deft. may avail himself of any variance in the writ and that stated in declaration (as to what a variance, ante, 312); as, if it appear that the writ alleged in the declaration and that produced were returnable on different days, or in different courts, &c. (Bonfellow v. Steward, 3 Moo. 214; Baker v. Newbegin, R. & M. 93; Impey v. Taylor, 3 M. & S. 166; ante, 312). But any trifling informality, or variance in the writ, as to the description of the plea, &c., or of the time or place of appearance stated in the condition of the bond, &c., will not be prejudicial (Luckett v. Plummer, 2 B. & B. 659; S. C. 5 Moo. 538; Owen v. Nail, 6 T. R. 705; 2 Show. 51; Cro. Jac. 286).

Debt levied on Principal.] The deft. must in this case prove the fieri facias and levy, as stated in his plea (see "WRIT;" see form of plea, 3 Ch. Pl., Index, "Bail Bond").

Ease and Favour.] If issue be taken on the due execution of the bond, under this plea, slight evidence will suffice, prima facie, to support it (1 Sid. 384; 1 Saund. 163, n.). The deft. must support his plea by proving the exact day the writ expired, and showing that the bond was executed previous to that time. In order to prove the issuing and expiration of the writ, an office-copy should be produced in evidence. It is not sufficient to produce the præcipe in the filacer's book, and to prove a notice to produce the writ, unless it be shown that search has been made at the Treasury, and that, subsequently to the expiration, the writ has been seen in the possession of the opposite party (Edmonstone v. Plaisted, 4 Esp. 160; Petersdorf on Bail, 264).

Form of Remedy.

The assignment and bargain and sale under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, ss. 63, 64, vested in the assignees the bankrupt's real (except copyhold) and personal property, from the act of bankruptcy, and with it also all rights and remedies which the bankrupt had in relation to it before such act of bankruptcy, and all rights and remedies which they, as owners in their own right should have after such act. But, under the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 56, ss. 25, 26, the appointment of the assignees had the same effect and operation to all purposes as the assignment and conveyance had under the former statute. And by the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 141, it is enacted, "that when any person shall have been adjudged a bankrupt, all his personal estate and effects, present and future, wheresoever the same may be found or known, and all property which he may purchase, or which may revert, descend, be devised or bequeathed or come to him, before he shall have obtained his certificate, and all debts due or to be due to him, wheresoever the same may be found or known, and the property, right, and interest in such debts, shall become absolutely vested in the assignees for the time being, for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt, by virtue of their appointment; and after such appointment, neither the bankrupt, [*324] nor any *person claiming through or under him, shall have power to recover the same, nor to make any release or discharge thereof, neither shall the same be attached as the debt of the bankrupt by any person according to the custom of the City of London or otherwise, but such assignees shall have like remedy to recover the same in their own names as the bankrupt himself might have had if he had not been adjudged bankrupt."

Sect. 144. "That no assignee of any bankrupt's estate, nor any purchaser from any such assignee of any goods, chattels, stock, or crop, being part of the estate of any bankrupt engaged or employed in husbandry on any lands let to farm, shall take, use, or dispose of any hay, straw, grass or grasses, turnips, or other roots, or any other produce of such lands, or any manure, compost, ashes, sea-weed, or other dressings intended for such lands, and being thereon, in any other manner or for any other purpose than such bankrupt so employed in husbandry ought to have taken, used, or disposed of the same if he had not been adjudged bankrupt." As to when the estate and effects vest in official assignees, see sect. 218.

Sect. 142. "That when any person shall have been adjudged a bankrupt, all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, except copy or customaryhold, in England, Scotland, Ireland, or in any of the dominions, plantations, or colonies belonging to her Majesty, to which any bankrupt is entitled, and all interest to which such bankrupt is entitled, in any of such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and of which he might, according to the laws of the several countries, dominions, plantations, or colonies, have disposed, and all such lands, tenements, and hereditaments as he shall purchase, or shall descend, be devised, revert to, or come to such bankrupt, before he shall have obtained his certificate, and all deeds, papers, and writings respecting the same, shall become absolutely vested in the assignees for the time being, for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt, by virtue of their appointment, without any deed of conveyance for that purpose; and as often as any such assignee or assignees shall die, or be lawfully removed or displaced, and a new assignee or assignees shall be duly appointed, such of the aforesaid real estate as shall remain unsold or unconveyed shall by virtue of such appointment vest in the new assignee or assignees, either alone or jointly with the existing assignees, as the case may require, without any conveyance for that purpose." By sect. 219, the court may make sale of copyhold lands, for the benefit of creditors.

Sect. 143. Where a conveyance of the property of a bankrupt would require to be registered, the certificate of appointment of the assignees shall be registered.

The form of remedy, therefore, will be the same as in other cases. The assignees can recover that only which the bankrupt was equitably and legally entitled to (Carvalho v. Burn, 4 B. & Ad. 382; Tibbits v. George, 4 Ad. & E. 107). The same doctrine applies to assignees of insolvents (Best v. Angles, 2 Car. & M. 394; Mogg v. Baker, 3 M. & W. 195). If they proceed against equity, or against a creditor who has a clear legal or an equitable right of set-off, they will be restrained by injunction (Ex parte Booth, 4 Deac. & Ch. 211; 2 M. & Ayr. 93; Ex parte Clegg, 3 Deac. & Ch. 505; 1 M. & Ayr. 91; Ex parte Pearce, 2 Mont. Deac. & D. 142; Ex parte Michil, ib. 181). The consent of the creditors to the assignees suing at law is not necessary (6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 88; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106; Bozon v. Williams, 2 Y. & J. 475).

Assignees cannot sue for personal injuries to the bankrupt as for slander (Jon. W. 215); or the breach of a contract for his personal skill or service (Beckham v. Drake, 8 M. & W. 845; see Williams v. Chambers, *16 Law J. 230; 11 Jur. 798); or for the seduction of his daughter [*325] (Howard v. Crowther, 8 M. & W. 601; 5 Jur. 91); or for trespass, q. c. f., where the personal injury is the principal and essential cause of action (Clark v. Calvert, 3 Moo. 96; 8 Taunt. 742; Spence v. Rogers, 2 Dowl. N.S. 99; 11 M. & W. 191; S. C. in error, 13 M. & W. 571; 15 Law J. 49, Exch.; 12 Cl. & Fin. 700); or for the personal annoyance and injury resulting from breaking and entering his house, and seizing his goods under a pretended claim of debt (Brewer v. Dew, 1 D. & L. 383). As to the right of the assignees to sue for unliquidated damages, see Wright v. Fairlie, 2 B. & Ad. 727; Porter v. Varley, 9 Bing. 93; and for injury to bankrupt's personal property, Hancock v. Caffyn, 8 Bing. 358. A right of action for money lent by a woman whilst sole, and before her marriage settled in the names of trustees for her benefit, does not pass to the assignees (see Penham v. Hurst, 8 M. & W. 743).

The assignees under an Irish commission of bankruptcy may sue here for a debt contracted with the bankrupt here (Ferguson v. Spencer, 2 Sco. N. R. 229; 2 M. & G. 987).

In 1843, H., residing in Australia, being indebted to B. in 771*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, B., on the 8th of January, 1844, assigned the debt to W., and on the 22nd of January joined W. in a letter to H. apprising him of the assignment, and requiring him to pay the debt to W. This letter was posted by W. to H. in Australia, in the ordinary way in which letters to that country are posted, and could not have reached Australia before the 10th of February, had it been posted on the 8th of January. On the 10th of February a fiat in bankruptcy issued against B. On the 29th of January, 1844, a bill for 50*l.* was remitted to H., in Australia, who had no notice of the bankruptcy, to the bankrupt, and by him handed over to W. The assignees of the bankrupt having brought an action against W. to recover the amount of the bill: held, that W. having done all in his power to prevent the debt from remaining in the possession of the bankrupt, it could not be said to be, by the consent of the true owner, in the order or disposition of the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, and that the assignees were not entitled to recover (Belcher v. Bellamy, 17 Law J., Exch. 219).

Assignees, after a nonsuit, may bring a fresh action for the recovery of a sum from a creditor who had given credit for it in his account and proved for the balance. The general rule is to proceed by petition when the creditor has proved (Ex parte Hilton, 1 J. & W. 467). If one of several partners become a bankrupt the others may use the names of his assignees in actions against the debtors of the firm (Whitehead v. Hughes, 2 Cr. & M. 318; 4 Tyrw. 92). Where a member of a firm becomes bankrupt, as to the power of joining in an action the remaining partner with the assignee, see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 152. And by the same statute, sect. 157, it is enacted, "that whenever an assignee shall die or be removed, or a new assignee shall be chosen, no action at law or suit in equity shall be thereby abated, but the court in which any action or suit is depending may, upon the suggestion of such death or removal and new choice, allow the name of the surviving or new assignee to be substituted in the place of the former; and such action or suit shall be prosecuted in the name or names of the said surviving or new assignee or assignees, in the same manner as if he or they had originally commenced the same." Under a similar provision in 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 67, it was held that a second assignee, who continues, by suggestion on the record, a suit commenced by his predecessor, may recover a penalty as well as the first assignee (Bates v. Sturgess, 7 Bing. 593). Before the creditors' assignees are appointed the official assignee is entitled to the estate and effects of the bankrupt (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 39; see Page v. Bauer, 4 B. & A. 345). The assignees under a fiat against a company may maintain actions for recovery of debts due to the company against any person, whether a member or not (7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, s. 8).

By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 268, it is enacted, "that if any petitioning creditor shall after the bankruptcy receive any money, satisfaction, or security for his debt or any part thereof, whereby such petitioning creditor may receive more in the pound in respect of his debts than the other creditors, such petitioning creditor shall forfeit his whole debt, and shall also repay or deliver up such money, satisfaction, or security, or the full value thereof, to the assignee or assignees of such bankrupt, for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt."

Sect. 270. "That if any creditor of a bankrupt shall obtain any sum of money, or any goods, chattels, or security for money, from any person, as an inducement for forbearing to oppose or for consenting to the allowance of the certificate of such bankrupt, or to *forbear to petition for the [*326] recall of the same, every such creditor so offending shall forfeit and lose for every such offence the treble value or amount of such money, goods, chattels, or security so obtained, as the case may be."

Sect. 275. "That all sums of money forfeited under this act, or by virtue of any conviction for perjury committed in any oath, affirmation, or declaration thereby directed or authorized, may be sued for by the assignees of the estate and effects of any bankrupt connected therewith or interested therein, in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, and the money so recovered (the charges of suit being deducted) shall be paid over to the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, to the account intituled 'The Chief Registrar's Account.'"

Deft. being a creditor of C., struck a docket against him, and issued a fiat, but did not file it (under stat. 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 114, s. 5), nor otherwise proceed in the bankruptcy. Afterwards he was requested by C. to sign a composition deed, together with C.'s other creditors, accepting 10s. in the pound. He refused to do this, except on receiving security for his whole debt, which C. gave him by promissory notes, and deft. thereupon signed the deed. C. afterwards committed an act of bankruptcy, and a fiat was prosecuted, under which plts. were assignees. Before this act of bankruptcy, deft. received money on one of the notes which had fallen due. Plts. brought money had and received for the amount. Held, that they could not recover; for that although the case was within the stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 8 (see now 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ss. 202, 270), and deft.'s debt was forfeited, the money was to be paid only to persons appointed by commissioners under some commission founded on the deft.'s docket, or under some later commission, and no appointment for this purpose had been made, and that as C. himself could not recover the money, being a party to the transaction, the plt.

who succeeded only to C.'s rights could not (Belcher v. Sambourne, 6 Q. B. 404).

As to the right of the assignees to affirm a contract made by the bankrupt, after his bankruptcy, or to sue in tort, see King v. Leith, 2 T. R. 141; Clark v. Gilbert, 2 Bli. N. S. 343; Gye v. Hitchcock, 4 Ad. & E. 84; post, pp. 231-2).

Actions by Assignees.] In 1840, A. being lessee of a warehouse and cellar, under a demise from B., and also lessee, under C., of other adjoining property, comprising inter alia, a vault, D. became tenant from year to year to A. of the warehouse and cellar and vault at an annual rent of 185*l.*, made up of 140*l.* for the warehouse and cellar, and 45*l.* for the vault. On the 27th October, 1845, A. became bankrupt, 92*l.* 10*s.* being at that time due as rent from D. to the bankrupt. The assignees, upon being appointed, elected to take the property held under B., and on 26th February, 1846, elected not to take the property held under C. At Christmas, 1845, rent to the amount of 114*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* became due from A. to C., for which amount, on the 19th February, 1846, C. distrained upon the goods in the vault held by D., who, to relieve himself of that distress, paid that sum to C. An action having subsequently been brought by the assignees of A. against D. to recover the above sum, 92*l.* 10*s.* and 35*l.* for a quarter's rent, due at Christmas, for the warehouse and cellar: held, that the plts. could well sue for the quarter's rent due since the bankruptcy in their representative character as assignees (Graham v. Allsopp, 3 Exch. 186; 18 Law J. 85, Exch.).

B., the foreman of C. and D. in the business of typefounders, entered into a written contract to serve them as such during the term of seven years; and C. and D. thereby covenanted and agreed to employ B. as their foreman for seven years, and pay him 3*l.* 3*s.* a week; and it was thereby agreed, that, upon breach of the covenants therein, the party so failing should pay to the other of them the sum of 500*l.*, by way or in the nature of specific damages. C. and D. dismissed B. from their service before the expiration of the seven years, and subsequently to such dismissal B. became bankrupt: held, affirming the decision of the Exchequer Chamber, which reversed that of the Court of Exchequer, that, the right of action in respect of the damages or penalty having accrued before the bankruptcy of B., and the damages relating rather to the property than to the person, feelings, or character, &c. of B., the right of action in respect of the damages passed to the assignees in bankruptcy of B. (Beckham v. Drake, 13 Jur. 921, H. L.).

In an action of trover by the assignees of a bankrupt against a sheriff, for seizing and selling the bankrupt's goods, to which the deft. pleaded "Not possessed," it appeared that the bankrupt had told the officers of the deft. that the goods were the goods of B., but he afterwards contradicted that statement and said they belonged to C. The jury found that the goods were the goods of the bankrupt, but that he had represented them to the sheriff's officers as the goods of B., so as to induce them by that false representation to seize them: held, that this finding was not sufficient to estop the bankrupt or his assignees from complaining of the seizure of the goods as being their own (Freeman v. Cook, 12 Jur. 777, Ex.; 2 Ex. 654).

The servant of a bankrupt, without authority, sold the bankrupt's goods to the deft., who had notice of the act of bankruptcy. The assignees delivered to the deft. a bill of parcels as for goods sold and delivered by the bankrupt, and made two several demands for payment, which the deft. refused, and he also refused to deliver up the goods when they were subsequently demanded: held, that the demand for payment amounted only to a qualified offer by the assignees to adopt the sale, and that they were not thereby precluded from suing in trover (Valpy v. Sanders, 12 Jur. 484; 17 Law J., 249, C. P.; 5 Q. B. 887).

Assumpsit, when it lies.] Assumpsit lies by the assignees against any person who has received money which ought to be paid to them, on the ground of an implied privity of contract; as the party receiving the money is supposed in justice to have received the same for the use of the assignees, and to have promised to pay them (Kitchen v. Campbell, 3 Wils. 307). Thus, they may maintain an action for money had and received against a banker, for money received by him, and paid over to a creditor of the bankrupt, with knowledge of the bankruptcy; but, after having recovered it from the banker, they cannot resort to the creditor; for they cannot affirm and disaffirm the same transaction (Vernon v. Hankey, 2 T. R. 113; Vernon v. Anson, ib. 287). So, an action for money had and received lies where a creditor has levied his debt by fi. fa. subsequently to the fiat (Hitchin v. Campbell, 2 Bla. 827; S. C. 3 Wils. 340; and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1; and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106); or has received it by receipt of the rent and profits and sale of the bankrupt's estate, with the assent of the assignees under an invalid commission of bankruptcy; as where the deft., an attorney, had a lien on a lease of premises belonging to the bankrupt as a security for his debt, and a commission having issued and an assignee having been appointed, the deft. acted as solicitor to the commission, and after notice of a petition to supersede *the fiat for want of a [*327] valid petitioning-creditor's debt, joined the assignee in an assignment of the lease to a purchaser, and out of the purchase-money was paid his debt by the assignee, and part of his bill as solicitor to the commission, and received by the authority of the assignee certain rents of the premises in further liquidation of his demands, and the commission having been subsequently superseded the plts. were appointed assignees under a new commission; they were held entitled to recover those several sums from the deft. as money had and received to their use, he having, by parting with the lease, been guilty of a conversion (which they might waive and sue in assumpsit), and the assent of the first assignee, not being assignee de jure, to the receipt of the rents, not making any difference in the law of the case (Clark v. Gilbert, 2 Sco. 320; 2 Bing. N. C. 343; 1 Hodges, 347). A trader having been arrested on a ca. sa. at the suit of the defts., who, as well as the sheriff's officer, had received a notice of a prior act of bankruptcy, paid over a portion of his assets to the officer in order to procure his discharge, and the officer paid over the amount to the defts. Held, that the bankrupt's assignees were entitled to recover back from the defts. the amount so paid, in an action for money had and received (Follett v. Hope, 17 Law J. 76, C. P.; 11 Jur. 974). So, if a person, after notice of an act of bankruptcy, claim a lien upon deeds of the bankrupt, and the latter, in order to get possession of them, pay the lien, if there be no just claim for lien at all the assignees may recover the sum paid as money had and received to the use of the bankrupt; but if there be any lien, they cannot question the amount unless there be a count for money had and received to their own use (Noble v. Kersey, 4 C. & P. 90). Nor can they sue in assumpsit at all if the deft., instead of receiving payment, get a mortgage from a debtor of the bankrupt's by his direction (Ib. per Tenterden).

The proceeds of a sale under an execution on a warrant of attorney, invalid by reason of a prior act of bankruptcy under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 108 (see now 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ss. 135, 136), become vested in the assignees, subject, however, while in the hands of the sheriff, to writs of execution in adverse actions lodged before fiat (Goldschmid v. Hamlet, 1 D. & L. 501).

Where the goods of a trader, after his act of bankruptcy, are taken in custody, or otherwise disposed of, with notice and without the consent of the assignees, they may waive the tort, and proceed in assumpsit for money had and received, if the goods have been sold (Ib.; Boyter v. Dodsworth, 6 T. R. 681). And it has been held to lie against a deft., who took the goods of the bankrupt in execution after an act of bankruptcy, and then took them under a bill of sale from the sheriff, although no money was actually paid (Reed v. James, 1 Stark. 134). It lies to recover money paid by a bankrupt by way of fraudulent preference (Edmeads v. Newman, 1 B. & C. 418; 2 D. & R. 568; see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 133); and, also, against a person who, after the arrest, and before the expiration of the limited time of imprisonment, having had notice that a commission would be sued out against the trader, sold his goods, and paid him the produce (King v. Leith, 2 T. R. 141; 3 Camp. 168); or against a creditor residing in this country, who knew of the assignment of the bankrupt's estate (Hunter v. Potts, 4 T. R. 182; 2 H. Bl. 402); or if he knew of an act of bankruptcy committed, though before an assignment, and attached money belonging to the bankrupt abroad (Sill v. Worswick, 1 H. Bl. 665; Harvey v. Liddeard, 1 Stark. 128). Where a bankrupt, after an act of bankruptcy, contracted with a factor, to whom he had delivered goods for sale, and who had accepted a bill upon the strength of the goods, *to return the bill if he would return the goods, and he accordingly did return the bill, it was [*328] held they might adopt the contract, and recover against the factor for the non-delivery of the goods (Butler v. Carver, 2 Stark. 433). So they may sue in assumpsit for the breach of a contract made with the bankrupt before his bankruptcy, and only in fieri at the time of the bankruptcy; as where the bankrupt agreed to buy of the deft. 2000 quarters of linseed, free on board at Odessa, to be shipped on board the buyer's vessel, and to be paid for in cash on handing over the invoice and bills of lading to the buyer in London, and the buyer having become bankrupt the deft. refused to put the linseed on board, the assignees were held entitled to recover (Gibson v. Carruthers, 8 M. & W. 321); for though they may elect to reject or adopt such contracts in fieri, yet in no case can the party who contracted with the bankrupt set up the bankruptcy against them as a reason for not doing what he has agreed to do (per Rolfe, B., ib. 327).

On the other hand, assignees cannot maintain an action for money had and received against a landlord, for money paid to him for rent by the bankrupt, after an act of bankruptcy, from the landlord's being about to distrain for it; for he had a legal lien for it upon the goods in the bankrupt's possession at the time (Stevenson v. Wood, 5 Esp. 200). A distress for rent shall now be available for one year's rent only (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 129). Nor will an action lie for money had and received against a person who was merely the bearer of the money from a third person to the bankrupt, after the act of bankruptcy (Coles v. Wright, 4 Taunt. 198); nor will it lie for money received by a creditor in payment of a bill of exchange, indorsed to him by the bankrupt after an act of bankruptcy, though trover will (Waller v. Drakeford, 1 Stark. 481); nor will it lie for the amount of India stock transferred by a trader after an act of bankruptcy, as in that case no money has, in fact, been received (Nightingale v. Devisme, 5 Burr. 2589; Arch. B. L. 252); nor for the amount of a mortgage granted by a debtor of the bankrupt, by his directions, to the deft. in discharge of a lien on deeds which the bankrupt wishes to get into his possession (Noble v. Kersey, 4 C. & P. 90). And it has been held, that the assignees cannot recover for money had and received to their use, against a person who has received money from a bankrupt before his bankruptcy, it having been paid in consideration of putting off a trial for perjury, as it was held that it ought not to be considered an illegal and corrupt agreement (Harvey v. Morgan, 2 Stark. 17). And, where A. deposited policies of insurance with his bankers, as security for a debt which B., a creditor, afterwards obtained, upon an undertaking to settle with the underwriters, and collect for them, and B. received the amount; but A. becoming bankrupt, and indebted to him in a larger sum, he refused to pay over the money, it was held, that A.'s assignee, even with the banker's consent, could not sue B. for the breach of the undertaking (Chalmers v. Page, 3 B. & Ad. 697).

It should be observed, that, by declaring in assumpsit, the assignees elect to affirm the contract of the bankrupt, which is made after his act of bankruptcy, such contract being only voidable or not at their election. In some cases, where the claim is not for a mere money demand, it may be more beneficial to them to disaffirm the contract, and sue for the tort (see post, p. 332). We have already seen, the assignees cannot affirm as well as disaffirm the same transaction (ante, p. 325).

Non-joinders in actions by Assignees.] In actions of contract by the assignees of bankrupts the non-joinder of another assignee is a ground of nonsuit, and the proper mode of taking advantage of the non-joinder is by a traverse that the plts. are assignees, and not by plea in abatement (Jones v. Smith, 1 Exch. 831; 5 D. & L. 728; 18 Law J. 145, Exch.).

Interest.] Where a party is indebted to a trader in a sum bearing interest, the assignees may recover interest accruing subsequently to the [*329] *bankruptcy, although there be no express reservation of interest (Pott v. Beavan, 6 M. & G. 604).

Debt may be maintained by the assignees of a bankrupt, and they may sue either in the debet or detinet, as the whole of the bankrupt's property is vested in them (Winter v. Kretchman, 2 T. R. 46). So they may sue in debt on 9 Anne, c. 14, against the winner of money lost at play by the bankrupt (Brandon v. Pate, 2 H. Bl. 308; Carter v. Abbott, 1 B. & C. 444; 2 D. & R. 575); or for the penalty against a person swearing to a false oath (Holmes v. Walsh, 7 T. R. 458).

Covenant may also be supported by assignees; and, as they succeed to all the rights of the bankrupt, they are entitled to the benefit of any estoppel, in the same manner as the bankrupt would have been (Parker v. Manning, 7 T. R. 537; ante; see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 144, as to their right to take conveyances, leases, &c.).

Where the bankrupt and the defts. were members of a building society, and the bankrupt agreed to demise land to the defts. as trustees of the society, and they covenanted to pay him rent, and by a separate deed the bankrupt and the other members of the society covenanted that for the better indemnifying the trustees, each of the members would, when called upon at their general quarterly meetings, do all such acts as might be necessary for indemnifying the trustees for any loss they might sustain in the execution of the trusts, it was held that the assignees of the bankrupt, though he was a member of the society, might sue the defts. on the covenant for the payment of rent (Bedford v. Brutton, 1 Bing. N. C. 399). But where a lease of fulling mills, after reciting that the machinery had been valued, contained a covenant that, at the termination of the term, another valuation of the machinery should be made, and, if valued at more, the difference should be paid by the lessor to the lessee, and the lessee having become bankrupt, and the assignees having refused the lease, the machinery was valued at a sum exceeding the first valuation, and delivered up to the lessor, and he refused to pay the difference of value, the assignees could not have covenant, as the covenant in the lease had been determined by the bankruptcy, and the refusal of the lease by the assignees; but that the proper remedy was trover, they having demanded back the machinery (Fairburn v. Eastwood, 6 M. & W. 679).

Trover lies to recover goods which the deft. has converted to his own use, whether before or after the bankruptcy, or which remain in specie (Bloxam v. Hubbard, 5 East, 407; Cumming v. Roebuck, Holt's Ca. 172). Formerly trover might be supported against a sheriff who levied and sold the bankrupt's goods after an act of bankruptcy; and though before the commission, or any notice (Cooper v. Chitty, 2 Burr. 20; S. C. 1 Bla. 65; 4 M. & S. 260; Smith v. Mills, 1 T. R. 475; Garland v. Carlisle, 10 Bing. 452; 2 Car. & M. 31; confirmed in the House of Lords, 3 M. & W. 152); or before fiat (Balme v. Hutton, 2 Moo. & Sc. 1; 9 Bing. 471; 2 Crompt. & J. 19); or though he only received the goods (Wyatt v. Blades, 3 Camp. 395); or though the assignees had it in their power, from peculiar circumstances, to retake possession of them (Vaughan v. Wilkins, 1 B. & Ad. 370); or though he paid over the proceeds to the execution creditor before commission or notice of an act of bankruptcy (Potter v. Starkie, cited 4 M. & S. 260). So, trover lay against the party suing out the execution, if he were a party to the conversion, as if he accompanied the officer in levying, even although the produce of the goods remained in the hands of the *sheriff, or his [*330] broker (Menham v. Edmonson, 1 B. & P. 369); and so if he received the produce from the sheriff, upon giving a bond of indemnity (Rush v. Baker, 2 Stra. 996). But the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 81, protected all attachments and executions, executed bona fide two calendar months before the fiat issued, without notice of an act of bankruptcy, and the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1, protected all executed and levied in like manner "before the date and issuing of the fiat:" and the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, now enacts, sect. 133:—"That all payments really and bona fide made by any bankrupt, or by any person on this behalf, before date of the fiat or the filing of a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, to any creditor of such bankrupt, and all payments really and bona fide made to any bankrupt before the date of the fiat or the filing of such petition, and all conveyances by any bankrupt bona fide made and executed before the date of the fiat or the filing of such petition, and all contracts, dealings, and transactions by and with any bankrupt really and bona fide made and entered into before the date of the fiat or the filing of such petition, and all executions and attachments against the lands and tenements of any bankrupt bona fide executed by seizure, and all executions and attachments against the goods and chattels of any bankrupt bona fide executed and levied by seizure and sale before the date of the fiat or the filing of such petition, shall be deemed to be valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed, provided the person so dealing with or paying to or being paid by such bankrupt, or at whose suit or on whose account such execution or attachment shall have issued, had not at the time of such payment, conveyance, contract, dealing, or transaction, or at the time of so executing or levying such execution or attachment, or at the time of making any sale thereunder, notice of any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed: Provided, also, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken to give validity to any payment or to any delivery or transfer of any goods or chattels made by any bankrupt, being a fraudulent preference of any creditor of such bankrupt, or to any conveyance or equitable mortgage made or given by any bankrupt, by way of fraudulent preference of any creditor of such bankrupt, or to any execution founded on a judgment on a warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem or judge's order obtained by consent given by any bankrupt by way of fraudulent preference."

Sect. 134. "That no purchase from any bankrupt bona fide and for valuable consideration, where the purchaser had notice at the time of such purchase of an act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed, shall be impeached by reason thereof, unless a fiat or petition for adjudication of bankruptcy shall have been sued out or filed within twelve months after such act of bankruptcy."

Sect 135. "That every warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, given by any bankrupt after the commencement of this act (11 Oct. 1749), and within two months of the filing of a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy by or against such bankrupt, and being for or in respect of (wholly or in part) an antecedent debt or money demand, and every cognovit actionem or consent to a judge's order for judgment given by any bankrupt, at any time after the commencement of this act, and within two months of the filing of any such petition in any action commenced by collusion with the bankrupt, and not adversely, or purporting to have been given in an action, but having been in fact given before the commencement of any action against the bankrupt, such bankrupt being unable to meet his en-[*331] gagements at the time *of giving such warrant of attorney, cognovit actionem, or consent (as the case may be) shall be deemed and taken to be null and void, whether the same shall have been given by such bankrupt in contemplation of bankruptcy or not."

Sect. 136. "And be it enacted, that if after the commencement of this act any warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, or any cognovit actionem in any personal action, shall have been given by any such trader, and such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem, or a true copy thereof, shall not have been filed with the officer acting as clerk of the docquets and judgments in the Court of Queen's Bench within twenty-one days next after the execution thereof, in manner and form provided by an act passed in the third year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Fourth (c. 39), intituled 'An Act for preventing Frauds upon Creditors by secret warrants of Attorney to confess Judgment,' every such warrant of attorney and cognovit actionem shall be deemed fraudulent, null, and void, to all intents and purposes whatever; and if any such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem which shall be so filed as aforesaid shall have been given subject to any defeazance or condition such defeazance or condition shall be written on the same paper or parchment on which such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem shall be written, before the time when the same or a copy thereof respectively shall be filed, otherwise such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatever."

Sect. 137. "And be it enacted, that every judge's order made by consent given after the commencement of this act by any such trader defendant in any personal action, and whereby the plaintiff in such action shall be authorized forthwith after the making of such order, or at any future time, to sign or enter up judgment, or to issue or take out execution in such action, and whether such order shall be made subject to any defeazance or condition or not, in case the action in which such order shall be made shall be in the Court of Queen's Bench, or in case the action wherein the same is made shall be in any other court, a true copy of such order shall, together with an affidavit of the time of such consent being given, and a description of the residence and occupation of the defendant, be filed with the officer acting as clerk of the docquets and judgments in the said Court of Queen's Bench within twenty-one days after the making of such order, in like manner as a warrant of attorney in any personal action, and a cognovit actionem given by any defendant in any personal action, or copies thereof and affidavits of the execution thereof respectively, may be filed with the said clerk within the space of twenty-one days after such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem shall have been executed, otherwise such judge's order, and any judgment signed or entered up thereon, and any execution issued or taken out on such judgment, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatever; and the provisions respectively contained in the said act passed in the third year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Fourth (c. 39), intituled, 'An Act for preventing Frauds upon Creditors by secret Warrants of Attorney to confess Judgment,' and in an act passed in the parliament holden in the sixth and seventh years of the reign of her majesty (c. 66), intituled 'An Act to enlarge the Provisions of an Act for preventing Frauds upon Creditors by secret Warrants of Attorney to confess Judgment,' for liberty to file warrants of attorney and cognovits actionem, or copies thereof, with the clerk of the docquets and judgments, and for the said clerk to make certain entries and *search in relation thereto, [*332] and for entering satisfaction thereon and for fees for search and filing and taking office copies, shall extend and be applicable to every such judge's order, in like manner as to warrants of attorney and cognovits actionem mentioned in the said acts."

The statute 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29 protected the sheriff and execution creditor only where the execution is executed and levied with bona fides on their part (Belcher v. Magnay, 1 D. & L. 441), and without notice; and, therefore, where a sheriff having seized under a fi. fa. issued after the commission of an act of bankruptcy on a judgment founded on a warrant of attorney, and sold after notice of the act of bankruptcy and fiat, he was held liable in trover (Cheston v. Gibbs, 1 D. & L. 420; 12 M. & W. 420). Trover lies for goods sold upon an invalid execution, subsequent to a sale upon a valid one (Stead v. Gascoigne, 8 Taunt. 527); or for goods sold without a proper authority, as where an equitable mortgagee, with the concurrence of the assignee under a fiat, which was afterwards annulled, sold the pledge, and retained the price in satisfaction of his claim, he was liable in trover to an assignee under a new fiat, as the mere deposit did not enable him to sell; and the assignee under the fiat which was annulled, was to be considered as a stranger to the estate, and therefore could not authorize the sale (Clark v. Gilbert, 2 Bing. N. C. 343; 2 Sco. 520); or for goods sold by the bankrupt after an act of bankruptcy, although the assignees may not have demanded payment of them; for the very taking of goods from one who has no right to dispose of them, is of itself a conversion (Hurst v. Gwennap, 2 Stark, 336; and see B. N. P. 41); or for goods sold by a third person for the bankrupt after an act of bankruptcy (King v. Leith, 2 T. R. 141; Wilson v. Poulter, 2 Stra. 859; or for goods taken during a bankrupt's examination, and converted into money, even though for the necessary subsistence of the bankrupt and his family (Thompson v. Counsell, 1 T. R. 157); or for goods collusively sold to a creditor before an act of bankruptcy, but in contemplation of bankruptcy, and with a view of giving him a fraudulent preference; there must, however, be either a demand and refusal, or an actual conversion, to enable the assignees to maintain the action (Nixon v. Jenkins, 2 H. Bl. 135); and where bills were so delivered to a creditor, the receipt of the amount of them was held not to be a conversion, and the plt. could not recover without proving a demand and refusal before the bills became due (Jones v. Foot, 4 Man. & Ry. 547). A trader assigned his effects to a trustee, thereby committing an act of bankruptcy; afterwards a creditor, ignorant of the act of bankruptcy, took in execution the trader's goods comprised in the assignment. The trustee paid off the execution, and took an assignment of the goods from the sheriff. A fiat in bankruptcy having afterwards issued against the trader; held, that although the levy made by the execution creditor might have been protected by stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 81, or 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, the party who had become assignee of the sheriff with knowledge of the act of bankruptcy, could not avail himself of that protection, and that the assignee in the bankruptcy might bring trover against him for the goods (Fawcett v. Fearne, 6 Q. B. 20).

Trover lies against a servant receiving goods for his master, after an act of bankruptcy, committed by the owner, although he has accounted with his master for the produce (Perkins v. Smith, Say. 40; 1 Ld. Raym, 724); or transmitted the goods to America to him (Stephens v. Elwell, 4 M. & S. 259); or against the servant of a bankrupt, who, acting under a [*333] general authority only, sells or *delivers his masters goods (Coles v. Wright, 4 Taunt. 198); but not, if he sell or deliver them under express orders from his master (Pearson v. Graham, 2 Nev. & P. 636; 6 Ad. & E. 899).

Where the bankrupt before his bankruptcy has deposited with the defts. a life-policy of insurance, as security for money then and previously advanced by them to him, and the lien still remains undischarged, the assignees cannot recover the policy in trover as being within the order and disposition of the bankrupt (Gibson v. Overbury, 7 M. & W. 555).

As to damages, see "TROVER."

Where Trover does not lie and Assumpsit does.] Where a bankrupt, after an act of bankruptcy, gives a creditor a check on his banker, or a bill on a debtor, or any other security, and the money is paid, the assignees should sue in assumpsit for money had and received (Thomason v. Frere, 10 East, 418), and not in trover, as in the latter form of action they can only recover the value of the paper, and must be nonsuited if that is of no value (Matthew v. Sherwell, 2 Taunt. 439); or if it belonged to the creditor, and was merely signed by the bankrupt (Walker v. Laing, 7 Taunt. 568; 1 Moo. 281). And so, where a bankrupt assigned a policy of assurance to the deft., but the company, upon it being afterwards discovered to be invalid, paid to the deft. half the sum insured, as a gratuity on his giving up the policy, it was decided that the value of the parchment only, and not the sum gratuitously paid, was recoverable in trover (Wills v. Wells, 8 Taunt. 264; S. C. 2 Moo. 247).

But, if the money be not paid, assumpsit will not lie (Walker v. Laing, supra; and see Moo. 286 n.). And where the bankrupt, after an act of bankruptcy in order to procure his discharge from arrest at the suit of D., drew and indorsed to D. a bill of exchange, which M. accepted in expectation of receiving goods of the bankrupt into his hands, which he was authorized by the bankrupt to sell, and afterwards, on receiving and selling them, paid D. the amount of the bill, it was held that the assignees could not sue D. for it as money had and received to their use, for (per Ld. Ellenborough, C. J.) "Smith" (the drawer of the bill) "at this time being a bankrupt, could exercise no disposing power over the goods in the hands of Martin: they were the property of the assignees, and the assignees may, if they think proper, bring an action of trover for the conversion of these goods, or they may ratify the act by bringing an action for goods sold and delivered; but they cannot consider the property as changed by the act of a party who held them under no contract or authority" Waller v. Drakeford, 1 Stark. R. 481).

If the assignees have once affirmed the transaction as a contract, they cannot afterwards disaffirm and bring trover upon it as for a tort, as where a person wrongfully continues the bankrupt's business, though for the benefit of his creditors and the assignees accept, they cannot sue him for the conversion of the goods (Brewer v. Sparrow, 7 B. & C. 310; 1 M. & R. 2).

Where the servant of a bankrupt, without authority, sold the bankrupt's goods to the deft., who had notice of the act of bankruptcy; the assignees delivered to the deft. a bill of parcels as for goods sold and delivered by the bankrupt, and made two several demands for payment, which the deft. refused, and he also refused to deliver up the goods when they were subsequently demanded. Held, that the demand for payment amounted only to a qualified offer by the assignees to adopt the sale, and that they were not *thereby precluded from suing in trover (Valpy v. Sanders, 12 Jur. 483, C. P.)

Trover, when more beneficial.] It is generally more advisable for the assignees to proceed in trover; for, if the goods have been sold, "the plt. may recover in trover the full value of the goods, deducting the ordinary expenses of a sale, though the sale may not actually have produced more than half their worth; but, in assumpsit, the assignees can only recover what the party really received" (per Buller, J., King v. Leith, 2 T. R. 144). But, if the assignees might have prevented the sale, but did not, and did not make any objection to the time and manner of it, or give notice not to sell, a fair and proper measure of the value to them, is the amount produced on a fair sale; for as it is their duty to sell at all events, they are in a different position from an owner who is under no obligation to sell, as in Glasspoole v. Young, 9 B. & C. 696; and to whom a "thing may be worth more than he could dispose of it for to any one else" (Whitmore v. Blake, 8 Jur. 1103, E.).

Another reason for suing in trover, in preference to assumpsit, is that, by proceeding in trover, they are not compelled to affirm the contract, as in assumpsit, "and having once treated the transaction as a contract of sale, they must pursue it through all its consequences, one of which is, that the party buying may set-off another debt owing to him" (Smith v. Hodson, 4 T. R. 217). It is also advisable, in many cases, to adopt the action of trover in preference to an action ex contractu, as, in trover, the deft. cannot set-off any debt due to him by the bankrupt (Wilkins v. Carmichael, 1 Doug. 101; Raphael v. Birdwood, 5 Pri. 604); sed quære, if the form of action make any difference in this latter respect (see Key v. Flint, 1 Moo. 451; S. C. 8 Taunt. 21).

As to when trover should be brought and not covenant, see ante, "COVENANT."

Ejectment.] Assignees may support an action of ejectment, but they must not lay the demise before the date of their appointment; as this has only the same effect as the bargain and sale had formerly, which vested the title in them only from its date and execution by the commissioners, and not before (Doe d. Esdale v. Mitchell, 2 M. & S. 446).

A trader being seised of an estate for life, with a power of appointment, remainder in default of appointment to himself in fee, after having committed an act of bankruptcy, made an appointment to J. S.; it was held that all his interest having passed to his assignees, under a bargain and sale executed by the commissioners, the appointment was void, and therefore that the assignee might maintain ejectment (Doe d. Coleman v. Britain, 2 B. & A. 93; see Badham v. Mee, 7 Bing. 695; Jones v. Winwood, 3 M. & W. 653; Hole v. Escott, 2 Keen, 444; see "EJECTMENT").

Trespass will lie at the suit of the assignees for an injury to, or a motion of the property, if they have obtained actual possession of it, but they cannot support it before they have obtained such possession (Clark v. Calvert, 3 Moo. 95; 1 Glyn & J. 147). It will not lie against a sheriff for taking the bankrupt's goods in execution, after the act of bankruptcy, and before the issuing of the commission; the assignees, in such case, should bring trover (Smith v. Mills, 1 T. R. 475; Burr. 20).

Pleas.

Pleas to Actions by Assignees. [*335] The right of action is vested in *all the assignees jointly, and the non-joinder of one of them was considered a ground of nonsuit (Snelgrove v. Hunt, 1 Ch. Rep. 71; but see observations thereon in Alivon v. Furnival, 1 C. M. & R. 285, 296; quare, whether it should not form the subject of plea in abatement; see 1 Ch. Pl. 27; Hollands v. Phillips, 10 Ad. & E. 49. Quere, whether the plea of not guilty, in trover, does not put in issue the wrongful nature of the conversion, per Parke, B., Kynaston v. Crouch, 14 L. J. 324, Ex.; see Sancliffe v. Hardwick, 2 C. M. & R. 1). If the cause of action accrued before the act of bankruptcy, the deft. may set up every defence he could have done to the action by the trader if he had not become bankrupt (Dobson v. Lockhart, 5 T. R. 132); and, on the other hand, the assignees may claim the benefit of any estoppel, which would have operated between the deft. and the bankrupt, as in an action for rent, to prevent him from questioning their title as lessors (Parker v. Manning, 7 T. R. 537). Where A. having given a trader a bond to secure an annuity, before any payment became due A. lent the trader a sum of money, and it was agreed that A. should retain the payments of the annuity, until the sum lent was discharged; in an action by the assignees of the trader (who had become bankrupt), against A., for arrears of the annuity, it was holden that this agreement to retain was a good defence to the action, even as to payments of the annuity accruing due after the bankruptcy, as it was equivalent to a plea of solvit ad diem (Sturdy v. Arnaud, 3 T. R. 599).

The deft. may plead the Statute of Limitations (post); which begins to run from the accruing of the original cause of action (Gray v. Mendez, 1 Stro. 556).

It has been held, that to indebitatus assumpsit for the value of goods, he may plead in bar a judgment for him in trover for the same goods (Kitchen v. Campbell, 3 Wils. 304; Bla. R. 827); but a judgment of nonsuit for him in trover would not be a good plea to an action for money had and received, on the same ground of action (Walker v. Laing, 1 Moo. 286, n.; Eden. 314).

He cannot plead a release executed by the bankrupt after an act of bankruptcy, though two months before the issuing of the fiat, if the releasee knew at the time of the bankrupt's insolvency (Mavor v. Pyme, 2 Bing. 285).

Set-off] He may plead a set-off. This defence is now raised distinctly on the pleadings, and is not as before the new pleading rules, admissible under the general issue (Graham v. Partridge, 1 M. & W. 395; and see post, "SET-OFF," generally). Care must be taken that the plea be pleaded only to those counts of the declaration to which a set-off is applicable; where assignees sue for money had and received to their use as assignees, or on account stated with them in that character, they may recover in that form money received by the deft. by way of fraudulent preference before the bankruptcy; in such case therefore a set-off of money due from the bankrupt cannot be pleaded (Groom v. Mealy, 2 Bing. N. C. 138); and they may recover money received after the bankruptcy, so that in such case a set-off for money due from the bankrupt would be equally bad (Wood v. Smith, 4 M. & W. 522).

By s. 171 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, "where there has been mutual credit given by the bankrupt and any other person, or where there are mutual debts between the bankrupt and any other person, the court shall state the account between them, and one debt or demand may be set against another, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy committed by such bankrupt, before the credit given *to, or the debt contracted by him, and what [*336] shall appear due on either, on the balance of such account, and no more, shall be claimed or paid on either side respectively; and every debt or demand thereby made proveable against the estate of the bankrupt may also be set-off in manner aforesaid, against such estate, provided that the person claiming the benefit of such set-off had not, when such credit was given, notice of an act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed."

This section, which is a re-enactment of Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 50, consolidated the provisions of the 5 Geo. II. c. 30, s. 28, and the 46 Geo. III. c. 135, s. 3, and also made these alterations:—1. The accounts may now be taken down to the date of the fiat, and the credit need not be given two months previous, as by 46 Geo. III. c. 135 (Southwood v. Taylor, 1 B. & A. 471; Kinder v. Butterworth, 6 B. & C. 42). 2. The party is to be affected only by notice of an act of bankruptcy, and not by notice that the bankrupt was insolvent, or had stopped payment. 3. Every debt or demand which may be proved, may also be set-off against the bankrupt's estate; therefore, cases where the debt was contingent, which were formerly held not to be within the provision of the acts as to mutual credit (Ex parte Groome, 1 Atk. 115; Hancock v. Entwistle, 3 T. R. 435; 5 T. R. 133; Ex parte Whittaker, 1 Rose, 301) may now be proved under the 56th section, and therefore set off. Debts not payable at the time of bankruptcy may be proved (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 172). So may debts payable by sureties and persons liable for the debts of any bankrupt (Ib. 173). So obligees in bottomry, and assured, are allowed to prove in respect of policies; and persons effecting insurance (s. 174); annuity creditors (s. 175); debts contingent (s. 177).

In actions by assignees of bankrupt companies (under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 10, s. 9) the deft. cannot set off any claim he may have, as a member, in respect of his share in the joint stock or any dividend, interest, profit or bonus in respect of it. Semble, that the commissioner has no jurisdiction to value the annuity for the purpose of its value being set off in action (Ex parte Law, 1 De Gex, 378; see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 175).

B., a tanner, committed a secret act of bankruptcy by leaving his house, but, directed the deft., his foreman, to carry on his business in his absence. The deft. did so, and received several sums of money for debts due to the bankrupt, and for goods sold after the act of bankruptcy. He also made disbursements by payment of some of the bankrupt's debts, of house-keeping expenses, and for wages to himself. The payments were made bona fide and without notice of the act of bankruptcy. The deft. pleaded never indebted, and a set off. Held, that the deft. was liable to the assignees of the bankrupt in an action for money had and received for all the money received by him after the act of bankruptcy, and was not entitled to set off any of the payments made by him. Semble, that the deft. under 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 82; or 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, might have protected himself by a special plea as to part of the payments and disbursement made by him without notice of an act of bankruptcy (Kynaston v. Crouch, 14 Law J., 324, Ex.; 14 M. & W. 266).

In the year 1840, A. being the lessee of a warehouse and cellar under a demise from B., and being also the lessee under C. of property comprising, inter alia, a vault, D. became tenant, from year to year, to A. of the warehouse and cellar and vault, under an annual rent of 185*l.*, made up of 140*l.* for the warehouse and cellar, and 45*l.* for the vault. On the 27th October, 1845, A. became bankrupt, 92*l.* 10*s.* being at that time due as rent from D. to A. The assignees, upon being appointed, elected to take the property held under B., and on the 26th February, 1846, elected not to take the property held under C. At Christmas, 1845, rent to the amount of 114*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* became due from A. to C., for which amount, on the 19th February, 1846, C. distrained upon the goods in the vault held by D., who, to relieve himself from this distress, paid that sum to C. An action having been subsequently brought by the assignees of A. against D. to recover the above sum of 92*l.* 10*s.*, and also 35*l.*, being one quarter's rent of the warehouse and cellar due at Christmas, 1845: held, that D. was not entitled, in such action, to avail himself of the payment of 114*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* made by him to C. (Graham v. Allsopp, 3 Exch. 186; 18 Law J. 85, Exch.).

Mutual Credit.] If the cause of action accrued after the act of bankruptcy, but before fiat, plead mutual credit. As to distinction between mutual credit and set-off, see Forster v. Wilson, 12 M. & W. 302. By the new rules, mutual credit must be specially pleaded. The term mutual credit has [*337] always received a very liberal construction, being more extensive than that of mutual debts, and has not been confined to mere pecuniary demands (Ex parte Deeze, 1 Atk. 228). "A mutual credit may be said to exist where there is a debt, or something that will end in a debt" (per Taunton, J., Rose v. Sims, 1 B. & Ad. 526). In Rose v. Hart, 8 Taunt. 499, it was held, that it must be such as will in its nature terminate in a debt; "as, where a debt is due from one party, and credit given by him to the other, for a sum of money, payable at a future day, and which will then become a debt, or where there is a debt on one side, and a delivery of property, with directions to turn it into money, on the other, in such case, the credit given by the delivery of the property must, in its nature, terminate in a debt; the balance will be taken on the two debts, and the words of the statute will, in all respects, be complied with; but, where there is a mere deposit of property, without any authority to turn it into money, no debt can ever arise out of it, and, therefore, it is not a credit within the meaning of the statute (per Gibb, C. J., 8 Taunt. 506). But (per Tindal, C. J., Gibson v. Bell, 1 Bing. N. C. 743), this construction is too narrow, and it would seem to be enough if the credit was such as would be likely to terminate in "a demand which, though unliquidated at the moment, was capable of being reduced to a certainty by a simple calculation" (1 Bing. N. C. 754-5); and, therefore, a debt may plead a set-off to a declaration, without stating special damage, for the breach of an agreement to accept a bill of exchange, in payment of the balance due for goods sold and delivered by the bankrupt to the debt. (Gibson v. Bell, supra; 1 Sco. 712). So he may, though the declaration sound in form in special damage, as by alleging that "the personal estate and effects" of the bankrupt, "applicable to the discharge of his just debts, were, by reason of the said non-acceptance and non-payment, much diminished in value" (Groom v. West, 8 Ad. & E. 758; 1 P. & D. 19); and, per Denman, C. J.: "I doubt whether, in any instance, a mere pecuniary loss from breach of contract can be deemed such a special damage as excludes a set-off" (lb.; 8 Ad. & E. 771). But deft. cannot plead a set-off to an action for not indorsing a bill according to agreement (Rose v. Sims, 1 B. & Ad. 526); for, "if the indorsement had been made, it would not in its nature necessarily have terminated in a debt from the deft., for the acceptor would have been the debtor, the indorser the guarantee only (per Tindal, C. J., 1 Bing. N. C. 755). A liability on a guarantee for contingent damages is not the subject of set-off (Sampson v. Burton, 2 B. & B. 89); and where, upon a dissolution of partnership, the deft., the retiring partner, was found indebted to the firm in 6800*l.*, supposing all the debts of the firm to be paid, and he agreed to pay the other partners this sum, they undertaking to pay the partnership debts; upon their becoming bankrupt his liability to pay those debts does not constitute a debt or mutual credit to be set off against the 6800*l.*, under this clause, nor a debt proveable under the 52d or 56th section (Abbott v. Hicks, 7 Sco. 715; 3 Jur. 871). A mutual credit may be created, though it were not the intention of the parties to trust each other, as, if a bill of exchange, accepted by A., get into the hands of B., and B. buy goods of A., there is mutual credit between A. and B., though A. do not know that the bill is in B.'s hands (Hankey v. Smith, 3 T. R. 507, n.). Where a party lodges money with a banker on two distinct accounts, and on the one there is a debt due to him, and on the other due from him, he may, on the bankruptcy of the banker, set off one debt against the other (Ex parte Pearce, 2 Mont. Dea. & De. 142). So, where a *creditor leaves a legacy to his debtor, a bankrupt, and dies without proving his debt, the executors [*338] of the testator may set off the dividends payable, upon proof of the debt (but not the debt unproved), against the legacy (Cherry v. Boulton, 2 Jur. 884; 4 Myl. & Cr. 442).

The plts. and defts. being, by agreement by and between them, jointly entitled to the benefits of a charter-party, the plts. assigned their interest in it, by indorsement, to D., their creditor, at the same time giving the defts. notice of such assignment, and afterwards became bankrupts. The assignees of the charter-party having sued upon it in the names of the plts., the defts. pleaded the bankruptcy of the plts., by which the right to their choses in action vested in their assignees. Replication setting forth the assignment by the plts. of the interest in the charter-party to D., and notice to the defts. of that assignment given by them before the bankruptcy of the plts., and that the plts. sued on account of D. Rejoinder (after terms to rejoin gratis and issuable had been imposed), setting up the previous agreement between the plts. and defts., that they should share the benefits of the charter-party, by way of mutual credit between the parties on which an account should be stated, and one demand set against the other, under 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 50: held, not issuable, and bad in substance; for at the time of the bankruptcy no mutual credit existed between the plts. and defts. (Boyd v. Mangles, 16 M. & W. 337).

The right of set-off is incident to the right of lien at common law, limited, however, by the extent of the lien: thus, in the case of a general lien, as where a factor has a lien for his general balance, he will have a right to set off the whole of his debt due from the bankrupt; but one who has only a particular lien, as a miller or fuller, has no lien beyond the amount of his respective charges (Cherry v. Boulton, 2 Jur. 884; 4 Myl. & Cr. 442). So, if valuable paper be deposited as security for a particular loan, there cannot be a lien upon it for previous loans (Young v. Bengal (Bishop of), 1 Moo. 150; 1 Deac. 622); so if deposited for a specific purpose, and is detained against good faith (Key v. Flint, 8 Taunt. 21; 1 Swanst 30); or if it be remitted for application in a particular way, and not so applied and detained against the request of the remitter (Buchanan v. Findly, 9 B. & C. 738; 4 M. & R. 593). So, also, where there is a lien; yet if a security payable at a distant day be taken, the lien and with it the right of set-off, is gone (Hewison v. Guthrie, 2 Bing. N. C. 755; 3 Sco. 298).

Where money is paid, by a party who is justified in paying it, to release property from a lien, as rent paid to a landlord, by an execution creditor, to release the goods from a distress levied while he was in possession, though his execution was afterwards defeated by a previous act of bankruptcy by the debtor, it is the subject of set-off against the assignees (Ex parte Elliott, 3 Deac. 343; 3 Mont. & Ayr. 664). So, where a mortgagor, disposes of his mortgaged premises at a certain sum, which is not to be paid till the mortgages are satisfied, and the purchaser becomes bankrupt, and his assignees pay the mortgages before any proof made in respect of the mortgagor's claim, they may set off the amount of the mortgage from the dividends on the debt to him from the bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy (4 Sim. 267).

With Respect to the Nature of the Debt due by the Creditor to the Bankrupt's Estate.] It must have been due before the act of bankruptcy on which the commission is founded, though it is *immaterial whether [*339] it were then payable or not. Thus, if the holder of an acceptance buy goods from the acceptor, and the acceptor becomes bankrupt, the purchaser may set off the acceptance against the price of the goods (Hankey v. Smith, 3 T. R. 507, n.) So, if a trader, before an act of bankruptcy, give a security to his creditor for his debt, and that security become available either before or after bankruptcy, the creditor may set off the amount derived from the security against the debt due to him (Olive v. Smith, 5 Taunt. 56). And, if a trader, previous to an act of bankruptcy, send goods to a factor for sale, and draw bills upon him, on account of them, the factor may set off the amount of the bills, when paid, against the proceeds of the goods, when sold by him (Hammonds v. Barclay, 2 East, 227). And, where a person sold goods to a trader to the amount of 430*l.* at six months credit, and afterwards sold him another parcel to the amount of 230*l.*, at the same credit, at the expiration of the credit for the first parcel the trader gave him bills upon other persons for 600*l.*, and he gave the trader an undertaking to repay him the balance, 170*l.*, upon the bills being paid; the bills were paid, and the trader had become bankrupt before the credit for the second parcel expired, yet it was holden that the vendor of the goods could set off this 170*l.* against the amount of the second parcel (Atkinson v. Elliott, 7 T. R. 378). But, where a banker had accepted bills for a trader, after he had committed an act of bankruptcy, but, before a commission sued out, and he lodged money in his hands for the payment of them, it was held, under 5 Geo. II. c. 30, that the assignees might recover this money from the banker, and that the banker was not entitled to set it off, although he had paid the bills (Tamplin v. Diggins, 2 Camp. 312; Ridout v. Brough, Cowp. 133. See 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 172; ante, p. 334). However, now, in such case, it must appear in evidence that debt. had notice of the act of bankruptcy. And, if a banker receives and pays money on account of a bankrupt, after notice of his bankruptcy, he cannot set off the payments against the receipts, as against the assignees (Vernon v. Hanken, 2 T. R. 113; 3 Bro. 313; Raphael v. Birdwood, 5 Pri. 604; Ex parte Rhoades, 15 Ves. 539). But he may set off what he has paid before notice of an act of bankruptcy, though after notice that the bankrupt had stopped payment (Hawkins v. Whitten, 10 B. & C. 217; 3 M. & R. 219), but not after notice of the commission of an act of bankruptcy (Dixon v. Cass, 1 B. & Ad. 343); and notice of a docket having been struck is not notice of an act of bankruptcy (Hocking v. Arraman, D. & L. 434).

With respect to the Nature of the Debt due from the Bankrupt to the Creditor.] This must be such as might be proved under the commission. Where a country banker became a bankrupt, and, at the time of his bankruptcy, he and another country banker in the same town held notes and other securities of each other, to nearly the same amount, immediately after the private meeting, after the banker was declared bankrupt, and a provisional assignee was appointed, the provisional assignee presented the notes of the other banker for payment, partly at the bank in the country, and partly at the house of his agent in London, and was paid: it was holden that the banker whose notes were so paid might recover the amount in an action for money had and received against the provisional assignee (Edmeads v. Newman, 2 D. & R. 568; 1 B. & C. 418; and see Ex parte Rawson, Jac. 274). But the debtor of a bankrupt cannot set off a debt due from the bankrupt, if assigned to him after the bankruptcy. Therefore, it has been held under the old statutes, and would doubtless *on [*340] the present, that where the holder of a promissory note of a bankrupt indorsed it over after the issuing of a commission to a person who was a debtor to the bankrupt's estate, in order that he might set it off in his settlement with the assignees, he was not entitled to do so, even though he might have proved for the amount (Marsh v. Chambers, 2 Stra. 1234); and debt cannot set off cash notes of the bankrupt, payable to J. S., or bearer, without being prepared to show that they came to his hands before the bankruptcy, though they bear date before that time (Dickson v. Evans, 6 T. R. 57). And, even where such a transfer of a note of a bankrupt occurred before the issuing of the commission, but after both indorser and indorsee were apprised of his insolvency, it was holden that the indorsee could not set it off (Ex parte Stone, 1 Gly. & J. 191). And, where a country banker became bankrupt, and a debtor to his estate, after the issuing of the commission, purchased a quantity of his bank notes, at the rate of 10s. in the pound, it was holden that he could not set them off in his settlement with the assignees (Hodgson v. Young, E. 1814, cited, Arch. B. L. 70).

In cases of a trust between two parties, where the object of the trust was the sale of goods, and one party was indebted to the other on another account, it has been held to be a subject of set-off. Thus, where three persons joined in an adventure to buy and sell pearls, but the profit and loss were to be divided between the three, one of the parties becoming bankrupt, the party (who was to sell the pearls) was allowed to set off a debt due to him from the bankrupt, in an action commenced against him by the assignees, against the third share of the pearls belonging to the bankrupt, although the pearls were not sold, nor the produce received, until after the bankruptcy (French v. Fenn, C. B. L. 536). So, also, where a principal entrusted his broker with a policy of insurance, to receive an average loss under it, and then became a bankrupt, and the broker afterwards received the average loss, he was allowed to set off several sums of money due to him from the bankrupt, for premiums, &c., against the amount he received upon the policy after the bankruptcy, for the average loss was held to be a debt due before the bankruptcy, though not ascertained till afterwards (Whitehead v. Vaughan, C. B. L. 566; Parker v. Carter, ib. 567). "And the general principle is, that wherever each party has trusted the other with the possession of value, the assignees of either party (in case of his bankruptcy) can only withdraw that value from the other on the terms of paying what is due between them" (per Gibbs, C. J., Olive v. Smith, 5 Taunt. 56).

Where Credit not expired.] A sum of money payable at a future day after the bankruptcy, is a subject of set-off, within the meaning of the term mutual credit (Ex parte Prescott, 1 A.k. 230); as, where A. lent his acceptance to the bankrupts, which did not become due till after the act of bankruptcy, and was then outstanding in the hands of third persons, and A. paid the amount after the commission issued, and, before the assignee, sued for a debt owing by him to the bankrupt, it was holden that he was entitled to set off the amount of such payment under the words "mutual credit" (Smith v. Hudson, 4 T. R. 211; Ex parte Boyle, C. B. L. 542; Ex parte Wugstaff, 13 Ves. 65; Russell v. Bell, 8 M. & W. 277; 1 Dowl. N. S. 107). So, where the acceptor of a bill, which was afterwards indorsed to and negotiated by bankers, kept cash with them, and they became bankrupt before the bill became due, having in their hands sufficient of his money to pay the bill, he was held entitled to set off against the acceptance the amount due [*341] to him at the time of the *bankruptcy (Bolland v. Nash, 8 B. & C. 105; 2 M. & R. 189). So, where the bankrupt discounted a promissory note of the defts., and gave in part payment his own acceptance, which was indorsed to the defts. and negotiated by him, and he, on its becoming due, after the issuing of the commission, paid the amount to the holder, he was entitled to set it off against the claim on the promissory note (Collins v. Jones, 10 B. & C. 777. See 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 172, ante, p. 334).

Debt must be in the same Right.] The debt, to be the subject of a set-off, must be due in the same right. Thus, the costs of a judgment, as in case of a nonsuit against plt. after he has become bankrupt, cannot be set-off against the costs of an action by his assignees, though the defts. be the same in both actions, there being no mutual credit between the defts. and the assignees, nor the parties in the two actions the same (West v. Pryce, 2 Bing. 455). And so, where three partners, A. B., and C., delivered bills to D. for a special purpose, and A. and B. became bankrupts, and their assignees, together with C., the solvent partner, brought an action against D. for the proceeds of the bills, it was held he could not set-off a debt due to him from A., B., C. (Stainforth v. Fellowes, 1 Marsh. 184; Thomason v. Frere, 10 East, 418).

In an action by the assignees of an army-agent, against the colonel of a regiment, for goods sold and delivered by the agent for the use of the regiment, it was held that the colonel, who had given authority, by warrant to the agent, to receive moneys from the paymaster, might set-off a sum remaining unaccounted for in the hands of the agent, in reduction of the demand (Knowles v. Maitland, 4 B. & C. 173; S. C. 6 D. & R. 312).

And bona fide due to the same Parties.] Where a party holding the acceptance of a trader in bad circumstances, agreed with defts. that he should indorse the bill to them, and that they, as a mode of covering the acceptance, should purchase goods of the trader, to be paid for by a bill after the time of the trader's acceptance becoming due, the trader not being aware that defts. held his acceptance; the trader having become bankrupt, and, on an action brought by the assignees to recover the value of the goods sold, it was held that defts. could not set-off the bankrupt's acceptance, they not being the real bona fide holders of the bill, but merely trustees, and, as such, could not set-off a demand made upon them in their own right (Fair v. M'Iver, 16 East, 130); and so, a fortiori, if the bill was indorsed upon a preconcerted arrangement, that the defts. (the indorsee) should hold the goods for, and hand them over to, the indorser (Lackington v. Coombes, 6 Bing. N. C. 71; 8 Sco. 312); and so, where the holders of a bill accepted by the bankrupt, upon its being dishonoured, intending to close the transaction with respect to it, and having in their hands funds of the indorsers to the amount of it, debited the indorsers in their account with the amount, and wrote a receipt on the back of the bill, and returned it protested, but afterwards, at the request of the indorsers, and for their benefit, received it back, in order, if possible, to set it off against an acceptance of their own, drawn by the indorsers of the first bill in favour of bankrupt; it was held that they could not do so, both because they did not hold it bona fide for themselves, and that, having once closed the transaction, they could not re-open it (Belcher v. Lloyd, 3 Moo. & Sco. 822).

If the debt. mean to question the title of the plt. as assignee, he must plead specially in denial of it (R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 2, pl. 21). This *rule is general, but it would seem that it cannot apply to ejectment). A plea or replication in trespass, denying goods to be [*342] theirs as assignees, does not put their title in issue (Jones v. Brown, 1 Bing. N. C. 484). He must also, at or before pleading, give them a notice pursuant to the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 234, by which "it is declared, that, in any action other than an action brought by the assignees for any debt or demand for which the bankrupt might have sustained an action had he not been adjudged bankrupt, and whether at the suit of or against the assignees, or against any person acting under the warrant of the court, for anything done under such warrant, no proof shall be required at the trial of the p tioning creditor's debt, or of the trading or act of bankruptcy respectively, unless the other party in such action shall, if debt. at or before pleading, and if plt. before the issue joined, give notice in writing to such assignees, or other person, that he intends to dispute some, and which, of such matters, and if the assignees, &c., shall prove such matter, they shall be entitled to the costs thereof (Id.).

The analogous section 90 of 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, related only to actions brought by or against the assignees or commissioners, or persons acting under their warrant. It, therefore, did not affect actions where such persons are not parties, and, in those cases where the validity of the commission came incidentally in question, it was necessary to be regularly and strictly proved, as it used to be (Doe v. Liston, 4 Taunt. 741). So it did not apply to an indictment against the bankrupt for perjury in passing his examination (R. v. Penson, 3 Camp. 96); nor to a feigned issue (such as that in Lott v. Melville, 3 M. & G. 40; 9 Dowl. P. C. 882; 3 Sco. N. R. 346) under the Interpleader Act; whether at the time of an execution, by a creditor upon the bankrupt's goods, "the plts." (his assignees) "were entitled to the same or any part thereof, as against and free from the said execution," and whether the goods "were or were not liable to be so seized and levied, under the said writ as against the plts." The statute was not confined to cases where the assignees or commissioners are named as such upon the record; it also extended to actions where the opposite parties knew that they made out their title or their justification, as the case may be, under the commission (Simmonds v. Knight, 3 Camp. 251; Rowe v. Lant, Gow, 24); as where they sue as lessors of the plt. in ejectment (Doe d. Johnson v. Liver- sedge, 11 M. & W. 517). It also extended to actions, though there are other debts. on the record, if these debts. have justified as servants of the assignees (Gilman v. Cousins, 2 Stark. 182); and, of course, to an action by a bankrupt against his assignees (Ex parte Dick, 1 Rose, 41).

The notice must be strictly conformable to the statute, and must not be to dispute the bankruptcy generally, but must specify what facts in particular will be disputed, as the petitioning creditor's debt, the trading, or the act of bankruptcy (Trimley v. Uwins, 6 B. & C. 537; 9 D. & R. 548).

Time of Service.] The time of service, if on the part of the plt., must be before issue joined. But a notice delivered at the time of delivering the issue, with notice of trial, is sufficient (Richmond v. Heapy, 4 Camp. 207). A notice by the def. must be given at or before pleading. If he has omitted to give notice before pleading, and wishes to dispute the commission, his course would be to withdraw his plea, and plead de novo, with such notice (Willock v. Smith, 2 Camp. 184; Decharme v. Lane, 2 Camp. 324; Radmore v. Gould, Wightw. 80; Gardner v. Slack, 6 Moo. 489.) But he should, for this purpose, apply to the court, for he cannot regularly [*343] *withdraw a plea once pleaded, and deliver it again, with a notice, even though the time for pleading has not expired (Poole v. Bell, 1 Stark. 328; Lawrence v. Crowder, 1 M. & P. 511). With respect to the mode of service of the notice, service on the assignees in person, though the safest course, when practicable, is not absolutely necessary, a delivery of the notice to their attorney being sufficient; but leaving it with a servant at the dwelling-house even of the assignee, is not sufficient (Howard v. Ramsbottom, 3 Taunt. 526); though leaving it with a clerk at his counting-house is (Widger v. Browning, M. & M. 27; 3 C. & P. 229).

In trover against a sheriff for selling the bankrupt's goods, he ought to plead specialty payments necessarily made by him of the proceeds, as it is doubtful whether he can otherwise give them in evidence (Goldschmid v. Raphael, 3 Sco. 385).

Form of Pleadings.

Declaration.] In an action by assignees in that character, it is usual for them to allege their title, by stating themselves generally to be such in the beginning of the declaration, and to state generally, that the bankrupt was such, within the meaning of the stat. (Winter v. Kretchman, 2 T. R. 45); and this form of declaring, without setting out the petitioning creditor's debt, the proceedings of the commissioners, &c., is sufficient (Lawson v. Lamb, 1 Lutw. 274; Raym. 1548; Pepys v. Lowe, Carth. 29; Fletcher v. Pogson, 3 B. & C. 192; 5 D. & R. 1). In debt it is unnecessary after the words, "who has been summoned to answer the said A. B. and C. D.," to add, "as assignees as aforesaid," if it sufficiently appear that they sue as assignees (Ferguson v. Mitchell, 2 C. M. & R. 687; 4 Dowl. P. C. 513). Where the cause of action arose to the bankrupt, previously to the bankruptcy, and the bankrupt himself could have recovered, the assignees must declare as assignees, and so declare themselves in the declaration; but, if it arose after the act of bankruptcy, and either before or after the issuing of the fiat, so that the sum to be recovered would belong to the estate, they may sue and declare in their individual capacity, as in their own right, without describing themselves as assignees (Evans v. Mann, Cowp. 569; Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 341; Thomas v. Rideing, 1 Wightw. 65; 1 Rose, 121; 2 Chit. Rep. 325). Where the assignees, under a joint commission, sue for a separate debt due to one of the partners, they may describe themselves as the assignees of that partner only (Stonehouse v. De Silva, 3 Camp. 399). If it have become due subsequent to the bankruptcy, they need not so describe themselves, but may describe themselves as assignees under the joint commission (Pepper v. Molony, 1 Al. & Nap. 63, Irish); but, where the conversation took place when they were assignees of only the one partner, they must so describe themselves, and cannot recover even a moiety if they describe themselves as assignees of both bankrupts (Edwards v. Hooper, 11 M. & W. 363; and see Smith v. Goddard, infra). In an action by the assignees of two partners, bankrupts, if the declaration contain counts on debts which accrued to the partners jointly before their bankruptcy, and counts on debts which accrued to one of them separately, it is sufficient, and it is not essential for them to state whether the deft. is indebted to them as assignees of the two partners, or only of one, as under a joint commission against the two, for they may recover in the same action debts due to the partners jointly, and debts due to them separately (Graham v. Mulcaster, 4 Bing. 115). Where the assignees, under separate commissions against two or more persons, sue jointly, they should not describe themselves as assignees of all the *bankrupts, but each set of assignees must be distinctly [*344] described as the assignees of the bankrupt whom they represent (Ray v. Davies, 8 Taunt. 134; S. C. 2 Moo. 3). Where A. & B., who were assignees of C. and D., bankrupts, under separate commissions, sued in one action for debts due individually to C. and D., it was held the action could not be supported, there being no priority with respect to such separate demands; and, as the bankrupts could not have sued in this form, the assignees could not recover more than the persons they represented (Hancock v. Haywood, 3 T. R. 433; ib. 779). Where one of two partners became bankrupt before the other, the assignees, under a joint commission in an action for money paid to the deft. after the first, but before the second act of bankruptcy, declared for money had and received, to the use of the partners before their bankruptcy, and for money had and received to their own use as assignees, after the bankruptcy, it was held that they could not recover, though it would seem that, had they declared as assignees of A., they might have recovered a moiety of the money paid (Smith v. Goddard, 3 B. & P. 465; Edwards v. Hooper; and see supra). In an action of covenant for rent accrued since the bankruptcy, it is no objection, on a general demurrer, that the assignees have not set forth their title (Barker v. Manning, 7 T. R. 537). In declaring on a sci. fa. by the assignees, it may be stated generally that the bankrupt became such within the meaning of the statute, &c., that his goods, &c., were assigned to them, &c. (Winter v. Kretchman, 2 T. R. 45; Fletcher v. Pogson, 3 B. & C. 192; S. C. 5 D. & R. 1). In an action by a new assignee upon a judgment recovered by a removed assignee, it is sufficient to state the removal of the former assignee, and that the new assignee was duly constituted and appointed (Da Cosson v. Vaughan, 10 East, 61). All the assignees, who are living must join in the action (Snelgrove v. Hunt, 2 Stark. 424), including the official assignee, if any (1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 56, s. 22, repealed by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106). Where his name was omitted the proceedings were allowed to be amended, on motion, by adding it (Baker v. Neaver, 1 Dowl. P. C. 616; 1 Car. & M. 112; 3 Tyr. 233). Where the bankrupt is a member of a partnership, the assignees must join the solvent partner (Thomason v. Frere, 10 East, 418; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 152), and he cannot release (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 152), and he can e contra use their names (Whitehead v. Hughes, 2 Car. & M. 318; 4 Tyr. 92). The assignees of a bankrupt may maintain an action in their own names only for a chose in action belonging to the wife of the bankrupt, e. g. a promissory note given to her dum sola, and in such action the deft. cannot set off a debt due to him from the bankrupt (Yates v. Sherrington, 11 M. & W. 42).

If a promissory note is made payable to the bankrupt only, he should sue, and not the assignees (Carpenter v. Marnell, 3 B. & P. 40). So, if a warrant of attorney is given to enter up judgment in his name and no other, and it is so entered, they must sue on the judgment in his name (per Patteson, J., in Guinness v. Carroll, 4 B. & Ad. 464).

As to nonjoinder of assignee or solvent partners, see post, "PARTNERS."
 The cause of action should be stated, as it accrued to the bankrupt or to the assignees (Selw. N. P. 261). An assignee ought, in assumpsit, to state the promise, as if made to the bankrupt, unless an express promise be made to the assignee; but he may declare in his own name for money had and received after the assignment (Anon., 6 Mod. 131), though the promise may always be laid to have been made to the bankrupt (Rig v. Wilmer, 1 Stra. 697).

Where *the plts. sue as assignees of several bankrupts, for money [*345] had and received, and part of the money was received before the bankruptcy of either parties, and part after the bankruptcy of one, and before that of the others, the counts must be framed accordingly (Smith v. Goddard, 3 B. & P. 465). Where the declaration alleged an account stated with the bankrupt, and promises to the assignees, and the evidence was of an account stated with the bankrupt, and promises to him, it was held sufficient (Skinner v. Rebaw, 1 Selw. N. P. 261). It has been held, that where a levy of bankrupt's goods, after bankruptcy, was valid, by 49 Geo. III. c. 121, s. 2, a description of such goods, as of the bankrupt, in an action by the assignees, in consequence of such levy, was good (Sampson v. Buxton, 4 Moo. 515; 2 B. & B. 89). In an action to recover 20% per cent. under the act, the plt. must declare specially as for a penalty, unless the commissioners have settled an amount, charging the assignees with such interest (Beresford v. Birch, 1 C. & P. 373).

The declaration must not contain counts with claims arising out of different rights; otherwise it would be bad on a general demurrer, or in arrest of judgment, or upon error (2 B. & P. 424; 4 T. R. 347; 2 Chit. Rep. 697; 1 Ch. Pl. 28). Therefore, as we have already seen, the assignees of A., a bankrupt, and also of B., a bankrupt, under separate commissions, cannot recover in the same action a joint debt due from the deft., to both the partners, and also separate debts due to each (Hancock v. Haywood, 3 T. R. 433; and see further, ante, 344).

Different Counts.] Counts for money lent by the assignees of a bankrupt, may be joined with counts for money lent by the bankrupt himself (Richardson v. Griffin, 5 M. & S. 294; 2 Chit. Rep. 325); and counts for money had and received to the use of the bankrupt, and on an account stated with him, may be joined with counts for money received to the use of the assignees, and on an account stated with them (Williams v. Vines, 1 D. & L. 710; nom. Lackington v. Vines, 1 D. & L. 710). It is a rule in actions by executors, administrators, assignees of bankrupts, &c., that a promise after the death of the testator, or after bankruptcy, cannot be given in evidence unless there be a count charging such promise to have been made to the plt. in his representative capacity (Sarell v. Wine, 3 East, 409; Powley v. Newton, 6 Taunt. 453; Hickman v. Walker, Willes, 27; Pittain v. Forster, 1 B. & C. 548).

Plea.] See post, "PLEA" A plea of set-off must show that the mutual credit on which the balance is claimed was given before the bankruptcy (Hewison v. Guthrie, 2 Bing. N. C. 755; 3 Sco. 298); and that it is pleaded to a debt to which it is strictly applicable; and therefore to a count in debt for money had and received to the use of the plts., as assignees (not stating whether received before or since the bankruptcy), a plea of set-off for money due on an account stated with the bankrupt, before his bankruptcy, is bad, as not showing that the debts are mutual (Groom v. Mealey, 2 Bing. N. C. 138; 2 Sco. 171). So it is bad if the count is for money received to the use of the assignees since the bankruptcy (Wood v. Smith, 4 M. & W. 522. See this case, ib. n., p. 526, as to the incorrectness of the reporter of Tindal's judgment, in Groom v. Mealey, in 2 Bing. N. C. supra). It is necessary to state the mode in which the credit was given (Alsager v. Currie, 12 M. & W. 751).

Where to assumpsit by assignees, for money had and received to their use since the bankruptcy, the deft. pleaded that, before the bankruptcy, and before notice of any act of bankruptcy, he gave *credit to the bankrupt to the amount of 50*l*, by indorsing, for his accommodation [*346] and without consideration, a bill for that amount, drawn by him, and payable to the bankrupt's order, and that such credit was of a nature extremely likely to end in a debt; that the amount of the bill was paid by him on its dishonour, after the bankruptcy, but before the commencement of the action, and that the bankrupt thereupon became indebted to the deft.; that, before the bankruptcy, the bankrupt drew a bill of exchange on the Chesterfield Bank, and delivered it to the deft. by way of loan, that he might raise the amount, and thereby give credit to the deft. to that amount, and that afterwards, and before the bankruptcy, the deft. obtained the amount of the said bill from the Chesterfield Bank, and that he was ready to set off the two sums against each other: it was held, that this was such a giving of credit as ought to be the subject of set-off (Hulme v. Muggleston, 3 M. & W. 31; 6 Dowl. P. C. 112). So, in another case, where the plea of set off was the same as above, except that it showed that the bill, on which the deft. received the money, was delivered to him, and the money was received before the issuing of the fiat and notice of bankruptcy: the plea was held good on special demurrer, as showing good ground of set-off, and properly confessing and avoiding the cause of action (Bittlestone v. Timmis, 1 C. B. 389; see "SET-OFF").

Where the defence is in substance a denial that the property passed to the assignees, a simple traverse of such property is sufficient (see per Parke, B., in Carr v. Burdress, 1 C. M. & R. 787, 788; and also in Turquand v. Hawtrey, 9 M. & W. 727); therefore, if the declaration is only for money received since the bankruptcy, and the money was received before it, the deft. need only plead the general issue (per Parke, B., in Wood v. Smith, 4 M. & W. 525).

Replication.

It seems that a replication to the plea (in Hulme v. Muggleston, supra) that the deft. did not give credit to the bankrupt, and that the bankrupt did not give credit to the deft., and that the bankrupt was not, nor is, indebted to the deft., modo et formâ, is bad for duplicity (3 M. & W. 31; 6 Dowl. P. C. 112). The proper form of replication is—and the plts. say that the said E. F. was not, nor is he, indebted to the deft., modo, &c., concluding to the country (Alsager v. Currie, 11 M. & W. 14). The assignees cannot reply a fraudulent delivery of goods, for the price of which they sue (Russell v. Bell, 8 M. & W. 277). De injuriâ would seem to be bad.

Where, to an action by assignees for 48*l.*, the price of a phaeton which the deft. had purchased from the bankrupt, for cash on delivery, and the deft. pleaded a set-off on a bill of exchange for 48*l.*, accepted by the bankrupt, payable to one H, and by H. endorsed to the deft., and the plt. replied, that after the bill became due, and was dishonoured, H. indorsed it to the deft. without consideration, in order that the deft. might purchase the phaeton, setting off the amount of the bill, and then hand over the phaeton to H.; it was held, on special demurrer, that the replication was an answer to the claim of set-off (Lackington v. Coombes, 6 Bing. N. C. 71; 8 Sco. 312; see more, as to Pleas and Replications, 3 Ch. Pi. Index, and post, these heads).

Precedents.*

Commencement of declaration, ats. assignees.

Middlesex, to wit (venue). A. B. and C. D., assignees of the estate and effects of E. F. a bankrupt, according to the statutes in force concerning bankrupts, by I. K., their attorney, complain of G. H. For that, &c.

Indebitatus assumpsit on promises to the bankrupt.

For that whereas (or, if this be not the first count, say, "and whereas also") the deft., heretofore, and before the said G. H. became a bankrupt, (to wit) on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1848 (any day before the bankruptcy), was indebted to the said G. H. in 100*l.*, for the price and value of goods then bargained and sold (or sold and delivered), by the said G. H. to the deft., at his request, and on 100*l.* for money found to be due from the deft. to the said G. H. on an account then stated between them (so adopting and altering such other of the common counts (ante, p. 225) as the circumstances of the case may render it advisable to insert, taking care to state all the promises and causes of action to have accrued to the bankrupt before the bankruptcy).

General conclusion.

And, whereas the deft. being so indebted, afterwards, and before the bankruptcy of the said G. H., on the day and year aforesaid (or, as case may be, "last aforesaid"), in consideration of the premises respectively, then promised to pay the said several moneys respectively to the said G. H., on request, yet he hath disregarded his promises, and hath not paid any of the said moneys, or any part thereof, to the damage of the plts., as assignees, as aforesaid, of £—, and thereupon they bring suit, &c. (If there be the least ground for presuming there has been a promise to the plts., as assignees, counts should be inserted to meet the same).

On promises to the assignees, for a debt due before bankruptcy.

And whereas also the deft., after the said G. H. became bankrupt, to wit, on the 1st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1848, (any day after the bankruptcy), was indebted to the plts., as assignees as aforesaid, in 100*l.*, for the price and value of goods, by the said G. H., before his bankruptcy, sold and delivered to the deft., at his request. And 100*l.* for money found to be due from the deft. to the plts. as assignees as aforesaid, on an account then stated between them. And whereas deft., being so indebted, afterwards, on the day and year aforesaid, in consideration of the premises respectively, then promised to pay the said several moneys respectively, to the plts., as assignees as aforesaid, on request, yet, &c., as ante. (Other counts may be readily framed on other causes of action, on the principle of the preceding one. It is not, however, usual, nor perhaps necessary, to insert any other count than the account stated, unless there has been some distinct cause of action, as goods sold, or money lent, &c., after the act of bankruptcy, and when this, and counts as post, should be added).

On promises to the assignees, on causes of action accruing since the act of bankruptcy.

And whereas, also, the deft., after the said G. H. became a bankrupt, to wit, on the 1st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1848, was indebted to the plts., as assignees as aforesaid, in 100*l.*, for the price and value of goods, by the plts., as assignees as aforesaid, before then, and after the bankruptcy of the said G. H., sold and delivered to the deft., at his request. And whereas the deft., being so indebted, afterwards, on the day and year last aforesaid, in consideration of the premises respectively, then promised to pay the plts. as assignees as aforesaid, the said last-mentioned sum of money, on request, yet, &c. (Other counts may be readily framed, on causes of action accruing after the bankruptcy, on the principle of the preceding count. Care should be taken to insert a count for money had and received to the use of the assignees. The account stated is as supra. If the plt. be a surviving assignee call him so throughout, and insert the usual breach as above).

[*348] *Trove*r* by assignees on the bankrupt's possession, and a conversion after the bankruptcy.

For that whereas the said G. H., heretofore and before he became a bankrupt, to wit, on the 1st day of January, in the year of our Lord, 1848 (some days before the bankruptcy), was lawfully possessed, as of his own property, of certain goods and chattels, to wit, (state the property as usual, post, "TROVER,") of great value, to wit, of the value of 100*l.*; and, being so possessed thereof, he, the said G. H., afterwards, and before he became a bankrupt, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, casually lost the said goods and chattels out of his possession; and the same afterwards, and before he became a bankrupt, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, came to the possession of the deft. by finding. Yet the deft., well knowing the said goods and chattels to be the property of the said G. H. before he became a bankrupt, and of right to belong and appertain to him before his bankruptcy, and to the said plts., as assignees as aforesaid, after such bankruptcy; but contriving, and intending, to injure the said G. H. before he became a bankrupt, and the plts., as assignees as aforesaid, since the said G. H. became a bankrupt, in this behalf, hath not as yet delivered the said goods and chattels, or any or either of them, or any part thereof, to the said G. H. before his bankruptcy, or to the plts. since, although often requested so to do, and hath hitherto wholly refused so to do; and afterwards, and after the said G. H. became a bankrupt, to wit, on the second day of January, in the year aforesaid (any day after the bankruptcy), converted and disposed of the said goods and chattels to his, the said deft.'s, own use. (If the conversion was before the act of bankruptcy, a count should be inserted to meet same accordingly. It is also advisable to insert the following count.)

Trover on the assignees' possession, and conversion afterwards.

And whereas also the plts., as such assignees as aforesaid, heretofore, and after the said G. H. became a bankrupt, to wit, on the 1st day of January, in the year of our Lord, 1848 (any day after the bankruptcy), were lawfully possessed, as of the property of the plts., as assignees aforesaid, of certain other goods and chattels, to wit, &c. (describe goods as usual in trover, post, "TROVER") of great value, to wit, of the value of 100*l.*, of lawful money of Great Britain, (or, if this be not the first count describing the goods, say, "goods and chattels of the like number, quantity, quality, description, and value, as the said goods and chattels in the said first count mentioned"); and being so possessed thereof, they, the plts., afterwards, to wit, on the day last aforesaid, casually lost the said last-mentioned goods and chattels out of their possession; and the same afterwards, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, came to the possession of the deft. by finding; yet the deft., well knowing the said last-mentioned goods and chattels to be the property of the plts., as such assignees as aforesaid, and of right to belong and appertain to them as such, but contriving, and fraudulently intending, to injure the plts., as such assignees as aforesaid, in this behalf, hath not as yet delivered the said last-mentioned goods and chattels, or any or either of them, or any part thereof, to the plts., although often requested so to do, but hath hitherto wholly refused so to do; and afterwards, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, converted and disposed of the said last-mentioned goods and chattels to his, the deft.'s, own use; to the damage of the plts., as such assignees as aforesaid, of 100*l.*, (insert enough to cover full value of goods); and therefore they bring their suit, &c.

Pleas.

Pleas.] The forms of pleas are the same for the most part as in ordinary cases. A plea, or notice of set-off, may be readily framed, stating, that "the bankrupt, at the time of the bankruptcy, was indebted," &c.; and omitting the words, "before and at the time of the commencement of the suit, was, and still is;" and after setting forth the subject-matter of the debt in the usual form, alleging, "which said sum of money is still wholly unpaid, and due and owing to the deft., and exceeds the damages sustained by the plts. as assignees as aforesaid, by reason of the non-performance by the deft. of the promises (&c.) in the declaration mentioned, and out of which sum due to the deft. he is ready, and hereby offers, to set off and allow to the plts., as assignees as aforesaid, the full amount of the said damages.—Verification.

*Denial that plts. are assignees

[*349]

C. D. ats. A. B. and another suing as assignees of, &c., says that the plts. were not, nor are they assignees of the estate and effects of the said E. F., a bankrupt, in manner and form as the plts. have above, in the said declaration, alleged. And of this the deft. puts himself upon the country, &c.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

Proof of Title to sue.] The plts., when necessarily suing as assignees, were, in all actions, formerly obliged to substantiate their title to sue, by proving strictly all the requisites to support the commission, viz, the petitioning creditor's debt, the trading and act of bankruptcy, the issuing of the commission, and the assignment to the plts. But the law in this respect, as to the proof of the first three requisites, is materially modified; for, in some cases, no such proof is required, and in others the depositions before the commissioners are conclusive evidence. We shall consider those cases; 1. When proof of title is necessary; and, 2. The mode of making such title.

I.—WHEN PROOF OF TITLE IS NECESSARY.

The character of the plt. is not to be considered as in issue unless specially denied (R. G. H. T., 4 Will. IV. r. 2, pl. 21, see post, "EVIDENCE FOR DEFENDANT"). A plea specially denying it, puts in issue the petitioning creditor's debt, the trading, and the act of bankruptcy, the fiat, or petition for adjudication, the assignment or appointment of the assignees (Hobson v. Butler, 4 Bing. N. C. 290; 6 Dowl. P. C. 409; Buckton v. Frost, 8 Ad. & E. 844). A plea, or replication in trespass, averring that the goods were not theirs, as assignees, does not put their title in issue (Jones v. Brown, 1 Bing. N. C. 484). But the plts., notwithstanding such special plea, need prove only such of the above requisites as the deft. by his notice declares it his intention to dispute (Porter v. Walker, 1 M. & G. 686; Hobson v. Butler; Buckton v. Frost, supra; and see notice under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 234, post, p. 152); and if proper notice be not given no proof whatever of petitioning creditor's debt, the trading, or act of bankruptcy, &c., is required, though there is a plea denying the bankruptcy (Moon v. Raphael, 7 C. & P. 115); or though the proceedings, if unnecessarily put in, appear defective on the face of them (McBeath v. Coates, 4 Bing. 34; 12 Moo. 122; Bevan v. Lewis, 1 Sim. 376). The notice on the part of the deft. is not to be considered as part of his evidence in the cause, but should be proved at the beginning of the trial; and, as soon as the commissions and proceedings are produced by the plt., the court will then immediately compel the latter to support the commission in the same manner as he was formerly obliged to do, viz., by strict proof of the petitioning creditor's debt, and the other requisites (Decharme v. Lane, 2 Camp. 324). Where notice has been given only to dispute the act of bankruptcy, and the other side have read the depositions on the file to prove the trading and debt, the residue of the proceedings are not considered to be evidence, and the counsel for the party contesting the commission has no right to inspect them (Bluck v. Thorne, 4 Camp. 191; Stafford v. Clarke, 1 C. & P. 26).

The 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 234, renders the party giving notice liable to the costs occasioned by it, if the disputed matter is proved by the other side, or admitted by the party giving the notice: and the judge before whom the cause shall be tried, if he thinks fit, may grant a certificate of [*350] such proof or admission. But the judge, if the cause is referred before trial, cannot certify (Barthrop v. Anderton, 8 Bing. 269), and the statute does not apply to an issue to try the title of the assignees as against an execution creditor (Lott v. Melville, 3 M. & Gr. 49). But an action of ejectment, in which the assignees are lessors of the plt., is within it, and it applies to assignees under commissions issued before the statute (Doe v. Leversedge, 11 M. & W. 517), and to an action by a bankrupt against assignees (see post; Ex parte Dick, 1 Rose, 51).

II.—MODE OF PROVING TITLE OF PLAINTIFFS.

This will be considered with reference to cases—1. Where no notice has been given to dispute the title; 2. Where the commission has not been disputed by the bankrupt within a limited period after the adjudication; and, 3. Where a notice has been given to dispute the title, and the commission has been disputed by the bankrupt within such limited period, and where strict proof of title is required.

1. Mode of proving Title, where no Notice has been given to dispute it.] If there be a plea specially denying the title of the plts., but no notice has been given, pursuant to the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 234, it will be sufficient for the assignees, commissioners, or persons acting under their warrant, to prove the fiat and their appointment only, without any further proof. Even this proof is unnecessary if the opposite party have admitted their title, but such admission must be proved (ante, and post, p. 365).

As to plts. undertaking or retaining venue, see Soulsby v. Lea, 3 Taunt. 86.

We shall now consider the mode of proving the fiat, and the appointment of the assignees.

The Fiat.] By 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 56, s. 14, a fiat is now issued, in lieu of the commission under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 12. By the 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 114, s. 5, all fiats, adjudications of bankruptcy, appointments of assignees, and certificates of conformity, shall be entered of record in the court of bankruptcy; and (sect. 8) unless so entered shall not be received in evidence in any court of law or equity; and by sect. 6, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, all the records and proceedings shall continue to be so kept; and (sect. 9, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 114) “upon the production in evidence of any commission, fiat, adjudication, assignment, appointment of assignees, certificate, deposition, or other proceeding in bankruptcy purporting to be sealed with the seal of the said court of bankruptcy, or of any writing purporting to be a copy of such document, and purporting to be sealed as aforesaid, the same shall be received as evidence of such documents respectively, and of the same having been so entered of record, without any further proof thereof.

Though, under a similar clause in the 6 Geo. IV., c. 16, the great seal alone was not sufficient to authenticate proceedings in bankruptcy, yet, when a commission was superseded, the writ of supersedeas (reciting that a commission issued on that day, even against a party who was both a stranger to the writ and to the commission; for a commission of bankruptcy is considered in law as a proceeding to which all the world are parties (Gervis v. Western Canal Company, 5 M. & S. 76); it was sufficient proof of a fiat to show that it is under the hand of a Master in Chancery, without proving *his appointment to sign fiats under 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 56, s. 12 [*351] (Marshall v. Lamb, 13 Law J., N. S., Q. B., 75).

It is now enacted by 12 & 13 Vict. 106, sect. 236, “that any fiat, petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, adjudication of bankruptcy, petition for arrangement between a debtor and his creditors, assignment, appointment of assignees, certificate, deposition, or other proceeding or order in bankruptcy, or under any such petition for arrangement, appearing to be sealed with the seal of the court, or any writing purporting to be a copy of any such document, and purporting to be so sealed, shall at all times, and on behalf of all persons, and whether for the purposes of this act or otherwise, be admitted in all courts whatever as evidence of such documents respectively, and of such proceedings and orders having respectively taken place or been made, and be deemed respectively records of the court, without any further proof thereof, and no such document or copy shall be receivable in evidence unless the same appear to be so sealed, except where otherwise in this act specially provided: provided always, that all fiats and proceedings under the same which may have been entered of record before the passing of the act passed in the parliament holden in the second and third years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth (c. 114), intituled, 'An Act to amend the Laws relating to Bankrupts,' or purporting to have been sealed before the commencement of this act with the seal of the Court of Bankruptcy theretofore in use, or a writing purporting to be a copy of any such document, and purporting to have been so sealed, shall and may upon the production thereof, and in the case of any fiat or proceedings entered of record before the passing of the last-mentioned act, with the certificate thereon, purporting to be signed by the person duly authorised to enter proceedings in bankruptcy, or by his deputy, be received as evidence of the same, and of the same having been duly entered of record, and of such proceedings having respectively taken place, anything hereinbefore contained notwithstanding."

By sect. 237, "that all courts, judges, justices, and persons judicially acting, and other officers, shall take judicial notice of the signature of any commissioner or registrar of the court, and of the seal of the court, subscribed or attached to any judicial or official proceeding or document to be made or signed under the provisions of this act."

As to the proof of the assignment, under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, see Pearce v. Hooper, 3 Taunt. 62; Orr v. Morrice, 3 B. & B. 139; Read v. Cooper, 5 Taunt. 89; Tucker v. Barrow, M. & M. 137; Gomersal v. Serle, 2 Y. & J. 5; and of the bargain and sale, see Perry v. Bowes, Jon. T. 196; Bennet v. Gaudy, Carth. 178; Elliot v. Danby, 12 Mod. 3; 2 Ph. Ev. 388, 499; 27 Hen. VIII. c. 16; Kinnersley v. Orpe, 1 Doug. 56, 58; R. v. Hopper, 3 Pri. 495.

Where Defendant estopped from disputing Title.] Proof of title of the assignees will be dispensed with, in cases where deft., by his own act, has estopped himself from disputing it (Eden 354; Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 340; Rankin v. Horner, 16 East, 191). As, where the deft. had attended a meeting of the commissioners, and exhibited an account between him and the bankrupt, and afterwards made a part payment to the assignee, as such, on that account, it was held to be prima facie evidence that the plt. was assignee (Dickenson v. Coward, 1 B. & A. 677). So, if a deft., on being applied to by a person whom it is proved he knew to be the collector of the bankrupt's debts for the assignees, said he would call and pay the money, such promise was held prima facie to dispense with the necessity of proving plt.'s title (Pope v. Monck, 2 C. & P. 112), though the title was directly in issue (Inglis v. Spence, 1 C. M. & R. 432). So, where, to debt on bond by assignees, the deft. (before the new rules) pleaded payment only, it was held that this was an admission of their title, and that they need not prove themselves to be assignees (see Corsbie v. Oliver, 1 Stark, 76, ante). So, in an action brought by the assignee to recover the price of the goods received by deft. from the bankrupt before his bankruptcy, to sell by auction, and which he had sold after the bankruptcy, it was held that the deft., having described the goods in his catalogue of sale as "the property of D., a bankrupt," had estopped himself from calling the bankruptcy in question, and prima facie dispensed with the necessity of proving the proceedings (Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 340; 16

East, 193). Where the deft. himself contracted with the assignees, or, semble, even with the bankrupt after the bankruptcy, it was held that they might recover, without proving themselves to be such (Evans v. Mann, Cowp. 569), although they alleged themselves in the declaration to be assignees (Thomas v. Rideing, Wight. 65). The mere circumstance of a creditor's proving a debt under the commission, is not sufficient to preclude him from disputing its validity (Rankin v. Horner, 16 East, 191; Stewart v. Richman, 1 Esp. 108; but, where he had sent his agent as a witness to prove the act of bankruptcy, it was held that the depositions of that witness were evidence against him, though the witness was still living (Gardner v. Moulst, 2 P. & D. 403; 10 Ad. & E. 464); and so an affidavit by a petitioning creditor himself, that a trader is indebted in 100%. to him, and is become a bankrupt, is conclusive evidence against such creditor of the bankruptcy (Ledbetter v. Salt, 4 Bing. 623).

So, where the bankrupt had petitioned for his discharge under 49 Geo. III. c. 121, s. 14, it was held that he could not, in an action against his assignees, dispute the validity of the commission, "for, having availed himself of the commission for one purpose, he could not afterwards be allowed to assert to the same judges before whom he took the benefit of it, that it was invalid" (Watson v. Wace, 5 B. & C. 153, 155). So, where the bankrupt had gone to various persons to solicit them to vote in the choice of assignees under his commission (Like v. Howe, 6 Esp. 20), or where he had taken a part in the sale of his own effects under the commission (Clarke v. Clarke, 6 Esp. 61), it was held he could not afterwards dispute the validity of the commission. But a bankrupt's merely presenting a petition to enlarge the time of his surrender, in which he stated he had been duly declared a bankrupt, does not so preclude him (Mercer v. Wise, 3 Esp. 216). Nor does his applying to a commissioner (a fiat having issued against him) to appoint an assignee to investigate the sufficiency of the debt, and to protect the property (Monk v. Clark, 2 Bing. N. C. 299). In trespass debts, justified in taking goods as assignees of M.; the plt. denied that the goods were the goods of the debts. as assignees; held, that these pleadings admitted the bankruptcy and assignment (Jones v. Brown, 1 N. C. 484).

2. Mode of proving Plaintiff's Title, where the Fiat has not been disputed by the Bankrupt within a limited period.] By the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 233, it is enacted, that "if the bankrupt shall not (if he were within the United Kingdom at the date of the adjudication) within twenty-one days after the advertisement of the bankruptcy in the London Gazette, or (if he were in any other part of Europe at *the date of the adjudication) within three months after such advertisement, or (if he were else- [*353] where at the date of the adjudication) within twelve months after such advertisement, have commenced an action, suit, or other proceeding to dispute or annul the fiat, or the petition for adjudication, and shall not have prosecuted the same with due diligence and with effect, the Gazette containing such advertisement shall be conclusive evidence in all cases as against such bankrupt; and in all actions at law, or suits in equity, brought by the assignees for any debt or demand for which such bankrupt might have sustained any action or suit had he not been adjudged bankrupt, that such person so adjudged bankrupt became a bankrupt before the date and suing forth of such fiat, or before the date and filing of the petition for adjudication, and that such fiat was sued forth, or such petition filed, on the day on which the same is stated in the Gazette to bear date.

It was held that a similar section in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 24, did not apply to adjudications before the 11th November, 1842 (Edwards v. Sherren, 11 M. & W. 595; 1 D. & L. 338).

The 92nd sect. of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, was similar to the above, except as to the times within which the bankrupt should have disputed the commission. The following cases under that clause will apply to the present.

Notice to dispute given by Bankrupt within two months after adjudication.] In order to render the proceedings not conclusive evidence of the facts therein stated, in an action for the recovery of that which the bankrupt himself might have sued for, if his bankruptcy had not taken place, the bankrupt must have given the notice pointed out in the latter statute, and within the limited time. But this need not have been done, if the proceedings, upon the face of them, do not contain facts which will amount to proof of the several matters required by law to constitute a good petitioning creditor's debt, trading, or act of bankruptcy: for mere conclusions of law, drawn by the witnesses or by the commissioners from the facts stated, are not sufficient to support the commission; and, in such cases, the depositions are not conclusive evidence, and the opposite party may, by other facts, dispute the commission (see Humphries v. Coggan, 1 Rose, 226; Clarke v. Askew, 1 Stark. 458); provided, indeed, he has first pleaded, and has given notice under the 234th sect. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106 (ante, p. 349; Macbeth v. Coates, 4 Bing. 34).

The term "conclusive evidence," means that no evidence is admissible to contradict the depositions (Eden, 370, 3rd ed.). But if they do not on the face of them prove a debt, trading, and act of bankruptcy the assignees cannot recover on that evidence (Id. 371). Therefore where the debt is stated to be due from the bankrupt, as drawer of a bill of exchange, but the deposition states no notice of dishonour, it will not be conclusive evidence of the debt, which the other party, after notice to dispute, may dispute (Cooper v. Machin, 1 Bing. 426; 4 Bing. 34). So, if the deposition of the petitioning creditor state only that the debt was due to him at and before the time of suing forth the commission, not showing that it existed at the time of the act of bankruptcy, this is not conclusive proof of the goodness of the petitioning creditor's debt (Clarke v. Askew, 1 Stark. 458; Lawson v. Robinson, ib. 456). If a deposition state that the deponent witnessed the execution of a deed by the bankrupt, by which he assigned his property to A. B., though this is evidence of such a deed, as stated in the deposition, it is not *evidence that the deed itself was an act of bankruptcy (Kay v. [*354] Stead, 2 Stark. 200). Where the deposition, to prove the act of bankruptcy, stated that the party absented himself on a certain day, and that he had declared to the deponent that his motive was to avoid his creditors, but not stating the time when this declaration of the bankrupt was made, this was held not sufficient proof of an act of bankruptcy (Marsh v. Meager, 1 Stark. 353). And so, where the deposition omits to state that the party absented himself with an intent to delay his creditors (Toleman v. Jones, 9 Moo. 24). The deposition of the petitioning creditor will be evidence of a certain sum due to him, and also of the character in which he claimed it, whether as executor or assignee; nor will it be necessary in either of these cases to produce the probate or the assignment; but, whether the sum due was a debt to support a commission, that is an inference of law which the court, upon the trial, will not be estopped from determining by the adjudication of the commissioners (Skaife v. Howard, 2 B. & C. 560; 4 D. & R. 37; Deac. B. L. 778). The whole effect, indeed, of the provision of the statute is only to make the depositions evidence, not to admit the fact of the bankruptcy to be proved; for this must be as strictly made out by the depositions, as it would be required to be done by the witnesses (Rawson v. Haigh, 1 C. & P. 80). If the facts stated in the depositions are sufficient of themselves to sustain the commission, no further proof is necessary; but they may be always objected to for not proving the subject-matter to which they apply (Skaife v. Howard, 2 B. & C. 560; 4 D. & R. 37; Deac. B. L. 778); however, the objection must be taken at the trial; it is too late after verdict (Jacobs v. Latours, 2 M. & P. 201). Where the depositions prove the petitioning creditor's debt, the deft. cannot object that it was a fraudulent contrivance between the petitioning creditor and the bankrupt (Young v. Timmins, 1 C. & J. 148).

The assignees may always support the commission by evidence, aliunde the depositions (Clarke v. Askew, 1 Stark. 458).

It must be remembered, that an action brought by the assignees to recover back the payment of a debt made by the bankrupt to a creditor, after his knowledge of an act of bankruptcy, or after the issuing of the commission, for which the bankrupt himself could have no right to sue, would not be such an action as would deprive the deft. of his right at any time to dispute these matters, upon his giving the requisite notice of his intention so to do (Deac. B. L. 777); for it is only in suits or actions brought by a bankrupt's own assignees, for a debt or demand for which he might have sued, that the depositions under a commission against him are made evidence; and, therefore, where the assignees of R., another bankrupt, are petitioning creditors against him, his assignees are bound under the usual notice to dispute their trading, &c., not only to produce the proceedings under his commission, but to prove strictly, aliunde, his (R.'s) trading, act of bankruptcy, and petitioning creditor's debt (Drummond v. Muskett, 10 B. & C. 153). The assignees must be careful not to go unnecessarily into proof of the trading, petitioning creditor's debt, or act of bankruptcy. In a case within the 92nd section of 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, where the assignees inconsiderately went into evidence of the trading, and failed in proof, they were non-suited (Johnson v. Piper, 2 Nev. & M. 677); and where, in an action against a sheriff, for the proceeds of goods sold under a fi. fa., there was no notice to dispute their title, they proved an act of bankruptcy before the levy. Bailey and Littledale, Js., thought they were bound to prove also a petitioning creditor's debt; Tenterden, *C. J., and Parke, J., being, however, [*355] of the contrary opinion (Norman v. Booth, 10 B. & C. 703).

Trover is an action for a demand within this section (Robson v. Alexander, 1 M. & P. 448); and so is detinue (Smith v. Woodward, 4 C. & P. 541). Whether the depositions are evidence in cases where the formal cause of action has arisen since the bankruptcy seems to be as yet not satisfactorily settled. In Fox v. Mahony, 2 C. & J. 325, and Smith v. Woodward, 4 C. & P. 541, it was held that they were so, though the conversion took place after the bankruptcy. In Jones v. Fort, M. & M. 196, recognized in Gibson v. Oldfield, 4 C. & P. 313, Tenterden, Ld., held they were not; and there being two sets of counts, one on a possession by the bankrupt and a conversion in his time, and the other on a possession by the assignees and a conversion in their time, that the latter set of counts should be given up if the plts. relied on the deposition. But in Kitchener v. Power, 3 Ad. & E. 232; 4 Nev. & M. 710, this case was over-ruled, and they were held to be conclusive evidence on a declaration stating a conversion in the time of the assignees only; the Court of Q. B. being of opinion that, in determining this question, they were to consider "not whether the same issue in form could have been sustained, merely substituting the bankrupt's name as plt. for that of the assignees, but whether the bankrupt, if no bankruptcy had occurred, could have maintained any sort of action for the same debt or demand;" and so, also, in Alsager v. Close, 10 M. & W. 576, it was held that they were conclusive evidence in an action by the assignees for the conversion of a bill of exchange, by obtaining money on it after the bankruptcy, and after a demand by the assignees; and, per Abinger, C. B., they would have been so, if there had been no other evidence of the conversion, except the demand and refusal, though the bankrupt himself could not have sued without making another demand and proving another refusal (lb.). It would seem that the section applies to all actions where the bankruptcy is an immaterial fact in the cause, as in the case of bills not due, or credit not expired, &c., at the date of the bankruptcy; but not to actions where the bankruptcy is a material ingredient in the cause of action, as in the case of a fraudulent preference, in which, unless there be a valid commission, there is no cause of action against the deft. in any one (per Denman, C. J., in Kitchener v. Power, 3 Ad. & E. 242). The 92d sect. of 6 Geo. IV. did not apply to commissions anterior to the act (Kay v. Goodwin, 6 Bingh. 576).

Proof of Defendant's Notice of Act of Bankruptcy.] Pending a negotiation to settle an action by a judge's order, the clerk of the attorney for the debtor said to the clerk of the attorney for the creditor, that more time was wanted by the debtor, who was arranging with his creditors; that he had committed an act of bankruptcy; and that, unless further time was given, he should give notice of his having committed an act of bankruptcy. Upon the trial of an issue between the assignees of such debtor (he having become a bankrupt) and such creditor, the judge ruled, that what passed, as above, between the attorneys' clerks, was a sufficient notice to the creditor of an act of bankruptcy, within the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1: held a misdirection, it not being found by the jury that the clerk to whom the notice was given was a managing clerk, or that he communicated such notice to his employer (Pennell v. Stephens, 13 Jur. 766; 18 Law J. 291, C. P.). Quære, whether notice of an act of bankruptcy to a managing clerk of an attorney is sufficient to bind the client (lb.). Notice of a prior act of bankruptcy was served on a clerk of the plt.'s attorney at the office in the absence of the attorney, and he was requested to inform the attorney of it when he came to the office. The clerk had issued the writ of execution, but was not shown to have had personally the conduct of the suit; held, that the notice would not take the execution out of the protection of sect. 1 of stat. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, until communicated to the attorney (Pike v. Stephens, 12 Jur. 746; 17 Law J., 282, Q. B.). A trader being indebted to the defts., on the 1st of July filed a declaration of insolvency, pursuant to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 22, and, on the following day, gave notice thereof to the defts. At a subsequent period of the same day the defts. levied an execution on the trader's goods. A fiat in bankruptcy issued on the day following; held, that the act of bankruptcy dated from the time of filing the declaration of insolvency, and that the defts., having had notice thereof, were not entitled to the proceeds of the execution within the meaning of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1 (Green v. Laurie, 1 Exch. 335; 17 Law J. 61, Exch.).

Under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, the filing of a declaration of insolvency is of itself a complete act of bankruptcy, without being followed by an advertisement of the same in the Gazette, under the 36 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 6 (Follett v. Hoppe, 17 Law J. 76, C. P.; 5 C. B. 226).

Therefore, where a trader gave execution creditors notice that he had filed a declaration of insolvency, and thereby committed an act of bankruptcy, this was held a sufficient notice of a prior act of bankruptcy to deprive the creditors of the protection of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29 (lb.).

A trader, having been arrested on ca. sa., at the suit of the defts., who, as well as the sheriff's officer, had received a notice of a prior act of bankruptcy, paid over a portion of his assets to the officer, in order to procure his discharge, and the officer paid over the amount to the defts.; held, that the bankrupt's assignees were entitled to recover back from the defts. the amounts paid in an action for money had and received (1b.)

When Depositions not conclusive.] The deposition of the petitioning creditor is admissible at the trial in proof of his debt (2 Camp. 92); though, indeed, if he himself were called, he would not be a competent witness to support the commission (Green v. Jones, 2 Camp. 411; and see Skaife v. Howard, 2 B. & C. 560; 4 D. & R. 37). As to its being evidence of party being executor, post, 364. Where the petitioning creditor's debt was due to him as executor, proof of probate would not be necessary under such circumstances (Skaife v. Howard, 2 B. & C. 560; Muskett v. Drummond, 10 B. & C. 151). Formerly, in order to make the depositions, &c., evidence, it was necessary to show that they came out of the custody of the solicitor to the commission, or the handwriting of the commissioners must have been proved (Collinson v. Hillier, 3 Camp. 30); and for which purpose the bankrupt himself, having obtained his certificate, and released the surplus, is a competent witness *(Morgan v. Price, 2 B. & C. 14; 3 [*356] D. & R. 215; post, "DEED"). It is now however enacted by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 236 (see ante, p. 349), and also by sect. 242, "that in the event of the death of any witness deposing to the petitioning creditor's debt, trading, or act of bankruptcy, under any bankruptcy heretofore or hereafter, or under any petition for arrangement, the deposition of any such deceased witness, purporting to be sealed with the seal of the Court, or a copy thereof purporting to be so sealed, shall in all cases be received as evidence of the matters therein respectively contained." And see further, as to the admissibility in evidence of the depositions and proceedings under the commission, in cases independent of the 92d sect. of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, post, 248). Where the petitioning creditor is assignee of another bankrupt and the debt is due to him in that character, and his title comes incidentally in question, strict evidence of his title as assignee must be given (Doe v. Liston, 4 Taunt. 741). But if they are parties to the record, though not named assignees, the proceedings will be sufficient evidence, at least if the other party is aware that they make title under the commission (Simmonds v. Knight, 3 Camp. 251; Rowe v. Lant, Gow, 24). So, though there be other defts. on the record, if these defts. have justified as servants of the assignees (Gilman v. Cousins, 5 Stark. 182). But where in an action by such assignee no notice to dispute had been given under the statute, the depositions under the commission were held to be evidence of a debt due to the petitioning creditor in the character in which he claimed it, and no evidence of the first bankruptcy was in such case held necessary (Skaife v. Howard, 2 B. & C. 560).

3. Mode of proving Title, where there is a Plea and a Notice to dispute it, and the Fiat has been disputed by the Bankrupt within the limited time; and, in other cases, where strict Proof of Title is necessary.] In such cases, where an assignee or party has to support a fiat by strict proof of the proceedings under it, he will have to prove the petitioning creditor's debt, the trading, the act of bankruptcy, the fiat, the appointment of assignees, and some other proceedings; the proof of all which will be now considered.

Petitioning Creditor's Debt.] This will be considered with reference to the amount of it, the subject-matter of it, the time when due, and the mode of proving it.

In the first place, it may be observed that the plts., after proving the debt, must adduce in evidence the petition or the fiat, in order to connect the debt proved with the fact of bankruptcy, or they will be nonsuited (George v. Campion, 2 Jur. 843, Exch.).

Amount of Debt.] If the petitioning creditor's debt be a debt to one creditor, or to a firm, it must amount to 50*l.*; if it be to two, 70*l.*; and if to more, 100*l.*, although it be payable at a future time, and security be given (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 91). Under the earlier statutes, and the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 15, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, the amount was, under the same circumstances as above, respectively, 100*l.*, 150*l.*, and 200*l.* By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, s. 1, a fiat might be issued on the petition of a creditor, whether a member of a company or not, for a debt of requisite amount to support an ordinary fiat.

Where a further debt is contracted by the bankrupt, after leaving off trade, and he makes a payment without directing to which debt it is to be applied, it will be taken to apply to the old debt; and, if *it be thereby [*357] reduced to a sum less than 100*l.*, it will not support a commission (Meggott v. Mills, 1 Raym. 286; S. C. Comb. 463). So, if the fiat issue on an attorney's untaxed bill of costs, which, on taxation, is reduced below the required amount, it will not support the fiat (Ex parte Forde, 1 Mont. & Ch. 97). A creditor buying in notes to the amount of 100*l.*, at 10*s.* in the pound, has a sufficient debt (Ex parte Lee, 1 P. Wms. 782). Where a creditor to an amount sufficient to support a commission, after notice of an act of bankruptcy, received a payment, diminishing the original debt to a sum insufficient to support the commission, it was held that, as that payment was void, there was still a good petitioning creditor's debt (Mann v. Shepherd, 6 T. R. 79; Brokerdike v. Bollman, 1 T. R. 405; and see Ex parte Miller, Buck, 283; Ex parte Jones, 3 Dea. & Ch. 697; 1 Mont. & Ayr. 442). Two firms, of several partners each, may jointly petition, though the debt of neither amount to 100*l.*, if the two debts equal 100*l.* (Doe v. Ingleby, 14 M. & W. 91). Where the debt was for a bill of exchange for 50*l.*, drawn and issued before the act of bankruptcy, but becoming due afterwards, it was objected that the sum of 50*l.* was not due, but only that sum minus the rebate of interest; but it was held that the debt was sufficient to support the commission, upon the principle that the debt was contracted at the time the bill was given (Brett v. Levett, 13 East, 213). In the case of a bill of exchange, where it is not expressed on the face of it that interest should be paid, it cannot be added, so as to make up a legal petitioning creditor's debt (Cameron v. Smith, 2 B. & A. 305; Ex parte Burgess, 2 Moo. 745; S. C. 8 Taunt. 960); even though it be noted and protested, pursuant to 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 17 (Ex parte Greenaway, Buck, 412). Where there is only one petitioning creditor, there must be a debt due to him separately, for which he alone might maintain an action at law. So a commission cannot be supported on the petition of one of two joint partners to whom a joint debt is due (Buckland v. Newsame, 1 Taunt. 477).

Subject-matter of Debt.] With respect to the subject-matter of the debt, the debt must be a legal one; not a mere equitable claim (1 Atk. 147; 2 Ves. 407), or debt (Ex parte Hawthorn, Mont. 132). An order by the Lord Chancellor for payment of a sum to an uncertificated bankrupt does not constitute a debt to support a fiat (In re Chambers, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 303); nor do taxed costs upon a judgment, as in case of a nonsuit under a rule of court: they being recoverable only by attachment in the nature of execution (Ex parte Stevenson, 1 M. & M. 262). It is doubtful whether a mortgagee in trust can alone issue a fiat against the mortgagor on the mortgage deed, unless the legal validity of the debt has been previously established in an action at law (Ex parte Gray, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 283). An acceptance by one of two partners in the name of the firm for a pre-existing debt of his own, without the authority of the other partner, will not support a joint fiat against both partners (Ex parte Austen, 1 Mont. Dea. & De. 247); nor is an acceptance in the name of the bankrupt, without his authority, sufficient to sustain a fiat against him, though he acknowledged to the holder of the bill, after it became due, that he is responsible for the payment of it (Ex parte Edwards, 2 Mont. Dea. & De. 241; 5 Jur. 706). A judgment debt, on which the debtor has been already taken in execution, will not support a fiat (Cohen v. Cunningham, 8 T. R. 123); nor, semble, will a demand for rent, with respect to which an action of replevin is already pending (Emery v. Mucklow, 4 Moo. & S. 263): but a simple-contract *debt will, though it has been merged in a higher security, as a bond (*Am- [358] brose v. Clendon, 2 Stra. 1042), or a judgment (Briant v. Withers, 2 M. & S. 123), which is invalid by reason of being given or obtained after an act of bankruptcy. So, a creditor entering into a composition-deed, after an act of bankruptcy committed by his debtor, is not precluded from being a petitioning creditor, in respect of the original debt (Doe v. Anderson, 5 M. & S. 161; and see Ambrose v. Clendon, 2 Stra. 1042; Ca. t. Hard. 267; supra). So, where a creditor receives a bill of lading as a security for his debt from the consignee, and the consignor afterwards stops the goods in transitu, the creditor may issue a fiat on his original debt (Ex parte Ashton, 2 Deac. & Ch. 5). So, where the debtor has become insolvent, and included the debt in his schedule (Jellis v. Mountford, 4 B. & M. 256; Ex parte Shuttleworth, 2 Glyn & J. 68). So, where a note was given on a wrong stamp as security for a debt, the debt was held sufficient to support a sequestration in Scotland (Geddes v. Mowatt, 1 Glyn & J. 414. So, a debt upon an attorney's bill, though it has not been signed and delivered pursuant to the statute, is sufficient (see Ex parte Steele, 16 Ves. 166; Ex parte Howell, 1 Rose, 312; Ex parte Sutton, 11 Ves. 163; Ex parte Prideaux, 1 Glyn & J. 28); and a debt, though barred by the Statute of Limitations, will be good, if the bankrupt himself make no objection to it (Swayne v. Wallinger, 2 Stra. 746; Quantock v. England, 5 Burr. 2628; Mavor v. Pyne, 3 Bing. 285); but, if he object to it, it will not (Ib. and Gregory v. Hurrill, 5 B. & C. 341; 8 D. & R. 270; and see S. C. 3 B. & B. 212; 1 Bing. 324; 8 Moo. 189; and Taylor v. Hipkins, 5 B. & A. 489). A verdict for damages in an action for breach of promise of marriage does not, before judgment, constitute a debt (Ex parte Charles, 14 East, 197).

The debt must be of such a nature, that an action of law might be brought for it by the petitioning creditor against the bankrupt. Therefore it will not support a fiat, if the creditor have covenanted with the debtor not to sue him for it (Small v. Marwood, 4 M. & R. 181; 9 B. & C. 300); or if it be founded on an illegal consideration (Wells v. Gozling, 1 B. & B. 447; 4 Moo. 78); or on a promissory note made in violation of the statutes made for the protection of the Bank of England (Ex parte Randleson, Mont. & Ayr. 86). Where the debt is due to a partnership, it must appear that all the partners concurred in the proceeding. A commission cannot be supported on the petition of one only of two partners, to whom a joint debt is due (Buckland v. Newsame, 1 Taunt. 477; S. C. 1 Camp. 474); but a separate commission may be taken out against one of several partners, on the petition of a joint creditor (Crispe v. Perritt, Willis, 467). One partner cannot sue out a fiat against another for a partnership debt, except, perhaps, where accounts have been liquidated and the partnership determined, and the creditor paid all the debts (Ex parte Nokes, 2 Mont. 144); and where a partner has filed a bill, and treated a debt as mixed with the partnership, he cannot afterwards support a fiat upon it (Ex parte Gray, 2 M. & Ayr. 283); but, for a debt not arising out of a partnership transaction, or where they are not equally concerned in the profit and the loss, one partner may sue out a fiat against another (Windham v. Paterson, 1 Stark. 144); or, where the profit was equally to be divided between them, but the loss to be borne exclusively by one only (Marston v. Barber, Gow. C. 17). So, where H. P., the bankrupt borrowed money of his partner by way of personal loan, and on the dissolution of the partnership purchased the stock at a stipulated price, W. P.

had a good petitioning creditor's debt, though he had *entitled the [*359] account, "H. P. in account with H. and W. P." (Ex parte Richardson, 3 Dea. & Ch. 244). So, where A. advances 200*l.* to B. to set up trade, on an agreement that A. should have one-eighth of the profits, he may support a fiat on such advance (Ex parte Notley, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 46).

Affidavit.] One of several assignees may sue out a commission in respect of a debt due to their bankrupt, without the other assignees joining in the affidavit, &c. (Ex parte Blakey, 1 Glyn & J. 197). So, an affidavit sworn by one of several partners is sufficient (Ex parte Rhodes, 4 Deac. 125; 1 Mont. & Ch. 319); or by an agent duly authorized (Ex parte Hall, 3 Deac. 405; 1 Mont. & Ch. 467); and it may be sworn before a master extraordinary in chancery (Ib.), even in Scotland or Ireland, under 6 & 7 Vict. It now may be sworn before the court, or any commissioner, registrar, or master thereof, or before a master in ordinary or extraordinary of the high court of chancery, or before any clerk of affidavits, assistant clerk, or second assistant clerk of affidavits of the high court of chancery, or in Scotland or Ireland before such master extraordinary aforesaid, or before a magistrate of the county, city, town, or place where any such affidavit shall be sworn, or elsewhere before a magistrate and attested by a notary, or before a British minister, consul, or vice consul, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, sect. 243.

A husband alone cannot be a petitioning creditor in respect of a debt composed partly of a sum due to himself, in his own right, and partly to his wife (Rumsey v. George, 1 M. & S. 176); but, in the case of a bill of exchange, or promissory note, given to the wife dum sola, the husband may alone petition, for the right of action, shifting with the possession of the bill, vests by marriage in the husband (McNeillage v. Holloway, 1 B. & A. 218; Ex parte Barber, 1 Glyn & J. 1); but, if it is payable to her order only, see p. 343.

A debt due to an infant is not sufficient to support a fiat (Ex parte Barrow, 3 Ves. 554; Ex parte Morton, Buck, 42); nor is a debt contracted by an infant; but an acceptance after he came of age, upon a bill drawn when he was an infant, was holden to be a good petitioning creditor's debt (Stevens v. Jackson, 4 Camp. 164). Though a public company have power by statute to "commence all actions and suits" in the name of their secretary, as the nominal plt., this does not enable the secretary to petition for a commission (Guthrie v. Fisk, 3 B. & C. 178; 5 D. & R. 24). It is now enacted by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 92, "that a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against any trader indebted in the amount aforesaid (see p. 356), to any copartnership duly authorized to sue and be sued in the name of a public officer of such copartnership may be filed by such public officer as the nominal petitioner for and on behalf of such copartnership." The debt of a factor, selling goods in his own name, is sufficient to support a commission against the purchaser; but not so if it appear that, by agreement between the principal and factor, the former was to consider the purchaser as his debtor, as, by the intervention of the principal, the right of the factor was gone (Sadler v. Leigh, 4 Camp. 164). The debt of a natural-born subject, residing and trading in an enemy's country, will not support a commission (M'Connell v. Hector, 3 B. & P. 113). The mere residence, however, will not affect the debt, if it do not appear that it was for the purpose of trading, and that the creditor went there with a knowledge of the existing hostilities (Roberts v. Hardy, 3 M. & S. 533); nor will the *debt be invalidated if the creditor reside there under a license granted by order [*360] in council (Ex parte Baglehole, 18 Ves. 525; 1 Rose, 271; and see ante, "ALIEN"). An uncertificated bankrupt (Ex parte Cartwright, 2 Rose, 230), an insolvent debtor (Jellis v. Mountford, 4 B. & A. 256), may, in most cases, be a petitioning creditor. An executor of a bankrupt cannot sue out a commission on a debt due to his testator before his bankruptcy (1 Atk. 100).

Debt must not be contingent.] The debt must be a present existing debt, and not one depending on a contingency (Deac. B. L. 90; Ex parte Page, 1 Glyn & J. 100; see post). A warrant of attorney has been deemed a debitum in presenti, sufficient to support a commission, though given as a security against running acceptances (Miles v. Rawlyns, 4 Esp. 194). The debt should be of a liquidated nature, or capable, from computation, of being liquidated (see 2 Ves. 326; 4 Ves. 168). A mere verdict for damages in an action for breach of promise of marriage or tort, does not constitute, before judgment, a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt (Ex parte Charles, 14 East, 197; 16 Ves. 257; recognised in Walker v. Barnes, 1 Marsh. 346; and Scott v. Ambrose, 3 M. & S. 362). A sum awarded by an arbitrator will support a commission against the person who is awarded to pay it, notwithstanding a bill is filed to set aside the award (Ex parte Lingood, 1 Atk. 241). Proof of a surety debt will support a commission against the party liable on it (Hughes v. Hall, Palm. 325); but a security for a contingent debt will not be sufficient, though given in the form of a present debt (Ex parte Page, 1 Glyn & J. 100). A penalty due to the crown is a sufficient debt to support a commission (Cobb v. Symonds, 5 B. & A. 516); so, also, is an assessment for church and highway rates; and the assessor would be a good petitioning creditor (Lloyd v. Heathcote, 2 B. & B. 388).

Debt contracted while Bankrupt a Trader.] The debt must be proved to have been contracted, or to have subsisted, while the party was a trader (Dawe v. Holdsworth, Pea. 64; Meggott v. Mills, 1 Raym. 287; S. C. 12 Mod. 157; Baillie v. Grant, post). Where a person contracted a debt and afterwards became a trader, and the debt still remaining unpaid he went out of trade and afterwards committed an act of bankruptcy, a commission founded on this debt and act of bankruptcy was held to be valid (Baillie v. Grant, 1 Cl. & Fin. 238). If a simple-contract debt is contracted whilst the party is in trade, though he give the creditor a bond for it after leaving off trade, this will not extinguish the debt, so as to prevent the creditor from suing out a commission on it (Dawe v. Holdsworth, Pea. 64). But, if a trader, indebted in 100%, quit his trade, and afterwards become indebted to the same creditor in 100% more, and subsequently pays 100% without saying on what account, the creditor in this case cannot take out a commission on the old debt (Dawe v. Holdsworth, Pea. 64; Meggott v. Miles, 1 Raym. 287). If there be a petitioning creditor's debt at the time of the act of bankruptcy on which a commission might have issued, and there was a petitioning creditor's debt still existing at the time of the commission, it matters not what happened in the mean time as to the payment of the first debt, the balance throughout containing sufficient for a petitioning creditor's debt (Shaw v. Harvey, M. & M. 526).

Time when due.] The debt must be proved to have been contracted before, and subsisting at the time of the act of bankruptcy (Clarke v. Askew, *Pea. 458, n.). Where it was necessary to prove a good petition-[*361] ing creditor's debt on the 20th May, it was held not sufficient to show that, on the 20th Jan. preceding a sum of 700*l.* was due from the bankrupt; there being subsequent receipts and payments, and other continuing transactions, between the petitioning creditor and the bankrupt; for, after a period of three months, it was considered impossible to say, under these circumstances, whether 1000*l.* or 5*l.* were really due (Gressly v. Price, 2 C. & P. 48, overruling Jackson v. Irwin, 2 Camp. 50), where it was held that, from proof of the existence of the debt before the act of bankruptcy, it would be presumed to be still in existence when the act was committed. The case where a bill or note is produced for the purpose of proving a good petitioning creditor's debt is an exception to the general rule, that the date of an instrument is prima facie proof of the time of its execution, and it may be taken to be now settled that some evidence is necessary besides the date to show that the instrument produced for that purpose had its existence before the act of bankruptcy took place, and for this reason, that a proceeding in bankruptcy is retrospective, to invalidate all transactions between the act of bankruptcy and the fiat, and therefore it may be necessary to require more proof than in ordinary cases (per Bosanquet, J., in Anderson v. Weston, 6 Bing. N. C. 301). Therefore, an I O U, bearing date before the bankruptcy, is not evidence of a petitioning creditor's debt, without some proof that it was in existence before the bankruptcy (per Abinger, C. B., Wright v. Lainson, 2 M. & W. 739); and so, as to a promissory note (Fletcher v. Manning, 12 M. & W. 571; the case of Taylor v. Kinlock, 1 Stark. 175, to the contrary, proceeded on a mistaken report of a case on the Northern Circuit, 2 Stark. 594; 2 Stark. Ev. 161); and so, where the debt arises on the indorsement or acceptance of a bill, the indorsement of a bill or acceptance itself must be proved to have been made before the commission or fiat, no presumption arising from the date of the bill. (Rose v. Rowcroft, 4 Camp. 245; per Tenterden, C. J., Cowie v. Harris, M. & M. 141). But the indorsement may be after the act of bankruptcy (Glaister v. Hewer, 7 T. R. 498); but if the course of dealing between the parties raise a presumption to that effect, that is sufficient, as, if it be shown that about that time goods were sold of a corresponding amount (Cowie v. Harris, ib.). So, where a note bore date before the bankruptcy, and was proved to be in existence before the docket was struck, this was considered prima facie proof that it was in existence before the act of bankruptcy (per Tenterden, C. J., Obbard v. Betham, ib. 486).

The debt must be complete and perfect before the act of bankruptcy. A verdict in an action for a tort is insufficient, unless a judgment thereon be entered before the act of bankruptcy (Ex parte Charles, 14 East, 197; 16 Ves. 256, supra). Where the act of bankruptcy is founded on a lying in prison, and the debt was contracted after the arrest, it was holden insufficient (Ex parte Doggett, Whitm. B. L. 42). Before the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 15, it would not be a good debt if the credit given were unexpired at the time of the bankruptcy (Hoskins v. Duperoy, 9 East, 498; S. C. 6 Esp. 55; Parslow v. Dearlove, 4 East, 438; Sarratt v. Austin, 4 Taunt. 200; but see Henbest v. Brown, Pea. 75); unless, in pursuance of 7 Geo. I. c. 51, and 5 Geo. II. c. 30, a written security were given for the payment (Price v. Mixon, 5 Taunt. 338; Cothay v. Murray, 1 Camp. 335). But a bill of exchange was a sufficient debt from the date, and before the day of payment (Macarty v. Barrow, Stra. 946; Bingley v. Maddison, Co. B. L. 28; Glaister [*362] v. Hewer, 7 T. R. 498; Anon. 2 Wils. *135, ante, 360); and, in the hands of an indorsee, it would be a good debt, though the indorsement were made after the act of bankruptcy; but it should be proved to have been made before suing out the fiat (Ib.; Rose v. Rowcroft, 4 Camp. 245; Ex parte Bolton, 1 Mont. & B. 412). The acceptor of an accommodation bill, paying the amount after an act of bankruptcy, has not a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt (Ex parte Holding, 1 Glyn & J. 97); nor, where there is an exchange of acceptances between two persons, and, before the maturity of the bill, one of them commits an act of bankruptcy, can the other prove under the commission, till he has paid his own bill (Sarratt v. Austin, 4 Taunt. 200). We have seen that a bill of exchange drawn upon an infant, and accepted by him when he came of age, is sufficient to support the commission (Stevens v. Jackson, 4 Camp. 164, ante, 358). Where a bankrupt drew a bill in favour of A., to whom he was previously indebted, and committed an act of bankruptcy before either the bill was due or had been presented for acceptance, it was held that the bill was a good petitioning creditor's debt, although it appeared that, subsequent to the commission, the bill had been paid by the acceptors (Ex parte Douthat, 4 B. & A. 67; Eden, 48).

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 15, it was enacted, that "every person who has given credit for any sum payable at a certain time, which time shall not have arrived when such trader committed an act of bankruptcy, may so petition, or join in petitioning as aforesaid, whether he shall have had any security in writing for such sum or not." This paragraph is re-enacted verbatim in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 91, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 91.

Under this clause, a debt for money lent on mortgage, payable after six months' notice, such notice not to expire before a certain day, is sufficient without any notice given, and before that day (per Tenterden, C. J.; Hill v. Morris, M. & M. 448). But where a creditor, for the value of goods sold and delivered, took a bill of exchange from the debtor for the amount, and negotiated it, and the debtor committed an act of bankruptcy while the bill was in the hands of a third party, it was considered very doubtful whether the debt and act of bankruptcy would support a fiat (Ex parte Magnus, 6 Jur. 808, C. R.); and where a creditor sold the debtor's goods, and took in payment bills of exchange accepted by the bankrupt, and negotiated them, and they were not in his hands, or due, when he issued the fiat, he had not a good debt (Ex parte Smith, 3 Mont. Dea. & De. 341).

By 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 19, no commission shall be deemed invalid, by reason of an act of bankruptcy, prior to the debt of the petitioning creditor, provided there be a sufficient act of bankruptcy subsequent to such debt (see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 88, a similar clause). Before this statute, though the bankrupt himself could not, yet a debtor to the estate might, in an action by the assignees, upon proof of an act of bankruptcy prior to the petitioning creditor's debt, and of a sufficient debt, upon which a commission might be supported, resist the claim, and defeat the commission (Eden, 43).

Substitution of another Debt.] The 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 18, provides, "that if, after adjudication, the debt or debts of the petitioning creditor or creditors, or any of them, be found insufficient to support a commission, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, upon the application of any other creditor or creditors, having proved any debt or debts sufficient to support a commission, provided such debt or debts has or have been incurred not anterior to the debt or *debts of the petitioning creditor or [*363] creditors, to order the said commission to be proceeded in, and it shall by such order be deemed valid." This section is re-enacted as follows, by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 103: "That if after adjudication of bankruptcy the debt of the petitioning creditor be found by the court to be insufficient to support such adjudication, it shall be lawful for the court, upon the application of any other creditor having proved any debt sufficient to support an adjudication, to order the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy to be proceeded in, and it shall by such order be deemed valid, which order may be in the form contained in the schedule (T) to this act annexed, or to the like effect."

The 18th section of 6 Geo. IV. applied not only to a deficiency in the amount of the original debt (Ex parte Rogers, 4 Dea. & Ch. 623; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 153; Byers v. Southwell, 8 Sco. 238; 6 Bing. N. C. 39); but to a defect in the nature of it, as where it was the debt of several persons, but was sworn as the debt of two only (Ex parte Hall, M. & W. 39). A promissory note of the bankrupt, payable to the new petitioning creditor and seen in the hands of the latter, is evidence of a debt at that time, but not of a debt at the date of the note (Fletcher v. Manning, 12 M. & W. 571). A creditor substituted for the petitioning creditor, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 4, need only have proved his own debt and the trading and act of bankruptcy, and was not bound to prove the original creditor's debt (Kynaston v. Davis, 15 M. & W. 705). It must have been found insufficient before the Lord Chancellor could order a new debt to be substituted (Muskett v. Drummond, 10 B. & C. 153; M. & R. 210); and, therefore, an order by the Lord Chancellor (now the Court of Bankruptcy) was invalid, if it did not find, or call upon the commissioners to find, that the original debt was insufficient, and directed them to inquire only into the sufficiency of the debt proposed to be substituted (Ib.). Where the commissioners find the first debt insufficient they should expressly find the debt proposed to be substituted to have been incurred "not anterior" to it (Ex parte Hunter, 2 Dea. & Ch. 507), unless the court be satisfied of that fact from other evidence (Ex parte Pubery, 2 Mont. Dea. & De. 184). It seems that the order of substitution is itself evidence of the petition, but the sufficiency of the substituted debt and the time when it was contracted, must be shown by other evidence (Fletcher v. Manning, 12 M. & W. 571). It is sufficient to constitute the second debt "not anterior" to the original one, that the principal sum was due before the accruing of the substituted debt, although the interest may have been accruing up to a period subsequent thereto (Fletcher v. Manning, 12 M. & W. 571; 13 L. J., N. S., Ex. 150). Where an order was obtained for substituting one of the partners in the firm of Jones Loyd and Co. as a new petitioning creditor, and the order stated that, that firm had proved a debt sufficient to support the fiat, that it was an existing debt, and that it was incurred not anterior to that of the original petitioning creditor, it was held that this order was not per se evidence that the substituted debt was contracted not anterior to that of the original petitioning creditor, or that it was of the requisite amount, or that it was incurred before the act of bankruptcy (Ib.). Where such an order for substitution was obtained, the petition on which it was made could not be used to explain any ambiguity in the order, and therefore, if the order did not distinctly state that the second debt had been proved before the petition was presented, it was bad (Christie v. Unwin, 3 P. & D. 204; 4 Jur. 363);

but a mere clerical error will vitiate the order, as stating the [*364] debt of *the N. & C. Bank (the new petitioning creditors) to have been incurred not anterior to the debt of the said banking company (instead of J. C.) (Ib.). Where a new debt had been substituted, it was sufficient to prove the petition for substitution to the Chancellor, his order referring the sufficiency of the new debt, &c., to the commissioners, and the commissioners' finding thereon, without producing the Chancellor's order confirming such finding (per Tindal, C. J., Batchelor v. Vyse, 1 M. & Rob. 331). It was doubted whether an order for substitution was sufficient to support a fiat in an action commenced by the assignees against a debtor before the order was made (Muskett v. Drummond, supra); or whether it could be used to the prejudice of a party who had commenced an action, in which he sought to impeach the validity of the fiat by reason of the insufficiency of the petitioning creditor's debt (Aireton v. Davis, 3 M. & Sc. 138). Where an application for substitution was made pending an action, in which the deft. had given notice to dispute the debt, the order must be without prejudice to the defence in the pending action (Ex parte Watson, 3 Deac. 310; 3 Mont. & Ayr. 609). But a deft. is not, in such a case, entitled to an order requiring a notice to be given him of any application for substitution (Ex parte Humberstone, 6 Jur. 672, C. R.).

Mode of proving Petitioning Creditor's Debt.] "It is an established rule, that assignees must prove the petitioning creditor's debt by the same evidence which must have been produced in an action against a bankrupt" (per Buller, J., Abbot v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 216). Therefore, if the debt of the petitioning creditor is on a bill of exchange drawn by the bankrupt, and indorsed by him to the petitioning creditor, besides adducing evidence that it was indorsed before the commission, it will be necessary, in order to prove the debt, to go regularly through the several proofs required in an action by an indorsee against the drawer. Where the debt arose on a bond, an acknowledgment of the bankrupt to a witness, that he owed the debt upon which the commission was sued out, will not supersede the necessity of calling the subscribing witness (Abbott v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 216; see p. 365, as to proof by bankrupt's admissions, and title "ADMISSIONS"). Where the petitioning creditor had, upon an application for a loan from a bankrupt, delivered to him a check on his banker for 100*l.*, which check had got back again to the hands of the petitioning creditor, as if satisfied, but he was unable to give positive proof that the check was actually paid, the check of itself was, in this case, held not sufficient evidence of a petitioning creditor's debt (Bleasby v. Crossley, 2 C. & P. 213).

So, where the plts. produced certain cancelled cheques drawn by the bankrupt upon the petitioning creditors, and called one of their (the petitioning creditors') clerks, who stated (from recollection merely) that at the time of these cheques being drawn the bankrupt's account was greatly overdrawn, it was held not sufficient proof of a debt, for the cancelled cheques were prima facie evidence of a payment of a debt due from the petitioning creditors to the bankrupt (Fletcher v. Manning, 12 M. & W. 571; 13 L. J., N. S., Ex. 150). So, where the debt was an acceptance of the bankrupt, and the assignees had had notice to prove the consideration, it was held, that though they were not bound to prove the consideration, until impeached, yet that, not having adduced any evidence, and the jury, from circumstances of suspicion attached to the case, having found a verdict for the deft., the court could not disturb that verdict (Abraham v. George, 11 Pri.

423). But if a sufficient petitioning *creditor's debt on bills be [*365] legally proved before the commissioners, and they thereupon declare the acceptor a bankrupt, the subsequent loss on the bills affords no ground to impugn the fiat, in an action by the assignees, for the conversion of goods belonging to the estate (Pooley v. Millard, 1 C. & J. 411; 1 Tyrw. 331). An award of a separate debt due from the bankrupt to the petitioning creditor, upon a deed of reference by them and other persons, is sufficient evidence of the existence of the debt, on proof of the execution by all the parties (Antram v. Chase, 15 East, 209). So, an award is evidence of a petitioning creditor's debt, though a bill be filed to set it aside (Ex parte Lingood, 1 Atk. 240; Marson v. Barber, Gow, C. 17; ante, p. 359). Where the petitioning creditor is assignee of another bankrupt, and his title, as such, comes in question incidentally, it must be strictly proved (Doe v.

Liston, 4 Taunt. 741; Drummond v. Muskett, 10 B. & C. 153); but, in the absence of any notice of an intention to dispute the debt, it is sufficiently proved by the production of the proceedings under the commission, unless they contain facts not in themselves sufficient to sustain the bankruptcy (Skaife v. Howard, 2 B. & C. 560; 4 D. & R. 37); and, if the debt be due to the petitioning creditor, as executor, it is not necessary to produce the probate, in order to prove that he was executor (per Abbott, C. J., ib., 562); though, in Rogers v. James, 7 Taunt. 147; 2 Marsh. 425, it was held, an executor might support a commission, though the probate was on an insufficient stamp, if a valid probate be afterwards obtained, for it will have relation back; and, upon the same principle, an executor will be a good petitioning creditor, though there be no probate when the commission is sued out, if there be one before the adjudication of the commissioners (Ex parte Paddy, Buck, 235; 3 Mad. 241); and so, semble, would an administrator now, the letters of administration also being held to relate back (Foster v. Bates, 7 Jur. 1093; 12 M. & W. 226).

Proof by Bankrupt's Admissions.] An acknowledgment or admission of the bankrupt before his bankruptcy is also evidence of the petitioning creditor's debt (Watts v. Thorpe, 1 Camp. 376; Hoare v. Coryton, 4 Taunt. 560); but an acknowledgment or declaration after the bankruptcy is not admissible in evidence (Smallcombe v. Bruges, 13 Pri. 136; S. C. McClell. 48; Sanderson v. Laforest, 1 C. & P. 46). Admissions made after the act of bankruptcy, but before the issuing of the commission, are not sufficient (Robson v. Kemp, 4 Esp. 234; Hoare v. Coryton, 4 Taunt. 560; sed vide Dowton v. Cross, 1 Esp. 168; Brett v. Levett, 13 East, 213). The demeanor and conduct of the bankrupt before the commissioners, has been held to be evidence of an implied admission that a balance is due, and a question to be left to a jury; but it is not evidence of an adjudication by the commissioners, or of an award made by consent of the parties (Jarrett v. Leonard, 2 M. & S. 265; Eden, 336); but an admission by the bankrupt, of a debt to the executors of D., is not sufficient to support an averment that the debt was due to plts. as executors of D., without also proving that they assented to act in discharge of the trust (Rex v. Barnes, 1 Stark. 243). The debt will be sufficiently established, by proving entries of the bankrupt, or an account signed by him before his bankruptcy (Hoare v. Coryton, 4 Taunt. 560; Watts v. Thorpe, 1 Camp. 376). Such entries must, however, be clear and unequivocal, and proved to have been made before the bankruptcy. See further, post, p. 369, and ante, "ADMISSIONS."

Who are Traders.*] It is enacted by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, [*366] s. 65, "that all alum-makers, apothecaries, auctioneers, bankers, bleachers, brokers, brickmakers, builders, calenderers, carpenters, carriers, cattle or sheep salesmen, coach proprietors, cowkeepers, dyers, fullers, keepers of inns, taverns, hotels, or coffee houses, limeburners, livery-stable keepers, market gardeners, millers, packers, printers, ship-owners, shipwrights, victuallers, warehousemen, wharfingers, persons using the trade or profession of a scrivener receiving other men's moneys or estates into their trust or custody, persons insuring ships or their freight or other matters against perils of the sea, and all persons using the trade of merchandise by way of bargaining, exchange, bartering, commission, consignment, or otherwise, in gross or by retail, and all persons who, either for themselves or as agents or factors for others, seek their living by buying and selling, or by buying and letting for hire, or by the workmanship of goods or commodities, shall be deemed traders liable to become bankrupt; provided that no farmer, grazier, common labourer, or workman for hire, receiver-general of the taxes, or member of or subscriber to any incorporated commercial or trading company established by charter or act of parliament, shall be deemed as such a trader liable to become bankrupt."

Sect. 66. "That if any such trader having privilege of parliament shall commit any act of bankruptcy, he may be dealt with under this act in like manner as any other trader; but such person shall not be subject to be arrested or imprisoned during the time of such privilege, except in cases made felonies or misdemeanors by this act."

Proof of Trading. The trading should be proved, by showing that the party comes within the denomination of persons exercising some one of those particular trades specified in the above sections, or within the general description of a trader. Whether a party was a trader within the meaning of the acts is a question for the decision of the judge upon the several facts found by the jury. The general words in the commission of the bankrupt being a "dealer and chapman," and that he got his living by buying and selling, will admit of evidence of any species of trading, though the commission also describe the particular trade carried on by the bankrupt (Hale v. Small, 2 B. & B. 25; Ex parte Herbert, 2 Rose, 248; 2 V. & B. 299).

Where the bankrupts were described as "bankers, being traders according to the statute," it was held that the word "bankers" might be considered only a description of the person (Bernasconi v. Farebrother, 10 B. & C. 349). The declarations of the bankrupt before the bankruptcy have been admitted, to prove the trading against himself in an action brought by him against the assignees, to dispute the fiat (Parker v. Barker, 1 B. & B. 9), though they are inadmissible in an action by the assignees against a third party (per Best, C. J., Bromley v. King, R. & M. 228); and where the question was as to the intention with which the party had made certain purchases, his declarations at the time, as to the mode in which he intended to dispose of the goods, were received to prove his trading (see Gale v. Halfknight, 3 Stark. 56, and infra.)

Who a Trader within the general Description in the Statute.] We shall first consider what person is a trader within the statute, under the general description, "all persons who, either for themselves, or as agents or factors for others, seek their living by buying and selling, or by buying and selling for hire, or by the workmanship of *goods or commodities." Secondly, what person is a trader using the particular trades specified [*367] in the statutes; and, lastly, who cannot be made a bankrupt.

Buying and Selling.] To prove a person a trader by buying and selling within the above general description in the act, it must be shown that he purchased articles of merchandise for the purpose of selling them again at a profit (Hankey v. Jones, Cowp. 750; Eden, 3). And, generally, whenever a man buys with the intention of selling again, with a view to profit, he is liable; and the intention may be proved by the declarations or acts of the bankrupt (Gale v. Halfknight, supra; Milliken v. Brandon, 1 C. & P. 380). If a man purchase the whole impression of a daily newspaper, to sell again, with a view to profit, and risks the loss of such as remain unsold, it is a sufficient trading (Gimingham v. Laing, 2 Marsh. 236; 6 Taunt. 532); and "a farmer's servant buying commodities of his master, and selling them, would be a trader" (per Gibbs, C. J., ib.). If a man buys horses to sell again, with a view to profit, he is liable to be a bankrupt (Ex parte Gibbs, 2 Rose, 68; Wright v. Bird, 1 Pri. 20); but, if he sell only such as he reared himself, he is not (Ib.). And, if a butcher buy sheep and cattle, and kill and sell them with a view to profit, he is liable to be made a bankrupt (Dally v. Smith, 4 Burr. 2148); but, if he kill and sell only such as he reared himself, he is not (Ib.). If a fisherman be in the habit of purchasing fish from others to sell again, with a view to profit, it is a sufficient trading (Mannay v. Birch, 3 Camp. 233); but it is not, if he merely sell the fish he has caught (Ib.). Where a person buys coals, for the purpose of again selling them, it is a trading (Cooke, 48, 73); but not, if such person merely sell those which are produced from his own mines; or, if such person rent a mine, work it, and sell the ore, it is not a trading, as he does not buy (Port v. Turton, 2 Wils. 169). Where it appeared that the party had ordered goods, for the purpose, as he alleged, of exporting them abroad, and had promised to give other goods in exchange for them, and it was objected that this was an insufficient proof of trading, as it was proof of buying, but not of selling, Abbott, C. J., observed, "I cannot say, that if a man buys, and represents himself as a dealer, and offers goods in exchange, that he does not buy to sell again; at least I must leave it to the jury" (Milliken v. Brandon, 1 C. & P. 380). Buying and selling horses, with an avowed intention to take out a license and become a dealer, is sufficient to constitute a trading within the bankrupt laws, however limited the trading, and though no license has been actually taken out (Wright v. Bird, 1 Pri. 20). And, where A. was a horse-dealer and livery-stable keeper, and, after his death, his widow carried on the business of the livery-stable, and bought horses to let, which she occasionally sold to customers, it was held a sufficient trading (Martin v. Nightingale, 3 Bing. 421). An executor disposing of his testator's stock is not a trader, though he purchase other articles to make it marketable, unless he increase the stock, and continue to sell (Ex parte Nutt, 1 Atk. 102; Eden, 5). Where a party purchases goods for his own use, that will not make him a trader within this section of the statute, though he afterwards sell such as he has no occasion for, because he does not seek his living by buying and selling (Parker v. Wells, 1 T. R. 34). Where a party, having no other visible occupation, was made a bankrupt as a dealer in yachts, and the only evidence of trading was that upon three several occasions he bought and sold [*368] a yacht for profit, and on one *of those occasions said to a broker whom he employed "that he thought it no disgrace thus to increase his profit," and there was no direct evidence that he thus dealt for the purpose of gaining his livelihood, or was considered a trader by any person who knew or dealt with him; it was doubted whether this was sufficient evidence of a trading to support a fiat (Ex parte Cromwell, 1 Mont. Dea. & De. 158). So, where before the recent statute a man made bricks from the earth on his own land, for his own use, though he sold some of them which he did not want to use (Parker v. Wells, supra), or though he made them entirely for sale, as a mode of enjoying the profits of his land, and even purchased land and fuel for the purpose of making them, he was not a trader (Sutton v. Wealy, 7 East, 442; Paul v. Dowling, M. & M. 263; Heave v. Rogers, 9 B. & C. 577); but he would have been a trader if he made them of earth dug from the waste, for which he afterwards paid the lord (Ex parte Harrison, 1 Bro. C. C. 173; Ex parte Ridge, 1 Rose, 316). If a man sell the milk of his own cows, and the cows too, occasionally, when unfit for milking, it is no trading (Carter v. Dean, 1 Swanst. 64); nor is it a trading, if a person sell only the cheese which he has made from the milk of his own cows, or the cider which he makes from the fruit of his own trees (Parker v. Wells, 1 T. R. 34); but if he buy the cheese or cider to sell again, it will (Ib.; ante, p. 366, as to "brickmakers" and "cowkeepers").

If a person make a purchase and sale ancillary to a business which is not itself a trading, that does not constitute a sufficient act of trading; as where a person buys an article for the purpose of mixing it with his own produce, with a view to sell the mixture more advantageously than his own produce could be sold unmixed (Patten v. Browne, 7 Taunt. 409); or a surgeon sells drugs as ancillary to his business of a surgeon (Ex parte Daubeny, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 16; 2 Deac. 72); and so a farmer who occasionally buys hay, corn, horses, &c., with a view to sell again for profit, the buying and selling being incident to the occupation of the farm, does not thereby become a trader (Stewart v. Ball, 2 N. R. 78); but where a farmer bought horses unfit for farming, and resold them, and avowed his intention to take out a license and become a horse dealer, these facts were held to be evidence of trading (Wright v. Bird, 1 Pri. 20; Martin v. Nightingale, 3 Bing. 421); and prior acts of buying will in such case be evidence to explain the quality of subsequent acts (Worth v. Budd, 2 B. & Ad. 172; 1 Dowl. P. C. 328).

Quantum of Dealing immaterial.] The quantum of the dealing, or the smallness of the profit, is immaterial, if it be proved that it was the party's intention to deal generally, in which case evidence of one act of buying and selling is sufficient to constitute a trader within the bankrupt laws (Newland v. Bell, Holt, 221, per Gibbs, C. J.; Ex parte Lavender, 4 Deac. & Ch. 487; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 11). And the purchase of one lot of timber, with intent to sell again, will make a man a trader, even if the timber be standing at the time of the purchase (Holroyd v. Gwynne, 2 Taunt. 176); Patman v. Vaughan, 1 T. R. 572; Gale v. Halfknight, 3 Stark. 56; Eden, 3). But, if a person is not in a line of life to subject him to the bankrupt laws, he will not be deemed a trader by occasional acts; as, where a schoolmaster sells books to his own scholars only (Valentine v. Vaughan, Pea. 76); or where a contractor for victualling the fleet sells off the surplusage (Gibbins v. Thompson, 1 Vent. 270); so where one buys more of an article than he wants, and sells the surplus, he does not thereby become a trader (Newland v. Bell, ante, p. *368); or the colonel of a regiment selling horses occasionally at [*369]

Tattersall's (Ex parte Blackmore, 6 Ves. 3); or a person who keeps hounds, buying dead horses, and selling the skins and bones (Summersett v. Jarvis, 3 B. & B. 2; 6 Moo. 56); or a person, finding that he has bought more of an article than he wants, selling the residue, such parties will not be traders (Bolton v. Sowerby, 11 East, 276). And, where a cow keeper, who lived by selling milk, occasionally sold such cows as were unfit for use, such sale was held not to be a trading (Carter v. Dean, 1 Swanst. 64). So, where a party holds shares in a joint-stock company for only six days and receives no profits (Ex parte Atkinson, 1 Mont. Dea. & De. 300). It will, however, be a question, in such cases, for the jury, whether it affords evidence of an intention to deal generally (Martin v. Nightingale, 3 Bing. 421; Eden, 4). And a declaration by the party of the object of his buying (Gale v. Halfknight, 3 Stark. 56); or his representing himself as a dealer, and buying goods, and offering them in exchange for others (Milliken v. Bandon, 1 C. & P. 380), will be received as evidence of his intention in this respect. Where a farmer buys and sells articles incidental to the occupation of his farm, as pigs, and feeds them on his stubbles, and resells them, this is no evidence of trading (Potten v. Browne, 7 Taunt. 409; Martin v. Nightingale, 3 Bing. 421). Where a farmer bought horses, not for farming, and re-sold them, held evidence of trading, he having declared his intention of taking out a license and becoming a horse dealer (Wright v. Bird, 1 Pri. 20). A continued drawing and re-drawing bills and notes with a view to gain a profit on the exchange, is a trafficking in exchange, and a trading (Richardson v. Bradshaw, 1 Atk. 128; Hankey v. Jones, Cowp. 754). And where brick-making was adopted as a mode of enjoying the profits of a real estate, it did not before the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 65, make the manufacturer liable to bankruptcy unless it had been carried on really as a trade (Paul v. Dowling, M. & M. 263; Heane v. Rogers, 9 B. & C. 577).

The legality or illegality of the buying and selling, &c., makes no difference. Smuggling may constitute a trading, and the person carrying it on may be a trader, within 21 Jac. I. c. 15, s. 2, as being a person who seeks his trade or living by buying and selling (Cobb v. Symonds, 5 B. & Ad. 516; 1 D. & R. 111; Ex parte Meymott, 1 Atk. 199). But, where there is distinct proof that a person bought goods in conjunction with others, to carry on a system of fraud, by making away with the goods, and never selling any of them, it is no trading (Milliken v. Brandon, 1 C. & P. 380). A trader may become a bankrupt, although he has not taken out a license, to render his trading legal (Sanderson v. Bowles, 4 Burr. 2066).

The buying and selling should be of "goods or commodities," within the meaning of this section of the act. Buying and selling land, or any interest in land, is not a trading (Port v. Turton, 2 Wils. 169). Nor is buying and selling government stock, or other public stocks or securities (Colt v. Netterville, 2 P. Wms. 308).

Buying and Letting for Hire.] The buying and letting for hire of "goods and commodities," or buying them with intent to let them for hire, is sufficient to constitute a trading, and render a party liable to the bankrupt laws. It would now probably be held, that a person having a share in a ship, which is let out on charter, may be considered as a trader (Ex parte Bowes, 4 Ves. jun. 168; Eden, 8). This provision will include a large class *of persons, such as job-masters, livery-stable keepers, hackney-[*370] men, furniture brokers, &c. (Deac. 27). In this respect, the repealed acts differ from the present, and it was formerly held, that buying horses for the purpose of letting them out to hire, was not deemed a trading; as there was no selling, nor intent to sell (Martin v. Knightingale, 3 Bing. 421; 1 Vent. 29).

Workmanship of "Goods and Commodities."] Purchasing the raw materials of trade, and selling them again under another form, or improved by the labour of manufacture, as in the case of bakers, who buy the flour, of which they make bread (3 Mod. 330); butchers, who purchase cattle, and kill them for the purpose of sale (Dally v. Smith, 4 Burr. 2148); shoemakers, who purchase the leather, of which they make shoes (Crampe v. Barne, Cro. Car. 31); smiths (Cooke, 48); tanners (3 Mod. 330); tailors, &c. (Parker v. Wells, Cooke, 56); have always been held to be traders, subject to the bankrupt law. The above section of the present act, however, "extends the description still further, so as to comprehend those manufacturers, on an extended scale, who are not excluded from its operation by the subsequent proviso as to "common labourers or workmen for hire" (Eden, 8); and the words are of so extensive a meaning, "as not to imply a buying to be necessary, but, on the contrary, are put in contradistinction to the words buying and selling in a preceding part of the clause; and it would, therefore, seem that all persons who manufacture goods for sale, with a view to profit, are within it, whether they purchase the raw materials, or have it from their own land, &c., without purchase" (Arch. B. L. 44). But it is necessary, in this case, as in that of buying and selling, that it should be the general practice of the party, or that there should have been a commencement of it coupled with an intention to continue it, as an occasional act would be insufficient (Ib.; and ante, p. 369).

It has been held that where two parties took a lease of certain saltworks and brine pits for the purpose of manufacturing and selling salt, which they made chiefly from the springs and rock salt upon the premises demised, but some of the brine they obtained by channels from adjoining premises, it was not a trading within this part of the clause (Ex parte Atkinson, 1 Mont. Dea. & De. 300).

Secondly, what Person is a Trader using the particular Trade specified in the Act. Agents who make their living by buying and selling, alum makers, apothecaries, auctioneers, bankers, bleachers, brickmakers, brokers, builders, calenderers, carpenters, carriers, cattle or sheep salesmen, coach proprietors, cow-keepers, dyers, fullers, keepers of inns, taverns, hotels, or coffee-houses, lime burners, livery-stable keepers, market gardeners, millers, packers, printers, shipowners, shipwrights, victuallers, warehousemen, and wharfingers, persons using the trade or profession of a scrivener receiving other mens' moneys or estates into their trust or custody, persons insuring ships or their freight or other matters against perils of the sea, are named in the statute (see ante, p. 366).

Bankers.] A person may be deemed a banker if he act as such, and it is not necessary that he keep an open shop; and one who receives money as a banker, although his books are kept in a manner different from that in which bankers' books usually are, and although, on receiving any large sum, he pay it to his own established banker, upon whom he gives drafts for the payment of large bills upon him, he only keeping cash to answer small drafts, is a banker *within the statute (Ex parte Wilson, 1 Atk. 218). So is a person who has only held shares in a joint-stock [*371] banking company for two years, and has received two years' dividends upon them (Ex parte Wyndham, 1 Mont. Dea. & De. 146); and a creditor of the company may issue a fiat against him, without proceeding in the first instance to the public officer of the company (Ex parte Wood, ib. 92). An army or navy agent is not, as such, deemed a banker (Eden, 6; 1 Mont. 12).

Brokers.] This term includes not only brokers concerned in the purchase and sale of merchandise, but also stock brokers, (Cott v. Nettervil, 2 P. Wms. 308; Cullen, 68); pawnbrokers (Rawlinson v. Pearson, 5 B. & A. 124); ship brokers (Pott v. Turner, 6 Bing. 702; 4 M. & P. 5). See infra, as to insurance brokers.

Builders.] These were not considered traders within the former bankrupt laws (Blake v. Lawrence, 4 Esp. 147; Williams v. Stevens, 2 Camp. 300). Where two attorneys in partnership took possession of the carcasses of houses, which had been forfeited to them as mortgagees, and finished them at their own expense, for the purpose of selling or letting them, and also purchased a few other carcasses, and employed a builder to finish them for the same purpose; it was held not a joint trading as builders (Ex parte Edwards, 1 Mont. Dea. & De. 3).

Carpenter—Shipwright.] This seems to mean such a person as purchases timber and other materials, which he works up as a carpenter, and not a person who is merely a labourer or workman for hire (Kirney v. Smith, Raym. 741).

Cowkeeper.] A farmer, who had one hundred acres of land, only two of which were pasture, on which he kept four cows, the milk of which he sold to a cowkeeper, is not a cowkeeper (Ex parte Deering, 16 Law J., N. S., Bankr. 3).

Persons Insuring Ships or Freight, or other Matters, against Perils of the Sea.] Underwriters, the description of persons here alluded to, could not, formerly, be made bankrupts in that character (Ex parte Bell, 15 Ves. 335). Insurance brokers are not, it has been said, within this section of the act (Ex parte Stevens, 4 Madd. 256; Pott v. Turner, 6 Bing. 708; but see Eden, 7; Milford v. Hughes, 16 M. & W. 174).

Persons acting as agents or factors for others, seeking their living by buying and selling, are within this section.

A Schoolmaster.] A schoolmaster eo nomine is not a trader (Re Harvey, 10 Law J. 172).

Shipowners.] Before the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 10, the share-holders of a steam-packet were held not to be traders (Ex parte Weswoud, 1 Mont. 263).

Scriveners.] "In order to make a man a money-scrivener, he must carry on the business of being trusted with other people's moneys, to lay out for them, as occasion offers" (per Gibbs, C. J., Ralph v. Malkin, 3 Camp. 534; Hamson v. Harrison, 2 Esp. 555; Lott v. Melville, 3 Sco. N. R. 346).

Where money is usually lodged in the hands of an attorney by [*372] his clients and others, for the purpose *of being invested in securities, and upon his so investing the money, he charged, not only for the conveyances, but also a certain bonus or compensation for himself, and he was a conveyancer, as well as an attorney, then, it seems, he would be deemed a scrivener within the above clause (Hutchinson v. Gascoigne, 1 Holt, 507). But a man who had money of other persons in his possession, and who discounted bills with it for his own emolument only, was holden not to be a scrivener (Hamson v. Harrison, 2 Esp. 555). So it has been holden, that an attorney purchasing and selling estates, negotiating loans, &c., for his clients, in the common course of his profession, and making only the regular professional charges for the conveyance, &c., was not a scrivener within the statute of Jac. I. (Ex parte Malkin, 1 Rose, 406; 2 East, 27. 28; Re Lewis, 2 Rose, 59; Hurd v. Brydges, 1 Holt, 554). Nor is he a scrivener within the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 2, though he charges a procuration fee to the borrowers (Lott v. Melville, 3 M. & G. 40; 3 Sco. N. R. 346; 9 Dowl. P. C. 882); but he is liable to the bankrupt laws as a money broker, and person receiving other men's moneys into his trust and custody (Ex parte Gem, 2 Mont. Dea. & De. 99; 5 Jur. 683).

Victuallers, Keepers of Inns, Taverns, Hotels, or Coffee-houses.] There was formerly a distinction, that neither victuallers nor inn-keepers could be made bankrupts, so long as they confined themselves to supplying their guests in the house, unless they showed an intention to deal out of doors (Crisp v. Pentt, Cro. Car. 549; Eden, 8).

Keeper of Lodging-house.]] The keeper of a private lodging-house, who seeks a profit by furnishing her guests with provisions, is subject to the bankrupt laws as an hotel keeper, though the provisions are set apart as the separate property of each guest (Smith v. Scott, 2 Moo. & S. 35; 9 Bing. 14). So is the keeper of a board and lodging-house, who keeps a stock of wine, which she supplies to her guests by a bottle at a time, as each requires it (Gibson v. King, 10 M. & W. 667; 1 Car. & M. 458, per Alderson, B.), or whose guests are entertained by the month, week, or other definite time, each having a bed-room to himself, but taking his meals with her (S. C. 3 Jur. 1044, Exch.).

Infants are not liable to be made bankrupts (O'Brien v. Currie, 3 C. & P. 283), except in cases where they have traded, and held themselves out as adults (Ex parte Watson, 16 Ves. 265; Ex parte Keck, cited ib., Cooke, 40; Ex parte Adam, 1 V. & B. 494); but, unless this is the case, a commission will be superseded, though he have a partner of mature age (Ex parte Banvis, 6 Ves. 601; Ex parte Henderson, 4 Ves. jun. 163; Ex parte Layton, 6 Ves. jun. 440; Ex parte Hehir, 3 Dea. & Ch. 107). A fiat against an infant is not merely voidable, but void (Belton v. Hodges, 2 Moo. & S. 496; 9 Bing. 365). Nor can a fiat be maintained against a person of age by reason of trading during infancy (Stevens v. Jackson, 4 Camp. 164; 1 Marsh. 469; 6 Taunt. 106; Ex parte Moule, 14 Ves. jun. 603).

Lunatics.] It has been laid down that lunacy is no defence against a commission of bankruptcy (Anon. 13 Ves. 590; Eden, 2). It has been once held, however, that he is incapable of committing an act of bankruptcy while labouring under the influence of the malady (Ex parte Priddy, 1 Co. B. L. 37).

Market Gardeners.*] A tenant of 130 acres, under a farming lease, which obliges him to fallow or plant with peas or potatoes [*373] (among other things) every third year, has on his farm twelve acres of young potatoes and twenty acres of green peas growing in open fields every year, and consigns the produce for table consumption to London salesmen, to whom he allows such commission as is usually allowed by market gardeners: held, that he was not a market gardener within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 10 (Ex parte Hammond, 1 De Gex, 93; 14 Law J. 14, Bankr.).

Artist.] An artist (a painter) is not a trader (Re King, 6 Law T. 522).

Attainted Person.] It would seem that he is subject to a commission of bankruptcy (Ramsey v. McDonald, Foster, 61; 1 Bl. R. 30; 1 Wils. 217; Ex parte Bullock, 14 Ves. 464).

Persons who may or may not be made Bankrupts.] Sec. 135 of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, extends "to aliens, denizens, and women, both to make them subject thereto, and to entitle them to all the benefit given thereby."

Aliens and Denizens.] Under 21 Jac. I. c. 19, s. 15, which is in substance the same as the above section, it has been held that aliens or subjects trading to or from this country, buying goods here, and sending them abroad for sale, or buying them abroad and sending them here for sale, may, if they come here and commit an act of bankruptcy, be made bankrupt, though residing in Scotland (Alexander v. Vaughan, Cowp. 398; Dodsworth v. Anderson, T. Raym. 375); in the British Colonies (Ex parte Smith, cited by Ld.

Mansfield, Cowp. 402); in the Isle of Man (Allen v. Cannon, 4 B. & A. 418); or in any foreign country (Bird v. Sedgwick, 1 Salk. 110).

Women.] A married woman can only be made a bankrupt in those cases which, according to the principle laid down in Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 546, she can be sued, and taken in execution for her debts, or where she cannot plead her coverture (ante, 7), viz., where the husband has abjured the realm, become an exile, been transported, &c. (lb.; post, "HUSBAND AND WIFE"). She may be made a bankrupt where he is only on board the hulks, under sentence of transportation, and she has occasional intercourse with him (Ex parte Franks, 7 Bing. 762; 1 Moo. & S. 1). It should seem, in such a case, that he should be under sentence for felony, as a conviction for a misdemeanor does not involve a forfeiture of chattels. Therefore, where a feme sole, being a trader, marries, a commission issued after the marriage cannot be supported, the creditors, upon the wife's marriage, becoming the creditors of the husband (Ex parte Mear, 2 Bro. C. C.; Preston v. Green, Cooke, 40). A feme covert, who is a sole trader according to the custom of London may be a bankrupt (Lavie v. Phillips, 3 Burr. 1776; 1 Bl. R. 570; Ex parte Carrington, 1 Atk. 206; Ex parte Franks, 7 Bing. 762).

Peers and Members of Parliament may be made bankrupts (Ex parte Meymott, 1 Atk. 201); so may ambassador's servants, by 7 Anne, c. 12.

Public Officers, as excisemen, may be bankrupts if they are traders (Highmore v. Molloy, 1 Atk. 206).

Clergymen*, though prohibited by statute from entering into [*374] trade, may be made bankrupts (Hankey v. Jones, Cowp. 745; Ex parte Meymott, 1 Atk. 196); a commission, however, against a clergyman, founded on a debt arising out of a contract made after he has become such in the course of trade, cannot be supported (Deac. 94).

Where a Person ceases to be subject to the Bankrupt Law, by leaving off his Trade.] If a person leave off his trade for some other employment, or has ceased to buy, but is selling off his stock, he may still be liable to be made a bankrupt, unless there be no intention on his part to exercise or resume it, which is a question for the jury (Ex parte Paterson, 1 Rose, 402). A pawnbroker who had formerly taken in goods upon pledge, but had ceased to do so, but still continued to sell the unredeemed pledges, thereby carries on the trade of a pawnbroker, and is subject to be made a bankrupt (Rawlinson v. Pearson, 5 B. & A. 124). And, if a trader cease to manufacture, but still continues to solicit orders, and to execute them, and he holds himself out to the world as capable of executing them, he is an object of the bankrupt laws (Wharam v. Routledge, 5 Esp. 235). Where trade has been carried on by the party with another in partnership, though the partnership had been dissolved some years before, and no act of trading had occurred for two or three years before the time when the petitioning creditor's debt accrued, but the concerns remained unsettled, and part of the stock in the warehouse of the parties undisposed of, the jury found, under the direction of the court, that the trading continued (Backhouse v. Tarleton, cor. Ld. Ellenb. 2 Stark. Ev. 143; Ex parte Cundy, 2 Rose, 357; Doe v. Lawrence, 2 C. & P. 134). And, though a trader retires altogether from business, yet, if he owes debts contracted in the course of his trade, or even before he entered into trade, and afterwards commit an act of bankruptcy, he is still liable to be made a bankrupt (Ex parte Bamford, 15 Ves. 449); and a debt contracted before he entered into trade will support the fiat (Baillie v. Grant, 2 M. & Sc. 193; 9 Bing. 121; 1 Cl. & Fin. 238). Semble, that a party who has ceased to be a trader cannot afterwards avail himself of the 41st section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, unless at the time he owes the debt, upon which, if a trader, he could have been made a bankrupt at the instance of a creditor (Ex parte Mitchell, 10 Jur. 188). When a testator directs his trade to be carried on after his death that part of his assets will be liable only in case of bankruptcy which he had directed to be embarked in the trade (Thompson v. Andrews, 1 Myl. & K. 116).

Joint-stock Companies.] Corporations aggregate were not liable to the old bankrupt laws, but the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, provides that commercial or trading companies incorporated by charter or statute, privileged associations under stat. 1 Vict. c. 73, or subject to its provisions, companies registered provisionally or completely under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and joint-stock companies within the definition of the 2nd sect. of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 100, may become bankrupts by committing the following acts of bankruptcy: viz., sect. 4, By filing a declaration of insolvency in pursuance of a resolution of the directors; sect. 5, By not paying, securing, or compounding for a judgment debt within fourteen days after demand; sect. 6, By not obeying an order in equity, lunacy, or bankruptcy, to pay money within fourteen days after a peremptory day fixed; sect. 7, By neglecting for a calendar month to pay, secure, or compound for a debt due to a creditor who has filed an affidavit of debt and issued a writ against them in one of the superior courts, unless they satisfy a judge of *their intention to defend the action on the merits and enter an appearance accordingly within a month, and [*375] see post, "PUBLIC COMPANIES;" 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122.

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, a dissolution of a company voted at a regular meeting may be an act of bankruptcy.

By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 4, it is provided that nothing in this act contained shall affect the provisions of the Joint-stock Companies Act, 1848, "or any of the acts therein recited or of any act amending such act, except so far as regards the abolition of the fiat in bankruptcy, and the substitution of a petition for the adjudication of bankruptcy."

By a deed of settlement of a company twelve persons were appointed to be the committee of management; and it was declared that the majority of the members of the committee of management for the time being present as members of such committee, consisting of not less than five persons, should have power to bind the company. A meeting of the committee was summoned, at which three members only attended. At this meeting a resolution was passed, that the company was unable to meet its engagements; and a declaration and minute were filed, as required by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111; and a fiat issued against the company. On a petition presented by two other members of the committee, that the fiat should be annulled: held, that the resolution passed in this case was not a resolution "duly passed," within the meaning of the act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, and that the fiat ought to be annulled (Ex parte Morrison, re London and Birmingham Extension, and Northampton, Daventry, Leamington, and Warwick Railway Company, 16 Law J. 11, Bankr.; 11 Jur. 567, 719).

Act of Bankruptcy.] It must be proved that the trader committed an act of bankruptcy sufficient to support the fiat.

The 67th sect. of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, enacts, "that if any trader liable to become bankrupt shall depart this realm, or being out of this realm shall remain abroad, or shall depart from his dwelling-house, or otherwise absent himself, or begin to keep his house, or suffer himself to be arrested or taken in execution for any debt not due, or yield himself to prison, or suffer himself to be outlawed, or procure himself to be arrested, or taken in execution, or his goods, money, or chattels to be attached, sequestered, or taken in execution, or make or cause to be made, either within this realm or elsewhere, any fraudulent grant or conveyance of any of his lands, tenements, goods, or chattels, or make or cause to be made, any fraudulent surrender of any of his copyhold lands or tenements, or make, or cause to be made, any fraudulent gift, delivery, or transfer of any of his goods or chattels, every such trader doing, suffering, procuring, executing, permitting, making or causing to be made any of the acts, deeds, or matters aforesaid, with intent to defeat or delay his creditors," shall be deemed to have thereby committed an act of bankruptcy.

But it is enacted by sect. 68, "that if any such trader shall execute any conveyance or assignment by deed, to a trustee or trustees, of all his estate and effects, for the benefit of all the creditors of such trader, the execution of such deed shall not be deemed an act of bankruptcy, unless a petition of adjudication be filed within three calendar months, from the execution thereof, provided such deed shall be executed by every such trustee within fifteen days after the execution thereof by the trader, and the execution by the trader, and by every such trustee, be attested by an attorney or [*376] solicitor, and notice thereof be given *within one month after the execution thereof, by such trader, in case such trader reside in London, or within forty miles thereof, in the London Gazette, and also in two London daily newspapers, and in case such trader does not reside within forty miles of London, then, in the London Gazette, and also in one London daily newspaper, and one provincial newspaper, published near to such trader's residence; and such notice shall contain the date and execution of such deed, and the name and place of abode, respectively, of every such trustee, and attorney or solicitor."

Sect. 69 enacts, "that if any such trader, having been arrested or committed to prison for debt, or on any attachment for non-payment of money, shall, upon such or any other arrest or commitment for debt or non-payment of money, or upon any detention for debt, lie in prison for twenty-one days," "or, having been arrested or committed to prison for any other cause, shall lie in prison for twenty-one days after any detainer for debt lodged against him and not discharged, every such trader shall thereby be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy; or if any such trader having been arrested, committed, or detained for debt, shall escape out of prison, or custody, every such trader shall be deemed to have thereby committed an act of bankruptcy from the time of such arrest, commitment or detention."

Sect. 70. "That if any such trader shall file in the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts, a declaration in writing, in the form contained in schedule (D) to this act annexed, signed by such trader, and attested by an attorney or solicitor, that he is unable to meet his engagements, every such trader shall be deemed thereby to have committed an act of bankruptcy at the time of filing of such declaration, provided a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy shall be filed by or against such trader within two months from the filing of such declaration."

Sect. 71. "That if any such trader, after the issuing of any fiat or filing of any petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against him, shall pay money to the petitioning creditor, or give or deliver to such petitioning creditor any satisfaction or security for his debt or for any part thereof, whereby such petitioning creditor may receive more in the pound in respect of his debt than the other creditors, such payment, gift, delivery, satisfaction, or security shall be an act of bankruptcy; and if adjudication of bankruptcy shall have been made under such fiat or petition, the court may either declare such adjudication to be valid, and direct the same to be proceeded in, or may order it to be annulled, and a petition or new petition for adjudication may be filed, and such petition or new petition may be supported either by proof of such last mentioned or any other act of bankruptcy."

Sect. 72. "That if any plt. shall recover judgment in any action personal for the recovery of any debt or money demand, in any of her Majesty's courts of record, against any such trader, and shall be in a situation to sue out execution upon such judgment, and there be nothing due from such plt. by way of set-off against such judgment, and such trader shall not, within seven days after notice in writing personally served upon such trader, requiring immediate payment of such judgment debt, pay, secure, or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such plt., every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the eighth day after service of such notice; provided always, that if such execution shall in the mean time be suspended or restrained by any rule, order, or proceeding of any court of justice having jurisdiction in that behalf, no further proceeding shall be had on such notice, but *that it shall be lawful neverthe- [*377] less for such plt., when he shall again be in a situation to sue out execution on such judgment, to proceed again by notice in manner aforesaid."

Sect. 73. "And be it enacted, that if any decree or order shall be pronounced in any cause depending in any court of equity, or any order shall be made in any matter of bankruptcy or lunacy against any such trader to pay any sum of money, and such trader shall disobey such decree or order, the same having been duly served upon him, the person entitled to receive such sum under such decree or order, or interested in enforcing the payment pursuant thereto, may apply to the court by which the same shall have been pronounced to fix a peremptory day for the payment of such money, which shall accordingly be fixed by an order for that purpose; and if such trader, being personally served with such last mentioned order seven days before the day therein appointed for payment of such money, shall neglect to pay the same, any such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the eighth day after the service of such order."

Sect. 74. "That the filing of a petition in the court for the relief of insolvent debtors in England by any such trader who shall be in actual custody for his discharge from custody, and who shall apply by petition to such court for his discharge from custody, according to the laws for the relief of insolvent debtors in England, shall be deemed to be an act of bankruptcy from the time of filing such petition; and any petition for adjudication of bankruptcy filed against such trader, and under which he shall be adjudged bankrupt, before the time appointed by the said court for the relief of insolvent debtors, and advertised in the London Gazette, for such prisoner to be brought up to be dealt with according to the laws for the relief of insolvent debtors in England, or at any time within two months from the time of making any order vesting the estate and effects of any such prisoner in the provisional assignee of such court, whether upon the petition of such prisoner or the petition of a creditor, shall have the effect of divesting the real and personal estate and effects of such person out of the provisional assignee: provided always, that the filing of such petition shall not be deemed an act of bankruptcy, unless such trader be adjudged bankrupt before the time so advertised as aforesaid, or within such two months as aforesaid."

Sect. 75. "That the filing of a petition under an act passed in the eleventh year of the reign of her present Majesty (c. 21), intituled 'An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to Insolvent Debtors in India,' by any trader liable to become bankrupt under this act, and the adjudication of an act of insolvency under that act, shall, for the purposes of this act, be accounted and adjudged conclusive evidence of an act of bankruptcy committed by such trader at the time of filing such petition; or of filing the petition on which the adjudication of an act of insolvency shall be made; and any creditor or creditors of such trader whose debt or debts shall be of sufficient amount to enable him or them to petition for adjudication of bankruptcy under this act may, at any time within two months after notice of the insolvency shall have been given in the London Gazette as directed by the said act for amending the laws relating to insolvent debtors in India, petition for adjudication of bankruptcy under this act against such trader, under which petition all such proceedings may be had and taken as are authorized and directed by this act, subject to such exceptions and provisions as are contained in the last-mentioned act in this behalf."

*Sect 76. "That the filing of a petition by any such trader [*378] for an arrangement between such trader and his creditors, under the provisions of this act with respect to arrangements between debtor and creditor under the superintendence and control of the court, shall be accounted and adjudged conclusive evidence of an act of bankruptcy committed by such trader at the time of filing such petition, provided a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy shall be filed against him within two months after such petition for arrangement shall have been dismissed: provided also, that no adjudication shall be made on any such act of bankruptcy unless and until after such petition for arrangement shall have been dismissed."

Sect. 77. "That if any creditor or creditors of any such trader having privilege of parliament to an amount hereinafter declared to be requisite to support a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, shall file an affidavit in any court of record at Westminster that such debt is justly due to him, and that such debtor, as he verily believes, is such trader, and shall sue out of the said court a writ of summons, in the form contained in schedule (E) to this act annexed, against such trader, and serve him with a copy of such summons, if such trader shall not, within one month after personal service of such summons, pay, secure, or compound for such debt to the satisfaction of such creditor or creditors, or enter into a bond in such sum, and with two sufficient sureties, as any of the judges of the court out of which such summons shall issue shall approve of, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in such action, together with such costs as shall be given in the same, and within one month next after personal service of such summons cause an appearance to be entered to such action in the proper court in which the same shall have been brought, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy from the time of the service of such summons."

Sect. 78. If any creditor shall file an affidavit of the truth of his debt, and of the debtor, as he verily believes, being such trader, and of the delivery to such trader personally, or to some adult inmate at his usual or last known place of abode or business, of an account in writing of the particulars of his demand, with a notice requiring immediate payment, the court shall issue a summons in writing, calling upon such trader to appear before such court, and stating the purpose for which such trader is called upon to appear.

Sect. 79. And upon such appearance the court shall require him to state whether or not he admits the demand of the creditor, or any and what part thereof, and if he shall admit such demand, or any part thereof, to reduce such admission into writing which he is required to sign, and the court shall allow such trader upon his said appearance to make a deposition upon oath, in writing under his hand, that he verily believes he has a good defence upon the merits to such demand, or to some and what part thereof; and in such case it shall be lawful for the court at the same time to require such trader to enter into a bond, in such sum and with such two sufficient sureties as the court shall approve of, to pay such sum or sums as shall be recovered, together with costs of action for the recovery of such demand.

Sect. 80. "That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall not come before the court at the time appointed (having no lawful impediment made known to and proved to the satisfaction of the court, and allowed), or if any such trader, upon his appearance to such summons, or at any enlargement or adjournment thereof, shall refuse to admit such demand, and shall not make a deposition, in the *form aforesaid, that he believes he has a good defence upon the merits to such demand, or some [*379] part thereof, and (if required by the court so to do) enter into such bond as last aforesaid, then and in either of the said cases, if such trader shall not, within seven days after personal service of such summons, or within such enlarged time as may be granted to him in that behalf, pay, secure, or compound for such demand to the satisfaction of such creditor, or enter into a bond, in such sum and with two sufficient sureties as such court shall approve of, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in any action which shall have been brought or shall thereafter be brought for the recovery of the same, together with such costs as shall be given in such action, as the case may be, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the eighth day after service of such summons, provided a petition of adjudication of bankruptcy shall be filed against such trader within two months from the filing of such affidavit."

Sect. 81. "That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall upon his appearance sign and file an admission of such demand in form aforesaid, and shall not within seven days next after the filing of such admission pay or tender and offer to pay to such creditor the amount of such demand, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the eighth day after the filing of such admission, provided a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy shall be filed against such trader within two months from the filing of such affidavit."

Sect. 82. "That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall upon his appearance sign an admission for part only of such demand in the form aforesaid, and shall not make a deposition in the form aforesaid that he believes he has a good defence upon the merits to the residue of such demand, and (if required by the Court so to do) enter into such bond as aforesaid to pay such sum or sums as shall be recovered, together with such costs as shall be given in any such action as aforesaid for the recovery of such residue, then and in such case, if such trader, as to the sum so admitted, shall not, within seven days next after the filing of such admission, pay or tender and offer to pay to such creditor the sum so admitted, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor, and as to the residue of such demand shall not, within seven days after personal service of such summons, or within such enlarged time as may be granted to him in that behalf, pay, secure, or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such creditor, or enter into a bond, in such sum and with two sufficient sureties as the court shall approve of, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in any action which shall have been brought or shall thereafter be brought for the recovery of the same, together with such costs as shall be given in such action, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the eighth day after service of such summons, provided a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy shall be filed against such trader within two months from the filing of such affidavit."

Sect. 83. "That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall upon his appearance refuse to sign the admission in that behalf required, whatever may be the nature of his statement, or whether he makes any statement or not, it shall be deemed, for the purposes of this act, that every such trader thereby refuses to admit such demand: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the court, upon reasonable cause shown, to enlarge the time for calling upon such *trader to state whether or not he admits such demand, or any part thereof, and for entering into such bond, or for any or either of such matters, for such time as the court shall think fit."

Sect. 84. "That an admission of any debt made after such summons, and signed by any such trader elsewhere than before the court, may be filed in court, and shall be of the same force and effect to all intents and purposes as an admission signed by such trader on his appearance in court, provided such admission be made in the form contained in schedule (L) to this act annexed, and there be present some attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of law on behalf of such trader, expressly named by him and attending at his request, to inform him of the effect of such admission before the same is signed by such trader, and provided also, that such attorney do subscribe his name thereto as a witness to the due execution thereof, and in such attestation declare himself to be attorney for the said trader and state therein that he subscribes as such attorney."

Sect. 88. "And be it enacted, that no person shall be liable to become bankrupt by reason of any act of bankruptcy committed more than twelve months prior to the issuing of any fiat in bankruptcy or the filing of any petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against him, and that no adjudication of bankruptcy shall be deemed invalid by reason of any act of bankruptcy prior to the debt of the petitioning creditor, provided there be a sufficient act of bankruptcy subsequent to such debt.

Preliminary Observations.] Having enumerated the legislative enactments relative to what constitutes an act of bankruptcy, it should be observed, before entering into a detail of the evidence necessary to constitute such act, that the 67th section of the Bankrupt Act renders the intent of the trader a necessary ingredient in the acts of bankruptcy therein mentioned; whereas, under the other sections, the intent is not at all material. The intention may be either inferred from the act itself, as a necessary consequence of it, or shown by other circumstances accompanying the act, or proved by the admissions of the bankrupt, and these declarations need not be contemporaneous if they be so connected as to be part of the res gestæ (Rouch v. Great Western Railway Company, 1 Q. B. 57). As a further preliminary it should be observed that the act of bankruptcy must be committed in England or Wales, unless otherwise provided against by the statutes, as remaining out of the realm, &c. (Cowp. 402); that it must not have been "committed more than twelve months prior to the issuing" of the fiat (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 88). It should never have been of several years standing (4 Ves. 175; 1 Lev. 13); but must have been committed and been complete prior to the issuing of the fiat (Glassington v. Rawlins, 3 East, 407; 4 Esp. 224); how soon before is immaterial, as after docket struck (Wydown's case, 14 Ves. jun. 86; Ex parte Dufrene, 1 Ves. & Bea. 51; Simpson v. Sikes, 6 M. & S. 295); or on the day of the date of the fiat (Hopper v. Richmond, 1 Stark. 507); and even a fraction of the day will be taken into consideration (Wydown's case, supra). Formerly concert was an objection to a fiat (B. N. P. 39; 2 T. R. 594; Pea. 27). But now no fiat in bankruptcy shall be annulled, nor any petition for adjudication of bankruptcy dismissed, nor any adjudication reversed, by reason only that the fiat, petition, or adjudication, or act of bankruptcy, has been concerted or agreed upon between the bankrupt, his solicitor or agent, or any of them, and any creditor or other person (12 & *13 Vict. c. 106, s. 15). By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 8, no fiat [*381] shall be deemed invalid by reason of the act of bankruptcy "having been concerted or agreed upon between the bankrupt and any creditor or other person;" sect. 42 of 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 56, was similar to this except that it included only acts concerted between the petitioning creditor and the bankrupt and their solicitors or agents; and that section was held not to protect fiats fraudulently concerted for the benefit of the bankrupt (Ex parte Taylor, 4 D. & C. 125; Ex parte Lewis, 1 M. D. & D. 365; Ex parte Edwards, ib. 8; Ex parte Barnett, ib. 325; Ex parte Clare, 4 Deac. 156); nor to apply to concerted acts of bankruptcy, so as to give validity to fiats founded thereon (Marshall v. Barkworth, 4 B. & Ad. 508; 1 Nev. & M. 279; Ex parte Mills, 1 M. & Ayr. 311). It is no objection to an act of bankruptcy that the trader has been advised to have recourse to it by a friend (Roberts v. Teasdale, Pea. 27). But, in a case where the attorney for the bankrupt was also attorney for the petitioning creditor, a concerted act of bankruptcy was considered fraudulent, though the denial was without the knowledge of the petitioning creditor (Rosser v. Smith, Holt's N. P. 442).

An act of bankruptcy committed after a party has retired from trade, provided it be during the existence of a debt contracted whilst in trade, or even before he entered into trade, is sufficient (Ex parte Bamford, and Baillie v. Grante, ante, 221). In the case of a partnership, and a joint fiat against the firm, each of the partners must have committed an act of bankruptcy in order to support the fiat (Mills v. Bennett, 2 M. & S. 556; 19 Ves. 543). When an act of bankruptcy has been once committed, it remains always an act of bankruptcy, and its effect cannot be purged by subsequent acts explaining it, or otherwise (B. N. P. 39; 2 T. R. 59; 3 Esp. 245; 1 Taunt. 479; Pulling v. Tucker, 4 B. & Ad. 382). But, if the alleged act of bankruptcy be equivocal, circumstances may be given in evidence to prove it was not committed with an intent to defeat or delay creditors (Ex parte Hall, 1 Atk. 201). We shall hereafter see the assignees, &c., are not tied down to the proof of any one specific act of bankruptcy (post).

We shall now consider in detail, and in the order of the above different enactments, the various acts which will constitute an act of bankruptcy.

Departing the Realm.] The word "realm" seems to mean nothing more than the extent of the jurisdiction of the courts in this country, for leaving this country to go to Ireland is a departing the realm (Williams v. Nunn, 1 Taunt. 270; Windham v. Paterson, 1 Stark. 144). And if a trader residing in Ireland, or elsewhere, come to this country upon some temporary business, and again quit it to avoid being arrested by a creditor, it is a departing of the realm within the meaning of the statute (Ib.; Holroyd v. Gwynne, 2 Taunt. 176; and see Warner v. Barber, Holt's N. P. 175). The departure must, however, be with the intent to delay his creditors in the recovery of their debts (Windham v. Paterson, 4 Camp. 286; 1 Stark. 146). Slight evidence will in general be sufficient to manifest such an intention; as, if it appear he was in embarrassed circumstances, that would be prima facie evidence of such intention (Ex parte Osborne, 2 Ves.

& Bea. 177; 1 Rose, 387); if it appear that the creditors were in fact delayed, that will be prima facie evidence, as "a person may be supposed to foresee and to intend whatever is the necessary consequence of his own acts" (Ramsbottom v. Lewis, 1 Camp. 280; *Holroyd v. White- [*382] head, 3 Camp. 530; Warner v. Barber, Holt, C. 175). Where a trader departs the realm to avoid a criminal prosecution (Woodier's case, B. N. P. 39); or in defiance of the rules of morality, as where a married man ran away with a young lady, so as to manifest a neglect of the interest of the creditors, he will thereby be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy (Raikes v. Porcan, 1 Cole, B. L. 73; Vernon v. Hankey, ib. 98). An intention to delay the creditors would be rebutted, if it appeared that the trader had evinced a regard, previous to his departure, to the interest of his creditors, or if he has advertised his going, or if he leaves a partner behind (Ramsbottom v. Lewis, 1 Camp. 280). The intent with which the party departs the realm, is, however, a question for the jury (Warner v. Barber, Holt, C. 175). If at the time of departure he has some intention of returning, but does not return, or make provision for the payment of all his debts (being indebted to several); and at the end of two years a fiat in bankruptcy is sued out against him, his continued absence under these circumstances is prima facie an act of bankruptcy (Ex parte Kirkman, 3 D. & C. 451). Where a trader departed the realm, leaving a letter behind him, and on the following date wrote another from Calais; it was held that both letters were admissible to show with what intention he departed (Rawson v. Haigh, 2 Bing. 99; Ridley v. Gyde, 9 Bing. 349).

Being out of this Realm, and remaining Abroad.] The intention of the party in delaying his creditors must be proved in the same manner as already noticed, supra. A trader protracting his residence abroad, for an unreasonable length of time, without assigning a sufficient cause for his absence, or leaving funds, or making other arrangements here for the payment of his debts, is, prima facie, sufficient evidence of the intention (Deac. 47); though he may have been pursuing his regular course of business, and remained away only three years (Ex parte Rhodes, 5 Jur. 580, Ch.).

Departing from his Dwelling-house.] Departing from the party's counting-house or place of business, although he have a dwelling-house elsewhere, is an act of bankruptcy (Judine v. Da Cossen, 1 N. R. 234). And a trader who has no settled home, but takes up a temporary abode at a public-house, in the place in which his business carries him, commits an act of bankruptcy by departing from such public-house with intent to delay his creditors (Holroyd v. Gwynne, 2 Taunt. 176). The departure must be voluntary and not compulsory; for, where a man is arrested, and thereby obliged to leave his house, such a departure is not an act of bankruptcy (Phillips v. Essex (Sheriff), 1 Cole, B. L. 85). The distance that a person departs to, after leaving his dwelling-house, or the length of time that he is absent from it, are perfectly immaterial, if the object be to delay his creditors: where a trader went to his neighbour's house, and told him he expected every moment to be arrested, upon which he concealed himself, and desired his neighbour to watch, but returned home immediately the officer was gone, such temporary absence was held to be an act of bankruptcy (Chenoweth v. Haley, 1 M. & S. 676; Bayly v. Schofield, ib. 338). And, if the party go to a distant place, among strangers, it may be an act of bankruptcy, though he is visible there; and going only to the next house may also be the same, if he is not visible (per Buller, J., cited Aldridge v. Ireland, cited 1 Taunt. 273). Where a man rode out of town in order to avoid being arrested, and returned in the evening, and *the next morning sent for the bailiff, and told him he went out in order to get the term of [*383] the plt., this was held to be such a departing from the dwelling-house as was sufficient to constitute an act of bankruptcy (Maylin v. Eylve, 2 Stra. 809). And, if a trader, on being applied to for payment by a creditor, leave his house under pretence of getting money, but goes to a billiard-table, and remains there the whole evening, this has also been held an act of bankruptcy (Bigg v. Shooner, 2 Esp. 651).

The departure must be with the intention to delay his creditors, and seem to delay them absolutely, and not merely in case a particular event should occur (Fisher v. Boucher, 10 B. & C. 705); and it is, in such case, immaterial whether any creditor was delayed or not in his absence (Robertson v. Liddell, 9 East, 487; Hammond v. Hicks, 5 Esp. 1; ib. 334; Williams v. Man, 1 Taunt. 270; Rouch v. Great Western Railway Company, 4 P. & D. 686; 1 Q. B. 51); or whether or not he departed from a groundless apprehension of being arrested (Ex parte Bamford, 15 Ves. 449). The intention may, as in other cases, be presumed as the necessary consequence of the party's act (ante, 224). When the departure is evidently for a laudable purpose, although creditors be delayed, it is not an act of bankruptcy; as, leaving home to recover a debt (Fowler v. Padget, 7 T. R. 509); or to arrange with a creditor, leaving word where he is gone (Aldridge v. Ireland, cited 1 Taunt. 273; sed vide Deffe v. Desanges, 8 Taunt. 671; 3 Moo. 7); or for any other lawful purpose (Robertson v. Liddell, 9 East, 492; 4 Taunt. 603); or for avoiding altercation (Ib.). The intent with which the bankrupt departed may be proved by evidence of what he said as part of the res gestæ (Ambrose v. Clendon, Hardw. 267); and concurrence of time is not essential, though it is material to show the connection between the act done and the expressed intention (Rouch v. Great Western Railway Company, supra). His declarations before leaving home have been admitted (Smith v. Cramer, 1 N. C. 585). So after his return home assigning a reason for his absence (Bateman v. Bailey, 5 T. R. 512; Ridley v. Gyde, 9 Bing. 349); and where it is proved that he said that he departed to avoid arrest, no proof of the writ, debt, or even of creditors, was required (Newman v. Stretch, Moo. & M. 838; Rouch v. Great Western Railway Company, supra).

Otherwise absenting himself.] These words are not confined to an absenting from a dwelling-house; for if a trader absent himself from any place, with intent to delay his creditors, it is an act of bankruptcy (Hallen v. Homer, 1 C. & P. 108; Curteis v. Willis, ib. 211; Robson v. Rolls, 2 Moo. & S. 786; 9 Bing. 648); where a trader, who carried on business at a counting-house, went away, taking his books with him (Judine v. Da Gossen, 1 N. R. 234); or where a trader went into the back shop in a neighbour's house, to avoid being seen by an officer, who, he said, had a writ against him (Chenoweth v. Hay, 1 M. & S. 676); or, being arrested for debt, escapes to the house of another person, and is there denied to the officer (Bailey v. Schofield, ib. 338); or secretly withdraws himself after he has been arrested (Phillips v. Peak, Green, 52). If a trader has no dwelling-house or counting-house, his withdrawing himself from the usual place where he transacts his business, or is to be found, is an act of bankruptcy, therefore, if a man takes up a temporary abode at a public-house, and leaves it for fear of his creditors (Holroyd v. Gwynne, 2 Taunt. 176); so if a man, having no known place of abode, but who is in the habit of attending the Royal Exchange, *to transact his business there, leaves it on the approach of his [*384] creditors, desiring a friend to say he is not there, or breaks an appointment he has made with a creditor to meet him there, to pay his debt, if it be done with the intention to delay his creditors (Gimingham v. Laing, 2 Marsh. 236; 6 Taunt. 532); or where the proprietor of a theatre retired behind the scenes, to avoid a sheriff's officer, desiring to be denied to him (Ib.). A trader leaving his shop, and desiring his servant to make some excuse for his absence, in the event of a creditor calling, is sufficient evidence to lay before a jury of an act of bankruptcy (Deffle v. Desanges, 8 Taunt. 671; 3 Moo. 7, 4). Where a trader goes to the office of the creditor's attorney to avoid being arrested in the street, it has been held, that by so doing he did not commit an act of bankruptcy (Mills v. Elton, 3 Price, 142). So if a banker, having given up his business, ceases to frequent, but without any intention to delay his creditors, the banking-house, it is not an act of bankruptcy (Bernasconi v. Farebrother, 10 B. & C. 549). Where a trader abstained from going to a place to make an inquiry as to an execution against him, to which he would have gone but for fear of an arrest, it was held an "absenting himself" (Robson v. Rolls, ante, p. 383).

A failure to keep appointments to settle with creditors, with intent to delay payment, is an act of bankruptcy (Russell v. Bell, 10 M. & W. 340; Robinson v. Carrington, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 12; see Ex parte Lavender, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 11); but (per Parke, J., in Lees v. Marton, 1 Moo. & R. 212) no case has gone the length of deciding that a breach of an appointment to meet a creditor at the creditor's place of business is an act of bankruptcy. But see Robson v. Rolls, supra. So, a statement in a deposition that the bankrupt promised to meet a creditor at a particular place, in relation to giving a security for a debt, and failed to do so, is not, in an action at the suit of the assignees, sufficient evidence of an act of bankruptcy (Tucker v. Jones, 2 Bing. 2; 9 Moo. 24; Schooling v. Green, 3 Stark. 149); but, in an action by the bankrupt to try the validity of the commission, such an appointment and failure will be prima facie evidence of an act of bankruptcy, and the plt. cannot recover unless he tender evidence to rebut the presumption that he absented himself with intent to delay his creditors (Widger v. Browning, 9 D. & R. 306). So, where a creditor having called by appointment upon a party, he left the room and did not return, and his wife told the creditor that he had gone out, it was held sufficient evidence of an act of bankruptcy (Charrington v. Brown, 11 Moo. 341); and so, where a trader, having attended a meeting of his creditors, was desired by them to withdraw until they could come to some resolution on the state of his affairs, and he retired accordingly into an outer room, where being served with a copy of a writ, he abruptly left the place of meeting altogether, and did not return for an hour, when the meeting had broken up, it was held an act of bankruptcy (Ex parte Dean, 2 Mont. Dea. & De. 127); and a trader having offered a composition to his creditors, and the next day his solicitor concurred in calling a meeting of the creditors at the trader's place of business, his non-attendance at the meeting was an act of bankruptcy, though his solicitor attended to explain the state of his affairs, and he himself personally made no promise to attend (Ex parte Beer, 1 Mont. Dea. & De. 390; 5 Jur. 104).

Beginning to keep his House.] If a trader seclude himself up in his house, to avoid the fair importunity of his creditors, who are *thus [*385] deprived of the means of communicating with him, he begins to keep house (per Lord Ellenborough, Dudley v. Vaughan, 1 Campb. 271). As where, shortly after having been denied to a creditor, he is seen peeping over his wife's shoulder, and upon another occasion, upon seeing a creditor coming, retired behind a partition in the shop, and is denied by his wife (Key v. Shaw, 8 Bing. 320; 1 Moo. & S. 462). Where partners in a banking-house reside in the same place where the business is carried on, and they close the windows and shutters of the bank during hours of business, this is within the above words (Cumming v. Bailey, 6 Bing. 363). But it is no act of bankruptcy in those partners who are not resident there (Mills v. Bennett, 2 M. & S. 566; Ex parte Mavor, 19 Ves. 543). Proof of a denial is not in all cases requisite to substantiate an act of bankruptcy, by the trader beginning to keep his house, though formerly it was indispensable (Garrat v. Moule, 5 T. R. 575); as, where a trader removed from his counting-house to his parlour, to avoid personal application to him (Dudley v. Vaughan, 1 Campb. 271); or where he retired from the place where he usually sat into a back room, and drew the curtains (King v. Bebb, 1 M. & S. 354); or where he confined himself for nearly a month to his bed-room, except Sundays (Bayley v. Scholefield, ib. 338); or where he ordered his doors to be kept shut, and not opened till it was ascertained from the window who the person was who sought admittance (Harvey v. Ramsbottom, 1 B. & C. 55; 2 D. & R. 142). A trader's secreting himself in the house of a friend, where persons have been in the habit of calling on him, will constitute a sufficient act of bankruptcy (Curteis v. Willis, R. & M. 58; S. C. 4 D. & R. 224).

A general order to be denied to all creditors, followed by a denial to some one in particular, is alone sufficient evidence of a beginning to keep house (Lloyd v. Heathcote, 2 B. & B. 338; 5 Moo. 129; Mucklow v. May, 1 Taunt. 479; Colkett v. Freeman, 2 T. R. 59); but not, unless followed by an actual denial, or some other act, as retiring to an unusual part of the house, &c. (Fisher v. Boucher, 10 B. & C. 705; Ex parte Wydown, 14 Ves. jun. 86; but see same point raised but not decided in Ware v. Waring, 3 M. & W. 362). Nor is an order to be denied to a particular person not followed by a denial, or by the party concealing himself, or by some other act which is evidence of a beginning to keep house (Fisher v. Boucher, 10 B. & C. 705).

The order to deny must be proved to have been given by the trader himself (Dudley v. Vaughan, 1 Camp. 271; Ex parte Foster, 17 Ves. 416). But it is not necessary that he should give directions to that effect, if he knowingly permit himself to be denied in his own house to a creditor with intent to delay creditors (Smith v. Moon, M. & M. 458); and an order given by a trader to his wife to deny him is sufficient evidence of keeping house (Lloyd v. Heathcote, 2 B. & B. 388; Ex parte Hall, 1 Atk. 201). If a trader give a general order to be denied, and is denied to a particular creditor, it is evidence of keeping house, though the party calling is not the objectionable person, and such fact is made known to him (Mucklow v. May, 1 Taunt. 479; Colkett v. Freeman, 2 T. R. 59). It will still be evidence of a keeping house, though the trader be seen by the creditor at the time of denial (Ex parte Bamford, 15 Ves. 451). A denial on a Sunday has been deemed not to be evidence of a keeping house, even though the trader appointed the creditor to come on that day for the purpose of settling accounts (Ex parte Preston, 2 V. & B. 312). A denial to a person merely demanding payment of a debt, but not demanding an interview with the trader himself, is *not evidence of a beginning to keep house (Dudley v. Vaughan, [*386] 1 Camp. 271); nor is the denial to a person calling to obtain the trader's execution of a bail-bond, according to a promise made by him when arrested (Schooling v. Lee, 3 Stark. 149; but see Deacon, 65, n.). But a denial made to a creditor, under an idea that his object in calling was to demand payment of a debt, is evidence of keeping house, though, in fact, that was not his object (Ex parte White, 3 V. & B. 128; S. P. Ex parte Harris, 2 Rose, 67). It matters not whether the denial be to a creditor or not (Eden, 23). A denial to several persons, whom the trader's servant supposed to be creditors, is evidence for a jury as to the trader's intention (Jameson v. Eamer, 1 Esp. 381). So, a denial to a collector of taxes is evidence of a beginning to keep house (Sanderson v. Laferest, 1 C. & P. 46, 336); or where the party called in consequence of the dishonour of a bill, and was denied (Bleasby v. Crossley, 2 C. & P. 213); or a denial to the collector of the church and highway rates (Lloyd v. Heathcote, 2 B. & B. 388; 5 Moo. 129); for it is the intention of the party in being denied, and not the object of the person calling, which will be considered to constitute a keeping house (Deac. 55); the act of bankruptcy depending on the intent to delay, and not on the intent being productive of the effect (per Bailey, J., Chenoweth v. Hay, 1 M. & S. 679). A banker stopping payment, or refusing to pay money when called on for that purpose, does not thereby commit an act of bankruptcy, if he keeps his shop open, and does not conceal himself (7 Mod. 139).

The period during which the trader keeps his house is not material (Palm. 325). A denial once having been made, is evidence of a beginning to keep house, though the creditor be afterwards admitted in consequence of his importunity (Wood v. Thwaites, 3 Esp. 245); and though the trader deny himself, and afterwards appear in public, and pay the debt (Colkett v. Freeman, 2 T. R. 59). Where a general order to be denied is given, the fact of the trader's being subsequently denied on account of illness will not affect the act of bankruptcy, as the intention will be referrible to his previous orders (Lazarus v. Waithman, 5 Moo. 863). Where a trader was in the rules of the K. B., and had come to his house out of the rules, and was there denied, it was held to be evidence of keeping his house (Hughes v. Gilman, 2 C. & P. 32); and a denial at a trader's lodgings, not his usual place of residence, is also evidence (Park v. Prosser, 1 C. & P. 176).

The intention in a trader's being denied may be explained away, and the presumption of its having been done with the supposed intent to delay creditors may be repelled; as, by his being denied whilst at dinner, or engaged in business (Shew v. Thompson, Holt, 159; Lloyd v. Heathcote, 2 B. & B. 392); or at an unseasonable hour; and, on many other occasions, which may easily be imagined, he may refuse to see his creditors, without meaning to delay them, and therefore without committing an act of bankruptcy, although they should for a time be delayed (per Lord Ellenborough, Smith v. Currie, 3 Camp. 350). So, as we have just seen, a denial on a Sunday is not evidence of an act of bankruptcy (Ex parte Hall, 1 Atk. 201; Stafford v. Clarke, 1 C. & P. 27; Ex parte Preston, 2 Ves. & Bea. 312).

Suffering himself to be Arrested for any Debt not due.] The object of this enactment, as observed by Mr. Deacon, is, no doubt, to provide against a voluntary submission to an arrest for a fictitious debt; but the suffering himself to be arrested upon a bill of exchange not due*, or, indeed, for [*387] any debt solvendum in futuro (if the intention is to defeat or delay a creditor), would, it is apprehended, come within the meaning of the statute (Deac. 61).

Yielding himself to Prison.] Where a trader, capable of paying, from fraudulent motives, voluntarily goes to prison, it is a sufficient act of bankruptcy (Ex parte Barton, 7 Vin. 61; Rex v. Page, 7 Pri. 616). It must be done, however, with an intent to delay his creditors (ante, 280). A bona fide surrender in discharge of bail will not constitute an act of bankruptcy within the meaning of this clause.

Suffering himself to be Outlawed.] To render outlawry an act of bankruptcy, it must have been suffered with an intent to defraud creditors (Radford v. Bludworth, 1 Lev. 13); and the outlawry must be in England or Wales. An outlawry in a county-palatine will be sufficient (Stone, 124; Com. Dig. Bankrupt); an outlawry in Ireland will not (Ib.; Deac. 62).

Procuring himself to be Arrested, or his Goods, Moneys, or Chattels, to be Attached, Sequestered, or Taken in Execution.] Any arrest made by a man's own procurement will come under this provision: it being immaterial whether the arrest is for a real or a fictitious debt (7 Vin. Abr. 61); and, if the party procure himself to be outlawed, it will be equally an act of bankruptcy, whether the debt be a just debt or not (Ex parte Barton, ib.). The last words of this provision were not included in 1 Jac. I. c. 15, s. 2; under which it had been held, that a fraudulent execution, though void as against creditors, was not a procuring of goods to be attached, which meant only a proceeding by foreign attachment (Clarey v. Hayley, Cowp. 427; Cooke, 118). An attachment out of any court for mere default or laches would not be an attachment within the meaning of the statute; for such an attachment could not be considered as done by deft.'s own procurement (see Com. Dig. Bankrupt, C 2; Deac. 63). Where a trader, hearing that a writ of fi. fa. was issued against him, clandestinely conveyed his goods out of his house, and concealed them privately, in order to prevent them from being levied in execution, this, it was held, though a palpable fraud, was not an act of bankruptcy (Cole v. Davies, 1 Ld. Raym. 724).

So where, in May, 1842, a tenant in arrear for rent gave, upon the pressing solicitation of the landlord, a warrant of attorney for the arrear, and the current year's rent upon the understanding that judgment was to be entered up thereon, and a fi. fa. delivered to the sheriff, but not to be executed till other writs against the tenant should come into the sheriff's hands, and upon such writs coming into his hands in November, it was executed; it was held that the giving of the warrant of attorney was not an act of bankruptcy under this head (Gore v. Lloyd, 12 M. & W. 463; 13 Law J., N. S. Ex. 366). The arrest, attachment, sequestration, or execution, must be proved to have been procured by the bankrupt, with intent to defeat or delay his creditors.

Procuring Bills to be taken in Execution.] The procuring bills of exchange to be taken in execution with intent to delay creditors, is an act of bankruptcy (Edwards v. Cooper, 10 Law J. 160, Q. B.).

Fraudulent Conveyance.] Making or causing to be made, either within this realm or elsewhere, any fraudulent grant or conveyance of any of his lands, tenements, goods, or chattels; or making, *or [*388] causing to be made, any fraudulent surrender of any of his copyhold lands or tenements; or making, or causing to be made, any fraudulent gift, delivery, or transfer, of any of his goods or chattels. These acts of bankruptcy will be considered together, as there is in principle a strict analogy between them; for all those acts which have heretofore been deemed to be fraudulent preferences will, under the latter of these provisions, be henceforth considered as acts of bankruptcy (Eden, 25). It must be observed, that a creditor who has executed, or been privy to, or acted under a fraudulent deed, cannot himself set it up as an act of bankruptcy (Barnford v. Baron, 2 T. R. 594, n.; Tope v. Hockin, 7 B. & C. 101).

This provision created a new act of bankruptcy, by extending the operation of the 1 Jac. I. c. 15, s. 2, to deeds executed abroad. It also created a new act of bankruptcy by the words—"any fraudulent gift, delivery, or transfer, of any of his goods or chattels;" thereby removing a great inconsistency that formerly prevailed in the bankrupt law: for, though a fraudulent gift or transfer by deed was held an act of bankruptcy, it was decided that a sale, or any transfer of goods not by deed, however fraudulent the scheme might be in preference of one creditor to another, and as such void, was, nevertheless, not an act of bankruptcy (Deac. 75; 4 Burr. 2478). A fraudulent delivery of goods will not be an act of bankruptcy, unless it be in the nature of a gift or transfer; so that where goods are removed with intent to delay a creditor, but the party in whose custody they are placed has no claim given him over them, this is not an act of bankruptcy (Cotton v. James, Moo. & M. 273).

The fraudulent conveyances contemplated by this provision are those which are void at common law, or under the Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances (13 Eliz. c. 5); and those which are fraudulent, as being in contravention of the policy of the bankrupt laws, in preventing a fair and equal distribution amongst the creditors, or in preferring one creditor to another. Those conveyances which are void at common law, or under the Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances, will be considered, post, "TROVER," "SHERIFF," "FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE"); the present considerations will be confined to those conveyances which are fraudulent, as being in contravention of the policy of the bankrupt laws.

To constitute an act of bankruptcy under the first part of this clause, the conveyance must appear to have been made by deed (Martin v. Pewtress, 4 Burr. 2478; 17 Ves. 202); and the deed must be a valid one; therefore, a conveyance by deed without a stamp (Whitwell v. Dimsdale, Pea. 168); or not executed by a person who must have been a party to it (Antram v. Chase, 15 East, 212; Beech v. Gouch, Holt, C. 15), does not constitute an act of bankruptcy; nor does it where, in evidence, it appears that the conveyance was made contrary to the intention of the bankrupt himself (Ex parte Norris, 1 G. & J. 233). Where the deed was intended for execution by three persons, and was incapable of operation unless executed by them all, the court was of opinion that it could not be considered an act of bankruptcy where executed only by one (Dutton v. Morrison, 17 Ves. 190).

An assignment of all a trader's effects may be an act of bankruptcy, whether it be upon trust for the benefit of one creditor (Wilson v. Day, 2 Burr. 877; Siebert v. Spooner, 1 M. & W. 714); or of several (Compton v. Bedford, 1 W. Bl. 362); or of all, to the exclusion of one (Ex parte Foord, cited 1 Burr. 477); or even of all without exception (Ex parte Bourne, 16 or of all who should execute who should assent to the arrangement (Ex parte Zurlchenbart, 8 Jur. 1081, C. R.; 13 Law J., N. S. 19); and though he did not thereby intend to defeat, defraud, or delay his creditors, as that being the necessary consequence of the assignment, he must in law be taken to have intended it (Siebert v. Spooner, 1 M. & W. 714; Stewart v. Moody, 1 C. M. & R. 777; 5 Tyrw. 493); or though it is not signed by the trustee or any creditor, and is not further acted on, and has not been out of the trader's possession (Botcherby v. Lancaster, 3 Nev. & M. 383; 1 Ad. & E. 77); or though it does not purport to convey all his effects, and may have been executed in the hope of obtaining further advances from the creditor, and with the intention of conveying, and though the advances are accordingly obtained, and the trade carried on for several weeks, and no possession taken in the mean time under the instrument, a bill of sale (Surdon v. Sharpe, 7 Sco. N. R. 730; 13 Law J., N. S. 67). And, as it is the execution of the deed that creates the act of bankruptcy, the conveyance produces that effect, although there be a proviso that it shall be void if the trustees think fit (Ib., 4 East, 230); or if any one of the creditors refuse his acquiescence (Kettle v. Hammond, 1 Cooke, B. L. 106; Eckhardt v. Wilson, 8 T. R. 140); or if all the creditors do not sign, or if a commission of bankruptcy be taken out within a given period (Dutton v. Morrison, 17 Ves. 199; 1 Rose, 213). It is immaterial whether the assignment is made to secure a present debt, or to indemnify a surety who is only likely to become a creditor (Hassells v. Simpson, Doug. 89).

An assignment, however, of all the trader's property, to trustees for the benefit of all the creditors, does not constitute an act of bankruptcy, unless a petition of adjudication be filed within three months from the execution thereof; provided the deed is executed by every trustee within fifteen days after the execution of it by the trader, and the execution of it, both by the trader and by every trustee, be attested by an attorney or solicitor, and notice be given within one month after the execution by the trader (if he reside in London, or within forty miles thereof), in the London Gazette, and in two London daily newspapers; and, if he reside beyond that distance, then in the London Gazette and one London daily newspaper, and one provincial newspaper, published near to the trader's residence; which notice must contain the date and execution of the deed, and the name and place of abode respectively of every such trustee, and of such attorney or solicitor (s. 68, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106). And such an assignment will only constitute an act of bankruptcy, when the creditors do not all assent to the deed; as no creditor, who is either a party or privy to the assignment, or has even acted under it, can afterwards set it up as an act of bankruptcy (Bamford v. Baron, 2 T. R. 594, n.; Marshall v. Barkworth, 1 Nev. & M. 279; Ex parte Cawkwell, 1 Rose, 313; 1 P. Smith, 118; Ex parte Crawford, 1 Christ. B. L. 137, 182; Back v. Gooch, 1 Holt, 13; 4 Camp. 232; Hicks v. Burfitt, ib., 233, n.; Ex parte Shaw, 1 Mod. 598; 1 G. & J. 84; Ex parte Kilner, Buck, 104; Ex parte Battier, ib., 426). This, however, only estops such a creditor as petitioning creditor, and the assignees under a fiat sued out by him (Tope v. Hockin, 9 D. & R. 881; 7 B. & C. 101), and they cannot rely on any other act of bankruptcy on which he could not (Ib.), and not a person who may happen to be elected an assignee under the commission (Tappenden v. Burgess, 4 East, 230); nor is a party estopped from suing out a commission upon a different act of bankruptcy, committed by the trader previously to, and independent of, the deed (Doe v. Anderson, 1 Stark. 262).

*A colourable exception in a grant or conveyance of an inconsiderable part of a trader's property, will not prevent the same [*390] being considered as an act of bankruptcy; as, where a trader made an assignment of the bulk of his property (except his household goods, and some other articles), to trustees, in trust for the benefit of themselves, and the creditors mentioned in a schedule, and in which schedule one creditor was purposely omitted, it was considered an act of bankruptcy (Ex parte Foord, 1 Burr. 477); and see Berney v. Davison, 1 B. & B. 408; Compton v. Bedford, 1 Bl. R. 362). And so, where a trader mortgaged all his stock in trade, excepting household goods and debts, which were very inconsiderable (Law v. Skinner, 2 Bl. R. 996).

There is a distinction between an assignment by a trader of all his effects for the benefit of his creditors, or to secure a pre-existing debt, and an assignment of all his property for a valuable consideration (Whitall v. Thompson, 1 Esp. 72; see Manton v. Moore, 7 T. R. 67; Hunt v. Mortimer, 10 B. & C. 44). So, a sale to a bona fide purchaser of the whole of a trader's stock in trade, he intending to abscond with the money and defraud his creditors, is not an act of bankruptcy (Baxter v. Pritchard, 1 Ad. & E. 456; Harwood v. Bartlett, 6 N. C. 61). But an assignment by a trader to a creditor of all his effects and stock in trade is of itself an act of bankruptcy, and the question of fraud should not be left to the jury (Siebert v. Spooner, 1

M. & W. 714). A sale at a price under circumstances to raise a suspicion in the mind of the buyer as to the intention of the seller to defraud his creditors, is an act of bankruptcy, and trover lies for the goods (Cook v. Caldecote, Moo. & M. 522).

Assignment of Part of Property.] An assignment of part of a trader's effects to a particular creditor, as it carries with it no intrinsic evidence of fraud, must, to constitute it an act of bankruptcy, be expressly shown in evidence to have been done in contemplation of bankruptcy, and consequently with the intent to give the grantee a preference over the other creditors; for, generally speaking, a solvent trader has a right to make over any portion of his property that he chooses, either in satisfaction of a debt, or for any purpose (Jacob v. Shepherd, 1 Burr. 478; Robinson v. Carrington, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 1); and it is prima facie lawful (Chase v. Goble, 2 Man. & G. 930). It is only, therefore, when his circumstances are such as must render him unable to pay all his creditors their demands in full that an assignment of part of his effects to any one creditor can be considered to have been done with intent, to give that creditor an undue preference over the rest, and in contemplation of bankruptcy (Deac. 71); and consequently "it is incumbent on the party who sets up an act of bankruptcy of this description to show the general situation of the property to have been such that insolvency would be the effect of the transfer" (per Cur., 4 B. & Ad. 834): and, therefore, unless it is an assignment of so large a part as would prevent the trader from carrying on his trade, and render him insolvent, it is not an act of bankruptcy (Wedge v. Newlyn, 4 B. & Ad. 831; and per Parke, B., 1 C. M. & R. 447); as where a miller assigned his wagon and horses to a creditor who had arrested him; it not appearing but that he might have money to purchase others (Ib.). So, where a trader assigned all his effects at a particular place, it was held not an act of bankruptcy unless it was shown that he had no other effects (Chase v. Goble, 3 Sco. N. R. 245; 2 Man. & G. 930).

Whether such partial assignment is an act of bankruptcy, is a question for the jury, and they will have to find whether it was *voluntary [*391] or made in contemplation of bankruptcy (Bannatyne v. Leader, 10 Sim. 350).

So, where traders in embarrassed circumstances convey the machinery in their mills (they having other property) to secure the payment of a debt of 3029*l.*, with interest, by certain instalments, it is not an act of bankruptcy unless the jury say it is a fraudulent preference (Balme v. Hutton, 2 Y. & J. 101). So, where a trader assigned to a banking company as a security for past and future advances, his leasehold property, stock in trade, utensils, and effects, with a proviso that he should remain in possession until default, and the assignment did not include another part of his property equal in amount to the debt covered by the security, and the jury found it was not executed in contemplation of bankruptcy, it was not an act of bankruptcy (Carr v. Burdess, 1 C. M. & R. 443).

But, on the other hand, where an innkeeper, being insolvent, assigned to a creditor all the furniture and effects at his inn, except his stock in trade, money, and book debts, in trust to sell and pay himself, returning the surplus, it was held an act of bankruptcy, inasmuch as it disabled him from pursuing his business (Porter v. Walker, 1 Man. & G. 686; 1 Sco. N. R. 568). So, where a trader, who could only pay 8*s.* in the pound, and who was threatened with an attachment out of Chancery for not paying a debt assigned a lease, being part of his estate, to secure certain creditors, and then in trust for himself (Devan v. Watts, Doug. 85); or, where a trader, three days before he absconded, made an assignment to his son (who was a creditor to a much larger amount) of part of his real and personal estate (Round v. Bye, Co. B. L. 100); these, and similar transactions, have been considered acts of bankruptcy (Wilson v. Davy, 2 Burr. 827; Compton v. Bedford, 1 Bl. R. 362; Butcher v. Easto, Doug. 282; Newton v. Chantler, 7 East, 138). An assignment by an insolvent is void if made with the intention of petitioning the court for his discharge, though made more than three months before the commencement of the imprisonment (Becke v. Smith, 2 M. & W. 191); and a payment may be void as a fraudulent preference, though the immediate object of it was not to benefit the creditor preferred, but to free the bankrupt's wife's estate from an incumbrance (Marshall v. Lamb, 5 Q. B. 115). So, also, where a trader, the night before he absconded, inclosed bills of exchange to a creditor (Harman v. Fisher, Cowp. 117; vide Wilson v. Balfour, 2 Camp. 579); or making a pretended sale on the eve of bankruptcy (Rust v. Cooper, Cowp. 629); or paying a bill of exchange before it became due (Singleton v. Butler, 2 B. & P. 283); have all been considered fraudulent preferences; and, in a recent case, a voluntary payment, under circumstances which might reasonably lead the creditor to believe bankruptcy probable, though not inevitable, was considered a preference (Poland v. Glyn, 2 D. & R. 310; Eden, Bl. 30). It is undecided whether a settlement made by a trader previous to, and in anticipation of marriage, is fraudulent, and an act of bankruptcy; if, however, it can be proved that the wife was a party to any intent to defeat or delay the creditor, such a settlement would be an act of bankruptcy (Ex parte Rutherford, 17 Ves. 268; Campion v. Cotton, ib.). Where a trader, being in insolvent circumstances, borrowed 120*l.* of his brother, and, in consideration of this loan, assigned to him one-third of all his effects, and absconded two days after the assignment, though the brother took immediate possession of the goods, and exerted clear acts of ownership, by exposing them to sale, and carrying on the trade, and had not the least knowledge of the insolvency, the court held the deed invalid, by reason of the preference (Linton v. Bartlett, 3 Wils. 47). And, even where *a trader continued to carry on his trade for three years after the [*392] execution of a conveyance of part of his property in favour of particular creditors, and the conveyance itself remained in the possession of the bankrupt, it was held to be a question for a jury to consider, whether such a conveyance was not fraudulent, as being voluntarily made, and in order to give an undue preference, to the prejudice of the general creditors (Pulling v. Tucker, 4 B. & A. 382). It need not be proved that the trader actually had in contemplation an act of bankruptcy at the time the creditor pressed for payment or security, and thereby obtained such payment or security; it suffices if, from the facts, such contemplation may be inferred, or that the transaction was fraudulent at common law (Hartshorn v. Slodden, 2 B. & P. 583; Crosby v. Crouch, 11 East, 261).

But an assignment of any part of a trader's effect will only be fraudulent, if made voluntarily in contemplation of bankruptcy, and with a view to prefer one creditor to another (Gibbons v. Phillips, 7 B. & C. 529; Morgan v. Brundrett, 5 B. & Ad. 289); for, if made bona fide for a just debt, and without contemplating such an event, it will then neither be void, nor an act of bankruptcy. As, where a trader, some months before his bankruptcy, assigned certain goods in the hands of his factors, for a particular creditor, in trust for himself and certain other creditors, and the trusts of the deed were at once openly carried into execution, such an assignment was deemed not to constitute an act of bankruptcy (Jacob v. Shepherd, 1 Burr. 478). So, the assignment of several debts mentioned in a schedule annexed to the assignment to indemnify the sureties of the assignor, has been held good, the party not becoming a bankrupt till a month afterwards, and not having his bank ruptcy in contemplation at the time of the assignment (Unwin v. Oliver, 1 Burr. 481). So, where a trader being entitled to large freehold and leasehold estates, and being greatly embarrassed, conveyed, under advice, those estates to trustees to sell or mortgage, with a view to an arrangement with his creditors, to which he was considered incompetent from the state of his health, it was held not to be an act of bankruptcy (Greenwood v. Churchill, 1 Myl. & K. 546; see Carr v. Beardiss, 1 C. M. & R. 444; Abbott v. Burbage, 2 N. C. 443). So, where one of two partners conveyed his separate estate to trustees for the joint creditors of both, the joint creditors agreeing that they should remain in possession of their stock with a view to retrieve themselves, and that on paying 4s. 6d. in the pound by certain instalments they should receive a general release, it was held not an act of bankruptcy, and that it was properly left to the jury to say whether the conveyance was bona fide to enable the traders to retrieve themselves, or with intent to defraud the separate creditors of the grantor (Abbott v. Burbage, 2 Bing. N. C. 444; 2 Sco. 656). But, if made voluntarily, and in contemplation of bankruptcy, though in satisfaction of a just debt, it is an act of bankruptcy (Bevan v. Nunn, 2 Moo. & S. 132; 9 Bing. 107). A transfer to one to whom no debt was due, would be of itself evidence of fraud and an act of bankruptcy (Scott v. Thomas, 6 C. & P. 611; per Parke, B.).

The mere circumstance of the trader's being in insolvent circumstances, or contemplating insolvency, at the time of the assignment, is not conclusive evidence that he contemplated bankruptcy, there being no fraud, and no design to put the property in a train of distribution different from that of the bankrupt law (Burney v. Viney, 1 B. & B. 482; and see 5 Taunt. 109; 1 B. & C. 5; 2 D. & R. 25). Where A., a trader, purchased goods from B. on the 8th October, for exportation, but finding that he must stop [*393] payment, and that he *could not apply the goods to the purpose for which they were brought, he returned them on 16th October to B., and on the 17th he stopped payment; though expecting remittances from abroad more than sufficient to pay his debts, he had no doubt that his creditors would give him time: they, however, refusing, he was made bankrupt on 2d November. Under these circumstances it was held, that the jury were warranted in finding that the delivery of the goods was not made in contemplation of bankruptcy (Fidgeon v. Sharp, 1 Marsh. 196; see Wheelwright v. Jackson, 5 Taunt. 549; Moore v. Barthrop, 1 B. & C. 5). Whether a party contemplated bankruptcy is a question for the jury under all the circumstances of the case (Poland v. Glyn, 4 Bing. 22 n.; Flook v. Jones, 4 Bing. 20). To make out a case of fraudulent preference. The trader's knowledge that he was insolvent is not sufficient, unless actual bankruptcy was contemplated (Atkinson v. Brindall, 2 N. C. 225).

Conveyance Voluntary.] The assignment must be voluntary to constitute an act of bankruptcy (Gibbons v. Phillips, 7 B. & C. 529). If a trader give preference to his creditor, under threat, or apprehension of an arrest or legal process, however groundless, such preference is no act of bankruptcy (Thompson v. Freeman, 1 T. R. 155). A delivery, under a threat of criminal prosecution, is not an act of bankruptcy (Carrol v. De Tastet, 2 Rose, 462); nor is it so where the trader acts under the importunity of his creditor (Cooper v. Cough, 1 T. R. 156, n.; Smith v. Payne, 6 T. R. 152; Ex parte Scuddamore, 3 Ves. 85; Arbonir v. Hanbury, Holt, C. 504, 575). A trader, complying with an importunate demand for a further security for a debt not yet due, does not thereby commit an act of bankruptcy (Crosby v. Crouch, 3 Camp. 168; Hartshorn v. Slodden, 2 B. & P. 582; Belcher v. Jones, 2 M. & W. 258). Payment of a debt by cheque may be a fraudulent preference. When such payment was made without pressure, after a resolution had been come to by the debtors to suspend payments of their debts generally, it was held, under the circumstances of the case, a fraudulent preference, whether the debtors contemplated bankruptcy or not (Ex parte Simpson, 1 De G. 19; 14 Law J. 1 Bankr.). A trader who assigns his property after service of writ will be deemed to have been guilty of fraudulent preference as against the creditor for whose debt such action was brought. It is his duty to file a declaration of insolvency (Re Harnell, 6 Law T. 285). The fact that goods have been made over by a debtor to a creditor as security for an antecedent debt, and without any new advantage, does not amount to a fraudulent preference (Turquand v. Smith, 6 Law T. 315). Where a trader, without solicitation, and in contemplation of stopping payment, put three checks into the hands of his clerk, to be delivered to a creditor, at the counting-house of the latter, but, before delivery, the creditor called upon the trader, and demanded payment of his debt, it was ruled, that the intention of making a voluntary preference not having been consummated, the payment stood good (Bayley v. Ballard, 1 Camp. 416; but see Singleton v. Butler, p. 394, and Cook v. Rogers, infra, where Bayley v. Bolland is doubted). But where a trader being pressed for payment or security, gave a bill of sale of apparently the whole of his stock, the court held that, inasmuch as the act did redeem him even from any present difficulty, which is the ordinary motive for such an act, when done under the pressure of a threat, it was evident it was not done under such pressure, but voluntarily, and with a view to prefer the particular creditor, in contemplation of bankruptcy (Thornton v. Hargreaves, 7 East, 544). And where a trader, on being pressed, conveyed estates in trust to *sell, and pay the pressing creditor, with a further trust to pay debts to [*394] certain relatives, the court considered this to be an undue preference, in contemplation of bankruptcy, and an act of bankruptcy (Morgan v. Horseman, 3 Taunt. 241; Eden, 32). Where the acceptor of a bill, two days before the expiration of the time for which the bill was originally drawn, called upon the indorser, and informed him, privately, that he was insolvent; the indorser insisted on being paid the amount of the bill, offering at the same time to become security to the creditors for so much as the estates should produce; whereupon the acceptor paid it, and, four days afterwards became a bankrupt; it appeared also, that the bill had been altered, so as to make it fall due before this transaction, but without the indorser's knowledge: these circumstances were held sufficient evidence of a fraudulent preference, and act of bankruptcy (Singleton v. Butler, 2 B. & P. 283; see Cook v. Rogers, 7 Bing. 446). A debtor being insolvent and in prison went under a day rule to receive a sum of money due to him from an officer; a creditor met him there and demanded and received out of the money payment of his debt, having no notice of the debtor's insolvency and imprisonment. Eight days afterwards a commission issued against the debtor: held, no fraudulent preference (Churchill v. Crease, 5 Bing. 177). In these cases the length of time elapsing between the transaction and the bankruptcy is a material consideration, and with regard to the contemplation of bankruptcy, the question is not what was the real state of the trader's affairs, but what was their state in his own judgment (Belcher v. Prettie, 10 Bing. 408). If evidence of a threat was given, to show that the transaction was not a voluntary one on the part of the bankrupt, it is still matter of consideration for the jury whether that threat had any operation or not, and the motives of the trader may be properly inquired into (Cook v. Rogers, 7 Bing. 438). Where a payment is clearly made in contemplation of bankruptcy, and voluntarily, the question, whether it be a fraudulent preference, becomes a matter of law rather than of fact (semble, Gibson v. Muskett, 4 Man. & G. 160). A trader having overdrawn his banker's account to the extent of 864*l.* promises a guarantee for 550*l.* and assigns all his property to the bankers by a deed, in which 1000*l.* is stated to be due, and which contains a power of sale upon non-payment of that sum upon demand, but no stipulation for further advances; though further advances are in fact made. Held, an act of bankruptcy (Lindon v. Sharpe, 6 M. & G. 895).

Must be his own Property.] The assignment must be proved to be of the trader's own property, and not of property conveyed by another person, to, or in trust for him. Where A. and B., being partners and insolvent, A. assigned certain property to B., in trust for the wife of B. (who was a daughter), it was held to be no act of bankruptcy by B., though he was a party to the deed (Whitwell v. Thompson, 1 Esp. 68, 71). A return to the lender of a check given for a specific purpose, and not applied to it, would not, it seems, be considered fraudulent, so as to constitute an act of bankruptcy (Moore v. Barthrop, 1 B. & C. 5; 2 D. & R. 25); so, as to a return of goods by hirer to lender under a threat of issuing a fiat in bankruptcy (Ex parte Whitby, 1 Mont. & Ch. 671).

So it must be of Goods and Chattels.] A payment of money is within the latter part of sect. 3 of Geo. IV. c. 16; "Gift, delivery, or transfer of goods or chattels" (Ex parte Simpson, in re Hunt, 8 Jur. 1151, C. R.; contra, Abell v. Daniel, Moo. & M. 370; per *Tenterden, C. J., and [*395] per Tindal, C. J., in Bevan v. Nunn, 9 Bing. 107; 2 Moo. & S. 132; and see 8 Jur. 1154). So is a delivery of a bill of exchange (Cumming v. Bailey, 4 Moo. & P. 36; 6 Bing. 363); or a country bank note (per Gurney, B., at N. P.; but left undecided in banc; Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C. M. & R. 782; 5 Tyrw. 309).

Sale not an Act of Bankruptcy.] A sale of all a trader's goods is not within that section, unless it takes place under such circumstances that the buyer ought to suspect fraud on the part of the seller, and that the sale is for that purpose (per Tenterden, C. J., Cooke v. Caldcott, 1 Moo. & M. 522). If this is not the case, though the sale is of all the trader's goods (Rose v. Haycock, 3 Nev. & M. 645; 1 Ad. & E. 460); or made with the intention of absconding with the money (Baxter v. Pritchard, 3 Nev. & M. 638; 1 Ad. & E. 456); or, in contemplation of bankruptcy, and with the intention of raising money for himself and a particular creditor (Harwood v. Bartlett, 6 Bing. N. C. 61; 8 Sco. 171); it is not an act of bankruptcy if the purchaser acts bona fide, and is ignorant of the trader's intention (Ib.); and, in the case of such a sale, the party impeaching it must show some facts from which fraud may be inferred (Rose v. Haycock, supra).

Protected Transactions.] A trader took possession of goods under an agreement with the owner that he should keep possession for a twelvemonth on payment of a certain sum; but, if the money was not paid on a certain day, the owner should be at liberty to retake them. The goods continued in the possession of the trader until the stipulated time for payment, when, the money not having been paid, the owner sold them after an act of bankruptcy committed by the trader, but before the fiat issued: held, that this was a transaction protected by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1 (Young v. Hope, 2 Exch. 105).

Operation of Executions.] On February 27th the debtor's goods were seized in execution on a judgment recovered against him by one L., in the Lord Mayor's Court. On March 4th the debtor's landlord distrained upon the same goods for rent; and later on March 4th the Sheriffs of London entered upon the debtor's premises under a writ of fi. fa. upon a judgment recovered against him in the Court of Common Pleas by the deft. On March 9th a fiat in bankruptcy issued against the debtor. On April 6th the landlord sold all the goods, and out of the proceeds satisfied his own claim and L., and the residue was paid into court to abide the event of an interpleader issue between the plts. and the deft.: held, that, as against the assignees, the entry by the sheriff on March 4th was an execution served and levied by seizure upon the property of the bankrupt before the bankruptcy, within the meaning of the stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 108 (Ib.).

As to the Mode of Proving the Grant, Conveyance, or Transfer, &c.] In the case of a deed, it must be proved in the usual way, by calling a subscribing witness (ante, "ATTESTING WITNESS;" post, "DEED"). An admission by the deft. of the execution of the deed, will not dispense with this evidence, not even if the deft. is a party to the deed (Abbott v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 216; 4 East, 53), and notwithstanding the deft., at the trial, should produce the deed, in compliance with a notice (Gordon v. Secretary, 8 East, 548, sed qu.; see ante, "ADMISSIONS"). But, if the deft., in pursuance of a notice, produces a deed to which he is not only a party, but under which he holds property, or claims any beneficial estate, it will then not be necessary that plt. should call an attesting witness to prove the execution (Pearce v. Hooper, 3 Taunt. 82; Orr v. Morise, 3 B. & B. 139; Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C. M. & R. 433). And, upon this principle, it seems that, where a fraudulent bill of sale is given by the bankrupt to the deft., the admission by the bankrupt, of the execution of the deed, in his examination before the commissioners, would, in an action of trover, brought by the assignees to recover the property claimed by the deft. under the deed, supersede the necessity of calling the subscribing witness (Bowles v. Lacyworthy, 5 T. R. 366). It has been held, that an agreement not stamped cannot be received as evidence, even to show that the party meant to commit a fraud by such deed (Whitwell v. Dimsdale, Pea. 167); however, the conveyance will enure, as an act of bankruptcy, although it is void through fraud, as in the case of an insolvent trader, who conveys to an infant son (Whitwell v. Thompson, 1 Esp. 68). As to the proof of a gift or transfer, that must depend on the particular circumstance of the case. Where a deed cannot be produced before the commissioners, they may receive parol evidence of its contents (Ex parte Cawkwell, 19 Ves. 234); and, where the party, in whose possession it is, refuses to produce it, he may be committed (6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 24); Buck, 17; see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106). Proof of the fraudulent nature of the conveyance or transfer may be inferred from extrinsic circumstance, as the situation of the trader and his affairs, &c., as well as from the deed itself, or from the grant or transfer. The circumstances which, extrinsic of the deed *or transfer, usually afforded evidence of fraud, are [*396] the embarrassed state of the trader's affairs, or that he was actually insolvent at the time, and that he knew that he was so (Newton v. Chantler, 7 East, 138); and was on the eve of a contemplated bankruptcy (Devon v. Watts, 1 Doug. 85); that he intended to give an undue preference to a particular creditor (Morgan v. Horsman, 3 Taunt. 241); or that there was nothing due (Scott v. Thomas, 6 C. & P. 611); and this is proved by his conduct, and contemporary declarations, or other acts; that he executed the deed at an unseasonable hour of the night, or under other suspicious circumstances (Compton v. Bedford, 1 Bla. 362). And it would be sufficient to show in evidence, that this would be the effect of the conveyance; and it would be no answer to show, that, as between the parties themselves, the transaction was fair and honourable (Mont. B. L. 66), and for a good and valuable consideration, or that it was the result of importunity (Butcher v. East, Doug. 294); or even of compulsion (Newton v. Chantler, 7 East, 135) on the part of the creditor, if the necessary consequence would be to give an undue preference to one or more creditors, to the prejudice and exclusion of the rest (Worsley v. Demattos, 1 Burr. 467); though it might show the trader's solvency at the time of executing the deed, and the benefit resulting to the creditors in general. The declaration of the trader connected with the fraudulent assignment, are evidence towards establishing the act of bankruptcy (Ridley v. Gyde, 9 Bing. 349). To prove, as an act of bankruptcy, that goods had been fraudulently given to certain creditors by the bankrupt, the plt. tendered evidence that they had since the fiat returned them to the assignees. Held inadmissible as against a third party, for it only amounted to an expression of an opinion by them that they were not entitled (Backhouse v. Jones, 6 N. C. 65).

Though remaining in possession of the property after the assignment is prima facie evidence of fraud (Martindale v. Booth, 3 B. & Ad. 498; post, "TROVER") yet, when such possession is given to the creditor as the nature of the case will admit, that will remove any imputation of fraud, as, in cases where the goods being bulky, or in a place of distant deposit, there cannot be an actual delivery; in which case, a delivery of a symbol of ownership will then be sufficient (Manton v. Moora, 7 T. R. 67; Barney v. Davison, 1 B. & B. 408; 4 Moo. 126; ib. 482; post, "TROVER"). Where a trader assigned all his estate and interest in certain premises, and also all his stock in trade, to a particular creditor, for the purpose of securing him the repayment of advances, at the same time remaining himself in possession of everything conveyed by the deed, and having in fact nothing of value, but what was comprised therein, he was held to have committed an act of bankruptcy (Worsley v. De Mattos, 1 Burr. 467). And so, where a trader, finding he could not stand his ground, assigned to one of his creditors, everything he had in the world, to secure an unliquidated debt, keeping possession of the property, and giving a letter of attorney to his own clerk, to collect in the debts (Wilson v. Day, 2 Burr. 927); and so where he executed a bill of sale of all his effects to a creditor, as a security for an antecedent debt, in the hope of obtaining further advances, and with the intention of continuing to trade, though the advances were subsequently made, and the bill of sale did not purport to convey all his effects, and no possession was taken under it for several weeks afterwards, during which he carried on the business as before (Lindon v. Sharpe, 7 Sco. N. R. 730); and knowledge by the creditor that it comprises all the property, was held notice to him that it was an act of bankruptcy (Ib.).

*It must be remembered, that the intent and purpose of the [*397] bankrupt in making the grant or conveyance must be always considered in deciding whether such grant or conveyance was fraudulent, and contrary to the policy of the bankrupt laws (ante, 375). The intent must be to defeat and delay the trader's creditors. An assignment made by a trader resident in India, of all his effects, in trust for creditors, in certain proportions, agreed upon by all parties there, has been held not to be an act of bankruptcy, the transaction appearing perfectly fair at the time, and without any fraudulent intention (Inglis v. Grant, 5 T. R. 530).

Fraudulent Conveyance.] In order to render a preference on the eve of bankruptcy valid, it is not necessary that there should be a threat or pressure, with an immediate power of rendering it available by taking legal steps (Van Casteel v. Booker, Exch. 691; 18 Law J., Exch. 9).

To defeat a payment or transfer made to a creditor, the assignees must show it to be fraudulent as against the body of creditors by proving it to be voluntary on the part of the bankrupt, and in contemplation of his bankruptcy, and if it be made in consequence of the act of the creditor, it is not voluntary (Ib.).

A trader being indebted to his bankers gave them a receipt for 1000*l.*, purporting to be in full for the purchase of the furniture, plate, wines, and effects in his house; but no possession was given of the goods, till a year afterwards, when the trader's solicitor applied to the bankers on his behalf for a loan of 10,000*l.*, stating that a creditor of the trader would obtain judgment, on which he could issue execution, but that if this creditor refused to give the trader time the bankrupt would protect himself and his other creditors. The day after this communication, and in consequence of it, the bankers sent a man to take possession, which was delivered to him by the trader, who on the same day filed a declaration of insolvency, and sued out a fiat against himself: held, that the delivery of possession was not a fraudulent preference (Majoribanks, Ex parte, 1 De Gex, 466).

Making or causing to be made, any Fraudulent Surrender of any of his Copyhold Lands or Tenements.] This is an act of bankruptcy created to remedy an inconvenience in the old law, under which it was held, that no process of execution could issue to levy a debt upon a copyhold estate. And a surrender of copyhold property, however fraudulent, was not an act of bankruptcy (Ex parte Cockshott, 3 Bro. C. C. 502; 1 Cooke, B. L. 162).

Lying in Prison.] See ante, 376. There needs no intent to delay creditors on the part of the trader, to constitute any of these acts an act of bankruptcy (9 East, 487). The arrest must be a legal arrest, and it will be insufficient to ground an act of bankruptcy, however lawful it subsequently becomes, if it were illegal in its conception (Deac, 77). The debt for which the arrest is made, must be a real subsisting legal debt (Eden, 35). Therefore, an arrest by an executor before probate, is insufficient (3 Lev. 439; S. C. T. Raym. 478); so an arrest on a bond, before the day of payment, and so is an arrest on an equitable demand, when the remedy is by bill for specific performance (Ex parte Hillyard, 1 Atk. 147; 2 Ves. 407; Eden, B. L. 35). A penalty due to the crown is a sufficient debt (Cobb v. Symonds, 1 D. & R. 111; S. C. 5 B. & A. 516). And a party lying in prison under a magistrate's warrant of commitment, in force at the time he was under civil process for debt, is an act of bankruptcy (Rex v. Page, 7 Pri. 616; 3 Moo. 656; S. C. 1 B. & B. 368; Eden, 34).

The lying in prison must be for the uninterrupted period of, and the bankrupt must be in actual custody, twenty-one days, under the arrest or commitment; and, where an interruption has taken place, the act of bankruptcy will have relation to the subsequent imprisonment (King v. Leith, 2 T. R. 141; Coppendale v. Bridgen, 2 Burr. 814). As, where a trader is arrested, and, before the expiration of the twenty-one days, is bailed out, and afterwards render in discharge of his bail, and remain in custody twenty-one days, it is the second imprisonment, from the time of his render, which constitutes the act of bankruptcy (Tribe v. Webber, Willis, 464; Ex parte Dufresne, 1 B. & B. 50; Cane v. Coleman, 1 Salk. 109); or, where he is allowed to go at large for a few days, the period is computed from his return (Barnard v. Palmer, 1 Camp. 509). But, where the bail was matter of form, and put in without justification, only with the view of turning the party over from the custody of one party to that of another, it was considered a continuation of the same imprisonment, and the twenty-one days were reckoned from the first arrest (Rose v. Green, 1 Burr. 437). The word prison does not necessarily mean the county gaol, or any of the county prisons; it will suffice that the bankrupt was in actual custody during the twenty-one days. Where a trader was arrested in his own house, but, being too ill to be removed, remained there in custody of the follower of the sheriff's officer, and was afterwards imprisoned, the *period was held to commence [*398] from the day of the arrest (Stevens v. Jackson, 1 Marsh. 464; S. C. 4 Camp. 164; but see Benton v. Sutton, 1 B. & P. 24); and so, where the party had the benefit of the day rules, the period was not considered to be interrupted, for he was still deemed to be in custody (Soames v. Watts, 1 C. & P. 400). Where a trader was in custody at the suit of one plt., and was detained at the suit of another, the period was computed from the arrest (Coppendale v. Bridgen, 2 Burr. 814). The docket being struck previous to the expiration of the twenty-one days, will not affect the act of bankruptcy. But the fiat cannot be supported, unless issued subsequent thereto (Gordon v. Wilkinson, 8 T. R. 507; Ex parte Dufresne, 1 V. & B. 51; 1 Rose, 333). The day of the arrest or going to prison, is reckoned the first day, or part of the twenty-one days, and on the termination of the whole of the last day, the act of bankruptcy will be complete (Glas-sington v. Rawlins, 3 East, 407; Saunderson v. Greg, 3 Stark. 72); but does not relate back to the first day, as under the 21 Jac. I. c. 19, but only to the last (Moser v. Newman, 6 Bing. 556; Higgins v. McAdam, 3 Y. & J. 1; Tucker v. Barrow, 3 C. & P. 85).

In order to prove an act of bankruptcy by lying in prison, the arrest, detention, and cause of such arrest or detention, must be proved. The arrest may be proved by an examined copy of the writ and the return of cepi corpus, or by proof of the writ, the warrant, and the arrest (see post, "SHERIFF," index, "ARREST"). The detention may be proved by producing the prison book, containing entries of the date of the several commitments and discharges to and from prison (Rex v. Aickles, 1 Leach, 436); but they are not evidence of the cause of the commitment, for the commitment itself is higher proof, and, if in existence, ought to be produced (Salte v. Thomas, 3 B. & P. 188). The cause of commitment may be proved by the production of the committitur (lb.).

Escaping out of Prison or Custody, after having been Arrested, Committed, or Detained for Debt.] No evidence of debt's intent to delay his creditors is necessary to constitute this an act of bankruptcy. The arrest, commitment, or detainer, must be legal (see ante, 397). The statute comprehends every arrest for debt, whatever the amount may be for which the trader is arrested (Deac. 81; see the Uniformity of Process Act). The escape must be with an intention of running away, and against the will of the officer; and it must not be by mere implication. Therefore, where a trader prisoner was carried, by permission of the sheriff, through a different county, on his road to a judge's chambers, upon a habeas corpus, to be committed to another prison, it was holden not to be an escape within the bankrupt acts (Rose v. Green, 1 Burr. 437). The act of bankruptcy, in this case, by the words of the statute, is from the time of the arrest, commitment, or detainer.

Filing a Declaration in the Office of the Secretary of Bankrupts, signed by himself, and attested by an Attorney or Solicitor, that he is Insolvent, or unable to meet his Engagements.] This was first constituted an act of bankruptcy by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 6, which required that the filing of the declaration of insolvency should be advertised in the Gazette within eight days after filing the declaration; after which the declaration was considered an act of bankruptcy from the time it was filed (Deac. B. L. 83). This act, as well as 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 22, is now repealed (see the section under the new bankrupt act, ante, p. 376). A copy of the declaration, purporting to be certified by the Lord Chancellor's secretary *of bankrupts, or any of his clerks, shall be received as a true copy as evidence of [*399] such declaration having been filed (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 238).

If any Trader, after the Issuing of any Fiat, or Filing Petition for Adjudication of Bankruptcy against him, shall pay Money to Petitioning Creditor, or give or deliver any Satisfaction or Security for his Debt, or any Part thereof, whereby such Petitioning Creditor may receive more in the Pound, in respect of his Debt, than the other Creditors—an adjudication of bankruptcy may be either proceeded in or superseded, as the court shall think fit; in which latter case, a new petition may be filed, either upon this or any other act of bankruptcy. The petitioning creditor, as a penalty for such compounding, forfeits his whole debt, and may also be compelled to repay or deliver up the money, satisfaction, or security he has received, or the full value thereof, to the assignees of the bankrupt, for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt (see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 368; Ex parte Thompson, 1 Ves. 157; Ex parte Paxton, 15 Ves. 464; Ex parte Browne, ib., 473; Ex parte Brine, Buck, 19, 108; see Deac. 84).

Filing a Petition to take the Benefit of the Insolvent Act.] This was an act of bankruptcy created by the Insolvent Act (7 Geo. IV. c. 57). It is now an act of bankruptcy, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ss. 74, 75. See it, ante, p. 377. * Under the 7 Geo. IV. c. 57, the petition was held not to be filed so as to constitute an act of bankruptcy till it reached its final destination—the custody of the proper officer in the office (Garlic v. Sangster, 2 Moo. & S. 68; 9 Bing. 46).

By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 239, it is enacted, “that a copy of any petition filed in the court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England, or in any court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay, or at the Settlement of Prince of Wales Island, Singapore, and Malacca, and of any vesting order, schedule, order of adjudication, and other orders and proceedings, purporting to be signed by the officer in whose custody the same shall be, or his deputy, certifying the same to be a true copy of such petition, vesting order, schedule, order of adjudication, or other order or proceedings, and appearing to be sealed with the seal of such court, shall at all times be admitted under this act as sufficient evidence of the same, and of such proceedings respectively having taken place, without any other proof whatever given of the same.”

Sect. 240. “That a copy of the London Gazette, and of any newspaper containing any such advertisement as is by this Act directed or authorized to be made therein respectively shall be evidence of any matter therein contained, and of which notice is by this Act directed or authorized to be given by such advertisement; and all proceedings or notices required by this act to be inserted in the London Gazette shall be marked with the seal of the court from which such proceedings or notices shall be issued and certified by one of the registrars of the said court.”

Neglecting to pay, or secure the debt, or to give a bond with proper sureties, &c., to pay the amount to be recovered in an action with costs, &c., or to render in execution, &c., see sections 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ante, p. 378]. The following cases were decided on 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8:—If a creditor consent to the deferment of payment beyond the twenty-one days, and accepts security pro tempore before the twenty-second day, so as to satisfy the notice given under the statute, he [*400] cannot afterwards sue out *a fiat upon it (Ex parte Brown, 1 Mont. & Ch. 198); and so if the deed of security is prepared but not executed, the delay in its execution being with the consent of the creditor (Ex parte Budd, 1 Mont. Dea. & De. 436; 5 Jur. 272). So if the creditor keeps out of the way for a fortnight out of the twenty-one days limited by the statute in order to avoid receiving payment of the debt, and in his absence it is tendered to his managing clerk, who refuses to take it, he cannot sustain a fiat upon the non-payment within the twenty-one days (Ex parte Gratton, 1 M. D. & D. 401); and so semble if he has taken the proceedings for the purpose not of obtaining payment of his own debt but of forcing the bankrupt to pay the alleged debt of a third person (Ib.).

Where the trader and his sureties have entered into the bond required by the statute before the twenty-first day, but the commissioner's approval is not obtained till the twenty-third day, the creditor may issue a fiat on the latter day (Ex parte Gooddy, 1 Mont. Dea. & De. 677); but if the commissioner has once approved of it, without any circumstance of fraud on the part of the trader, but on a subsequent day revokes his approval, and cancels his signature to the indorsement of it on the bond, a fiat grounded on the failure to give security according to the act, cannot be supported (Ex parte Neale, 6 Jur. 876, C. R.).

It is doubted whether the day on which the notice is served is to be reckoned in the computation of the twenty-one days (Gibson v. Muskett, 3 Man. & G. 150; 3 Sco. N. R. 429). The affidavit may be sworn by one partner without the others joining (Ex parte Rhodes, 4 Deac. 125; 1 Mont. & Ch. 319); or by an agent duly authorized (Ex parte Hall, 1 Mont. & Ch. 567; 3 Deac. 405); and need not be intitled in any court, or in any matter (Ib.). It may be sworn before a Master Extraordinary of the Court of Chancery (Ib.). It is looked upon as strictly analogous to an affidavit to hold to bail, and as a substitute for it, and not as a process tending to a fiat (per Sir G. Rose, Ex parte Hall, 1 Mont. & Ch. 445). It may be filed with the Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy (S. C. ib. 467); and the day of its being filed is to be reckoned the first day of the two months within which the fiat may issue (Ex parte Whitby, 4 Deac. 139; 1 Mont. & Ch. 671).

It has been doubted whether the affidavit need state the consideration of the debt (Ex parte Brown, 1 Mont. & Ch. 198); and whether where the affidavit was for a debt of 100*l.* and upwards, and the notice for a debt of 361*l.*, and the trader was ordered by the commissioner to enter into a bond for 200*l.*, and the creditor proceeded on a fresh affidavit and notice for the debt of 361*l.*, and after a lapse of twenty-one days issued a fiat, it could be supported on such second affidavit and notice (Ex parte Rhodes, ib. 319).

The form of proceeding under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, has been virtually superseded by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, ss. 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, which has been repealed by the Bankrupt Act (supra; see them ante, p. 378). The decisions upon it may be useful in the application of the new act.

That if any Trader so Summoned shall sign and file an Admission of Demand, and shall not within Seven Days afterwards Pay, &c., the Amount, or secure or Compound for the same, he shall have committed an Act of Bankruptcy on the Eighth Day, and a Petition for Adjudication be filed within

Two Months from the filing of such Affidavit.] Proceedings being taken against a debtor under stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, ss. 11 & 12, by obtaining a summons from the Court of Bankruptcy, upon a debt of 149*l.* 4*s.* the debtor filed an admission *that he was indebted to the creditor [*401] in the sum of 149*l.* Held, that the omission of the 4*s.* being obviously accidental, and not implying a denial that the 4*s.* was due, did not prevent that admission from constituting an act of bankruptcy. On the fourteenth day after the filing of that admission (an action having been in the mean time commenced), an agreement was entered into between the debtor and creditor, whereby the latter agreed to accept six bills of exchange and a judge's order for the payment of the amount of the debt by weekly instalments. The bills were handed by the debtor to the creditor's attorney at the time, but were immediately restored by him, because, as a matter of professional etiquette, he wished to receive them through the hands of the debtor's attorney; and on the next day but one the judge's order, containing the terms agreed upon, was obtained, and the bills were sent by the debtor's to the creditor's attorney. Held, that the agreement entered into on the fourteenth day, was a "compounding" of the debt within the meaning of the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 14; and that therefore no act of bankruptcy was committed, although the fulfilment of the terms of the agreement was not complete until some days after the fourteenth (Pennel v. Rhodes, 7 Law T. 205; see ante, p. 378).

Members of Parliament committing an Act of Bankruptcy, by neglecting to make Payment or Satisfaction, and entering Appearance within one Month after Personal Service of Summons for Debt; ante, 378.] The debt must be of the amount required for a petitioning creditor in other cases. If, after personal service, the trader does not by the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 77, within one month, pay, secure, or compound, or enter into a bond with two sureties, before a judge of the court out of which the summons issued, and enter an appearance to the action within one month, it is an act of bankruptcy (Eden, 37). It has been said, that, though some of the circumstances attending this act of bankruptcy must be proved by a creditor, yet, as necessity alone justified the exception to the rule, that his testimony could only be received as to facts of which evidence could not be obtained from other sources, that the commissioners ought to proceed upon direct evidence, as to the character of the person, not upon depositions incorporating the substance of an affidavit, in which, in another court, those essentials had been attested (Ex parte Harcourt, 2 Rose, 203). It seems, also, that it ought to appear that the summons required to be served was taken out after the affidavit was filed (Eden, 37). It is not absolutely necessary to call the creditor to prove that the debt has not been paid, or secured (Burton v. Green, 3 C. & P. 306, per Tenterden).

Traders commit an Act of Bankruptcy, by disobeying the Order of Court to pay Money.] This comprises decrees and orders made in equity, and orders in bankruptcy or lunacy. The party to whom the money is to be paid, is to apply to the court for a peremptory-day, with the order for which the trader is to be served seven days previous to the appointed day for payment (Eden, 38; 1 P. Wms. 782; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 107, s. 73; ante, p. 377).

When Notice of Intention to prove different Acts of Bankruptcy necessary.] Before concluding this branch of evidence relative to the act of bankruptcy, it is to be observed, that the plt. or opposite party is not restricted in proof to the specific act of bankruptcy, upon which the commission was founded; he may repudiate that, and rely on any other (Reed v. James, 1 Stark. [*402] 134). If, indeed, the Lord *Chancellor directs an issue or action at law, though, in general, he will permit other acts of bankruptcy to be given in evidence, yet, this being considered a favour to the party endeavouring to support the commission, such party will be required to show, by affidavit, on what particular acts of bankruptcy he relies, and to give notice to the other party by what evidence he intends to prove his case (Ex parte Burgess, Buck, 233; Ex parte Bogen, ib. 137). Where, indeed, the commission was proved on the trial of an issue to have been founded on a concerted act of bankruptcy, Lord Eldon refused to direct another issue, with liberty to prove other acts (Ex parte Rosser, Buck, 77).

The defts. being creditors of B., on the 3d of December, 1840, filed an affidavit, and gave notice under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. B. did not pay or compound within the twenty-one days; and on the 31st of December a fiat issued on the petition of the plts.; and, on the 30th of January, 1841, that fiat was annulled on the petition of the defts., who, on the following day, issued a second fiat. They did not proceed on that fiat, and on the 9th of September, 1842, the second fiat was annulled, and a third fiat issued on the petition of the plts., who were chosen assignees under it. Defts., on the 17th of February, 1841, while the second fiat was in force, received a sum of money in payment of their debt, being more in the pound than the other creditors. Held, first, that as this payment constituted an act of bankruptcy, under 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 8, the fiat of the 9th of September, 1842, which, though it issued more than a year after such payment, issued before the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122 came into operation, was well supported by such payment: secondly, that the plts. were entitled to sue as assignees, in the absence of any special appointment by the commission of a person to sue (Ellis v. Russell, 16 Law J. 428, Q. B.; 11 Jur. 821).

Proof as to Time when Act of Bankruptcy committed.] The act of bankruptcy, whether it be the specific one on which the commission was founded, or not, must be proved to have been committed before the issuing of the commission, and after the petitioning creditor's debt was contracted (Ex parte Wamman, Cooke's B. L. 23). It is immaterial how many acts of bankruptcy may have been committed by the bankrupt (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), or how recently the act of bankruptcy was committed before the commission issued (Hopper v. Richmond, 1 Stark. 507). If the issuing of the commission and the act of bankruptcy happen on the same day, evidence is then admissible against the assignees, to show that the commission was issued (that is, sealed) before the act of bankruptcy (Wydown's case, 14 Ves. 80). A verdict upon an issue directed out of chancery, to which only one of the defts. was a party, may be received against all the defts. to prove the time of the act of bankruptcy (Lowfield v. Bancroft, B. N. P. 40).

Mode of Proof.] The act of bankruptcy must be proved by some person who can speak to the fact from his own knowledge. If the execution of a deed constitute it, see the mode of proof, ante, 395. As to the mode of proving the bankrupt's intent, ante, 380. As to proving bankrupt's imprisonment, ante, 398.

Notice of Act of Bankruptcy.] Where notice of the act of bankruptcy is necessary to be brought home to the deft., it must be proved. By the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 87, notice to an accredited agent of a body corporate or public company, is notice to the body *or company.

Notice of a docket having been struck, was not notice of an act of bankruptcy under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29 (Hocking v. Acraman, D. & L. 934).

But knowledge by a creditor that a bill of sale which did not on the face of it purport to convey all a trader's property did actually comprise all, is notice of an act of bankruptcy (Lindon v. Sharpe, 7 Sco. N. R. 730; 13 Law J., N. S. 67). • Quere, whether a general notice that a party has committed an act of bankruptcy, is a notice of an act of bankruptcy within the meaning of the statute 2 & 3 Vict. c. 89? A notice to the following effect:—"J. S. has committed an act of bankruptcy; he signed a declaration of insolvency yesterday; J. S. will be declared bankrupt immediately; I have sent for a fiat," is not such a notice as will deprive an execution-creditor of the protection of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29; the sixth section of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, requiring the declaration of insolvency to be filed, and to be advertised in the "London Gazette," before it is a complete act of bankruptcy (Conway v. Wall, 1 C. B. 643; see Udall v. Walton, 14 M. & W. 254).

Notice of an act of bankruptcy to one of two co-trustees is at least prima facie notice to the other; and semble, per Coleridge, J., it is conclusively so (Edwards v. Cooper, 13 Law T. 163, Q. B.).

Notice that a trader has filed a declaration of insolvency under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 22, is sufficient notice of an act of bankruptcy to deprive an execution-creditor of the protection of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, although no fiat has been issued, and two months have not elapsed from the declaration of insolvency (Green v. Laurie, 11 Jur. 997, Ex.; see post).

CAUSE OF ACTION.—Evidence in Action to recover the Personal Property of Bankrupt in general.] The present and all the future personal property of the bankrupt, until his certificate be obtained, wheresoever it be, is by the appointment vested in the assignees, for the benefit of the bankrupt's creditors. The bankrupt, however, is allowed to retain all the necessary wearing apparel for himself, his wife, and family. Property obtained by the bankrupt by fraud, will not pass to the assignees, but will still remain the property of the party defrauded (Harrison v. Walker, Pea. 111; Gladstone v. Hadween, 1 M. & S. 517; and see 1 Stark. 109; 12 East, 656); but, if the property be obtained upon a contract of sale, though with intent to defraud, it will pass to the assignees (Millward v. Forbes, 4 Esp. 171; Haswell v. Hunt, 5 T. R. 231, n.). As to stock in the funds, see 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 80; now 12 & 13 Vict. s. 106.

Property of the wife, which comes to the husband either upon the marriage, or after it, vests in the assignees, upon his bankruptcy, the same estate which the husband has in it by law (see Com. Dig. Bankrupt, D. 2; Mace v. Cadell, Cowp. 232; Archb. 164). Debts and choses in action of the wife, unsettled, vest in the assignees upon the husband's bankruptcy (Turner's case, 1 Vern. 7), in the same way, and to the same extent only as they vest in the husband; and therefore where a promissory note was given to the bankrupt's wife before marriage, and payable to her, but not to her order, they alone cannot recover upon it (Sherrington v. Yates, 12 M. & W. 855; D. & L. 1032, reversing judgment of the Exchequer in S. C. 11 M. & W. 42; 2 Dowl. N. S. 803). So, property vested in trustees for the wife's separate use, does not vest in the assignees (Bennet v. Davies, 2 P. Wms. 316; 10 Ves. 139; Archb. 165). As to marriage-settlements, ante, p. 391. A person, who was formerly a commissioner of bankrupts, and entitled to an annuity, by way of compensation, *under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 58, took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtor's [*404] Act. A petition presented by his assignee to one of the Vice-Chancellors in bankruptcy, praying for a direction to the accountant-general in bankruptcy to pay the annuity to the assignee, was dismissed (Ex parte Spooner, re Payne, 17 Law J. 11, Bankr.).

The debtors, who were the solicitors of S. who had become indebted to them for work done, received certain sums belonging to S. from his agent, and applied them in discharge of their claim upon S. S. having afterwards become bankrupt, and his assignees having brought an action against the debtors to recover this money: held, that it was a misdirection in the judge to tell the jury that if the debtors, before the bankruptcy, received the money to the use of the bankrupt, they held it after the bankruptcy to the use of the assignees (Pennell v. Aston, 14 Law J. 309, Exch.).

On the petition for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of the bankrupt, and that the new trustee might use the bankrupt's name in certain proceedings, the petitioner was ordered to pay the costs of the bankrupt and the assignees to them respectively. The bankrupt, who was a solicitor, and acted for himself in the matter of the petition, had not obtained his certificate: held, that the costs ordered to be paid to the bankrupt belonged to him, and did not pass to the assignees. (Ex parte Grimstead, 1 De G. 72).

The evidence in support of this cause of action must necessarily depend on the property sought to be recovered, or the wrong that has been done to the bankrupt in his right thereto. The bankrupt's right must be proved in the same manner as if he were plaintiff. See the various titles of actions throughout the work.

Evidence in Action to recover the Debts, Contracts, and other Choses in Action, of the Bankrupt.] All debts due or to be due to the bankrupt, wheresoever the same may be found or known, and the property, right, and interest in such debts shall become absolutely vested in the assignees for the time being, for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt by virtue of their appointment by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, 141, ante, p. 322. So, the assignees have the benefit of all contracts made with the bankrupt, particularly if made for a valuable consideration (Schondles v. Wace, 1 Camp. 487; Splidt v. Bowles, 10 East, 279). The assignees, however, are only entitled to the benefit of contracts in which the bankrupt was beneficially interested (see 2 Vern. 194; 3 B. & P. 40; 13 East, 279; 3 East, 320; 1 T. R. 619); and the assignees are bound by the agreements of the bankrupt made before the bankruptcy, where such agreements are set up as a defence to any proceeding upon the part of the assignees (see Dobson v. Lockhart, 5 T. R. 133). So they take all the bankrupt's debts, rights, and choses in action, &c., subject to the same rights which the bankrupt had over them (see Wallace v. Hardacre, 1 Camp. 46; Willis v. Freeman, 12 East, 656; Ex parte Harrison, 2 G. & J. 93; 1 Stra. 555; 3 P. Wms. 146; 5 D. & R. 603). A right to bring a real action passes to the assignees (Smith v. Coffin, 2 H. Bl. 451); so does a right of action for a compensation under an act of parliament (17 Ves. 343); or for money lost by the bankrupt at play (2 H. Bl. 308; 2 Ves. 514; 2 D. & R. 575; S. C. 1 B. & C. 444); but a right of action for a tort, as for slander (Jon. W. 215), or for a trespass q. c. f. (Clark v. Calvert, 3 Moo. 96; 8 Taunt. 742; Spence v. Rogers, 2 Dowl. N. S. 99; 11 M. & W. 191), or for the personal annoyance and [*405] injury resulting from breaking *and entering his house, and seizing his goods under a pretended claim of debt (Brewer v. Dew, D. & L. 383); for the seduction of his daughter, (Howard v. Crowther, 8 M. & W. 601; 5 Jur. 91); or for the breach of a contract for his personal service (Beckham v. Drake, 8 M. & W. 845), does not pass to them (ante, p. 323, 324).

The evidence of the cause of action will be found under the various titles of action throughout the work. It must be established in the same manner as if the bankrupt himself were suing.

Evidence in Action, to recover Property claimed by Plaintiffs, as being in the Bankrupt's Possession, as Reputed Owner.] By the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 125, it is enacted, "If any bankrupt, at the time he becomes a bankrupt, shall, by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order, or disposition, any goods or chattels, whereof he was reputed owner, or whereof he had taken upon him the sale, alteration, or disposition, as owner, the court shall have power to order the same to be sold and disposed of, for the benefit of the creditors under the bankruptcy," provided that nothing therein contained shall invalidate or affect any transfer or assignment of any ship or vessel, or any share thereof, made as a security for any debt or debts, either by way of mortgage or assignment, duly registered according to the provisions of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 29, An Act for the Registration of British Vessels. The object of this enactment is for the protection of the general creditors of a trader, against that false credit which might be acquired by his being suffered to have the possession and power of disposition of property as his own, which does not really belong to him; and evidence must therefore be adduced accordingly.

It would be beyond the limits of this work to enter into a detail of the various cases that have been decided on this section of the act; they will be found collected in Eden, 271; Deac. 403; Archb. 207, 223, Index, "Reputed Ownership."

It must be proved that the property was goods and chattels of a personal and moveable nature; that the bankrupt had them in his possession, order, or disposition, as the reputed owner, or had taken upon him the sale, alteration, or disposition of them as owner, and that by the consent and permission of the true owner, and at the time he became a bankrupt.

As Reputed Owner.] The possession of property is prima facie evidence of reputed ownership, and more or less strong, according to the circumstances under which it was obtained or retained. It is however a question of fact for the jury (Doug. 317; 1 B. & P. 89; Edwards v. Scott, 1 M. & G. 962). The true criterion for determining every question as to reputed ownership seems to be whether or not the bankrupt had such a possession as would deceive his creditors, by any appearance of the property forming part of that stock to which they might reasonably give credit (Ex parte Marrable, 1 Glyn & J. 402; Deac. 411). When a bankrupt has once been the ostensible owner of property, and he continues in the visible possession of it at the time of his bankruptcy, that is a very strong case of reputed ownership, and can only be rebutted by clear proof, not only that there has been a transfer of the property from the bankrupt, but that such transfer was notorious to the world; for, when a man has been at one time the real owner of property, the presumption is that he continues so, where there is no change of possession (per Holroyd, J., Lingard v. Messiter, 1 B. & C. 314; Deac. 405). The possession however must be always accompanied with some evidence of reputation; and where the possession is consistent *with the fact of a person being absolute owner, and [*406] also of his not being such absolute owner, from the mere possession an inference ought not to be raised as to the nature of the ownership (per Abbott, C. J., Storer v. Hunter, 3 B. & C. 376; see Fairburn v. Eastwood, 6 M. & W. 679); and so the mere continuance in possession by an assignor (under peculiar embarrassments) of property assigned, though always suspicious, is not of itself a conclusive badge of fraud (Hoffman v. Pitt, 5 Esp. 25; R. & M. 312; Deac. 406); and in all cases where facts are proved, amounting to a disposition of the property by the bankrupt as owner, general evidence may be given of his being reputed to be the owner (Oliver v. Bartlett, 1 B. & B. 269). But the inference of ownership from possession, and even from reputation of ownership, may be rebutted by evidence contradicting that reputation (Gurr v. Rutton, Holt, C. H. P. 327; Deac. 406). B., on the 1st of July, fraudulently bought from the plts. a quantity of goods, without any intention of paying for them. After the sale and delivery he became a bankrupt, and a fiat issued against him on the 8th of July. The defts., who were his assignees, thereupon took possession of the goods, as being in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, with the consent of the true owner, within the 72d section of the Bankrupt Act (6 Geo. IV. c. 16), whereupon the plts. brought an action of trover for the goods. Held, that as at the time of the bankruptcy the bankrupt was not the apparent but the real owner of the goods, the section did not apply, and the plts. were entitled to recover. Quære, whether the case would have fallen within the 72d section if the plts. had discovered the fraud long before the act of bankruptcy, and had omitted, for an unreasonable time, to rescind the contract? (Load v. Green, 15 Law J. 113, Exch.; 10 Jur. 163). A. employed B. to build him a greenhouse for 50*l*. When it was completed, B. gave A. notice, and requested him to remit the price. A. remitted the amount, and desired B. to keep the greenhouse till sent for. Afterwards B. (unknown to A.) deposited the greenhouse with C., telling him it was the property of A., and requesting him to keep it for A., which he agreed to do. B. having become bankrupt, his assignees took possession of the greenhouse. Held, first, that the property in the greenhouse passed to A., there having been an appropriation of it to him by B., and an assent on his part to such appropriation; secondly, that the greenhouse was not in the possession, order, and disposition of B. as reputed owner (per Maule, J., Wilkins v. Bromhead, 6 M. & G. 963). By a marriage settlement, executed in 1841, some furniture, the property of the intended husband, was conveyed to trustees for his use, and continued after the marriage to be used by him and his wife. In 1846 he committed an act of bankruptcy, and was made bankrupt: held, that the furniture did not pass to his assignees under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 72, as goods in the possession, order, or disposition of a bankrupt (Simmonds v. Edwards, 11 Jur. 592, Exch.). A., being possessed of twenty tons of oil, deposited in a railway company's warehouse, and being indebted to B., on the 3d of June gave B. an authority to take the oil and sell it, and place the produce to A.'s account. On the 5th of June (a Saturday) A. gave B. an order on the railway company to deliver the oil to B. B., on presenting the order on Monday morning, found that the oil had, the same morning, been removed to A.'s manufactory. On the 11th of June A. became bankrupt. Held, that B. had a lien on the twenty tons of oil (Ex parte Bell, re Tunstall, 17 Law J., 9 Bankr.). Where the bankrupt held furniture under an agreement, which was notorious in the neighbourhood, it was held not to pass to his assignees (Muller v. Moss, 3 M. & S. 335). D. having agreed [*407] to lend *1000*l*. to W., upon a policy of insurance on his life, gave directions for effecting it to his attorney, L., of Tiverton, who was agent there of the West of England Insurance Company. L. accordingly transmitted proposals for a policy to the head officer at Exeter, without mentioning that D. was the beneficial owner, and obtained it therefrom, and delivered it to D. L. was authorized by the company to receive notices of assignments of policies on their behalf. W. became bankrupt: held, that there was sufficient notice to take the policy out of the order and disposition of W., and to give the assignment validity as against his assignees, inasmuch as notice to L. was notice to the company, and notice communicated to him in his character of attorney to D., for the purpose of being transmitted to the company, was effectual as a notice to him in his capacity as agent to the company. The question, whether a principal is bound by knowledge possessed by his agent, is a question of law depending on facts found by the jury (Gale v. Lewis, 11 Jur. 730, Q. B.; 16 Law J. 119, Q. B.). So, where he had a barge with his name painted on it, but there was a notorious custom in the coal trade for a mere hirer of a barge to paint his name on it, it was held not to pass (Watson v. Peache, 1 Bing. N. C. 327). So where, being a hotel keeper, he had furniture on hire, and there was a custom for hotel keepers to hire a portion of their furniture (Mullett v. Green, 8 C. & P. 382); and the question for the jury is whether the custom is so general as to raise a fair doubt and presumption in the minds of persons trusting him that the goods were not his (Ib., per Gurney, B.). In all cases where the best delivery is made upon the sale of goods which the nature of the property sold, and the circumstances under which it was sold, will admit, the case will not then be considered as one of reputed ownership (see Manton v. Moore, 7 T. R. 67). Independent of any consideration of bankruptcy, it is a general rule of law, that all secret sales, and transfers of personal property unaccompanied by possession, are fraudulent and void as against creditors, since the effect of them is to enable a party to gain a false credit from the world (Deac. 406; Edwards v. Harben, 2 T. R. 587; 1 Camp. 333; Bamford v. Baron, 2 T. R. 594; Toussant v. Hartopp, Holt, C. H. P. 335).

Two partners trade under the name of one of them only, and upon a dissolution that one continues the business, the other retiring, but no apparent change takes place in the firm. By the agreement on the dissolution, the stock in trade belongs to the continuing partner, who afterwards becomes bankrupt. The stock in trade is sold by his assignees as his separate property, and the retired partner, though cognizant of the fact, makes no objection or claim on the partner becoming bankrupt. Held, that the stock in trade was not in the reputed ownership of the two, but ought to be administered as the separate estate of the continuing partner (Ex parte —, 1 De G. 134). By a composition deed between A. and B., scheduled creditors of A., reciting an agreement that A. should pay the creditors 10s. in the pound; and that B. had agreed to join in the deed, for better securing payment of the composition, on having such an assignment made to him as was therein-after contained; it was witnessed, first, that A. and B. covenanted to pay the creditors the composition: secondly, that in consideration of this covenant A. assigned all his stock in trade, machinery, and effects to B., to hold as B.'s own goods and chattels; thirdly, that the creditors covenanted on receiving the composition to release A. contemporaneously with this deed: the leasehold trade premises were assigned by A. to B. with the privity of the creditors. At the time of the execution of the deed all the assigned property was in the *possession of certain mortgagees of the lease- [*408] hold premises and machinery, who afterwards gave up possession to B. on his guarantying payment of the mortgage money. Immediately after the execution of the deed, B. gave the creditors his promissory note for the amount of the composition. B. remained in possession till he became bankrupt, and after his bankruptcy a fiat was sued out against A. by a creditor who knew of the deed, though he had not executed it. He was a friend of A., and indifferent to the payment of his debt, but permitted his name to be used by the creditors who had signed the deed, for the purpose of suing out the fiat. Held, first, that the composition deed was an act of bankruptcy, and not a sale for value: secondly, that the assigned property was not in the reputed ownership of B.: thirdly, that the circumstances under which the fiat was sued out against A., did not prevent A.'s assignees from recovering the property (Re Marshall, 1 De G. 273). A. being indebted to B. and pressed by him for payment, gives him a promissory note made by C. payable to A. (without the words "or order"), and indorsed by A.; B. takes the note, but in consequence of its not being negotiable, returns it to A. in order that A. may give him a negotiable security instead of it; and C. does, at A.'s request, accept negotiable bills of exchange, drawn by A. upon him, instead of the note, and, at the same time that this is done, A. desires C. to hand the bills to B.; and, on the same day, A. absconds to France, thereby committing an act of bankruptcy. Held, that it not appearing on this state of facts, that C. had any notice of the transaction that had passed between A. and B., or that the bills were given in substitution of the note, or that he had assented to B.'s title in any way, A.'s assignees were entitled to them (Belcher v. Campbell, 15 Law J. 11, Q. B.; 9 Jur. 1073; 8 Q. B. 1).

They must be Goods or Chattels of a personal or moveable nature.] Things affixed to the freehold do not come within this section (Horn v. Baker, 9 East, 215, 237; Clark v. Crounshaw, 9 Bing. 804; Coombe v. Beaumont, 2 Nev. & M. 235; 5 B. & Ad. 72; Hubbard v. Bagshaw, 4 Sim. 326; Ex parte Wilson, 4 D. & C. 314; Ex parte Belcher, ib. 703; Ex parte Loyd, 1 M. & Ayr. 494; Ex parte Spicer, 3 ib. 213; Arch. 207; see Grady on Fixtures, &c.); not even tenant's fixtures (lb. Boydel v. Mitchel, 1 C. M. & R. 177; Trappes v. Harter, 2 C. & M. 153; 3 Tyrw. 603, where certain fixtures were held to pass to the assignees; it was decided upon the peculiar circumstances of the case); nor shares in a company seised of real estate in this country (Ex parte Vauxhall Bridge Company, 1 Glyn & J. 101), unless by the act incorporating the company they are deemed personal estate (Ex parte Lancaster Canal Company, Mont. 116; 1 Dea. & Ch. 411); but shares of a gas company possessed of a copyhold estate are within it (Ex parte Vallance, 2 Deac. 354; 3 M. & Ayr. 224; shares in a joint-stock company pass to the holder's assignees, notwithstanding an assignment or mortgage of them, if they continue in his name, or no notice be given to the company; Nelson v. London Assurance Company, 2 Sim. & St. 292; Cumming v. Prescott, 2 Y. & C. 488); so are shares in a railway company (Ex parte Harrison, 4 ib. 507; 3 Deac. 185), and so seem are shares in a commercial company holding lands in a foreign country (Ex parte Richardson, 3 Deac. 496; 1 Mont. & Ch. 43); and in a newspaper (Longman v. Tripp, 2 N. R. 67); so is stock (Ex parte Richardson, Buck, 480); so are bills of exchange (Hornblower v. Proud, 2 B. & Al. 327); policies of insurance (Faulkner's case, 1 Brown. C. C. 125). So are ships (Hay v. Fairbairn, 2 B. & A. 193; Robinson v. McDonnell, 2 ib. 134; 5 M. & S. 228; Monkhouse v. Hay, [*409] 2 B. & B. *114; 4 Moo. 549; Hall v. Gurney, Cooke, B. L. 353; Kirkley v. Hodgson, 2 B. & C. 588; 2 D. & R. 848), and their freight (Leslie v. Guthrie, 1 Bing. N. C. 697; see Douglas v. Russell, 4 Sim. 524); notwithstanding the registry, for this is evidence of property against those trusts only which might otherwise arise from the acts of the parties, and not against those arising from operation of law (Curtis v. Perry, 6 Ves. 739; Ex parte Yallop, 15 Ves. 60; Ex parte Howson, 17 ib. 251; 1 Rose, 177; Ex parte Burn, 1 J. & W. 378); unless where, under the recent act of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 55, the transfer had been made by way of mortgage or assignment, as a security for a debt, and has been duly registered pursuant to that statute, when they do not pass to the assignees. Before this statute, and so still in cases not coming within it, where a ship at sea is sold or mortgaged, the transfer will be invalid if the transferee do not, after notice of the ship's arrival, take possession or notify the transfer to the captain (Mair v. Glennie, 4 M. & S. 240; Richardson v. Campbell, 5 B. & A. 196; and see post, "SHIPS"; see 5 Geo. IV. c. 94). The sale operates from the registration of the bill of sale, and not from the execution, so that registration after bankruptcy does not prevent a ship passing to the vendor's assignees, though the sale was before bankruptcy (Bayson v. Gibson, 4 C. B. 121). Wines, which have been sold but are left in the vendor's possession by the purchaser, he having merely marked them with his initials, are in the vendor's "possession" (Knowles v. Horsfall, 5 B. & A. 134). So where machinery belonging to a debtor is purchased by a creditor by bill of sale from the sheriff, and the purchaser having marked it with his initials devotes it to the debtor.

Possession, Order, or Disposition.] The following cases are not in general within the statute: the possession of goods for a specific purpose (Tooke v. Hollingworth, 5 T. R. 215; 2 H. Bl. 501; Moore v. Barthrop, 1 B. & C. 5; Toovey v. Mylne, 2 B. & A. 683; Giles v. Perkins, 9 East, 12; Ex parte Sergeant, 1 Rose, 153; West v. Ship, 1 Ves. 243; 3 T. R. 323; Ex parte Benson, Mont. & Bligh, 120; Carsairs v. Bates, 3 Camp. 301; Thompson v. Giles, 2 B. & C. 432; Bent v. Pullen, 5 T. R. 494; Hornblower v. Proud, 2 B. & A. 327; Parke v. Eliason, 1 East, 554); even, of money, if kept separate (R. v. Egerton, 1 T. R. 370; 9 East, 14); or capable of being specifically distinguished (per Mansfield, Lord, Howard v. Jemmett, 3 Burr. 369; Scott v. Surman, Willes, 400); or if in possession of a banker (Thompson v. Giles, 2 B. & C. 422; Ex parte Benson, Mont. & Bligh, 120; and see Ex parte Thompson, M. & M'Ar. 108, n.; Smith v. Pickering, Pea. 50; Taylor v. Plumer, 3 M. & S. 576); or, trustee (Winch v. Keeley, 1 T. R. 619; Ex parte Watkins, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 689); or executor or administrator (Ex parte Ellis, 1 Atk. 101; Farr v. Newman, 4 T. R. 629); and the rule extends to the husband of an executrix (Viner v. Cadell, 3 Esp. 88; see Howard v. Jemmett, supra; Taylor v. Plumer, 3 M. & S. 578); but the mere title to administer will not protect the goods (Fox v. Fisher, 3 B. & A. 135); or if in possession of a broker or factor (B. N. P. 42; Taylor v. Plumer, 3 M. & S. 562; Whitecombe v. Jacob, 1 Salk. 160; Scott v. Surmon, Willes, 400; per Mansfield, Lord, Mace v. Cadell, Cowp. 232). But books deposited with a bookseller for sale on commission, and separated from his general stock, do not pass to his assignees (Whitfield v. Brand, 16 M. & W. 283). The possession by a carrier, to whom the bankrupt delivered money in order to convey to a creditor is, till delivery to the creditor, the possession of the bankrupt (Hervey v. Liddiard, 1 Stark. 123). But, where the bankrupt had sold goods in the East India Company's warehouses, *and the purchaser left the warrants in his hands, and he afterwards pledged the warrants with another party to secure advances, [*410] the possession of the warrants by the pawnee was held not to be a constructive "possession" by him, within this clause; and his assignees were not enabled to hold the goods against the purchaser (Greening v. Clarke, 4 B. & C. 316). So, goods in the London Docks, which pass by indorsement of the warrants, are not in his possession, unless he has the warrants in his possession (Ex parte Davenport, Mont. & Bligh, 165). So, by the transfer of the warrants for goods in the West India Dock Company's warehouses, and the assent of the Company, there is a transfer of the possession (Lucas v. Dorien, 1 Moo. 29). A warrant was directed to a trader's servant and another, as special bailiffs, who took possession of the goods in the shop, but the business without the trader's interference was carried on apparently as usual: held, within the statute, the servant's possession being that of the master (Jackson v. Irvin, 2 Camp. 48; Toussaint v. Hartop, Holt, N. P. 335; see Doker v. Haslet, 2 Bing. 479). Where, by agreement, the vendor retained possession of casks of wine, but the purchaser marked them with his initials, they were held to pass to the vendor's assignees, although the sale was notorious at the place (Knowles v. Horsfall, 5 B. & A. 134; Lingard v. Messiter, 1 B. & C. 308). But where the purchaser had it bottled and deposited in the bankrupt's cellar, in a particular bin, marked with the purchaser's seal, and entered in bankrupt's books as the purchaser: held, that it did not pass (Ex parte Marrable, 1 Glyn & J. 402; Carruthers v. Payne, 5 Bing. 270). If a symbolical delivery only can be made it is sufficient to take the case out of the statute (Manton v. Moore, 7 T. R. 67; Mair v. Glennie, ante, p. 409; Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk. 160). A., a dyer, purchased a plant of B. and re-sold it to him; he never took possession, but devised it to A.: held, to pass to A.'s assignees (Bryson v. Wylie, 1 B. & P. 83, a). A testator directed, in case his son should carry on his trade, that his lease and furniture should not be sold, but that the trustees should permit the widow and children to reside there, and have the use of the furniture: held, that the latter did not pass to the assignees of the mother and son (Ex parte Martin, 2 Rose, 331; see Shaftsbury (Earl) v. Russell, 1 B. & C. 636). Where, pursuant to an agreement for the sale of a dwelling-house and the furniture and stock therein, the latter were, after the sale, left in the dwelling-house, in the possession of the seller, for three months after the sale; held, that they did not pass to the seller on his becoming bankrupt within three months, the sale being notorious (Muller v. Moss, 1 M. & S. 335). But where a house was let, with a covenant to determine the lease on the lessor committing an act of bankruptcy, and by another deed the furniture of the house was demised subject to a similar covenant; held, that it passed to the assignees of the lessee, the jury having found that he was the reputed owner of the furniture (Hickenbottom v. Groves, 2 C. & P. 492). Where London sub-mortgagees of shipments at Ceylon and Hong-Kong send thither, directed to the parties in possession, notices of their security by the next direct mail, there being another and earlier mail by a different route, by which the notices might possibly have sooner reached their destination; before, however, this could have taken place by either mode of transmission, the sub-mortgagors became bankrupts: held, that the notice was sufficient to take the goods out of their reputed ownership. A man may give a valid security on merchandise out at sea belonging to him, although at the time he is ignorant of the particulars of which it consists (Ex parte Kelsall, 1 De G. 352).

*Shares in a water-works company are subject to the law of reputed ownership, the company's act of parliament declaring them to be personal property (Ex parte Lawrence, 1 De G. 269). A. authorized the sale of his share in a brewery to B., his surviving partner, whom he appointed one of his executors. B., conceiving he had duly become the purchaser, carried on the business until his death, and it was subsequently carried on by C., his executor. Afterwards, upon a bill filed, the sale was set aside, and the estate of A. became entitled to share in the profits made subsequently to A.'s death. C. afterwards became bankrupt, having the whole trade-property in his possession. Held, first, that the trade-creditors, during the time the business was carried on by C., had no lien for their debts on A.'s share: and, secondly, that the property was not within the order and disposition of the bankrupt (Stocken v. Dawson, 9 Beav. 239).

A trustee for sale of a testator's estates sold part of them and paid the proceeds into court. A party entitled to a share of the testator's property assigned his interest to S., by way of mortgage, and S. gave notice of the assignment to the trustee, but did not obtain a stop-order. The remainder of the estates was afterwards sold, and the proceeds paid into court, under the decree in the suit. Subsequently the assignor took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act. Held, that the notice given to the trustee was sufficient to take the assigned share out of the order and disposition of the assignor (Matthews v. Gabb, 15 Sim. 51).

T. and C., being indebted to their bankers, gave them a written order upon a third party for the delivery to them of certain goods, belonging to T. and C., in his hands. At the same time T. and C. gave a written memorandum to their bankers, authorizing them to sell the goods and place the produce to their credit. On presentation of the order, it was found that the goods had been, under another written order given by T. and C., and ante-dated four days, already delivered to one of their servants, and removed by him to their premises, and mixed with other similar goods, so as to be rendered undistinguishable. Soon afterwards, and whilst the goods remained in their possession, T. and C. became bankrupts. Held, that the goods were not in the order or disposition of the bankrupts, within 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 72, but that the bankers had a valid lien upon them (Ex parte Bell, re Tunstall, 11 Jur. 986, Ch.).

Partners.] The share of a dormant partner would seem to be within the statute (Ex parte Enderby, 2 B. & C. 389, 406; Ex parte Barrow, 2 Rose, 252).

Feme Covert.] Goods belonging to a woman living with, and passing as wife of a trader, will pass to his assignees (Mace v. Cadell, Cowp. 232), unless, on her marriage, they are vested in trustees for the wife's separate use, for the purpose of carrying on a separate trade, and the husband lives with her; if he did not meddle with them, and there be no fraud, the goods will not pass to the assignees of the husband, and whether the trade be carried on solely by the wife, or jointly with the husband, is a question of fact for the jury, and if they determine the latter the goods will pass (Jarman v. Woolloton, 3 T. R. 618; see also Dean v. Brown, 5 B. & C. 336; Miller v. Demetz, 1 Moo. & R. 479).

Sale or Return.] Goods sent upon sale or return to a trader are within the statute (Levesay v. Hood, 2 Camp. 83). But where they were to be returned if not approved of, and they arrived only *the day before the bankruptcy, they were held not to pass, for he should be [*412] allowed a reasonable time to approve (Gibson v. Bray, 8 Taunt. 76). If there be a custom for the purchaser to leave the goods in the vendor's warehouse for the purpose of sale, undistinguished from his other stock, they will pass to his assignees (Thackthwaite v. Cock, 3 Taunt. 487).

The True Owner.] The true owner is said to mean the legal owner, and therefore the consent of a trustee is sufficient (Ex parte Dale, Buck, 365). By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, s. 2, the person intrusted with, and in possession of, any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, wharfinger's certificate, warrant, or order for delivery of goods, is the true owner of the goods, wares, and merchandises in such documents, described for the purpose of giving validity to any contract respecting them, by way of sale or pledge.

Possession, &c., at Time of Bankruptcy.] They must be in his possession, &c., &c., "at the time he becomes bankrupt." Therefore, if they do not come into his possession till after the bankruptcy (Lyon v. Weldon, 2 Bing. 34; Fawcett v. Fearn, 6 Q. B. 20); or are removed out of it before the bankruptcy (Jones v. Dwyer, 15 East, 21); even the day before (Arbouin v. Williams, R. & M. 72); unless, of course, under circumstances of fraud (as in Darby v. Smith, 8 T. R. 82); they will not pass to his assignees. Removal on the day of the bankruptcy, but before the act of bankruptcy, is not sufficient (per Gifford, Lord, Arbouin v. Williams, R. & M. 72). A demand by the owner of the goods before the act of bankruptcy, is sufficient to take them out of the order and disposition of the bankrupt (Smith v. Topping, 5 B. & Ad. 674).

Consent and Permission of True Owner.] The consent must move directly from the true owner to the bankrupt, and therefore the consent of a person who was permitted by the true owner to deal with them as his own is not sufficient (Frazer v. Swansea Canal Company, 1 Ad. & E. 354; 3 Nev. & M. 391). So, if the true owner demand them back before the bankruptcy (Smith v. Topping, 2 Nev. & M. 421; 5 B. & Ad. 674); or, having sold them, give notice to a carrier to stop them in transitu, and the carrier, by mistake, deliver them to the vendee (Lett v. Cowley, 7 Taunt. 169; Holt, 338; 2 Marsh. 457); or if they, being stock, are transferred without his privity into the bankrupt's name by the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery (Ex parte Richardson, Buck, 480); they do not pass to the bankrupt's assignees. So, if the true owner is a person who cannot consent, as an infant (Viner v. Cadell, 3 Esp. 88); or who is presumed not to consent, as where a woman is married to a man, she not knowing that he has a former wife living (Miller v. Demetz, 1 Moo. & R. 479); but if she knows that the former wife is alive, then she must be presumed to have consented (Ib.). If a woman live with him as his wife, and assert herself to be his wife, her goods pass to his assignees (Mace v. Cadell, Cowp. 232). But where, on marriage, stock in trade and furniture are vested in trustees for the separate use of the wife, in order to enable her to carry on a separate trade, and the husband lives with her, if he do not intermeddle with them, and there be no fraud, they will not pass to his assignees; but whether the trade be carried on solely or jointly with him is a question for the jury; and if they determine the latter, the stock in trade will pass to his assignees, but not the furniture (Jarman v. Woolloton, 3 T. R. 618). When a simple-contract *debt has been assigned, the assignor is considered as having [*413] the order and disposition of the debt, with the consent of the true owner, until the debtor has notice of the assignment (Buck v. Lee, 1 Ad. & E. 804; Gibson v. Overbury, 7 M. & W. 561; Belcher v. Campbell, 8 Q. B. 1). A. bought goods from B., with the fraudulent intention of never paying for them, and kept them until his bankruptcy. Held, that they did not pass to A.'s assignees under the fiat, as having been in his possession, order, and disposition as the reputed owner thereof, with the consent of the true owner (Load v. Green, 15 M. & W. 216).

Evidence in Action to recover Property delivered by Bankrupt in Contemplation of Bankruptcy.] If a trader, knowing himself to be on the eve, and in contemplation of bankruptcy, voluntarily give or assign goods, money, or other property, to one of his creditors, with a view of giving him a preference over others, or to defeat the claims of his creditors generally, such assignment or transfer is void as against the other creditors; and, upon the bankruptcy of the trader, his assignees may recover the property from the creditor thus preferred (Crosby v. Crouch, 2 Camp. 166; 11 East, 256; 2 Camp. 579; Cowp. 629). It is not necessary that the trader should intend to benefit the creditor, or that the latter should in fact be benefited (Marshall v. Lamb, 5 Q. B. 115; 1 D. & M. 315).

This preference, however, must be proved to have been made in contemplation of bankruptcy, at the time of such preference; and, if it appear that the bankruptcy was not contemplated at the time, although it actually did take place afterwards, the property assigned to the creditor will not be recoverable by the assignees (Wheelwright v. Jackson, 5 Taunt. 109; 1 Marsh. 196; 1 Ves. 280). But, if the assignment or transfer took place under circumstances which might reasonably lead the debtor to believe his bankruptcy probable, though not inevitable, it will be sufficient to invalidate the transaction (Poland v. Glynn, 2 D. & R. 310; ante, p. 391). So, a contemplation of insolvency, and a discharge by the Insolvent Debtor's Court, is sufficient (Aldred v. Constable, 4 Q. B. 674); and the jury may infer it from circumstances, without proof that a dishonest act of bankruptcy was contemplated (ib.). But it does not necessarily follow, from a person being in embarrassed circumstances, that he contemplated bankruptcy, as he may hope for an improvement in his affairs (Green v. Bradfield, 1 C. & K., per Tindal, C. J.).

The transfer must be proved to have been voluntary; if made under compulsion, pressure, or any apprehension of annoyance from, or even from the importunity of the creditor, it will not be within the act (see ante, p. 393). In order to constitute pressure, it is not necessary that legal proceedings should be instituted, if the conduct of the creditor be such as to outweigh the bankrupt's own inclination, and induce him to pay against his will, it is enough (Green v. Bradfield, 1 C. & K. 449, per Tindal, C. J.).

Where the transfer or delivery of property upon the importunity of a creditor does not redeem a trader from any present difficulty, which is the ordinary motive for such an act, when really done under the pressure of a threat, this will be evidence that the transfer was not made under such pressure, but voluntarily and with a view to prefer a particular creditor, in contemplation of bankruptcy (Thornton v. Hargreaves, 7 East, 544). The transfer must be proved to have been made with a view of giving the creditor a preference over others; a voluntary transfer is good, if made bona fide, and not from a motive of undue preference (Dixon v. Baldwin, 5 East, 175). A payment in the fair course of *business, or in pursuance of a previous agreement, would not be a fraudulent preference (see [*414] Rust v. Cooper, Cowp. 629; ib. 117; Mavor v. Croome, 1 Bing. 261; Guthrie v. Crossley, 2 C. & P. 301). A delivery of goods under a pretended sale, or an absolute sale, with an intention to prefer, will be fraudulent (Harris v. Limell, 1 B. & B. 390; Alderson v. Temple, 4 Burr. 2235). In all questions on this subject, the relative situation in which the bankrupt and the creditor stand with each other at the time of the transfer, should be considered. And see further, as to this right of the assignee, ante, p. 388, as to how far a fraudulent preference constitutes an act of bankruptcy.

Evidence in Action to recover Property delivered by Bankrupt voluntarily, without Consideration.] Property voluntarily conveyed by a trader, without valuable consideration, and which conveyance would be void as against his creditors, by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, will pass to the assignees under the assignment, and may be recovered by them (see Glaister v. Hewer, 8 Ves. 195; 9 Ves. 12; 11 Ves. 377; 9 East, 59; Arch. 238). Money is not within the act (Kensington v. Chantler, 2 M. & S. 36). A settlement made after marriage will not prevent the property settled from vesting in the assignees of the husband, on his bankruptcy (Ex parte Bell, 1 G. & Y. 282; 1 Atk. 93); unless, indeed, it be made in consideration of a portion, or a new additional sum received with, or in right of the wife, or of an agreement to pay the money, if it be afterwards paid (Cooke, 293; Arch. 240); or, unless it be made in pursuance of articles entered into before marriage (Arch. 240); or, unless it were made without fraud, before the husband entered into trade, and at a time when he was not indebted (Battersbee v. Farrington, 1 Swanst. 106). A settlement made by a trader, before marriage, on his intended wife and issue, will be valid, as against the assignees; and this, though he received no portion from his wife, marriage being a valuable consideration (Ex parte Cottrell, Cowp. 742). And, if a man, upon his marriage, settle personal property for the separate use of his wife, to enable her to carry on a separate trade, his living with the wife will not give him such a possession, order, or disposition of the property, as to vest them in his assignees on his bankruptcy (3 T. R. 620). If, however, the husband himself take any interest by the settlement, as an estate for life, or the like, it of course passes to the assignees (2 Atk. 558; Arch. 240).

By the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 126, if any bankrupt, being at the time insolvent, shall (except upon the marriage of any of his children, or for some valuable consideration) have conveyed, assigned, or transferred to any of his children, or to any other person, any hereditaments, offices, fees, annuities, leases, goods, or chattels, or have delivered or made over to any such person any bills, bonds, notes, or other securities, or have transferred his debts to any other person, or in any other person's name, the court shall have power to order the same to be sold and disposed of for the benefit of his creditors under the bankruptcy; and every such sale shall be valid against the bankrupt, and such children and persons, and against all persons claiming under him (see 3 Mer. 702; Cro. Car. 548).

Evidence in Action to recover Property of Bankrupt seized under an Execution.] By the 81st sect. of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, executions and attachments levied bona fide on a trader's property two months before a commission issued against him were valid. The execution-creditor, however, must not have had notice of a prior act of bankruptcy (lb.); and, by the 108th sect., execution-creditors were put on the *same footing as others, [*415] and must receive only a rateable part of their debts, unless the levy were made before the act of bankruptcy; and, by the same section, creditors levying an execution on a judgment by default or confession, were not to be preferred (see post, p. 422). An execution merely tested or delivered to the sheriff before the bankruptcy, was insufficient; the property should be actually seized under the execution, before the act (Stead v. Gascoigne, 8 Taunt. 527; Cole v. Davis, 1 Ld. Raym. 724; 5 Moo. 313; Phillips v. Thompson, 3 Lev. 69, 192). Such executions and attachments were protected, if "bona fide executed or levied before the date and issuing of the fiat" (2 & 3 Vict. c. 29); that is, before it is delivered at the bankrupt's office, and not merely before it is bespoken (Pewtress v. Acraman, 9 Dowl. P. C. 828). The bona fides referred to the creditor and sheriff (Belcher v. Magnay, 12 M. & W. 102; 1 D. & L. 441). Under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 81, a seizure at 11 o'clock, on the 13th August, was protected against a commission at 12 o'clock, on the 13th October (Godson v. Sanctuary, 4 B. & Ad. 255). There must have been an actual seizure made before the fiat, therefore a lodging of a writ with the sheriff, and a delivery of a warrant by him to an officer, did not oust the assignees (Johnson v. Evans, 1 D. & L. 935; 13 Law J., N. S., C. P. 117). If the execution be fraudulent or collusive, the assignees may recover the property seized, or its proceeds (see

2 Camp. 48; 1 Holt, 335; 1 H. Bl. 665; ante, 387; but see now 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 133; post, p. 422).

Damages.] Where, in trover against a sheriff in the usual form, he delivers up the goods, and the plts. proceed to trial to recover their costs, "according to the practice of a century, the jury may, under such circumstances, give them nominal damages;" but not more, if no special damage is laid in the declaration, and the damage complained of is not necessarily incidental to the wrongful taking: therefore, on such a declaration, the plts. cannot recover, as damages, the rent of the house where the goods were kept whilst in the possession of the sheriff, or the cost of keeping their messenger there during the same period (Moon v. Raphael, 2 Bing. N. C. 310; 2 Sco. 489; 7 C. & P. 115). Goods were seized under a fi. fa. issued upon a judgment on a warrant of attorney, after an act of bankruptcy committed by the debtor, against whom a fiat issued before the goods were sold. The assignees gave the sheriff notice not to sell, and he brought the parties before a judge by an interpleader order. The judge directed that the goods should be sold, and the money brought into court to abide the event of an issue to be tried between the execution-creditor and the assignees. The latter made no objection, and did not suggest any other mode of disposing of the goods, which were accordingly sold by the sheriff's auctioneer. The execution-creditor subsequently abandoned all claim to the goods, and the proceeds of the sale were paid out of court to the assignees. Held, that the assignees were not entitled, as matter of law, to recover in an action of trover against the execution-creditor, the difference between the produce of the sale and the value of the goods at the time of the seizure, and that it was no misdirection in the judge to state to the jury, that, if they thought the sale was bona fide, they might consider the produce of it as the measure of damages (Whitmore v. Black, 13 M. & W. 507). B., being indebted to the deft. in the sum of 500*l.* for the price of goods sold to him, and being pressed for part payment of the debt, handed to the deft. a bill of exchange drawn by himself for 600*l.* and the deft. agreed to pay discount, on the terms of retaining to his own use the sum of *100*l.*, or net the discount, and pay over [*416] the difference to B.; he, however, retained the bill, and paid no part of the proceeds over to B. B. shortly afterwards became bankrupt. Held, that his assignees were entitled to recover from the deft. the full amount of the bill minus the 100*l.* and such discount as the jury should find to be receivable by the deft. (Alder v. Keighley, 15 & W. 17; 15 Law J. 100, Ex.).

Evidence for Defendant.

This will of course depend on the pleadings.

By R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. in all actions by and against assignees of a bankrupt the character in which the party is stated on the record to sue or be sued shall not be in evidence, unless specially denied. A plea denying that plts. are assignees, modo et formâ, puts them upon strict proof of trading &c. (Batten v. Hobson, 4 N. C. 290; Buckton v. Frost, 8 Ad. & E. 844): strict proof may be dispensed with, by admissions expressed or implied (see ante, p. 350); but the plea will not dispense with the notice under the bankrupt act (ante, p. 349). With reference to the nonjoinder of a joint assignee, see ante. p. 335.

General Issue.] The 40th section of the bankrupt act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 122) rendered void all securities given in violation of its provisions, even though in the hands of bona fide holders (see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106). The general issue which that section allowed to be pleaded is non assumpsit, when the form of action is assumpsit (Weeks v. Argent, 11 Jur. 525; 16 Law J. 209, Ex.; 2 N. P. C. 235).

Plea of Non assumpsit to Action for Money received to the Use of the Assignees.] If it appear that the money was received by the deft. before the bankruptcy, it is a defence; but not if the payment were made by way of fraudulent preference, or there be a count for money received to the use of the assignees (Pennell v. Aston, 14 M. & W. 415). Where a landlord distrained the bankrupt's goods for rent, and a third person who claimed the goods agreed to redeem them by satisfying the landlord; it was held, that the sum so paid to the landlord could not be recovered by the assignees (Lackington v. Elliott, 7 Man. & G. 538).

Disputing Title.] We have already seen in what cases the plt. must adduce evidence of his title to sue as assignee, and what steps must be taken by deft.—as giving notice, &c.—to render it incumbent on plt. to adduce strict evidence of such title (supra); and when deft. is estopped from disputing the title (ante, 350). We have also seen the mode in which plt. must prove his title, where deft. has given no notice to dispute it (ante, p. 348, 349); where the commission has not been disputed by the bankrupt within a limited period (ante, p. 351); and where strict proof of title is necessary (ante, p. 348, 416). Under these observations will be also found, how far deft. will be able to contest and controvert the plt.'s title, and his evidence must be framed accordingly. If a notice have been given by deft. to dispute the bankruptcy, &c., he should adduce evidence of such notice in the usual way (post, "SECONDARY EVIDENCE"). The notice to dispute must specify which of the matters is intended to be disputed, for a notice to dispute "the bankruptcy" is too general (Trimley v. Unwin, 6 B. & C. 537). Where [*417] the bankrupt has given no notice to dispute the commission under the statute, the *effect of the clause is, that in cases where the bankrupt, if solvent, could have sued, and the deft. gave notice of his intention to dispute the bankruptcy, &c., the fact so disputed must be proved, but the depositions under the commission are conclusive evidence of the matters contained in them (Earth v. Schroder, M. & M. 26). The notice in fact is no part of the deft.'s evidence, but may be proved at the commencement of the plt.'s case, and will immediately put him upon proof (Decharme v. Lane, 2 Camp. 324; ante, p. 348). A notice served upon the clerk at deft.'s counting-house, before issue joined, without showing that it has come to the deft.'s hands, was held sufficient (Widger v. Browning, M. & W. 27). Where a plea, which was delivered without a notice, was got back under a false pretence and re-delivered with a notice, it was held insufficient (Lawrence v. Crowder, 1 M. & P. 511; 3 C. & P. 229). If served on the attorney, it is sufficient (Howard v. Ramsbottom, 3 Taunt. 526). If the form of action, or the form of pleadings, be improper, plt. will be nonsuited; as to which, see ante, p. 324. If the plt. has omitted to join one of the assignees under the commission, the nonjoinder may be taken advantage of, as ground of nonsuit (Snelgrove v. Hunt, 1 Ch. R. 71; 2 Stark. 424; but see ante, p. 335).

Disputing Cause of Action.] We have seen what evidence the plt. must adduce in support of the cause of action, and what may be shown by deft. to impeach it (ante, 403). The question, whether or not a particular interest vests in the assignees, is a question of law, depending on the facts brought forward in evidence from the plt.'s or def't.'s proof (see 2 Stark. Ev. 195). If plt. sues in an improper form of remedy (ante, p. 324), or there be a variance in the declaration (ante, p. 343), he will be nonsuited (see "VARIANCE").

Plea of Not Guilty in Trover.] If the declaration allege a possession by the plts. as assignees, and a conversion after the bankruptcy, and the def't. plead not guilty, a sale of the bankrupt's goods by the def't. under an execution before the bankruptcy will not support the issue, though there had been a demand and refusal by the def't. afterwards, for the sale was the real conversion (Edwards v. Hooper, 11 M. & W. 363; post, "TROVER").

Plea of Not Possessed.] Under this plea the def't. may show that he took the goods in execution bona fide, without notice of bankruptcy (Unwin v. St. Quinton, 11 M. & W. 277). Where the plts. were assignees of A. at the time of the conversion, and afterwards became assignees of A. and B., and alleged the property in themselves as the assignees of A. and B., they cannot recover even a moiety, for they were not, at the time of the conversion, possessed as assignees of both bankrupts (Edwards v. Hooper, 11 M. & W. 363). The def't. may under this plea show that the plts., as assignees, allowed the goods to remain in the bankrupt's "order and disposition," and that the property subsequently passed to the provisional assignee by assignment under the Insolvent Debtors Act, of which bankrupt had afterwards prayed the benefit (Butler v. Hobson, 2 N. C. 290). So it is a good defence under this plea that the equitable interest passed to the def't. before the bankruptcy, for the bankruptcy only vests in the assignees what the bankrupt is legally as well as equitably entitled to, so that an equitable assignment prevents the property from vesting in the assignees (Carvalho v. Burn, 4 B. & Ad. 382; Tibbits v. George, 5 Ad. & E. 107). If A. agree to assign to B. certain specific goods as a security for money advanced to B. for the purchase of them, and afterwards, in pursuance of such agreement, *actually assigns them, although the assignment itself be under such circumstances [*418] as would, under the Insolvent Act, have rendered it void, and A. subsequently takes the benefit of the act, yet his assignees cannot recover the goods. Aliter if the agreement related to such goods as A. might have at the time of the execution of the assignment, their corpus not being ascertained at the time of the agreement (Mogg v. Baker, 3 M. & W. 195).

Where the defence is in substance a denial that the property in the goods for which the plts. sue in trover as assignees passed to them, a simple traverse of such property is sufficient (Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C. M. & R. 787; see Parke, B., Turquand v. Hawtrey, 9 M. & W. 727).

Release.] A discharge by one assignee, on receiving moneys due to the estate, will bind the rest (Smith v. Jameson, 1 Esp. Ca. 114; 2 Stark. Ev. 199; sed vide Carr v. Head, 3 Atk. 695); but a discharge by one assignee will not be effectual, where the others have expressly dissented (Bristow v. Eastman, 1 Esp. Ca. 172). So, a release executed by one assignee, in the presence of another, will bind both (Williams v. Walsby, 4 Esp. Ca. 220); but, if the co-assignee be absent, an express authority by him, under seal, must be proved (4 T. R. 313; 2 Stark. Ev. 200).

Defence that the Conveyance, Contract, Execution, &c., through which the Property sought to be recovered against Defendant was conveyed to him, was without Notice, &c.] By the general operation of the bankrupt laws, as we have before seen, all the property of the bankrupt, from his act of bankruptcy, becomes vested in the assignees, so that the bankrupt has no power whatever to dispose of the same against their consent. The 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 81, enacted, that all conveyances by, and all contracts, and other dealings and transactions, by and with any bankrupt, bona fide made, and entered into, more than two calendar months before the date and issuing of the commission against him, and all executions and attachments against the lands and tenements, or goods and chattels, of such bankrupt, bona fide executed or levied more than two calendar months before the issuing of such commission, shall be valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed, provided the person or persons so dealing with such bankrupt, or at whose suit or on whose account such execution or attachment shall have issued, had not, at the time of such conveyance, contract, dealing, or transaction, or at the time of executing or levying such execution or attachment, notice of any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed.

The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 12, protected on the same conditions of bona fides, and want of notice, and in the same terms, "all conveyances" made and executed; and, c. 29, s. 1, "all contracts, dealings, and transactions" made and entered into, and "all executions and attachments," executed or levied "before the date and issuing of the fiat." But see now post, p. 422, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 133.

The effect of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, was to destroy the title by relation, of the assignees to the act of bankruptcy, as to all bona fide transactions prior to the fiat. But where the act of bankruptcy was the procuring the bankrupt's goods to be taken in execution, the execution though levied bona fide by the creditor, was not protected (Hall v. Wallace, 7 M. & W. 353). The statute did not render valid an execution by fi. fa. on a warrant of attorney; the fi. fa. having been executed by seizure after a secret act of bankruptcy, but not complete by sale before the issuing of the fiat, though the [*419] *warrant of attorney was not a fraudulent preference (Whitmore v. Robertson, 8 M. & W. 463); semble, an execution by mere seizure would have been protected if the judgment had been on a verdict (Whitmore v. Robertson, supra). The proviso in the act that nothing therein contained shall be deemed or taken to give validity to any execution founded on a judgment, on a warrant of attorney, or cognovit, given by any bankrupt, by way of fraudulent preference, did not imply that all executions, not being by way of fraudulent preference are necessarily made valid (Whitmore v. Robertson, supra; see also Randen v. Wentworth, 10 M. & W. 36; Skey v. Carter, in error, 11 M. & W. 571; Cheston v. Gibbs, 12 M. & W. 111). Quære, whether a payment by a bankrupt was within this section (Turquand v. Vanderplank, 10 M. & W. 180; see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 83). Quære, whether a distress by a landlord was an "attachment" or transaction within this section (Lackington v. Elliott, 7 M. & G. 538). It seems a right of lien arising before fiat may be protected by the act 2 & 3 Vict. 29 (Bordman v. Malcolm, 11 M. & W. 833). Where a fiat was bespoken at two o'clock, and a seizure under an execution was at two o'clock, the fiat was delivered at the bankrupt's office after two o'clock: held, that the execution was protected, for the delivery of the fiat was the date and issuing within the statute (Pewtress v. Acraman, 9 Dowl. P. C. 828).

The protection of the statute was available under a plea denying the plt.'s property in trover. But see Byers v. Southwell, 9 C. & P. 320.

We have already seen what will be evidence of a notice of an act of bankruptcy, ante, p. 402, and infra.

Evidence in Action, to recover Goods which have been stopped in Transitu.] If a bankrupt has purchased goods, but the same are not delivered to him, and they still remain in the hands of the vendor, inasmuch as he has a lien on them for the purchase-money, the assignees, until they satisfy the vendor in that respect, cannot get possession of them, so as to dispose of them for the benefit of creditors; if the vendor have sent them, but they have not as yet been delivered to the bankrupt, the vendor may stop them in transitu; but, when the goods have been delivered to the bankrupt, then, of course, they pass to the assignees (Arch. 233). See, as to when a party has a right to stop goods in transitu, post, "TROVER, DEFENCES IN". The point generally in dispute, is, as to whether or not there has been an actual delivery to the bankrupt.

Evidence in Action to recover Property in hands of Party who Claims a Lien over it.] The assignees do not take a better title in the property of bankrupt, than he himself had at the time of his bankruptcy; and if, therefore, the holders of it have a claim of lien therein, as against the bankrupt, they have it also against the assignees. The requisites to support a legal lien on property, with the evidence to support or disprove it, will be found post, "TROVER, DEFENCES IN."

Proof of Defendant's Notice of Bankruptcy.] If the plt. seeks to recover money or property which he could not by virtue of sects. 133 et seq. of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106 (post, 423), without deft. had notice of an act of bankruptcy committed, he must adduce evidence of such notice, which may be either actual or implied from circumstances. By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 87, notice to an accredited agent of any body corporate, or public company, is notice to such body corporate or company (ante, p. 402).

The policy of the bankrupt code is to prevent the relation to a *secret act of bankruptcy, more than two months old from the com- [*420] mission, so as to avoid all intermediate bona fide dealings. Where, therefore, prior to the act of bankruptcy, B., a trader, had executed a mortgage of a house and furniture to A., with liberty to A. to enter and take possession of the house and furniture in case of default in payment of the interest by B. at a certain time after it became due; B. made default in payment of the interest at the time specified, and subsequently thereto committed an act of bankruptcy, of which A. had no notice: held, that this was a conveyance, contract, dealing, and transaction by and with the bankrupt, and having been entered into more than two months before the issuing of the commission, was protected by the 95th section of the Bankrupt Act (O'Connor v. Harris, 9 Ir. Law. R. 217). "The date and issuing of the fiat" mean the delivery of it out of the bankrupt office (Pewtress v. Acraman, 9 Dowl. P. C. 828). Under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 81, a dealing on the 14th March was protected against a commission on the 14th May (Cowie v. Harris, Moo. & M. 141). A mere seizure is a levying within these statutes (Godson v. Sanctuary, 3 B. & Ad. 255; 1 Nev. & M. 52); but there must be an actual seizure (Johnson v. Evans, 1 D. & L. 935). Since the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 22, the filing of a declaration of insolvency is a complete act of bankruptcy, without the same being advertised in the London Gazette, as required by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 6. Therefore, a notice to the effect, "I have this day filed in the office of the secretary of bankrupts in Quality Court; Chancery Lane, in the county of Middlesex, a declaration of insolvency, a true copy of which is hereto annexed, and I, being a trader, have thereby committed an act of bankruptcy," is a sufficient notice of a prior act of bankruptcy to deprive an execution-creditor of the protection of 2 & 3

Vict. c. 29. Where A., a trader, being arrested under a ca. sa., after notice to the execution-creditor, and to the sheriff's officer, of an act of bankruptcy committed by him, paid to the officer out of his assets the amount of the execution-debt, in order to procure his discharge, and which money was afterwards paid over to the execution-creditor: held, that the assignees of A. were entitled to recover this from the execution-creditor in an action for money had and received (Follett v. Hoppe, 11 Jur. 974, C. P.; 10 Law T. 205). Notice to the sheriff's officer of an act of bankruptcy is not notice to the execution-creditor (Ramsay v. Eaton, 10 M. & W. 22). But a general notice to a creditor is enough, without stating the particulars (Ramsay v. Eaton, supra). A distinct notice that A. had committed several acts of bankruptcy is sufficient (Udall v. Walton, 14 M. & W. 252; but see Conway v. Hall, 1 C. B. 643). Notice of an incomplete act of bankruptcy, as of a declaration of insolvency not yet filed and advertised, will not be sufficient (Conway v. Hall, supra). A notice to an attorney of the creditor before he sues out execution is sufficient, though the fiat issued after the writ was lodged with the sheriff (Rothwell v. Timbrell, 1 Dowl. N. S. 778). Notice means knowledge: a letter, therefore, is no notice until read; but, if the party wilfully abstain from reading it, the jury may infer notice (Bird v. Bass, 6 Man. & G. 143).

A notice given by a trader, that he has filed a declaration of insolvency, pursuant to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 22, where a fiat in bankruptcy issues within two months from the filing of such declaration, is a sufficient notice to deprive the execution-creditor of the benefit of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1, so that he is not entitled to the proceeds of goods levied after the notice, but before the fiat issued (Green v. Laurie, 1 Exch. 335; 17 Law J. 61, Exch.; 2 N. P. C. 472).

*Where a bill of exchange was delivered by a bankrupt, with [*421] intent to transfer the property, more than two months before a commission issued, though not actually indorsed till within the two months, it was holden to vest in the indorsee, and not in the assignees (1 Camp. 432; and see Esp. N. P. 40; 2 J. & W. 237; 1 J. & W. 428). So, where A., a trader, on the 2d of October, gave a creditor an order for money drawn by a board of guardians on their treasurer payable to A., but not to bearer or order, and on the 4th committed an act of bankruptcy, and the creditor, with notice of the act, received the money from the treasurer of the union on the 9th; it was held that the transaction was complete, so far as the bankrupt was concerned, on the 2nd October, and was protected by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1 (per Tindal, C. J., in Green v. Bradfield, 1 C. & K. 449). A release executed by the bankrupt, after an act of bankruptcy, to a releasee, knowing of the bankrupt's insolvency, is invalid, although executed more than two months before the suing out of the commission (Mavor v. Pyne, 3 Bing. 285).

Though notice of a docket may not of itself be considered notice of an act of bankruptcy, yet such a notice, together with the circumstance of the deft.'s requiring security before he made the payment, will justify a jury in finding the fact of notice (Spratt v. Hobhouse, 4 Bing. 181). Notice to the Bank of England is a notice to its branch banks after time for transmission has elapsed (Willis v. England (Bank of), 4 Ad. & E. 21). A trader committed a secret act of bankruptcy by leaving his house and shop, and desiring his foreman to carry on business for him in his absence, who accordingly sold goods and received money, and made bona fide payments without notice of an act of bankruptcy. In debt for money had, &c., to the use of the assignees, plea never indebted and set-off, it was held that the plts. were entitled to recover the whole, but that the debt. might probably have pleaded 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, with effect (Kynaston v. Crouch, 14 M. & W. 266).

As to extents, see Arch. B. L. 179, 259; 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 71. As to executions upon judgments entered upon warrants of attorney or cognovits, see 3 Geo. IV. c. 39; 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 108; Arch. B. L. 99; 5 B. & C. 392; 6 B. & C. 479; Green v. Wood, 14 Law J., N. S., Q. B. 217; post, 423. An execution complete by sale prior to the fiat was protected by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1; though the creditor had notice, before the sale, of an act of bankruptcy (Whitmore v. Green, 2 D. & L. 174; 8 Jur. 697). This defence need not be specially pleaded (ib.; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 166, ss. 125, 136, 137, post, p. 423). By sect. 86, 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, no purchase from any bankrupt bona fide, and for valuable consideration, where the purchaser had notice at the time of such purchase of an act of bankruptcy, by such bankrupt committed, shall be impeached by reason thereof, unless the commission against such bankrupt shall have been sued out within twelve calendar months after such act of bankruptcy. This section is re-enacted by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 134, post, p. 423.

Defence in Action to recover Money paid by the Bankrupt to Defendant, or by Defendant to Bankrupt, that it was paid without Notice.] By the 82nd sect. of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, all payments really and bona fide made, or which shall hereafter be made by any bankrupt, or by any person on his behalf, before the date and issuing of the commission against such bankrupt (such payment not being a fraudulent preference of such creditor), shall be deemed valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed, and all payments really and bona fide made, or which shall hereafter be made to any bankrupt, before the date [*422] and issuing of the commission against such bankrupt, shall be deemed valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed; and such creditor shall not be liable to refund the same to the assignees of such bankrupt, provided the person so dealing with the said bankrupt had not, at the time of such payment by or to such bankrupt, notice of any act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed. See this section re-enacted, post, p. 422.

Under this section, a delivery of goods in part payment of a previous debt after a secret act of bankruptcy was protected (Cannan v. Wood, 2 M. & W. 465). So was a payment for goods bought after such an act (Hill v. Farnell, 9 B. & C. 45; and see also Churchill v. Crease, 5 Bing. 177; Bishop v. Crawshaw, 3 B. & C. 415). So was giving cash for a bank post-bill of a partnership debt due before, to a creditor who has notice of the act (Craven v. Edmondson, 6 Bing. 734). But a deposit by way of pledge, of chattels, though bona fide and without notice of the act of bankruptcy was not (Wright v. Fearnley, 5 Bing. N. C. 89). (It would seem, however, that it would be protected now by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1, as a "contract," "dealing," or "transaction.") Nor is a bill (Willes v. Bank of England, 4 Ad. & E. 21). So a payment for goods purchased before the act of bankruptcy is not, if the purchaser know, or have the means of knowing, the bankrupt's circumstances (Devas v. Venables, 3 Bing. N. C. 400; and see Green v. White, ib. 59). Nor is a payment by a partner, who has committed an act of bankruptcy, by assignment of chattels to a creditor, as a security for money lent in trust to permit the trader to use them till a certain period, and then to sell in case of default (Cannan v. Denew, 10 Bing. 292). (See 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1; and now 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106). Although the execution would be protected under this section, or by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, if levied by a bona fide creditor, in ignorance of bankruptcy; yet, if a person claiming the goods under an assignment, which was itself an act of bankruptcy, pays off the execution-creditor, and takes an assignment of them from the sheriff, the statute does not protect them. But an assignment by the sheriff to such claimant is valid as to goods seized before the act of bankruptcy, although the assignment by the sheriff was subsequent to it, for the claimant then stands in the same position as the execution-creditor (Fawcett v. Fearn, 6 Q. B. 20).

By the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 133, it is enacted, "that all payments really and bona fide made by any bankrupt, or by any person on his behalf, before date of the fiat or the filing of a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, to any creditor of such bankrupt, and all payments really and bona fide made to any bankrupt before the date of the fiat or the filing of such petition, and all conveyances by any bankrupt bona fide made and executed before the date of the fiat or the filing of such petition, and all contracts, dealings, and transactions by and with any bankrupt really and bona fide made and entered into before the date of the fiat or the filing of such petition, and all executions and attachments against the lands and tenements of any bankrupt bona fide executed by seizure, and all executions and attachments against the goods and chattels of any bankrupt bona fide executed and levied by seizure and sale before the date of the fiat or the filing of such petition, shall be deemed to be valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed, provided the person so dealing with or paying to or being paid by such bankrupt, or at whose suit *or on whose account such [*423] execution or attachment shall have issued, had not at the time of such payment, conveyance, contract, dealing, or transaction, or at the time of so executing or levying such execution or attachment, or at the time of making any sale thereunder, notice of any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken to give validity to any payment or to any delivery or transfer of any goods or chattels made by any bankrupt, being a fraudulent preference of any creditor of such bankrupt, or to any conveyance or equitable mortgage made or given by any bankrupt by way of fraudulent preference of any creditor of such bankrupt, or to any execution founded on a judgment on a warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem or judge's order obtained by consent given by any bankrupt by way of fraudulent preference."

Sect. 134. "That no purchase from any bankrupt bona fide and for valuable consideration, where the purchaser had notice at the time of such purchase of an act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed, shall be impeached by reason thereof, unless a fiat or petition for adjudication of bankruptcy shall have been sued out or filed within twelve months after such act of bankruptcy."

Sect. 135. "That every warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, given by any bankrupt after the commencement of this act, and within two months of the filing of a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy by or against such bankrupt, and being for or in respect of (wholly or in part) an antecedent debt or money demand, and every cognovit actionem or consent to a judge's order for judgment given by any bankrupt, at any time after the commencement of this act, and within two months of the filing of any such petition in any action commenced by collusion with the bankrupt, and not adversely, or purporting to have been given in an action, but having been in fact given before the commencement of any action against the bankrupt, such bankrupt being unable to meet his engagements at the time of giving such warrant of attorney, cognovit actionem, or consent (as the case may be), shall be deemed and taken to be null and void, whether the same shall have been given by such bankrupt in contemplation of bankruptcy or not."

Sect. 136. "And be it enacted, that if after the commencement of this act any warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, or any cognovit actionem in any personal action, shall have been given by any such trader, and such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem, or a true copy thereof, shall not have been filed with the officer acting as clerk of the doquets and judgments in the Court of Queen's Bench within twenty-one days next after the execution thereof, in manner and form provided by an act passed in the third year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled 'An Act for preventing Frauds upon Creditors by secret Warrants of Attorney to confess Judgment' (c. 39), every such warrant of attorney and cognovit actionem shall be deemed fraudulent, null, and void, to all intents and purposes whatever; and if any such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem which shall be so filed as aforesaid shall have been given subject to any defeazance or condition, such defeazance or condition shall be written on the same paper or parchment on which such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem shall be written, before the time when the same or a copy thereof respectively shall be filed, otherwise such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatever."

Sect. 137. "And be it enacted, that every judge's order made *by consent given after the commencement of this act by any such [*424] trader defendant in any personal action, and whereby the plaintiff in such action shall be authorized forthwith after the making of such order, or at any future time, to sign or enter up judgment, or to issue or take out execution in such action, and whether such order shall be made subject to any defeazance or condition or not, in case the action in which such order shall be made shall be in the Court of Queen's Bench, or in case the action wherein the same is made shall be in any other court, a true copy of such order shall, together with an affidavit of the time of such consent being given, and a description of the residence and occupation of the defendant, be filed with the officer acting as clerk of the doquets and judgments in the said Court of Queen's Bench within twenty-one days after the making of such order, in like manner as a warrant of attorney in any personal action and a cognovit actionem given by any deft. in any personal action, or copies thereof and affidavits of the execution thereof respectively, may be filed with the said clerk within the space of twenty-one days after such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem shall have been executed, otherwise such judge's order, and any judgment signed or entered up thereon, and any execution issued or taken out on such judgment, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatever; and the provisions respectively contained in the said act passed in the third year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth (c. 39), intituled 'An Act for preventing Frauds upon Creditors by secret Warrants of Attorney to confess Judgment,' and in an act passed in the parliament holden in the sixth and seventh years of the reign of her Majesty (c. 66), intituled 'An Act to enlarge the Provisions of an act for preventing Frauds, by secret Warrants of Attorney to confess Judgment,' for liberty to file warrants of attorney and cognovits actionem, or copies thereof, with the clerk of the doquets and judgments, and for the said clerk to make certain entries and search in relation thereto, and for entering satisfaction thereon, and for fees for search and filing and taking office copies, shall extend and be applicable to every such judge's order, in like manner as to warrants of attorney and cognovits actionem mentioned in the said acts."

Defence in Action to recover Property delivered by Defendant to Bankrupt after his Bankruptcy, that it was delivered without Notice.] By sect. 84 of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, it was enacted that no person, or body corporate, or public company, having in his or their possession or custody any money, goods, wares, merchandises, or effects, belonging to any bankrupt, shall be endangered by reason of the payment or delivery thereof to the bankrupt, or his order, provided such person or company had not, at the time of such delivery or payment, notice that such bankrupt had committed an act of bankruptcy.

Want of Notice.] Wherever the deft. relies on having had no notice of the act of bankruptcy, it lies on him to prove it (Pearson v. Graham, 2 Nev. & P. 636; 6 Ad. & E. 899).

Set-off.] See plea of set-off, ante. Where the set-off arises on the indorsement of a bill to the deft. he must give in evidence that the indorsement was made before the bankruptcy (Lucas v. Marsh, Barn. 453); but, where the set-off was founded on certain notes of the bankrupt, proof that notes of the bankrupt, to the amount of the set-off, came to the deft.'s [*425] hands three or four weeks before the bankruptcy, was held sufficient evidence from which the jury might infer that he was in possession of them at the time of the bankruptcy, without identifying them with the notes produced (Moore v. Wright, 2 Marsh. 209; S. C. 6 Taunt. 517). It is not sufficient, for the purpose of establishing a set-off, to prove that the deft.'s demand had been allowed by the commissioners as a debt (Pirie v. Kemnet, 3 Camp. 279).

Plea of Final Order under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 10—Evidence.] An order for protection of the person of an insolvent debtor from process, made under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 96, s. 28, does not support a plea of final order for protection and distribution under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116 (Miles v. Pope, 10 Law T. 227, C. P.).

By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 158, it is enacted, "that if the assignees commence any action or suit for any money due to the bankrupt's estate before the time allowed for the bankrupt to dispute the bankruptcy shall have elapsed (see sect. 233), any deft. in any such action or suit shall be entitled, after notice given to the assignees, to pay the same or any part thereof into the court in which such action or suit is brought, and all proceedings with respect to the money so paid into court shall thereupon be stayed until such time shall have elapsed; and if within that time the bankrupt shall not have commenced such action, suit, or other proceeding as allowed by this act, and prosecuted the same with due diligence, the money shall be paid out of court to the official assignee, but otherwise shall abide the event of such action, suit, or other proceeding, and upon such event shall be paid out of court, either to the official assignee or the person adjudged bankrupt, as the court shall direct; and after such payment of money so made into court, it shall not be lawful for the person so adjudged bankrupt to proceed against the defendant for recovery of the same money."

Competency of Witnesses.

Bankrupt.] As it is not settled that the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, makes the bankrupt a competent witness for all purposes (see Udall v. Walton, 14 M. & W. 254), it may be useful to state shortly the decisions before that act.

See "WITNESS." But see now 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 241, which enacts, "that the provisions of an act passed in the parliament holden in the sixth and seventh years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled 'An Act for improving the Law of Evidence,' shall be applicable to any matter or proceeding in prosecution under the provisions of this act, and to any matter, question, or inquiry arising in any court of law or equity out of or consequent upon any such matter or proceeding."

The bankrupt was not a competent witness in an action by his assignees, either for the purpose of proving property in himself, or a debt due to himself, or in any other manner to increase the fund (Ewens v. Gold, B. N. P. 43; Butler v. Cooke, Cowp. 70; Ex parte Bent, 1 Madd. 46). His competency might be restored by his releasing to his assignees his claim to the surplus, and to his allowance, provided he had obtained his certificate (Nares v. Saxby, cited 2 T. R. 497). And, though he had not obtained it, he might be a witness against his assignees, in questions respecting his property (Butler v. Cooke, Cowp. 70; B. N. P. 73). But he was not a competent witness to support the commission, and no release would make him so (Field v. Curtis, 8 Stra. 820), and therefore he could not prove his own act of bankruptcy, or even explain an equivocal act, or prove *the petitioning creditor's debt (Chapman v. Gardner, 2 H. Bl. 279; (Cross v. Fox, [*426] ib.; Flower v. Herbert, ib.; Hoffman v. Pitt, 5 Esp. 22; Rabitt v. Gurney, Mont. 482, n.; and the cases of Oxlade v. Perchard, Russell v. Russell, are overruled). Nor could he be examined to any act of bankruptcy committed by him prior to that on which the commission was founded (Wyatt v. Wilkinson, 5 Esp. 187); nor be cross-examined to defeat the commission, or any other similar evidence (Binns v. Tetby, McCle. & Yo. 397; Elsom v. Brailey, 1 Selw. N. P. 239). The incompetency of a witness to support the commission is restricted to evidence, either affirming or disaffirming the bankruptcy (per Lord Ellenborough, 1 Stark. 134); for, after obtaining his certificate, and executing a release, he is a competent witness to prove the signature of the commissioners, in order to identify the proceedings under the commission, as its validity does not depend on their signature, but on the facts contained in the depositions (Morgan v. Prior, 2 B. & C. 14; 3 Star. 58. See also Brind v. Bacon, 4 Taunt. 183; Reed v. James, 1 Stark. 134).

He might be a witness in an action qui tam brought by his assignees against the person who had won money from him at play, after the act of bankruptcy committed: three releases, however, were necessary; 1, his own release of the allowance and surplus under his commission; 2, a release from all his creditors to him of their respective debts; 3, a release from the assignees to him (Carter v. Abbott, 1 B. & C. 444; 2 D. & R. 575). But, in an action against his sureties, a release of him and his property generally was not sufficient: it should have been a release of his interest in the surplus specifically (Perryman v. Steygall, 1 Moo. & S. 540). Where he stated, on the voire dire, that he had obtained his certificate and released his assignees, Park, J., held him competent without the production of the release (Carlisle v. Eady, 1 C. & P. 234).

He is competent to prove a collateral fact, as notice to the debt. of an act of bankruptcy (Udal v. Wallow, 14 M. & W. 254); or to prove the act of bankruptcy (per Alderson, B., ib.).

Where he had become a bankrupt a second time, his certificate under the second commission, and a release to the assignees, would not make him a competent witness to increase the fund, unless he had paid 15s. in the pound under the second commission (Kennet v. Greenwallers, Pea. 3). In a suit against the crown, a release from the bankrupt to his assignees would not render him a competent witness, the crown not being bound by the bankrupt law (Crawford v. Attorney-General, 7 Pri. 2).

The wife of the bankrupt was equally incompetent to support the commission, as the bankrupt himself. And the power given to the commissioners, by the 37th section of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, now 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 118, to examine the wife as to the discovery of the bankrupt's property, is limited to that express purpose, and to the commissioners alone, and does not extend to render her a competent witness for any other purposes, or before any other tribunal. And see 2 Ph. Ev. 284. Where the wife was called to prove that a promissory note had been paid to the debts in contemplation of bankruptcy, Kenyon, Lord, held her to be a competent witness, inasmuch as, if the plt. recovered, the debts would be creditors against the estate to the amount of the note; and so the witness stood indifferent (Jourdaine v. Lefevre, 1 Esp. 66); but she was not competent, in an action by the assignees, to prove a payment made by the bankrupts to the debts after the bankruptcy (Williams v. Williams, 8 Dowl. 220; 6 M. & W. 170).

*The bankrupt's son, who had been held out as a partner with [*427] him, though he was not so in fact, was held in one case not a competent witness for the assignees (Holland v. Reeves, 7 C. & P. 36).

Creditor.] A creditor was not, in any case, a competent witness to sustain a commission; for, by so doing, he increased the fund out of which he was to receive a dividend (Shuttleworth v. Bravo, Str. 507); unless he released the assignees (Ambrose v. Clendon, Ca. Hard. 267; Koopes v. Chapman, Pea. 19); or one of them (Sinclair v. Stevenson, 1 C. & P. 582); or sold, or agreed to sell, his debt (Granger v. Furlong, Bl. R. 1273; Heath v. Hall, 4 Taunt. 326); though, at one time, it was held, that if he had not proved under the commission, he was competent to support it, though not to increase the fund (Williams v. Stevens, 2 Camp. 301); but this distinction was overruled by the cases of Adams v. Malkin, 3 Camp. 543; and Crooke v. Edwards, 2 Stark. 302. A creditor was, however, a competent witness to disprove the petitioning creditor's debt. (In re Codd, 2 Sch. & Lef. 116.) He is now competent for all purposes.

Petitioning Creditor.] A petitioning creditor, even by a release or sale of debt, would not be rendered a competent witness to support the commission (per Ellenborough, Lord, Green v. Jones, 2 Camp. 412); though, to overthrow it, his evidence would be allowed (Ib.; Lloyd v. Stretton, 1 Stark. 40). He is now competent for all purposes.

Commissioner and Assignees.] A commissioner might be examined as a witness to support the commission (Crooke v. Edwards, 2 Stark. 302). An assignee, who has released his individual claims on the bankrupt's estate, is an admissible witness to prove the petitioning creditor's debt; for he is then a mere trustee, whose trust is coupled with no personal interest (Tomlinson v. Wilkes, 2 B. & B. 397; 5 Moo. 175).

Evidence by Assignee.] Under stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 90, a debt who is assignee of a bankrupt may prove the act of bankruptcy at nisi prius by merely putting in the proceedings, if the opposite party has given no notice to prove the petitioning creditor's debt; and if it be clear that such opposite party must have known that the bankruptcy would be relied on by debt, though debt is not named assignee on the record (Fawcett v. Fearn, 6 Q. B. 25).

Admissibility in Evidence of Bankrupt's Admissions.] These, when made before his bankruptcy, as to the existence of the petitioning creditor's debt, are receivable in evidence as an admission of the debt, as the bankrupt then had no interest to make such admission; therefore, the same objections do not apply to this evidence as to that given after his bankruptcy, in support of the commission. The bankrupt may, therefore, allow his attorney (employed by him before his bankruptcy) to give in evidence privileged communications then made, though offered in proof of the act of bankruptcy (Merle v. More, 1 Ry. & M. 390). As to the admission of the declarations of a bankrupt relative to past transactions, the general rule is, that they ought not to be received to explain any past transaction, which at the time of making the declaration was completely finished (Robson v. Kemp, 4 Esp. 233); for to admit such declarations would be, in effect, to receive an admission by the bankrupt, that he had committed an act of bankruptcy (2 Ph. Ev. 287); but *a letter of the bankrupt, written previous to his [*428] bankruptcy, and nearly contemporaneous with the act done by him, is admissible in evidence, to explain the motives of the act. And, in a case at nisi prius (which was an action brought by the assignees to recover back money paid to a deft., on the ground of a fraudulent preference), Best, Lord C. J., acted up to the full extent of this principle, by admitting a letter of the bankrupt in evidence (though written five months before the commission issued, explaining the embarrassed state of his affairs), in order to show that, when the bankrupt made the particular payment in question to the deft., he had his bankruptcy then in contemplation (Bacon v. Maine, cited Deac. 798; and see ante, p. 75).

So, an entry in the bankrupt's books, or an account signed by him, charging himself, if made before the bankruptcy, are evidence of the debt (Watts v. Thorpe, 1 Camp. 376; Howie v. Coryton, 4 Taunt. 560). An acknowledgment by the bankrupt that, before the act of bankruptcy, he owed the petitioning creditor above 100%, made before the issuing of the commission, is evidence to prove the petitioning creditor's debt (Downton v. Cross, 1 Esp. 168). But an admission of the debt made after the bankruptcy, but before the issuing of the commission, is not evidence (Smallcomb v. Bruges, M'Cle. 48; 13 Pri. 136). Where, however, the debt was founded on a bill of exchange, of which the bankrupt was drawer, a declaration of the bankrupt made after the bankruptcy and before the commission, that the bill would not be paid, was held admissible to supply proof of notice (Breet v. Levett, 13 East, 213). In Abbott v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 217, where the debt arose on a bond, an acknowledgment of the debt by the bankrupt obligor was held not to dispense with the ordinary proof of the bond; sed quære, for admissions will now dispense with proof of a written instrument. An I O U bearing date before the bankruptcy of a trader, constitutes no evidence of a petitioning creditor's debt without some proof that it was in existence before the bankruptcy (Wright v. Lainson, 2 M. & W. 739). In an action by a bankrupt to try the validity of the commission, proof that the bankrupt and petitioning creditor attended the second meeting of the commissioners, and discussed before them the debt due to the petitioning creditor, and produced their accounts and that the bankrupt objected to part of the petitioning creditor's account, and that the commissioners ticked off such items in it as they allowed, and struck a balance of 169%, was held evidence for the jury of an implied admission by the bankrupt, from his conduct and demeanor before the commissioners, that such a balance was due, but not of an adjudication by them by their own authority, or of an award made by them with the consent of parties, and therefore, where it had been so left to the jury, the court granted a new trial (Jarrett v. Leonard, 2 M. & S. 265).

Declarations made by a bankrupt, before and after the issuing of a commission against him, are admissible in evidence to show that it was founded on fraud (Lloyd v. Heathcote, 2 B. & B. 388). A declaration made by a bankrupt previous to his bankruptcy, "that he did not owe 10*l.* to any one," and inquired whether a friendly commission could not be sued out against him, is admissible in evidence to show a collusion between the bankrupt and petitioning creditor to create a debt, although the latter was not an assignee under the commission (Thompson v. Bridges, 2 Moo. 376).

Admissibility in Evidence of Depositions, and the Proceedings under the Commission.] See ante, pp. 349, 353. The examination of the bankrupt taken before the commissioners, is admissible as evidence *against himself, [*429] even though the questions were improperly put to him, with a view to the action (Stockfleth v. De Tastet, 4 Camp. 10; see Robson v. Alexander, 1 M. & P. 448; R. v. Wheaton, 2 Moo. C. C. 203; Tucker v. Barrow, 7 B. & C. 322; see ante, "ADMISSIONS," p. 82); or though they exposed him to penalties (Smith v. Beadnell, 1 Camp. 40). And the examination of any party is evidence against himself, if he has signed it after he has read it (Hammond v. Myers, 3 Atk. 415); and it is admissible, though not taken down word for word, but only the substance of what appeared to be relevant (Milward v. Forbes, 4 Esp. 172). If the party refer in his examination to written documents, they may be read as part of his examination (Falconer v. Hanson, 1 Camp. 171); but parol evidence is admissible to explain it (Wilson v. Poulter, 2 Stra. 794). The examination of a third person, however, has been held to be inadmissible against a party to the suit (3 Atk. 415). And, where a creditor has taken the bankrupt's goods in execution, after an act of bankruptcy, and assigned them to B., the creditor's examination, taken under the commission, was holden not admissible, in an action by the assignees against B. (Deady v. Harrison, 1 Stark. 60). The examination of a bankrupt under another commission, is not (in event of his death) evidence upon a petition in his bankruptcy to expunge the debt of a creditor (Ex parte Campbell, 2 Rose, 51). Where deft. pleaded a set-off in an action brought against him by assignees, his own deposition in proof of a debt before the commissioners was held inadmissible (Pirie v. Menneitt, 3 Camp. 279). Those depositions only which are read in support of the party's case upon the trial, are to be considered as given in evidence, and the opposite party has no right to inspect any other deposition for the purpose of cross-examining a witness; but he may afterwards call for the deposition of the witness, and read it in evidence, for the purpose of contradicting him (Black v. Thorne, 4 Camp. 191; Stafford v. Clarke, 1 Carr. 26; see ante, "ADMISSIONS"). If the plts. put in evidence an examination of deft. before the commissioners of bankrupts, his admissions against himself are evidence against him, but his statements in his own favour are not evidence for him (Groom v. Richardson, 5 Jur. 1061, B. C.).

It was formerly established, that the solicitor to the commission was bound to produce the proceedings, when served with a subpoena duces tecum (Cohen v. Templar, 2 Stark. 260; Corsen v. Dubois, Holt, 239; 5 Esp. 91); though it was previously doubted (Bateson v. Hartsink, 4 Esp. 43). But, though the solicitor was bound to produce the proceedings and books of the bankrupt, the evidence must be confined to entries relative to the matters in issue (R. & M., 64). It was held that the solicitor was not bound to produce them in a collateral action, to which neither the assignees nor the bankrupt were parties, and where the production might tend to the detriment of the assignees (Laing v. Barclay, 3 Stark. 38). But now, by the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 56; 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 114; and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, the proceedings are all kept in the Court of Bankruptcy, and are produced by the Registrar.

II. ACTIONS AGAINST ASSIGNEES.

Form of Remedy and Pleadings.

Actions against assignees are brought in general by the bankrupt to try the validity of the fiat, or by others who claim a right to property taken under the fiat by the assignees.

*The form of remedy and pleadings will be the same as in ordinary cases, the assignees of a bankrupt never being liable as assignees. [*430] The rule of H. T. 4 Will. IV. does not apply to assignees when debts.

By sect. 190 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, it is enacted, "that no action for any dividend shall be brought against any assignee by any creditor who shall have proved under the bankruptcy; but if the official assignee shall refuse to pay any such dividend, the court may order payment thereof, with interest for the time that it shall have been withheld, and may also order the costs of the application."

Sect. 145. "That if the assignees of the estate and effects of any bankrupt having or being entitled to any land, either under a conveyance to him in fee or under an agreement for any such conveyance, subject to any perpetual yearly rent reserved by such conveyance or agreement, or having or being entitled to any lease or agreement for a lease, shall elect to take such land or the benefit of such conveyance or agreement, or such lease or agreement for a lease, as the case may be, the bankrupt shall not be liable to pay any rent accruing after the issuing of the fiat or filing of the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against him, or to be sued in respect of any subsequent non-observance or non-performance of the conditions, covenants, or agreements in any such conveyance or agreement, or lease or agreement for a lease." The assignees therefore, where they make election, will be the proper parties to be sued (see Bourailon v. Dalton, Pea. 238; Turner v. Richardson, 7 East, 335; Copeland v. Stephens, 1 B. & A. 593). The assignees may however discharge themselves from future liability by assigning their interest in the premises, even to a pauper (Taylor v. Slum, 1 B. & P. 21). So, where they elect to abide by and execute any agreement entered into by the bankrupt, for the purchase of any estate or interest in land, they will be liable for the breach of such agreement (see sect. 146, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106). The provisional assignee of a bankrupt was not liable, under 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, for the fraud of an agent appointed with due care (Raw v. Cutton, 9 Bing. 96). The assignees are not liable to be sued by the messenger under the fiat, for fees due to him before the choice of assignees, the petitioning creditor being the party answerable for these expenses (Burwood v. Felton, 3 B. & C. 43; Hartop v. Jukes; see 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 14). But when assignees personally contract or receive money to the use of another, they are personally liable (Ridout v. Brough, Cowp. 134; Randoll v. Bell, 1 M. & S. 714; Lord Ellenborough, C. J. diss. An assignee who has been removed, and assigned his interest to his co-assignees, may be sued by them (Smith v. Jameson, Pea. 213). Trover lies by a bankrupt against his assignees, if the plt. was not subject to the bankrupt laws (Summersett v. Jarvis, 3 B. & B. 216; Moo. 56).

By sect. 41 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, it is enacted, "that no official assignee shall be personally responsible or liable for any act done by him, or by his order or authority, in the execution of his duty as such official assignee, by reason of the petitioning creditor's debt, trading, or act of bankruptcy upon which any adjudication of bankruptcy shall have been grounded, or of any or either of such matters, being insufficient to support such adjudication; and no official assignee shall be deemed personally answerable for or by reason of his having received any money, bills, notes, or other negotiable instruments under any bankruptcy in his character of official assignee, provided he shall have paid and deposited such money, bills, notes, and other negotiable instruments during the prosecution of the bankruptcy to and in the Bank of England to the credit of the *accountant in bankruptcy for [*431] the particular estate for which such money, bills, notes, or other negotiable instruments shall have been received, and shall have given notice of such payment or deposit (as the case may be) to any person claiming such money, bills, notes, or other negotiable instruments of the official assignee, and provided also, that the official assignee, after such payment or deposit, shall not have dealt with such money, bills, notes, or other negotiable instruments otherwise than in the execution of his duty as official assignee, and under the order of the court; and if any action shall be brought against the official assignee, either solely or jointly with the creditor's assignee, in respect of such money, bills, notes, or other negotiable instruments, it shall be lawful for a judge of the court in which the same shall be brought upon application of the official assignee, and upon an affidavit of facts, to set aside the proceedings in such action so far as the official assignee is concerned, with such costs, or without costs, as to the judge shall seem meet."

Evidence for Plaintiff.

This will be the same as in ordinary cases; the assignees are not personally liable to be sued by any creditor, even in respect of effects in their hands, as he must prove his debt, and accept the dividend payable to him.

By the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 234, it is enacted, "that in any action, other than an action brought by the assignees for any debt or demand for which the bankrupt might have sustained an action had he not been adjudged bankrupt, and whether at the suit of or against the assignees, or against any person acting under the warrant of the court, for anything done under such warrant, no proof shall be required, at the trial, of the petitioning creditor's debt, or of the trading or act of bankruptcy respectively, unless the other party in such action shall, if debt. at or before pleading, and if plt. before issue joined, give notice in writing to such assignees or other person that he intends to dispute some and which of such matters; and in case such notice shall have been given, if such assignees or other person shall prove the matter so disputed, or the other party admit the same, the judge before whom the cause shall be tried may (if he think fit) grant a certificate of such proof or admission; and such assignees or other person shall be entitled to the costs occasioned by such notice; and such costs shall, if such assignees or other person shall obtain a verdict, be added to the costs, and if the other party shall obtain a verdict, shall be deducted from the costs which such other party would otherwise be entitled to receive from such assignees or other person."

Where the plt. in trover claimed goods which the debt. took as being in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, but gave no notice to prove the petitioning creditor's debt, it was held enough for the debt. to put in the proceedings (Fawcett v. Fearn, 6 Q. B. 25, n. b; see Simmonds v. Knight, 3 Camp. 251; Gilman v. Cousins, 2 Stark. 182). If the assignees are strangers to the record, as where the debts set up their title in ejectment, that title must be regularly and strictly proved (Doe v. Liston, 4 Taunt. 741). The bankrupt may be estopped by his own acts or admissions from disputing his bankruptcy (ante, p. 427).

The assignees cannot be sued for the dividend (supra). They cannot be sued, as such, for goods sold to them (Ridout v. Brough, Cowp. 134-5); nor can they be sued for fees due to the messenger before the choice of assignees (Burwood v. Felton, 3 B. & C. 43; ante, p. 430.) As to their liability for attorney's costs, ante, p. 253. *By the recent act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, with reference to costs, it is enacted, by sect. [*432] 249, "that the court may in all matters before it award such costs as to such court shall seem fit and just; and in all cases in which costs shall be so awarded against any person, it shall and may be lawful for such court to cause such costs to be recovered from such person in the same manner as costs awarded by a rule of any of the superior courts at Westminster may be recovered, and that the like remedies may be had upon an order of such court for costs as upon a rule of any of the said superior courts for costs."

And if the assignees do not take possession of the bankrupt's estate, they will not be liable to the performance of covenants (Turner v. Richardson, 7 East, 335; see ante, p. 430); as to what amounts to such taking possession, see post, "COVENANT," "LANDLORD AND TENANT." When an assignee is removed, and he has assigned his interest to his co-assignees, he may be sued by them (Pea. C. 213); and assignees who personally contract (4 Taunt. 754), or receive money for the use of another (1 M. & S. 714), may be sued on their own personal responsibility, though not in the character of assignees. Where the bankrupt, as the agent of the assignees, is permitted to carry on the business for the benefit of the creditors, and not on his own account, the assignees are liable for goods supplied for the purposes of the business, even although the credit were given in the bankrupt's own name (Kinder v. Howarth, 2 Stark. 354; and see 1 Atk. 86, 90; Ambl. 218; 1 Ken. 38). The assignees were liable to the commissioners upon their covenant for indemnity contained in the assignment; and, if the commissioners were damnified contrary to the terms and meaning of the covenant, the court would not restrain them from bringing an action on it (16 Ves. 234). It need hardly be noticed, that if the assignees seize or retain property which does not pass to them under the assignment, they will be personally liable, and the owner of it may maintain an action against them in respect of it. As to the proof of commencement of action, ante, p. 216.

Evidence for Defendant.

On the part of the defendants, if they justify as assignees, the petitioning creditor's debt, the trading, the act of bankruptcy, the fiat, and assignment, must be proved, as well as the special matter of defence. We have, however, already seen when strict proof of the above first three requisites of a commission may be dispensed with, from the want of a notice disputing them, &c. (ante, p. 349); also, the nature and mode of such proof (ante, p. 348 et seq.). Those observations will be here applicable as to proof of the fiat and assignment (ante, p. 349). As to proof of commencement of action, ante, p. 216.

Where the plt. sues in trespass for breaking his house and taking his furniture the assignee may show on a plea, denying the property of the plt., that they were fraudulently assigned to him by the bankrupt before the bankruptcy (Smith v. Groom, 2 Moo. & R. 388); and under the same plea in trover, they may show that the goods passed to them as being in the order and disposition of the bankrupt (Isaac v. Belcher, 5 M. & W. 139).

Statute of Limitations.] By sect. 159 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, it is enacted, "that every action brought against any person for anything done in pursuance of this act shall be commenced within three months [*433] next after the fact committed; and the defendant in any *such action may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence at the trial, and that the same was done by authority of this act; and if it shall appear so to have been done, or that such action was commenced after the time limited as aforesaid for bringing the same, the jury shall find for the deft.; and if there be a verdict for the deft., or if the plt. shall be nonsuited, or discontinue his action or suit after appearance thereto, or if upon demurrer judgment shall be given against the plt., the deft. shall receive such full and reasonable indemnity as to all costs, charges, and expenses incurred in and about any such action as shall be taxed by the proper officer in that behalf, subject to be reviewed in like manner and by the same authority as any other taxation of costs by such officer."

Under a similar provision in 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 44, it was held that the limitation did not apply to the seizure by assignees of property of third persons (Edge v. Parker, 8 B. & C. 701), for they act by virtue of the property in the goods vesting or claimed to vest in them, and not by virtue of any special powers given by the statute (Knight v. Turquand, 2 M. & W. 105). The right construction of the section is that if the assignee does an act directed by the statute but does it erroneously, he is protected, but if he does the act as the result of his ownership of that which was the bankrupt's property, and not by the direction of the statute, it is not done in pursuance of the statute, and he is responsible for it (Edge v. Parker, supra; see Carruthers v. Payne, 5 Bing. 270).

III. ACTIONS BY BANKRUPT.

Form of Remedy and Pleadings.

We have under the preceding head noticed the cases of actions by bankrupts against assignees to try the validity of the fiat; the forms of remedy and pleadings in actions by bankrupts will be the same as in ordinary cases. The plt.'s bankruptcy might formerly be given in evidence under the general issue (Webb v. Fox, 7 T. R. 396; B. N. P. 153; Norton v. Shakespeare, 15 East, 622; 3 Camp. 236). But it now must be pleaded specially in assumpsit and debt (see Pitt v. Chappellow, 8 M. & W. 616). But in trover such a plea would amount to a traverse of the property, under which it might be given in evidence (see Fyson v. Chambers, 9 M. & W. 460, 463, 464). In trespass for breaking and entering plt.'s dwelling-house, making a noise therein, and damaging the doors, &c., and trees of gardens, &c.; and seizing goods and exposing them for sale on the premises, without plt.'s leave; plea in bar of the further maintenance of the action, that plt. became bankrupt after action brought, and that an assignee had been appointed, who accepted the appointment, whereby and by virtue of the statutes, &c., the causes of action became vested in the assignees; demurrer and judgment for plt.: held, on error affirming the judgment, that the plea was bad, and that the primary personal injury to the bankrupt being the principal and essential cause of action, it still remained in the bankrupt, and did not pass to his assignees (Rogers v. Spence, 13 M. & W. 751).

When the plea is pleaded to an action ex contractu, it is not good unless it shows that the assignees have interfered (Herbert v. Sayer, 5 Q. B. 965; 2 D. & L. 49). The bankruptcy of a sole plt. is an issuable plea (Willes v. Hallett, 5 Bing. N. C. 565); but the bankruptcy of one of two plts. is not (Staples v. Holdsworth, 6 Dowl. 196; 4 Bing. N. C. 144). If the bankruptcy arose after the writ was issued, *and before plea [*434] pleaded, the plea should be in bar of the further maintenance of the action. If after plea pleaded it must be puis darrein continuance, and this plea must be pleaded within eight days after the matter of such defence arises (Arch. Pr. 823; see Lovell v. Eastaff, 3 T. R. 554; Duff v. Campbell, 3 B. & A. 577; Biggs v. Cox, 7 B. & C. 409; Bretherton v. Osborne, 1 Dowl. 457; see post, p. 435). See a plea that the plt. has been twice a bankrupt, and that he did not pay 15s. in the pound on the second fiat (Young v. Rickworth, 8 Ad. & E. 470). But it must be averred that the assignees have interfered (Herbert v. Sayer, 2 D. & L. 109; 5 Q. B. 965). It is an issuable plea (Mackay v. Wood, 7 M. & W. 420). Quære, whether the section 127, 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, and 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 56, under which this plea was pleaded, are not now repealed by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106; post, p. 441.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

The proof of the cause of action will be the same as in ordinary cases. Plt. should be prepared with evidence to rebut the deft.'s evidence against plt.'s title to sue; upon which head it should be observed, that if he have not obtained his certificate, his after-acquired property may, no doubt, be claimed by his assignees (ante, 403); but, although uncertificated, he may maintain an action for his personal labour performed since the issuing of the fiat (Chippendale v. Tomlinson, Cook, 428); 1 Esp. 140; or with relation to his after-acquired property (Webb v. Fox, 7 T. R. 391; Fowler v. Down, 1 B. & P. 44; 1 Esp. 170; Pea. 140); or sue upon any contract made with him (Cuming v. Roebuck, Holt, C. 172; Drayton v. Dale, 2 B. & C. 293; 3 D. & R. 534); if the assignees do not interfere (Kitchen v. Bartsch, 7 Ea. 53; Herbert v. Sayers, 5 Q. B. 965). They have vested in them a right to interfere and claim the property; and, if they do make any claim, it is effectual against the bankrupt and all the world: but if they do not interfere, then as between the bankrupt (or one claiming under him) and his debtor the latter cannot set up their title, but the bankrupt has a right, in a court of law, to enforce payment of his debt (per Abbott, C. J., Drayton v. Dale, 2 B. & C. 293). Even where the assignees of a bankrupt employed him in carrying on the manufacture for the benefit of the creditors, and paid him money from time to time, this was holden evidence of such a contract between him and his assignees, as would enable him to recover from them a reasonable compensation for his work and labour (Coles v. Barrow, 4 Taunt. 774). The bankrupt may bring an action against any person who has seized his goods or taken possession of his house, &c., under the fiat, or against them by whose direction it has been done, in order to try the validity of the commission (Bryant v. Withers, 2 M. & S. 123, 131; 9 East, 21); as to when he is precluded contesting his fiat, ante, p. 349, 350, 352; and as to what steps he must take to contest it, ante, 349, 350; as to other actions in which he may sue, see ante, p. 342.

Evidence for Defendant.

This will consist in disproving plt.'s title to sue, by showing the assignees have interfered, &c. (supra); or the cause of action.

By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 155, it is enacted, "that all persons from whom the assignees shall have recovered any real or personal estate, either by judgment or decree, are hereby discharged, in case that fiat be afterwards superseded, or the adjudication of bankruptcy, or petition for adjudication, be afterwards annulled or dismissed, *from all demands [*435] which may thereafter be made in respect of the same by the person against whom the adjudication was made, and all persons claiming under him; and all persons who shall, without action or suit, bona fide deliver up possession of any real or personal estate to the assignees, or pay any debt claimed by them, are hereby discharged from all claim of any such person as aforesaid in respect of the same, or any person claiming under him, provided the persons so delivering up any real or personal estate, or paying any debt, shall not have had notice of an action, suit, or other proceeding to dispute or annul the fiat or adjudication or petition for adjudication, and such action, suit, or other proceeding shall not have been commenced and prosecuted within the time and in manner allowed by this act."
Vol. I.

As to where money which has been paid into court under sect. 158 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, is paid out to the assignees, see ante, p. 425.

IV. ACTIONS AGAINST BANKRUPT.

Form of Remedy and Pleadings.

These will be the same as in ordinary cases, with the exception of the plea, that the defendant is discharged from liability by his certificate, and with respect to which, by the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 205, it is enacted, "that any bankrupt who shall, after his certificate shall have been allowed, be arrested, or have any action brought against him, for any debt, claim, or demand proveable under his bankruptcy, shall be discharged upon entering an appearance, and may plead in general that the cause of action accrued before he became bankrupt, and may give this act and the special matter in evidence; and such bankrupt's certificate shall be sufficient evidence of the trading, bankruptcy, fiat, or petition for adjudication, and other proceedings precedent to the obtaining such certificate. As to the evidence, and what causes are barred by the certificate, see post, p. 439; Arch. B. L. 10th ed. 348, 119, 182. The certificate cannot be given in evidence under the general issue (Gowland v. Warren, Eden, 348, 119—182; 1 Camp. 363; Stedman v. Martremant, 12 East, 664); but the deft. may plead the general issue as well as any other plea. This general plea of bankruptcy allowed by the above act, can be pleaded only in cases where the act of bankruptcy took place before the suit was commenced (6 East, 413; 4 T. R. 516; 5 Esp. 90), and the certificate was obtained before plea pleaded (Harris v. James, 9 East, 82). So it is sufficient, where an action is brought for the recovery of a debt or demand contracted before, though not payable until after, the act of bankruptcy or fiat, or of a debt bona fide contracted and payable after the act of bankruptcy, and before the fiat, and which is recoverable by virtue of this act (Charlton v. King, 4 T. R. 156; Stedman v. Martremant, 12 East, 664; Attwood v. Partridge, 4 Bing. 209; Westcott v. Hodges, 5 B. & A. 12); but it is not applicable where the claim is for damages, and not for a debt (Green v. Bicknell, 8 Ad. & E. 701). A public officer of a company cannot plead his own bankruptcy, in bar of an action against him in his character of public officer (Stewart v. Dunn, 11 M. & W. 63). The general plea of bankruptcy is only given to a bankrupt when sued; in other cases all the proceedings must be set forth (Pitt v. Chappe- low, 8 M. & W. 616). Where both the bankruptcy and certificate are after action brought, the plea must be special; so, where a surety brings an action for money paid by him after the issuing of the *commission, the plea must be special (Stedman v. Martremant, 12 East, 664); so, [*436] if the cause of action be barred by the certificate, but the certificate be not obtained until after plea pleaded, it must be pleaded specially puis darrein continuance, stating the proceedings (6 T. R. 605-7; Todd v. Maxfield, 6 B. & C. 105; see form, Dunn v. Hill, 2 Dowl. N. S. 1062). The plea must be pleaded within eight days after the defence arose, unless a judge give further time (see Arch. Pr. 8th ed.; ante, p. 433). A judge must receive the plea (Ludlow v. Tyler, 7 C. & P. 537). The deft., by pleading this plea, abandons all former pleas (Arch. Pr. supra); plt. may discontinue after it without paying costs (Woollen v. Smith, 9 Ad. & E. 505); and, if deft. neglects to plead it, and judgment is obtained against him, he cannot plead his certificate to an action on such judgment (6 B. & C. 105).

As to the form of the general plea, it is not necessary to aver that the deft. became a bankrupt before the commencement of the action (Tower v. Cameron, 6 East, 413, supra). It is necessary to show, that the causes of action accrued before the deft. became a bankrupt, and this even though the cause of action was not actually completed before the act of bankruptcy (4 T. R. 156; 5 B. & A. 17). As to the form of the plea, see Charlton v. King, 4 T. R. 155; Sheen v. Garrett, 6 Bing. 688; Wheatly v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 537, per Parke, B., post, p. 437. This plea should conclude to the country (Sheen v. Garrett, 6 Bing. 686; see Miles v. Williams, 1 P. Wms. 258; 10 Mod. 160, 247; Wheatley v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 537; but see Lobb v. Stanley, 5 Q. B. 573). It requires no signature. In the special plea of bankruptcy, all the proceedings should be set forth (1 B. & P. 448). In a special plea of bankruptcy, &c., after action brought, the prayer against the plt.'s right further to maintain his action is necessary (6 T. R. 597). As to plea of deft.'s petition and final discharge, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 211, see Ch. jun. Pl. 257.

A plea by a bankrupt that the plt. had elected to prove under the commission (see 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 59) is bad (Harly v. Greenwood, 5 B. & A. 95).

By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 202, it is enacted, "that any contract or security made or given by any bankrupt or other person unto or in trust for any creditor, for securing the payment of any money due by such bankrupt at his bankruptcy, as a consideration or with intent to persuade such creditor to forbear opposing, or to consent to the allowance of the bankrupt's certificate, or to forbear to petition for the recall of the same, shall be void, and the money thereby secured or agreed to be paid shall not be recoverable, and the party sued on such contract or security may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence."

Sect. 204. "That no bankrupt, after his certificate shall have been allowed, shall be liable to pay or satisfy any debt, claim, or demand from which he shall have been discharged by virtue of such certificate, or any part of such debt, claim, or demand, upon any contract, promise, or agreement made after the issuing of the fiat or filing of the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, and if any bankrupt be sued upon any such contract, promise, or agreement, he may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence."

Sect. 221. "That so soon as the said resolution or agreement shall have been carried into effect, and the creditors of such petitioning trader shall have been satisfied, according to the tenor thereof, the court shall give to such petitioner a certificate under the hand and seal of the commissioner in the form contained in the Schedule (A c) *to this act annexed, set-[*437] ting forth the filing of the petition, the resolution or agreement of the creditors, and that the said resolution or agreement has been fully carried into effect; and such certificate shall thenceforth operate to all intents and purposes as fully as if the same were a certificate of conformity under a bankruptcy, except only that any debt which shall have been contracted wholly or in part by reason of any manner of fraud or breach of trust, or without reasonable probability at the time of contract of being able to pay the same, or by reason of any judgment in any prosecution for breach of the revenue laws, or in any action for breach of promise of marriage, seduction, criminal conversation, libel, slander, assault, battery, malicious arrest, malicious trespass, maliciously suing out a fiat in bankruptcy, or maliciously filing or prosecuting a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, shall not be barred by such certificate."

With respect to the replication, the usual similiter is proper to the general plea of bankruptcy; a special replication would be bad, on special demurrer (Wilson v. Kemp, 2 M. & S. 549; S. C. 3 Campb. 499, n. (a); Hughes v. Morley, 1 B. & A. 22). Under this similiter, any acts rendering the certificate void or inoperative may be given in evidence, either in respect of the grounds mentioned in the act, or on account of fraud, &c. (lb.); see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106; Horn v. Ion, 4 B. & Ad. 78). In the case of the bankruptcy and certificate of one of several debtors, he need not be made a deft. but if joined and he plead his certificate, plt. may reply, or enter a nolle prosequi as to him, and proceed against the other debtors (Noke v. Ingham, 1 Wils. 89; Moravia v. Hunter, 2 M. & S. 444; Grant v. Jackson, Pea. 203). To the special plea of bankruptcy, the replication must be special; and as to how to reply, see 3 Taunt. 287.

By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 224, it is enacted, "that every deed or memorandum of arrangement now or hereafter entered into between any such trader and his creditors, and signed by or on behalf of six-sevenths in number and value of those creditors whose debts amount to 10*l.* and upwards, touching such trader's liabilities, and his release therefrom, and the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, and mode of winding up of his estate, or all or any of such matters, or any matters having reference thereto, shall (subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned) be as effectual and obligatory in all respects upon all the creditors who shall not have signed such deed or memorandum of arrangement as if they had duly signed the same; and such deed or memorandum, when so signed, shall not be or be liable to be disturbed or impeached by reason of any prior or subsequent act of bankruptcy: provided always, that every creditor shall be accounted a creditor in value in respect of such amount only as, upon an account fairly stated, after allowing the value of mortgaged property and other such available securities or liens from such trader, shall appear to be the balance due to him."

Sect. 225. "That no such deed or memorandum of arrangement shall be effectual or obligatory upon any creditor who shall not have signed the same, until after the expiration of three months from the time at which such creditor shall have had notice from such trader of his suspension of payment, and of such deed or memorandum of arrangement, unless such trader shall within such time obtain from the court an order or certificate of the said court declaring or certifying that such deed or memorandum of arrangement has been duly signed by or on behalf of such majority of the creditors as aforesaid; and it shall be lawful for the court within the district of which the traders shall have resided or carried on business for six months next im-

or certificate on the petition of any such trader, and to exercise jurisdiction in and over the matters of any such application; and no creditor who shall not have had fourteen days' notice of any intended application for such order or certificate as aforesaid shall be bound thereby."

Sect. 226. "That when the trustee or inspector under any such deed or memorandum of arrangement, or, if there shall be no such trustee or inspector, when any two of the creditors, shall be satisfied that six-sevenths in number and value of the creditors whose debts amount to 10*l*. and upwards have signed such deed or memorandum, it shall be lawful for such trustee or inspector, or for such two creditors, as the case may be, to certify the same to the court in writing, and such certificate shall be filed with the registrar of the court, and shall thereupon be prima facie evidence in all courts of law and equity that such deed or memorandum of arrangement has been so signed."

Sect. 227. "That every such certificate as last aforesaid shall have appended thereto a full account of the debts of such trader, together with the names, residences, and occupations of his creditors, and shall be accompanied by an affidavit by such trader verifying the same; and any omission in such account or the insertion therein of any debt not really existing, or of any larger amount of debt than that really existing, and which shall appear to the court to have been made through the culpable negligence or fraud of such trader, with intent to defraud any of his creditors, shall deprive him of the benefit of the provisions of this act with respect to arrangements by deed, and of the discharge proposed in any such deed or memorandum of arrangement: provided always, that any omission, insertion, or incorrectness in such account, which shall not have been made through such culpable negligence or fraud as aforesaid, shall not defeat or otherwise affect such deed or memorandum of arrangement."

Sect. 228. "That the creditors of every such trader shall have the same rights respectively as to set-off, mutual credit, lien, and priority, and joint and separate assets shall be distributed, in like manner as in bankruptcy; and no creditor shall be prejudiced or affected by being a party to any such deed or memorandum of arrangement aforesaid, or by the same being obligatory upon him as to his right or remedy against any person other than such trader; and every person who would be entitled to prove in bankruptcy shall be deemed a creditor within the meaning of the provisions of this act with respect to arrangements by deed."

Sect. 230. "That any bankrupt, at any time after he shall have passed his last examination, may call a meeting of his creditors (whereof, and of the purport whereof, twenty-one days' notice shall be given in the London Gazette), and if the bankrupt or his friends shall make an offer of composition, and nine-tenths in number and value of the creditors assembled at such meeting shall agree to accept the same, another meeting for the purpose of deciding upon such offer shall be appointed to be holden, whereof such notice shall be given as aforesaid, and if at such second meeting nine-tenths in number and value of the creditors then present shall also agree to accept such offer, the court shall and may, upon such acceptance being testified by them in writing, and upon payment of such sum as the court shall direct, annul the adjudication of bankruptcy, and supersede or dismiss the fiat or petition for adjudication, and every creditor of such bankrupt shall be bound to accept of such composition so agreed to."

Sect. 231. "That in deciding upon the offer of composition no *creditor whose debt is below 20*l*. shall be reckoned in number, [*439] but the debt due to such creditor shall be computed in value; and every creditor to the amount of 50*l*. and upwards residing out of England shall be personally served with a copy of the notice of the meeting to decide upon such offer as aforesaid, and of the purpose for which the same is called, so long before such meeting as that he may have time to vote thereat, and such creditor shall be entitled to vote by letter of attorney, executed and attested in manner required for a creditor's voting in the choice of assignees; and if any creditor shall agree to accept any gratuity or higher composition for assenting to such offer, he shall forfeit the debt due to him, together with such gratuity or composition; and the bankrupt shall (if thereto required) make oath before the court that there has been no such transaction between him, or any person with his privity, and any of the creditors, and that he has not used any undue means or influence with any of them to attain such assent."

Precedents.

In the Q. B. (C. P., or Ex. of Pleas). On the day of A. D. 1850.

Plea of bankruptcy of deflt. to action of assumpsit.

And the deflt., by his attorney, saith, that heretofore and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c. [date of certificate,] he, the deflt., became a bankrupt, within the true intent and meaning of the statute in force concerning bankrupts; and that the supposed causes of action in the said declaration mentioned, and each of them, did accrue to the plt. before the deflt. so became a bankrupt; and of this he, the said deflt., puts himself upon the country, &c.

Plea of bankruptcy of deflt. after the commencement of the suit.

And the deflt., by his attorney, says, that the plt. ought not further to maintain this action; because he says, that the deflt., before and at the time of his becoming bankrupt, and of the petition and adjudication hereinafter mentioned, was a trader, to wit, [the trade carried on by him] within and subject to the statutes then in force concerning bankrupts, and as such trader heretofore, to wit, some day about the date, &c., of the petition,] became and was indebted to one C. D. [petitioning creditor,] in the sum of [sum sworn to,] for a true and just debt; and thereupon the deflt., so being such trader, and being and continuing so indebted as aforesaid, afterwards, and after the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid became and was a bankrupt, within the true intent and meaning of the statute in that case made and provided; and thereupon the said last-mentioned debt continuing due, the deflt. afterwards, and within twelve months after the deflt. so became bankrupt, and after the 11th day of October, A. D. 1849 [IN WORDS AT LENGTH], to wit, on [the day and year aforesaid,] the Court of Bankruptcy acting in London [or in and for the district], did, upon the petition of the said C. D., and affidavit of the truth of the allegation therein, duly filed according to the statute in that behalf, and upon due proof of the petitioning creditor's debt, and of the trading and act of bankruptcy of the deflt. in due form of law, find and adjudge that the deflt. had become and was a bankrupt according to the true intent and meaning of the statute in that behalf, which adjudication still remains in full force, as by the said adjudication duly filed and now remaining of record, in the said Court of Bankruptcy, reference being thereunto had will fully appear; and the deflt. further saith, that forthwith, after the said adjudication, one A. B. then and still being one of the official assignees of the said Court of Bankruptcy duly appointed in that behalf, was by the said court appointed to be the official assignee of the estate and effects of the said deflt. under the said adjudication, to act with the assignee or assignees to be thereafter chosen by the creditors of the said *bankrupt, as by the memo-
[*440] randum of said appointment now remaining of record in the said Court of Bankruptcy, reference being thereunto had, will more fully appear. And that afterwards, and after the expiration of seven days from the service of a duplicate of such adjudication upon the deflt., to wit, on, &c. [day of notice in Gazette,] the said [or district] Court of Bankruptcy caused due notice of such adjudication to be given and published in the London Gazette, and thereby, according to the said statute, duly appointed two public sittings of the said [or district] court, to be holden at the Court of Bankruptcy in Basinghall Street, in the city of London [or as the case may be,] for the deflt. to surrender and conform, the last of which sittings was thereby appointed for and on a day not less than 30 days and not exceeding 60 days from such advertisement, to wit, on, &c. [day of last meet- ing.] such said last-mentioned day being the day limited for such surrender of the deft. And the deft. further saith, that such two several sittings were had pursuant to such notice, and that before three of the clock upon the said last-mentioned day, the deft., at the place so appointed in that behalf, duly surrendered himself to the said court, and signed and subscribed such surrender, and then and there submitted to be from time to time examined upon oath, and finished his examination upon oath before the said court; and, upon such his examination, made a full disclosure and discovery of his estate and effects. And the deft. further saith, that, having so duly surrendered and passed his last examination, and in all things duly conformed himself to the law in force concerning bankrupts, afterwards, to wit, on, &c.

the said Court [or district court] of Bankruptcy, appointed a public sitting of the said court for the allowance of the certificate of conformity to the said deft. as such bankrupt, as aforesaid, to be holden at [state the place,] on the day of

A. D. , pursuant to the statute in that case made and provided, of which said last-mentioned meeting and of the purport thereof, 21 days' notice was given in the London Gazette and to the solicitor to the assignees, according to the said statute; and on the last-mentioned day, at a public sitting pursuant to such notice, the said Court [or district court] of Bankruptcy having regard to the conformity of the deft. as such bankrupt, as aforesaid, and as to his conduct as a trader before as well as after his bankruptcy, found the deft. as such bankrupt, as aforesaid, entitled to the said certificate of conformity, and then allowed and awarded him the same; and then, by writing, under the seal of the said Court and hand of E. F. Esq., then being one of the commissioners of, and then constituting the said Court, and then duly acting as such in the prosecution of the said petition for adjudication, certified in manner and form as by the said statute is directed, that the deft. as such bankrupt, had made a full disclosure and discovery of his estate and effects, and in all things conformed, and so far as the court could judge, there did not appear any reason to question the truth or fulness of such discovery. And the deft. further saith, that the said several causes of action in the declaration mentioned, and each and every of them accrued, to the plt. before the deft. so became bankrupt as aforesaid; and this the deft. is ready to verify. Wherefore he prays judgment if the plt. ought further to maintain his aforesaid action thereof against him, &c.—Signature.

Other precedents.

See other precedents of plea of bankruptcy in Ireland (Ch. Pl. by Pearson, 260). To an action for money paid, the bankruptcy of deft., and that the money was paid by plt. as a security for the debt of the deft. before his bankruptcy, Jackson v. Magee, 3 Q. B. 48.

Evidence for Defendant.

Under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, sect. 205, the deft. may, under the general plea, give the act and the special matter in evidence, and the certificate shall be evidence of the trading, bankruptcy, fiat, or petition for adjudication, and other proceedings subsequent to the obtaining the certificate. A certificate of conformity, under a fiat, *must appear to have been entered of record in the Court of Bankruptcy, under 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 114, s. [*441] 8. But, if obtained after the above statute, on a commission issued before it, it is proved by production of the certificate (Taylor v. Wilsford, Moo. & M. 503). By sect. 199 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, it is enacted, "that the certificate of conformity under this act shall be in writing under the seal of the court and the hand of the commissioner, and shall certify that the bankrupt has made a full discovery of his estate and effects, and in all things conformed, and that, so far as the court can judge, there does not appear any reason to question the truth or fulness of such discovery." By sect. 236, any certificate appearing to be sealed with the seal of the court shall be receivable in evidence; and, by sect. 237, all courts, &c., shall take judicial notice of the signature of any commissioner or registrar of the court, and of the seal of the court.

Certificate—its Effect against Action brought against Bankrupt.] By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 121, "every bankrupt who shall have duly surrendered, and, in all things, conformed himself to the laws in force concerning bankrupts, at the time of issuing the commission against him, shall be discharged from all debts due by him when he became bankrupt, and from all claims and demands hereby made proveable under the commission, in case he shall obtain a certificate of such conformity, so signed and allowed, and subject to such provisions as hereinafter directed (Ib., sect. 122, 123); but no such certificate shall release or discharge any person who was partner with such bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, or who was then jointly bound, or had made any joint contract, with such bankrupt." By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, sect. 199, it is enacted, "that every certificate of conformity allowed by any commissioner before the time appointed for the commencement of this act, though not confirmed according to the laws in force before that time, shall discharge the bankrupts from all debts due by him when he became bankrupt, and from all claims and demands made proveable under the fiat." And, by sect. 200, "that the certificate of conformity allowed under this act, subject to the provisions herein contained, shall discharge the bankrupt from all debts due by him when he became bankrupt, and from all claims and demands made proveable under the bankruptcy: provided always, that no such certificate shall release or discharge any person who was a partner with such bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, or who was then jointly bound or had made any joint contract with such bankrupt."

As to when the certificate will be void, and what is an answer to it, see post, 442.

Under the provisions of the old act, the effect of the certificate was to bar all demands which were due at the time of the act of bankruptcy, and which could have been proved under the commission (Bamford v. Burrell, 2 B. & P. 11); and, as to what may be proved, see Arch. B. L. and Deac. B. L. Indices. A debt was not discharged which occurred after the bankruptcy, but before the commission (2 B. & P. 11). Where a bankrupt acceptor pleaded his certificate, and it appeared that the commission was sued out after the day of the date of the bill, but before it became due, it was held to be incumbent on the plaintiff, an indorsee, to show that an act of bankruptcy was committed before the date of the bill (Pearson v. Fletcher, 5 Esp. C. 90); but an antecedent act of bankruptcy might, in such case, be proved by the proceedings under the commission, stating a previous act of bankruptcy (Ib.). Where a verdict was obtained against the bankrupt, in an [*442] action for damages, before an act of bankruptcy, *but judgment was not signed till after, the debt will not be barred by the certificate (Bass v. Gilbert, 2 M. & S. 70). If an action be commenced against a bankrupt after the bankruptcy, for a debt due before, and, after a verdict for the plt., the bankrupt obtain his certificate, the costs of the action, as well as the debt, are proveable under the commission (Willet v. Pringle, 2 N. R. 190; Scott v. Ambrose, 3 M. & S. 328); for the costs bear relation to the original debt (Ib.; 2 Stark. Ev. 203).

What is a discharge of a debt in the country where it was contracted, is a discharge of it everywhere (per Ellenborough, Lord, Potter v. Brown, 5 East, 129, recognising Ballantine v. Golding, Cooke, 487; see also Hunter v. Potts, 4 T. R. 182). So, the certificate is a bar to an action for debts contracted in England as well as for those contracted in Scotland (Royal Bank of Scotland v. Cuthbert, 1 Rose, 462); or those contracted in Ireland, or any foreign country (Odwin v. Forbes, Buck, 57); and a certificate obtained under a commission of bankruptcy issued in Ireland, or any foreign country, will be a good defence to an action brought here for a debt contracted in Ireland, or any foreign country (Potter v. Brown, 5 East, 124); but it will not bar an action for a debt contracted here (Smith v. Buchanan, 1 East, 6; Quin v. Keefe, 2 H. Bl. 553); nor will a certificate under an English commission defeat an action for a debt contracted in the West Indies (Beawes, 543; Co. B. 465); or in Scotland (Watson v. Renton, 2 Bell, Com. 693). And, where a bill of Exchange was drawn in Ireland, but accepted and paid here, it was considered an English debt, and, as such, not barred, by the certificate under an Irish commission (Lewis v. Owen, 4 B. & A. 654).

The certificate is no bar where the action is for unliquidated damages; as, an action of trover, even in cases where the plt. has his option to bring trover or assumpsit (Parker v. Norton, 6 T. R. 695; 3 Madd. 51); or an action of trespass for mesne profits (Goodtitle v. North, 2 Doug. 584). Bankruptcy is not a discharge of a promise to allow a weekly sum for the support of an illegitimate child; for, though the certificate would discharge any arrears accrued before the bankruptcy, yet, no proof in respect of the subsequent arrears could have been admitted under the commission for them (Millen v. Whittenbury, 1 Camp. 429). A certificate under a joint commission will be evidence in bar of a separate debt (Horsey's case, 3 P. Wms. 23; Howard v. Poole, Stra. 995); and, vice versa, a certificate under a separate commission in bar of a joint debt (Ex parte Yale, 3 P. Wms. 24). Signing the certificate of a surviving partner does not release the estate of a deceased partner (1 Mer. 570).

The certificate must be entered of record, as directed ante, p. 439, before it can be given in evidence (see 3 Bing. 493). If B. plead his bankruptcy and certificate, and prove a commission against A., and a certificate under it, he may prove that he was formerly known by the name of A., and that the commission was issued against him, although at the time of the trial he was known by the name of B. only (Stevens v. Eliseè, 3 Camp. 256). It must appear at the trial, that the bankruptcy was subsequent to the commencement of the action (see ante, p. 436); and, as to when the bankruptcy and certificate must be pleaded specially, see ante, pp. 435, 436.

Evidence for Plaintiff.

Proof to defeat Certificate.] The plt. cannot, it seems, in answer to the general plea of bankruptcy, at the trial, show matter which impeaches the validity of the fiat only without affecting the certi- [*443] ficate (see Bateson v. Hartsink, 4 Esp. 43; Eden, 426; and see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 205). The plea merely puts the certificate in issue. By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 127, it is enacted, "that if any person, who shall have been so discharged by such certificate as aforesaid, or who shall have compounded with his creditors, or who shall have been discharged by an insolvent act, shall be or become bankrupt, and have obtained, or shall hereafter obtain, such certificate as aforesaid, unless his estate shall produce (after all charges) sufficient to pay every creditor under the commission 15s. in the pound, such certificate shall only protect his person from arrest and imprisonment; but his future estate and effects (except his tools of trade, and necessary household furniture, and the wearing apparel of himself, his wife, and children) shall vest in the assignees under the said commission, who shall be entitled to seize the same, in like manner as they might have seized the property of which such a bankrupt was possessed at the issuing of the commission." This sect. would seem to be repealed by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, but as there may yet arise cases where it may be pleaded, it is considered advisable to allow it to keep its place, and to refer shortly to some of those that have been decided upon it. Under this provision the certificate is avoided, though the former commission has been superseded (1 Doug. 46).

It has been held, that a deed of composition, embracing all the creditors, under which many of them came in, though some of them did not, is, in case of a subsequent commission of bankruptcy, such a compounding with his creditors as will, within 5 Geo. II. c. 30, s. 9, &c., deprive the bankrupt of the benefit of his certificate to protect his future effects from being liable to be taken in execution (Slaughter v. Chenye, 1 M. & S. 182); or though the former commission have been superseded (Ex parte Hodgkinson, 19 Ves. 291; Philpot v. Corden, 5 T. R. 287). But a composition with a certain class of creditors, as, for instance, with joint creditors only (Norton v. Shakespeare, 15 East, 619); or a composition with all his creditors generally, if he have afterwards paid them 20s. in the pound, before his bankruptcy (Read v. Sowerby, 1 M. & S. 78), will not deprive a bankrupt of his certificate. For the purpose of proving a former commission, it is only necessary to produce the commission and proceedings, and prove that the debt submitted to it, without proving the leading act of bankruptcy, &c. (Heviland v. Cook, 5 T. R. 655; Gregory v. Merton, 3 Esp. 195); and the certificate under such former commission must be proved, either by producing it, or by secondary evidence of it after notice to the bankrupt to produce it, and an affidavit of conformity was held to be good secondary evidence (Graham v. Grill, 4 Camp. 282; Henry v. Leigh, 3 Camp. 499). It is incumbent on the bankrupt to prove that he has paid 15s. under his second commission (Gregory v. Merton, 3 Esp. 195); and proof that it will, probably, produce so much, is insufficient (Coverley v. Morley, 16 East, 225; Jelfs v. Bolland, 1 B. & P. 467).

By the 231st sect. of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, it is enacted, "that no bankrupt shall be entitled to a certificate of conformity under this act, and any such certificate, if allowed, shall be void, if such bankrupt shall have lost, by any sort of gaming or wagering, in one day, 20*l.*, or within one year next preceding the issuing of the fiat, or filing of the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, 200*l.*; or if he shall, within one year next preceding the issuing of the fiat, or the filing of such petition, have lost 200*l.* by any contract for the purchase or sale of any government or other stock, where such contract was not to be performed within one week after the contract, [*444] or *where the stock bought or sold was not actually transferred or delivered, in pursuance of such contract, or if such bankrupt shall, after an act of bankruptcy, or in contemplation of bankruptcy, or with intent to defeat the object of this or any other statute relating to bankrupts, have parted with, concealed, destroyed, mutilated, altered, or falsified, or caused to be concealed, destroyed, mutilated, altered, or falsified, any of his books, papers, writings, or securities, or made, or been privy to the making, of any false or fraudulent entry in any book of account, or other document, with intent to defraud his creditors, or shall have concealed any part of his property, or if any person, having proved a false debt under the bankruptcy, such bankrupt being privy thereto, or afterwards knowing the same, shall not have disclosed the same to his assignees, within one month after such knowledge."

With respect to the effect of a subsequent promise by bankrupt, the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 131, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 43, enacted that no bankrupt, after his certificate shall have been confirmed, shall be liable to pay or satisfy any debt, claim, or demand, from which he shall have been discharged by virtue of such certificate, or any part of such debt, claim, or demand, upon any contract, promise, or agreement, made or to be made after the suing out of the commission, unless such promise, contract, or agreement, be made in writing, signed by the bankrupt, or by some person thereto lawfully authorized in writing, by such bankrupt. (See ante, p. 436; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106,

s. 204.) If the bankrupt's surname occur in his handwriting in a letter commencing thus: "Mr. Stanley begs to inform," it is a sufficient signing by him (Lobb v. Stanley, 5 Q. B. 574; Harris v. Wall, 1 Exch. 122); and parol evidence of the amount due is admissible (Lobb v. Stanley, supra). So, also that parol evidence might be given of the time at which it was written; held also a sufficient promise, notice having been given to the deft. to produce plt.'s letter referred to, which had not been done (Lobb v. Stanley, supra). But the initial of the deft.'s surname is not a sufficient signature (Hubert v. Moreau, 2 C. & P. 528); a promise given before the certificate granted is sufficient, if it be a personal one, and not merely a promise to pay out of the estate, or a mere account stated which would be barred by the certificate (Kirkpatrick v. Tattersall, 13 M. & W. 766).

Besides the above legislative enactments, the plt. may, in answer to the certificate, show that it was obtained unfairly and by fraud, or that it is in other respects void; as, if the bankrupt, or any person for him, give money or security for money to a creditor for signing the certificate, such certificate will be void (Holland v. Palmer, 1 B. & P. 95; 1 Doug. 228; ante, p. 436). Where the fourth, among several other signatures to a certificate, was obtained by a promise of the bankrupt to pay the creditor his whole debt, it was held this avoided the certificate, although the creditors who signed before and after the fourth were sufficient in number and value, without reckoning that one for his example, might have induced others to sign it (Phillips v. Dicus, 15 East, 248). So, if a creditor be induced for money to withdraw a petition against the allowance of the certificate, or if he sell his debt, and agree at the same time to withdraw his petition, this will avoid the certificate (Ex parte Gibson, 6 Ves. 5; when otherwise, see 1 Doug. 230; Arch. B. L. 205; see now 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 201; ante, p. 436).

Form of Remedy.*

Assumpsit is the most usual remedy on bills of exchange, whether foreign or inland, promissory notes and checks, and is the only remedy where there is no privity of contract between the parties. It is the only remedy at the suit of the payee or indorsee of a bill of exchange against the acceptor, or of the indorsee of a promissory note against the maker (Bishop v. Young, 2 B. & P. 78; Barry v. Robinson, 1 N. R. 293; 1 Ch. Pl. 103). It lies against a corporation (Murray v. East India Company, 5 B. & A. 204).

Debt also lies where there is a privity of contract between the parties. It lies at the suit of a drawer against acceptor (Priddy v. Henbrey, 1 B. & C. 674); even where he is also payee (Watson v. Knightly, 11 Ad. & E. 702). Of the payee against drawer of a bill, or maker of a note (Bishop v. Young, supra; Hodges v. Steward, Skin. 346; Hatch v. Trayes, 11 Ad. & E. 702; Sison v. Kidman, 3 Man. & G. 810). Of the indorsee against his immediate indorser (Watkins v. Wake, 7 M. & W. 488). Of the first indorsee against drawer of a bill payable to his own order (Stratten v. Hill, 3 Pri. 253; 2 Chit. Rep. 126). But debt does not lie at the suit of indorsee against acceptor (Cloves v. Williams, 3 Bing. N. C. 868; 3 Hodges, 176; Bishop v. Young, supra; Powell v. Ancel, 3 Man. & G. 171). Nor in any case where there are intermediate parties between the plt. and deft. (Lewis v. Edwards, 9 M. & W. 720; 6 Jur. 401). Therefore, where the drawer of a bill indorses it in blank, and delivers it to A. who passes it without a fresh indorsement to B., B. cannot maintain debt against the drawer (Lewin v. Edwards, supra.) An indorser cannot maintain debt against the acceptor (Powell v. Ancel, 3 Man. & G. 171). Debt is maintainable against a party who joins in making a note as surety (Sison v. Kidman, 3 Man. & G. 810; 4 Sco. N. R. 429).

Debt will not lie on a promissory note payable by instalments, until the last day of payment be past (Rudder v. Price, 1 H. Bl. 547; 1 Ch. Pl. 113; see Bayley v. Hughes, Cro. Car. 137; Pemberton v. Shelton, Cro. Jac. 498; Hunt v. Braines, 4 Mod. 402; Hulme v. Sanders, 2 Lev. 4). If it be so payable on the face of it assumpsit will lie for such instalment; if not, only one action of assumpsit lies (Bayl. B. 361, n. g).

It has been supposed that debt will not lie on a bill or note unless the instrument be represented to be "for value received" or some consideration be expressed upon the face of it (Bishop v. Young, supra; Priddy v. Henbrey, supra; Creswell v. Crisp, 2 Dowl. 635; Lyons v. Cohen, 3 Dowl. 244); but this idea is now exploded (Hatch v. Trayes, 3 P. & D. 408; Watson v. Knightly, ib.; 11 Ad. & E. 702, post). Wager of law has been abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 13, and debt on simple contract now lies against an executor or administrator, s. 14.

Where the bill has been refused acceptance, the action may be [448*] *commenced immediately; it is not necessary to wait until the bill comes to maturity (Ballingalls v. Gloster, 3 East, 481; Whitehead v. Walker, 9 M. & W. 506).

Form of Pleadings.

Declaration.] The plt. is not, where there is a privity of contract between him and deft. independent of the bill, bound to declare on the bill itself, but may declare on such contract, if he has not parted with the bill; but it would be a defence to such action that the bill was in the hands of third parties (Kearslake v. Morgan, 5 T. R. 513; Burdon v. Hatton, 4 Bing. 455). It is always advisable, however, to declare on the bill itself, as the plt. will, otherwise, instead of the expeditious and least expensive mode of getting the damages assessed by having the same referred to the master, be bound to execute a writ of inquiry (Osborne v. Noad, 8 T. R. 648); and he cannot in general obtain interest; besides which, if the bill be negotiable, he would on evidence by the deft. of its existence be bound to show it was in his possession (post).

The declaration stated that on, &c., the deft. made his bill, &c., and directed the same to A. and Co., payable to B. or his order, three months after date, which period had elapsed, &c.; that B. then indorsed to the plt., that it was presented for acceptance, and protested for non-acceptance, of which the deft. had notice; that the bill, being wholly unaccepted and unpaid afterwards, &c., when it became due on, &c., was presented for payment to A. and Co., who refused to pay the same; whereupon it was protested for non-payment, of all which the deft. had notice; and whereas, also, the said deft. before, &c., to wit, &c., was indebted to the plt., &c., on an account stated, and the deft. in consideration of the premises respectively, then, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, promised the plt. to pay him the said several sums respectively on request. Demurrer for duplicity and uncertainty: held, that whether the first part of the declaration was considered as two counts or only one, it was not demurable on either of those grounds (Galway v. Rose, 6 M. & W. 291; 8 Dowl. 239; 4 Jur. 320).

The plt. in the first count, declared on a bill of exchange, drawn and indorsed to him by the deft.; and, in the second, for money alleged to be due from the deft. upon an account stated—concluding, that, “in consideration of the premises respectively, the deft. promised to pay the said several last-mentioned moneys respectively to the plt. on request.” The deft. demurred to the second count, on the ground that it contained an incorrect statement of the consideration for the promise; or, if “the last-mentioned moneys” included the money in the first count, then the second count was bad for duplicity. The court set aside the demurrer as frivolous (Lomax v. Wilson, 2 C. B. 763).

Where, in a declaration on a bill of exchange, with a count for goods sold and delivered, there is the usual allegation that the deft. promised to pay the said bill, &c., according to the tenor and effect thereof; and in the count for goods sold, the promise is not confined to such count, but that, “in consideration of the several premises respectively, he, the deft., promised the plt. to pay him the several moneys respectively on request,”—this does not make the declaration double (Shaw v. Glascott, 9 Law T. 228, Ex.). A declaration, containing counts on bills of exchange by the indorsee against the indorser in the form prescribed by the R. G. T. T. 1 Will. IV., stated that the deft. promised to pay the bills, and commenced and concluded in the form of a declaration in debt. It also contained the indebitatus counts in debt. Held, that there was no misjoinder (Esdale, &c. v. Maclean, 16 Law J. 71, Ex.).

*One count stated that deft. accepted a bill and promised to pay the amount, whereby an action accrued to the plt. to demand [*449] the amount. Deft. pleaded over, and plt. demurred, deft.’s counsel abandoned the demurrer, but contended that the above count was in debt: held, that it was so, and that debt did not lie by an indorsee against acceptor (Cloves v. Williams, 3 Bing. N. C.).

Declaration on a promissory note whereby the deft. promised to pay the plt. 30*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, as follows: 2*l.* on the 12th of April, then next, and the further sum of 2*l.* on the 12th of May then next, and the like sum of 2*l.* on the twelfth day of each and every succeeding month afterwards, until the whole should be paid, and that, in default in payment of any one of the said instalments, then the deft. promised to pay to the plt. or order, on demand, the sum of 30*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, or so much thereof as should remain unpaid; averment that default was made in payment of the first two instalments, whereby according to the tenor and effect of the note the deft. became liable to pay to the plt. the said sum of 30*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* General demurrer, for that by default in payment of the instalments, the note did not become payable without demand of the amount of it: held, that the demurrer was too large, there being clearly a debt as to the first two instalments (Teague v. Morse, 5 M. & W. 599).

Title.] The R. G. M. T. 3 Will. IV. r. 15, prescribes the form of title, and orders that every declaration (i. e. in personal actions when commenced in one of the superior courts) shall be entitled in the proper court, and of the day of the month and year in which it is filed or delivered (see form, p. 485).

Venue.] The plt. may lay the venue in any county (Pinkney v. Collins, 1 T. R. 571); and the court will not change it at the instance of the deft. unless on very special ground (Tidd, P. 605; see Ch. Pr. 956; see Blendell v. Steele, 8 M. & W. 640). The R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 8, orders that "the name of the county shall in all cases be stated in the margin of the declaration, and shall be taken to be the venue intended by the plt., and that no venue shall be stated in the body of the declaration or in any subsequent pleading:" should it be so, it is not ground of demurrer; the proper course is to apply to a judge at chambers, who will order it to be struck out (Harper v. Champress, 1 C. M. & R. 369; Fisher v. Snow, 3 Dowl. 27; Townsend v. Gurney, 1 C. M. & R. 596).

Commencement.] Before the Uniformity of Process Act (2 Will. IV. c. 39), there were numerous and perplexing modes of commencing personal actions: that act having abolished the use of an original writ, and mesne process in personal actions, and substituted several other prescribed forms of writs in personal actions printed in the schedule to the act, it became desirable that the judges should, for the sake of uniformity, prescribe new forms of commencing a declaration according to the particular writ that had been issued, and accordingly we find such forms prescribed by R. G. M. T. 3 Will. IV. r. 15 (see form, 485). Where the action is in debt care should be taken to use the form applicable to that action (post, p. 487).

Statement of the Bill itself.] In general, the bill must be stated in the declaration like other contracts (ante, 448); either in its precise terms—except in cases where that would mislead, as when a bill is drawn payable in foreign currency of the English denomination, but of different value (Reany v. Ring, 2 B. & A. 301; Sprowle v. Legge, 1 B. & C. 16; see Taylor v. Booth, 1 C. & P. 286; Harington v. McMorris, 5 Taunt. 228; [450*] Simmons v. Parmenter, 1 Wils. 185; 4 Bro. P. C. 604*; Stevenson v. Oliver, 8 M. & W. 239)—or according to its legal effect; and a variance on any material point will be fatal. In general, it is advisable to state no more of the bill declared on than is necessary to enable the plt. to recover (Bristow v. Wright, Doug. 667; Waugh v. Russell, 1 Marsh. 217; Siffkin v. Walker, 2 Camp. 309). Whenever the bill is in a particular form, care must be taken to describe it, so as to avoid a variance; one of the forms prescribed by the New Rules, r. 8, ante, p. 485 (with the exception of venue, which must now be confined to the margin) should be adhered to as closely as practicable.

If it be doubtful whether the instrument be a bill or note, it may be declared on as either (Edis v. Bury, 2 C. & P. 559; 6 B. & C. 433); the judge at nisi prius will amend the declaration by allowing it to be treated as a note, if necessary (Mallet v. Powell, 6 C. & P. 233; Worley v. Harrison, 3 Ad. & E. 669; Hay v. Fisher, 2 M. & W. 722). As to what is a note, see Shelton v. James, 5 Q. B. 199, post. An instrument in the form of a bill of exchange drawn upon a joint-stock bank by the manager of one of its branches, by order of the directors, may be declared on as a promissory note (Miller v. Thompson, 3 Man & G. 576). A note, "I promise to pay, or cause to be paid," may be declared on as a note in the common form (Lovell v. Hill, 6 C. & P. 238). If a bill or note be informal it may be stated in its terms with an innuendo of its meaning, which seems a safer course.

If a bill be in a foreign language, it may nevertheless be stated in English, without noticing the foreign language (Att.-Gen. v. Valabrique, Wight. 9).

Names of Parties.] The names of the parties to the bill must be accurately described; a variance in the name of one who is not a party to the suit is a ground of nonsuit (Whitwell v. Bennett, 3 B. & P. 559). If a bill drawn by the name of Cruch be declared on in an action against a third party as drawn by Crouch, it is a fatal variance (Whitwell v. Bennett, supra; Hutchinson v. Piper, 4 Taunt. 810). But where a bill was stated to have been indorsed by Phillip Phillip, when his name was Phillip Phillips, and he had so indorsed it, Lord Ellenborough refused to nonsuit, observing, that whether the name on the bill be the party's true or false name is immaterial, if it be his name of trade, and that the only question was as to the identity of the person (Forman v. Jacob, 1 Stark. 47). Where a bill is drawn with the payee's name in blank, and the declaration states that A. B. (a bona fide holder who has inserted his own name) was payee, it is no variance (Attwood v. Griffin, Ry. & M. 425). But when, in an action against three makers of a note, the declaration states it to have been made by William Austin, Robert Strobell, and William Shutcliffe, of whom the latter two were outlawed, whereas the names were William Austin, Samuel Strobell, and William Shirliffe, the variance was held fatal. The parties' identity was not proved in Gordon v. Austin, 4 T. R. 611. It has been held, in Esdale v. McClean, 15 M. & W. 277, that a special demurrer will hold if there be no allegation in the declaration that the party described by initials was so designated in the bill declared on (see Applemans v. Blanch, 14 M. & W. 154). A count on a bill of exchange, by indorsee against acceptor, alleged that "one J. B. Doe," on, &c., made his bill of exchange, &c. The court refused to set aside as frivolous a demurrer, assigning for cause that the drawer was described in the count by the initials of his christian name only, without alleging any excuse for the omission of his christian name, or showing that he was so designated in the bill. Seemle, that the omission is fatal on special demurrer (Turner v. Fitt, 3 C. B. 701; see further, post, p. 456; Levy v. Webb, 9 Q. B. 427; Gatty v. Field, 9 Q. B. [*451] 431; Nash v. Collier, 17 Law J. 91, C. P.). A mistake as to the payee's name is amendable at the trial.

If a bill be drawn by a firm consisting of several persons, it may be so described in the declaration in an action against the acceptor, though in fact the firm consisted of one individual only (Bass v. Clive, 4 Camp. 78; 4 M. & S. 13). Declaration by indorsee against acceptor stated that the bill was drawn by certain persons using the name, style, and firm of M. & Co., and that the said M. & Co. indorsed it. This is not a sufficient description, as it did not show that M. and Co. drew or indorsed the bill in that name (Ball v. Gordon, 9 M. & W. 345; Tigar v. Gordon, ib. 347; sed quære, see Bass

v. Clive, 4 Camp. 78; Schultz v. Astley, 7 C. & P. 99; 2 Bing. N. C. 544; 2 Sco. 815; see post).

A variance in the names of the parties to the suit is no ground of nonsuit, if the mis-described party's identity be proved (Boughton v. Frere, 3 Camp. 29; Jowett v. Charnock, 6 M. & S. 45; Dickinson v. Bowes, 16 East, 110; Willis v. Barrett, 2 Stark. 29): formerly it was a ground of plea in abatement, but that plea for misnomer is taken away (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 11). A variance in the christian name of the defendant is not material, if it appear that he has been served with process (Dickenson v. Bowes, 16 East, 110). Proof that other parties joined the deft. in drawing or accepting the bill is immaterial, it being matter of plea in abatement (Mountstephen v. Brooke, 1 B. & A. 244; see "ABATEMENT"). The plt. was described as Henry H. Lindsey; the court refused to set aside the declaration for irregularity, the defect being cured by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 12 (Lindsey v. Wells, 5 Dowl. 618; Braithwaite v. Harrison, 3 Dowl. N. S. 210; 7 Jur. 898).

A declaration stating that A. B. drew a bill requiring the deft. to pay to the drawer's order, without again naming him, is good (Knill v. Stockdale, 6 M. & W. 478); or to his order, the word his referring to the drawer (Spyer v. Thelwall, 2 C. M. & R. 693; 4 Dowl. 509).

The indorsement of one partner must be in the name of the firm, in order to bind the others (Kirk v. Blanton, 9 M. & W. 284). Where a declaration stated that a bill was indorsed by certain persons trading under the firm of H. and F., by procuration of J. D., it was held that this allegation was supported by evidence of J. D.'s handwriting, and that he, being the managing partner in a firm which carried on its business of buying and selling under the denomination of H. and Co., was in the habit of indorsing bills in the manner above stated, though there was no such person as F. in the firm of H. and Co., and no direct proof that J. D.'s partners were privy to these transactions (Williamson v. Johnson, 1 B. & C. 146; 2 D. & R. 281). Where Messrs. J. C., R. M., J. P., and J. S. carried on business as bankers, and the following promissory note was signed by R. M.: "I promise to pay the bearer on demand 5*l.*, value received, for J. C., R. M., J. P., and J. S.—R. M.": held, that there was no separate right of action against the party so signing, but that the firm were liable (Ex parte Buckley, in re Clarke; 14 M. & W. 469; overruling Hall v. Smith, 1 B. & C. 407).

If a bill be indorsed in blank any number of persons may join in suing upon it, without proof of partnership or joint interest (Ord v. Portal, 3 Camp. 239; Rordusnz v. Leach, 1 Stark. 446). Where indorsees sued the drawer in their own right, and it appeared that the bill had been indorsed to them in blank before the death of one of their partners, it was held not necessary to describe themselves as surviving partners in the declaration, as they were not bound to prove the partnership, or that the bill was indorsed or delivered to them jointly with their deceased partner; otherwise if the bill has been specially indorsed (Attwood v. Rattenbury, 7 Moo. 579). The [*452] *delivery of a bill indorsed in blank by the direction of the payee to A. B. and Co., who were bankers, on the account of an insolvent's estate vested in trustees for the benefit of creditors, will not enable A. and B., jointly with a third trustee, to sue the indorser (Mitchell v. Kinnear, 1 Stark. 499). The drawer of a bill accepted generally, and protested by the payee for non-payment and afterwards by himself, may, in his own name and without any previous assignment or indorsement from the payee, sue the acceptor (Parminter v. Symons, in error, 2 Bro. P. C. 43; 1 Wils. 185). Where a bill was indorsed to three partners in respect of a debt due from the drawer and indorser, and was accepted by the deft. at the request of one of the partners, who engaged to provide for it when it became due: held, that the assignees of both could not recover against the acceptor, although the one partner was not privy to the engagement of the other (Johnson v. Peek, 3 Stark. 66). If several persons, not partners in business, separately indorse for the accommodation of the drawer a bill which has been previously indorsed by another person, and on the bill being dishonoured pay the party who discounted it in equal proportions, they may strike out their own indorsements, and bring a joint action against such previous indorser, to recover the amount of the bill (Low v. Copestake, 3 C. & P. 300). Assumpsit by A., B., and C. against D., as one of the indorsers of a note drawn by E. in favour of C., D. and (himself) E., then in partnership, and by them indorsed to A., B., and C.: a plea in bar that C., one of the plts., was liable as indorsee together with D., was held good on special demurrer (Mainwaring v. New-man, 2 B. & P. 120).

If one of two partners be an infant, the holder of a bill accepted by both partners may declare on it, as accepted by the adult only in the names of both, and if deft. plead in abatement the nonjoinder, the plt. may reply the infancy, and it is no departure (Burgess v. Merrill, 4 Taunt. 468). Evidence that other persons joined the deft. in the drawing or accepting the bill does not constitute a variance (Mountstephen v. Brooke, 1 B. & Ald. 224; 1 Saund. 291 c); but an allegation of a note having been made by A. and B. is not supported by evidence of a note given by A. alone to secure a partnership debt (Siffkin v. Walker, 2 Camp. 308; Emly v. Lye, 15 East, 7), though it would be otherwise, if A. prefixed to his signature, "For A. and B." (Galway v. Matthews, 1 Camp. 403; and see Mason v. Ramsay, 1 Camp. 284).

In a declaration by the public officer of a banking co-partnership, established under 7 Geo. IV. c. 46, it is sufficient to describe the plt. as a public officer duly appointed (Spiller v. Johnson, 6 M. & W. 570; Christie v. Peat, 7 M. & W. 491; see Esdale v. Maclean, 15 M. & W. 277).

The plt. may sue any of the indorsers previous to himself, whether mediate or immediate. But if the bill be reindorsed to the party, by whom it had previously been indorsed, such party cannot sue the person so reindorsing it (Bishop v. Hayward, 4 T. R. 470; and see Britten v. Webb, 2 B. & C. 483). But where the payees of a bill indorsed it specially to the plts., and immediately after the special indorsement the deft. indorsed it, it being in the plt.'s possession at the time: held, that the action was maintainable against the deft. (Penny v. Innes, 1 C. M. & R. 439; 5 Tyrw. 107).

A bill drawn by an agent may be stated to have been so by the principal, as that is its legal operation (12 Mod. 346; Collis v. Emett, 1 H. Bl. 313; Heys v. Heseltine, 2 Camp. 604). Where the deft. drew a bill in the name of A. and Co., held, that to make him liable, it was requisite to show a want of authority from A. and Co. (Wilson v. Barthrup, 2 M. & W. 863; and see Thomas v. Hawes, 2 C. & M. 530, n.).

If an agent for A. draw a bill upon B. *in favour of C., [*453] though he direct B. to place the amount to A.'s debit, he will be personally liable to C., though C. knew he was only agent for A., unless he uses words to prevent such liability (Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 M. & S. 345; Sowerby v. Butcher, 4 Tyrw. 320; 2 C. & M. 368; Goupy v. Hurden, 7 Taunt. 160; 2 Marsh. 454; Lefevre v. Lloyd, 5 Taunt. 742; 1 Marsh. 318). An agent for an association, who draws bills in his own name for the purposes of the company, does not bind the partners as drawers, though authorized to draw bills (Ducarry v. Gill, Moo. & M. 450; 4 C. & P. 121). The declaration stated that the bill was drawn by one H. P., accepted by the deft., and endorsed to the plt.; the drawing was "Per pro. H. P., J. P." A clerk of the plt.'s proved that the drawing and indorsement were of the handwriting of Mr. J. P., whom he understood to be a son of Mrs. P., whom he had never seen, but with whose house his employer had dealings, and that he had seen bills, drawn and indorsed in the same manner, paid. The plts. had a verdict, and a rule nisi for a new trial having been obtained, an affidavit was produced, stating the name of the party was H. P., and that the bill was drawn by her authority. The court refused to make the rule absolute (Jones v. Turnover, 4 C. & P. 204). The indorsee of a bill, accepted by procuration, is bound to use due caution, and should see the general power of the agent, and also inquire into the propriety of his accepting that particular bill; otherwise, when it is improperly accepted, it cannot be recovered against the acceptor (Attwood v. Mannings, 7 B. & C. 278). If A. permit B. to draw bills in his name, he is liable to ignorant indorsees, although he had neither knowledge of, nor interest in, the particular bills; but he is not liable to a payee, having knowledge of the transaction (Smith v. Strange, Peak. Ad. Ca. 116, 119). From the fact that the defts.' confidential clerk had been accustomed to draw checks for them; that in one instance they had authorized him to indorse, and in two others had received money obtained by indorsing in their name, a jury was held warranted in inferring that the clerk had a general authority to indorse (Prescott v. Flynn, 9 Bing. 19; 2 Moo. & S. 18).

The directors of a mining association cannot bind the members by accepting a bill, unless authorized to do so by the deed of copartnership, by the necessity of such a power to the carrying on of their business, by the usage of similar establishments, or the express assent of the parties sought to be charged; still less can the directors bind the members by a bill drawn upon the directors by their own servant, such a bill being in effect a promissory note (Dickinson v. Valpy, 10 B. & C. 128; see post, "PUBLIC COMPANIES"). In an action on a bill, alleged to have been drawn on the deft., and accepted for him by A. B., as his agent, the bill, on being produced, appeared to be drawn on the director of a mining company, of whom the deft. was one, and which company had given a general authority to A. B. to accept bills on their behalf: held, no variance (Faith v. Buckingham, 6 Jur. 956).

Where a bill or note is given to a single woman, and she marries, the property vests in her husband, and he alone can indorse it (Connor v. Martin, 3 Wils. 5; 1 Stra. 516), and the husband and wife must join in an action upon it (Com. Dig. Baron and Feme, n.). If not reduced into possession during their joint lives, it reverts to the woman as survivor, or goes to the husband as her administrator if he survive (Co. Lit. 351; Coppin v. —, 2 P. Wms. 497; Day v. Pargave, 2 M. & S. 396). The indorsement by a married woman, with her husband's assent, of a bill drawn by her, is binding upon him, and will pass the interest, so as to enable the indorsee to sue the acceptor (Prestwick v. Marshall, 7 Bing. 565; 5 Moo. &

P. 513). Where a bill was payable to a feme sole, who intermarried before the *same was due: held, that the husband might sue, although the wife had not indorsed the bill (McNeilage v. Holloway, 1 B. & A. 218; Burrough v. Moss, 10 B. & C. 558). A promissory note made payable to a woman, who is married at the time of the making, passes by the indorsement of the husband alone during the coverture (Mason v. Morgan, 2 Ad. & E. 30). The right to the note survives to the wife, if the husband do no act to reduce it into possession (Gaten v. Madeley, 6 M. & W. 423; 4 Jur. 724, supra; see "HUSBAND AND WIFE").

An infant may sue on a bill (Ch. Bills, 20; Warwick v. Bruce, 2 M. & Sel. 205; Holliday v. Atkinson, 5 B. & C. 501); and though it be said that payment should be made to his guardian, yet payment to the infant will be good (Bayl. B. 309; Byles, 44; see "INFANT").

On a joint and several note the holder may sue all or only one of the makers, but if it be joint, then all must be sued, otherwise the omission may be pleaded in abatement (Evans v. Lewis, 1 B. & A. 226). When a note commences, "I promise to pay," and is signed by two parties, it is joint and several (Clark v. Blackstock, Holt, 474; March v. Wood, Pea. 130). A note drawn by one partner, "I promise to pay," and signed for self and partners, with his own name, is either joint or several (Hall v. Smith, 1 B. & C. 407; Galway (Lord) v. Matthew, 10 East, 264; but see Ex parte Buckley, 15 Law J. 3, Bank., ante, p. 451). A note signed by A. only cannot be treated as the joint note of A. and B., though given for the joint debt of both (Siffkin v. Walker, 2 Camp. 308). If a person sign a note under the impression that others are to join, and one of the others afterwards refuses to sign it, an action will not lie against the party who has been thus induced to sign it, unless it appear that being aware of his rights he consented to waive the objection (Leaf v. Gibbs, 4 C. & P. 466).

The assignees of a bankrupt may maintain an action in their own names only for a chose in action belonging to the wife of a bankrupt before marriage, as a promissory note given to her dum sola (Yates v. Sherrington, 11 M. & W. 412; see McNeil v. Holloway, 1 B. & A. 218).

A feme sole payee of a promissory note payable with interest married, and her husband survived her: held, in an action on the note by her administrator—first, that the note did not become the property of the husband, but passed to her administrator, though the husband had received the interest during her life, for that he did not thereby reduce the chose in action into possession (Hart v. Stephens, 6 Q. B. 937).

A description of the plts. as executors and trustees of A. B. is mere surplusage, the bill being payable to them in the name of the firm which they had assumed (Aguttar v. Moses, 1 Stark. 499). H. indorsed a promissory note, but did not deliver it. After the death of H. his executor delivered the note to the plt.: held, that the plt. had no title to sue on the note (Bromage v. Lloyd, 1 Exch. 32; 5 D. & L. Exch. 123).

In an action on a note payable to the executors of the late Mr. W. B., the proof that the plts. are the executors of Mr. W. B., is the production of the probate of his will, and reading in evidence so much of it as shows that he appointed the plts. his executors (Hamilton v. Aston, 1 C. & K. 679; per Rolfe, B.).

The description in a declaration on a bill of the deft.'s Christian name by a consonant letter put as one initial letter of such name is bad on special demurrer, unless excuse is averred for not setting it forth in full, even though one of the deft.'s Christian names be fully stated (Kinnersley v. Knott, 13 Jur. 658; 18 Law J., C. P. 281; see Lomax v. Landells, 13 Jur. 38; 18 Law J. 88, C. P.; Miller v. Hay, 3 Ex. 14; 18 Law J. 487).

Where, in pleading, a single vowel immediately precedes a surname, the Court will understand such vowel to be the Christian name of the party (Kinnersley v. Knott, supra).

Debt against the maker of a promissory note. Plea, that it was made by the deft. as the treasurer of a certain society which consisted of divers persons, to wit, fifty persons, and was called "The Silurian Lodge of Odd Fellows," &c., and as a security for any balance due to the society from the deft. as such treasurer, &c.: held ill, on special demurrer, for not stating the names of the persons composing the society, nor any reason for not giving them (Williams v. Miles, 18 Law J. 295, Ex.).

The declaration described the defts. as "The City Steam-boat Company:" held, on special demurrer, to be a sufficient description (Woolf v. City Steam-boat Company, 13 Jur. 456; 18 Law J. 125, C. P.).

Day of Drawing Bill.] It is not necessary in the case of an inland bill to state the date when the bill was drawn (2 Ch. Pl. 100 n. g); a variance in this respect is immaterial (Coxon v. Lyon, 2 Camp. 307, [*455] n.); even since the New Rules (Smith v. Lord, *2 D. & L. 758.)

The statement in a declaration on a promissory note that the deft. on a certain day made his promissory note, does not require proof that the note bore date on that day (Smith v. Lord, 2 D. & L. 759). Quere, if it require proof that the note was actually made on the day named (Ib.) The judge at nisi prius, will amend the date stated (Behtzing v. Scott, 4 C. & P. 24). Where the second count ran thus, "that afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid," the deft. drew a certain other bill of exchange, payable two months after date, without mentioning any express date in either count, the last was held sufficient by reference to the first (Hague v. French, infra; Giles v. Bourne, infra).

Custom of Merchants.] The allegation that the bill was drawn or accepted, &c., according to the custom of merchants, &c., is now exploded in practice (see Soper v. Dible, Ld. Raym. 175).

Date of the Bill.] It is neither safe nor necessary to allege that the bill bore date on a certain day, for such an averment, if incorrect, being matter of description, would be a variance (Anon. 2 Camp. 308, n.; see Cole v. Hawkins, 1 Stra. 22; De la Courtier v. Bellamy, 2 Show. 422; Hague v. French, 3 B. & P. 173; Giles v. Bourne, 6 M. & S. 73; and see Smith v. Lord, supra). A misstatement of the day when the note was payable by instalments is fatal (Wells v. Girling, Gow, 21); as to the manner of stating bill, dated by mistake, or wrong date, see Ch. Bills, 9th ed. 563. The judge, at nisi prius, will now amend the date stated (supra).

Place of Drawing.] It is not now necessary in counts on inland bills to state the place where they are drawn (Howreit v. Morris, 3 Camp. 304; 2 Ch. Pl. 88, n. g). But, on foreign bills, it is necessary to allege that they were made "in parts beyond the seas," although a foreign town be mentioned (thus, Dublin), otherwise the bill will be taken for an inland one (Sprowle v. Legge, 1 B. & C. 16; Kearney v. Ring, 2 B. & A. 301); Deybel's case, 4 B. & A. 243; and deft. may in his plea deny that he indorsed the said inland bill (Armani v. Castrique, 2 D. & L. 440; 13 M. & W. 448). It has been held, that a foreign note may be stated to be made at any place in England (Houriet v. Morris, 3 Camp. 304); but it seems doubtful whether it might not be a cause of special demurrer (Bayl. 22, n.; ib. 385). The court will not take judicial notice that a bill is drawn abroad; therefore, if it be alleged that it was drawn, &c., at Dublin, the note will not be taken to have been made in Ireland, and to be payable there, without an express allegation to that effect (Kearney v. Ring, supra; Sprowle v. Legge, supra).

Drawing of the Bill.] For the purpose of showing the deft.'s contract, the plt. must show in what manner deft. became liable, whether by making, &c., the note. The allegation of the party himself having drawn the bill is sufficient, though the party did so by his agent, because that is its legal effect (Leslie v. Hastings, 1 Moo. & R. 119; 12 Mod. 344; Collins v. Emmett, 1 H. Bl. 313; Russell v. Langstaff, 2 Doug. 515; Smith v. Mingay, 1 M. & S. 87; Molloy v. Davis, 7 Bing. 428); and so it may be stated, if a man sign his name on a blank paper, and deliver it to another to draw what bill he pleases (Bayl. 307).

A memorandum indorsed on a note after it is signed, stating the note to have been given upon a condition mentioned in an agreement referred to in the memorandum, is a mere earmarking of a note, and does not incorporate the agreement into it (Brill v. Crick, 1 M. & W. 232).

*Where a bill is drawn in the name of a firm, it is usual to state that certain parties by and under the name, style, and firm of, &c., [*456] made, &c. (Tigar v. Gordon, 9 M. & W. 347); using the style, name, &c., is bad on demurrer, for they may use that style and yet not draw the bill by it (Ball v. Gordon, 9 M. & W. 343; see ante, p. 450). The addition of the christian names of the partners to the style of a partnership, consisting of the surnames of the partners only, does not prevent the signature to a promissory note by one partner from binding the firm (Norton v. Seymour, 16 Law J. 100, C. P.; 11 Jur. 312). If, in a declaration, it be stated that the drawer made his bill of exchange, that is tantamount to saying he signed it (Erskine v. Murray, 2 Ld. Raym. 1542).

His own proper Handwriting thereto subscribed.] Quere, when the declaration stated that the defts. made the bill, their own proper hands being thereunto subscribed, when the bill bore the subscription of A. and Co., whether the variance be fatal or not (Jones v. Mars, 2 Camp. 305; Bayl. B. 389; Levy v. Wilson, 5 Esp. 180). The allegation of deft.'s handwriting was rejected; when it appeared that the name was written by another under deft.'s authority, that being sufficient (Booth v. Grove, 1 M. & W. 182; nom. Both v. Grove, 3 C. & P. 335). These words are not introduced into the new forms, it would therefore be improper to insert them now.

Direction to Drawee.] It is not absolutely essential that the drawee's name should be mentioned on the bill by the drawer if there be a place of payment fixed, and the drawee accept the bill in such form by writing his name thereon, which will be an adoption of the bill by him (Gray v. Milner, 3 Moo. 90; *8 Taunt. 739; 2 Stark. 336; see Davis v. Clark, 6 Q. B. 199). A bill may be directed to the drawer, although that would make it rather a note than a bill (Block v. Bell, 1 Moo. & R. 149; Starke v. Cheeseman, Carth. 509; Dehors v. Harrot, Show. 16; Robinson v. Bland, 2 Burr. 1077; Jocelyn v. Laserre, Fort. 282). A bill directed to A., or in his absence to B., being accepted by A., may be declared on, without taking notice of B. (Anon. 12 Mod. 447). If the word at be inserted before the drawee's name, whether in ignorance or fraud, the instrument is still a bill of exchange (Shuttleworth v. Stevens, 1 Camp. 407; R. v. Hunter, R. & R. C. C. 511; Allan v. Mawson, 4 Camp. 115). John Hart drew a bill payable to himself, or order, addressed to John Hart; C. wrote across this, "Accepted, H. J. C." Held, that C. could not be sued as acceptor of a bill of exchange directed to him (Davis v. Clark, 5 Q. B. 16).

Time when Bill, &c., payable.] When a declaration on a bill of exchange omitted the time at which the bill was payable, and the judge at nisi prius refused an amendment and nonsuited the plt., the court set aside the nonsuit on terms (Pullen v. Seymour, 5 Dowl. 164); so a demurrer, for that the count on a note omitted to state the time at which the note became payable was set aside as frivolous, allowing deft. to plead on an affidavit of merits (Gurney v. Hill, 2 Dowl. N. S. 936; 7 Jur. 834).

In some places usances mean one calendar month from the date of the bill; in others, two calendar months: a double usance is double this time; and half an usance is half of it; and, when an usance is one calendar month, half an usance is fifteen days, without reference to the number of days in the month (Bayl. B. 251): and when a declaration sets out a bill drawn at one or more usances, or at half an usance, it must aver how many months or days they or it amounts *to, otherwise it will be bad on [*457] special demurrer (Buckley v. Campbell, 1 Salk. 131; Ch. Bills, 9th ed. 371, 504); but it will be cured by pleading over (Smart v. Dean, 3 Keb. 645).

Pay to Order.] It is essential for the plt. to show in what manner he derives his title to sue (Bishop v. Hayward, 4 R. T. 471). Therefore, in an action by the assignee of a bill or note, it is necessary to show that the bill or note authorizes a transfer; but in an action by the payee, it is not (Bayl. B. 396). The payee of a bill payable to his order may state it to have been payable to himself, and there is no occasion to aver that he made no order (Frederick v. Cotton, 2 Show. 8; Fisher v. Pomfret, Carth. 403; Smith v. M'Clure, 5 East, 476). Where the bill was "pay to my order," and the allegation was "pay to A. or order;" held to be no variance (Bluet v. Middleton, 1 D. & L. 376). A bill or note payable to the order of a person is payable to himself (Sheldon v. Pearson, Bayl. B. 329; Smith v. M'Clure, supra). A note payable to A., without the words "or bearer, or order," is a valid note (Smith v. Kendall, 6 T. R. 123).

A demurrer to a declaration on a bill of exchange, by indorsee against acceptor, for that it did not state to whose order the bill was drawn will not be set aside as frivolous (Hart v. Broadfoot, 8 Dowl. 306; 4 Jur. 579).

Declaration stated that the deft. made his promissory note, and thereby promised to pay to his order 500*l.* two months after date, and indorsed it to plt.; demurrer on the ground that a note payable to the maker's order was not a legal instrument, and could not be negotiated. Held, that the count was bad, for the instrument declared on as indorsed to the plaintiff was not a promissory note within 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, s. 1, it not being made payable by the maker to some other person, or his order, or unto bearer (Flight v. M'Clean, 16 M. & W. 53; but see Wood v. Mytton, 16 Law J. 446, Q. B.; 11 Jur. 967, where it was held that the statute 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, s. 1, does extend to, and render assignable and indorsable over, promissory notes payable to the order of the maker). A note, whereby five persons promised to pay "to our and each of our order," is a promissory note within sect. 1 of stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9; and having been indorsed by one, an action may be maintained against him (Absolom v. Marks, 11 Jur. 1016, Q. B.; 17 Law J. 7, Q. B.). The declaration alleged that the deft. made his note payable to bearer, two months after date, and delivered it to J. K., who became the bearer thereof, and who indorsed and delivered it to plt.; it appeared that the note was payable to the maker's own order, and was indorsed in blank by deft. and afterwards by J. K.: held, that the plt. was entitled to recover, and the note was properly described.

A bill or note payable to a fictitious person, and to be indorsed by him, may be stated to be payable to the person in whose favour the indorsement is made; or, if it import to be indorsed in blank, it may be stated to be payable to bearer (Bayl. B. 395).

Where a bill through mistake has been made payable to a wrong person, the mistake may be stated, with an innuendo as to the person meant (Bayl. B. 396; Willis v. Barrett, 2 Stra. 29; Bishop v. Howard, supra). If a bill be accepted payable to — or order, and a bona fide holder insert his name as the payee, the bill may be described as payable to him, without noticing the blank (Attwood v. Griffin, R. & M. 425; 2 C. & P. 368; Crutchley v. Clarence, 2 M. & S. 90; see post, p. 460). Where the note or bill has been returned to the payee, he may declare in his own right, without noticing that fact (Ch. Bills, 342).

A note made by several persons payable to "our and each of our order," and indorsed by one of three persons, is a good promissory note, within 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9 (Absolom v. Marks, 17 Law J. 7, Q. B.; 11 Q. B. 19). A note payable to the maker's own order is not a promissory note, within 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9 (Brown v. De Winton, Gay v. Lander, 12 Jur. 678; 17 Law J. 281, C. P.; 6 C. B. 336). But such a maker may, by indorsing it, give a right of action to the indorsee; and where the indorsement is in blank, and the note is circulated, it is in effect a note payable to bearer (Ib.). The declaration stated, that the deft. made his promissory note, and thereby promised to pay his the deft.'s own order, and alleged that the deft. indorsed the same to the plt. The deft., by his pleas, traversed the making and the indorsing: held, after verdict, that the defect in the declaration was cured, and that the plt. was entitled to recover (Ib.). So, also, where the declaration stated that the deft. made a promissory note payable to his own order, and indorsed it to Smith & Co., who indorsed it to the plt.: held, that, as against the maker and indorser, this was a valid promissory note payable to Smith and Co. or order; that the note before indorsement was in the nature of a promise to pay to the person to whom the maker should afterwards indorse it; and that the declaration would have been bad, on special demurrer, for not setting out correctly the legal effect of the instrument (Ib.). The following document held not to be a promissory note:—"August 5, 1844. Borrowed of Mr. J. White the sum of 200*l.*, to account for, on behalf of the Alliance Club, at ——— months' notice if required" (White v. North, 18 Law J. 316, Exch.). So, also, where the blank was filled up by the word "two" (Ib.).

Payable at a Particular Place.*] If the holder consent to take a bill payable at a particular place, the plt. must aver performance [*458] of this like other conditions precedent, by showing a presentment to the acceptor at the place specified, whether the action be against the drawer or acceptor (Gammon v. Schmoll, 3 Taunt. 344; 1 Mar. 80; Rowe v. Campbell, 3 Camp. 247, 304; Price v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 204; Sanderson v. Bowes, 14 East, 500; Bowes v. Howe, 5 Taunt. 34); and it must be proved (Rowe v. Young, in error, 2 B. & B. 165; 2 Bligh, 390). In a count against acceptor of a bill stated to be "accepted payable at S. & Co.'s," it is sufficient to allege generally a request by the plt. to the deft. to pay the bill without alleging that it was presented "at the particular place" (Fenton v. Goundry, 13 Ea. 459; 2 Camp. 656; Halstead v. Skelton, 13 Law, J., N. S. 17; 5 Q. B. 86; Blake v. Beaumont, 4 M. & Gr. 7, nom. Blake v. Bowman, 14 Law J. 222, C. P.; and see Exon v. Russell, 4 M. & S. 505). In the Common Pleas it was held, that if a declaration allege a bill to be accepted payable at the house of certain persons at a particular place, it must also aver that the bill was presented payable at that place, and not to those persons generally (Ambrose v. Hopwood, 2 Taunt. 61; Huffam v. Ellis, Bayl. B. 407; 3 Taunt. 415). But an allegation that it was presented to them "according to the tenor and effect of the bill, and the acceptance thereof" was held sufficient (Ib.). By R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. 2, r. 8, no venue is required to be stated in a declaration, except the one alleged in the margin; and therefore in an action by the indorser against the indorsee of a bill of exchange, drawn payable in London, where the venue stated in the margin of the declaration was "London," it was held that an averment of presentment, not stating where, sufficiently alleged a presentment in London (Boydell v. Harkness, 4 D. & L. 178, C. P.; 10 Jur. 379). A promissory note was in the following form:—"Six months after date, I promise to pay to A. B. or order, the sum of 500*l.*, value received. (Signed) Charles Baldwin. Payable at 14, Stratford Place, London." Held, that the words after the signature were no part of the note (Padwick v. Baldwin, 10 Law T. 325, Q. B.).

Declaration, alleging that the deft. made his promissory note, and thereby promised to pay to the plt., by name and addition of Miss Jessie Hope, at 10, Duncan Street, Edinburgh, the sum of, &c. Averment, that the plt., when and since the said sum became due and payable, was always ready and willing to receive the said sum according to the tenor and effect of the said note, of which the deft. had notice, yet, &c. On general demurrer, held, that this was a note payable at a particular place, and that the declaration was bad for want of an averment of presentment for payment there (Spindler v. Grellett, 17 Law J. 6, Exch.).

Indorsee against drawer of a bill accepted payable at a particular place; allegation that a presentment was made to the acceptor, the proof being that the bill was presented at the particular place where it was made payable: held, no variance (Wilmot v. Williams, 8 Jur. 987; 8 Sco. N. R. 713); and that the averment was proved by showing a presentment at the particular place without showing that the acceptor was there (Ib.).

A count on a promissory note made payable at a place named in the note, held bad, after verdict, for want of an averment of presentment at that place (Emblin v. Dartnell, 1 D. & L. 1010; 13 Law J., N. S. 255).

Since the 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, if drawee of a bill drawn without special direction as to place of payment accept it payable at a particular place (without additional words) he undertakes thereby to pay the bill at maturity when presented there, or to himself; if he accepts payable at such place "and not otherwise or elsewhere," he undertakes to pay it at maturity if presented at that place, and not otherwise (Halstead v. Skelton, 5 Q. B. 86; Blake v. Beaumont, supra; and see Selby v. Eden, 3 Bing. 611; Froyle v. Bird, 6 B. & C. 531; Gibb v. Mather, 2 Crompt. & J. 254). The use of the word "only" is not essential to qualify the acceptance, if the words "and not elsewhere" are inserted (Higgins v. Nichols, 7 Dowl. 551); and if a declaration by indorsee against acceptor of such a bill state that he accepted it "payable at C. & Co., bankers," and that the deft. promised to pay it "according to the tenor and effect thereof," it will be understood that the bill is pleaded according to its legal effect, but that does not imply that the bill is made payable at the bankers' only, and therefore the declaration need not state a presentment there (Halstead v. Skelton, supra).

Where a bill is made payable at the plt.'s bank, and when it becomes due there are no assets of the company in the bank; held, in an action by indorsee against indorser, that it was not necessary to show a presentment of the bill to the acceptor (Bayley v. Porter, 14 M. & W. 44; 14 Law J., N. S. 244). In an action against acceptor of a bill accepted payable at Messrs. W. & Co.'s, bankers, London, the count alleged the acceptance in the precise words, and a presentment at the place mentioned; held, no variance, though such acceptance is by the 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, a general and not a qualified one (Blake v. Bowman, 4 Sco. N. R. 617, nom. Blake v. Beaumont, 4 Man. & G. 7). If the maker of a note, by a note at the foot, make it payable at a particular place, the allegation (after stating the promise to pay in the usual manner) that the deft. then and there made the note payable at a particular place, does not amount to a misdescription of the note (Hardy v. Woodroffe, 2 Stark. 156). If the place of payment be mentioned so as to constitute no part of the contract, but a mere memorandum, it is not necessary to allege it (Price v. Mitchell, inf. Bayl. B. 220). When a promissory note is in the body of it made payable at a particular place, it is proper so to state it (Roche v. Campbell, 3 Camp. 247, 304; Price v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 201; Sanderson v. Bowes, 14 East, 500; Bowes v. How, 5 Taunt. 34; Williams v. Waring, 10 B. & C. 2; and see S. C. M. & R. 9); otherwise not (Ib.). The 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, relates merely to the acceptance of bills, and does not apply to notes.

The declaration stated that deft. made his promissory note, and thereby promised to pay to plt. "by the name and addition of Miss Jessie Hope, at 10, Duncan Street, Edinburgh," &c.: held, that this was a note payable at a particular place, and that the declaration was bad for want of an averment of presentment at that place (Spindler v. Grellett, 1 Ex. 384; 17 Law J. 6).

A note in the following form, "three months after date, I promise to pay to my own order the sum of 65*l.*, J. A. B., payable at Messrs. W. and P.'s, indorsed J. A. B., is not a note payable at a particular place (Masters v. Baretto, 13 Jur. 1124, C. P.). Quere, if Trecothick v. Edwin, 1 Stark. 469, is law (Ib.).

Description of Payee.] One C. drew a bill on the deft. in London, payable to H. D. It got into the hands of a different person of the same name, and was accepted by the deft., and the wrong H. D. indorsed to plt.: held, that no title passed to the plt. (Mead v. Young, 4 T. R. 28). If the name be spelled wrong it may be shown by verbal testimony who was intended (Willis v. Barrett, 2 Stark. 29). Where father and son are of the same name, it is prima facie payable to the father (Sweeting v. Fowler, 1 Stark. 106).

A note payable to trustees under A.'s will is a good note, and evidence is admissible to show who they are (Megginson v. Harper, 2 Cr. & M. 322). The payee is sufficiently designated in the following notes: "Received of A. B. 100*l.*, which I promise to pay," &c. "15*l.* 15*s.* balance due to A. C. I am still indebted, and do promise to pay" (Chadwick v. Allen, 2 Stra. 706).

A note payable to the manager of the National Provincial Bank, to an order by the payee in his own name; plea, that deft. did not make, &c.: held, plt. was entitled to recover (Robinson v. Sheward, 1 Sco. N. R. 419).

*If a bill be not made payable either to any payee in particular, or to the drawer's order, or to the bearer in general, it would seem [*460] that it is payable to bearer (Minet v. Gibson, 1 H. Bl. 608; but see Ib. per Eyre, C. B.). A bill payable to —, or order, was held to be no bill of exchange, for there was no payee (R. v. Rundall, Russ. C. C. 195; R. v. Richards, ib. 193; see further, "DEFENCE").

If a blank be left for the payee's name, a bona fide holder may fill it up with his own, and may recover against the drawer (Crutchley v. Clarence, 2 M. & S. 90; Atwood v. Griffin, R. & M. 425); but he must show that he had this authority from the drawer, in order to charge the acceptor (Crutchley v. Mann, 5 Taunt. 529; 1 Marsh. 29).

Where the name of the payee is not that of a person, as when the note is payable to ship Fortune, or bearer, it is payable to bearer simply (Grant v. Vaughan, 3 Burr. 1516; see R. v. Box, 6 Taunt. 325). By the 17 Geo. III. c. 30, all negotiable instruments under 5*l.* must specify the name of the payee and place of his abode.

When a bill through mistake has been made payable to a wrong person, the mistake may be stated with an innuendo as to the person meant (Bayl. B. 314; Willis v. Barrett, supra; Bishop v. Hayward, 4 T. R. 470).

When a bill or note is returned to a payee, he may declare on it in his own name (Ch. Bills, 343). If drawn payable to a fictitious payee, and the drawer indorse the fictitious payee's name, the holder cannot, either as indorsee or bearer, recover against the acceptor (Bennett v. Farnell, 1 Camp. 130). If the acceptor at the time of acceptance knew the payee to be a fictitious person, he shall not take advantage of his own fraud, but a bona fide holder may recover against him, and declare as payable to bearer, or may recover on the money counts (Minet v. Gibson, 3 T. R. 481; 1 H. Bl. 569; see Vere v. Lewis, 3 T. R. 182; Collis v. Emmett, 1 H. Bl. 313; Tatlock v. Harris, 3 H. Bl. 174; Bennett v. Farnell, 1 Camp. 130).

Sum payable.] If there be any difference between the sum mentioned in the body of the bill and the sum superscribed, that in the body is the one for which the bill is made payable (Saunderson v. Piper, 5 Bing. N. C. 425; 7 Sco. 408). Where the figures express a larger sum than the words, evidence to show that the difference arose from an accidental omission of words is admissible (Ib.). An inaccurate, but intelligible, statement of the sum payable will not vitiate (R. v. Port, Bayl. B. 8; Phipps v. Tanner, 5 C. & P. 488). Where the money in which the bill is payable is foreign, it is necessary to show in the declaration that it is foreign money, or else its value (Simmons v. Parmenter, 1 Wils. 185; 4 Bro. P. C. 604; Ch. R. 359; but see Ring v. Kearney, supra; Sprowle v. Legge, supra). The omission of the word sterling is immaterial (Kearney v. Ring, 2 B. & A. 301; Glossop v. Jacob, 2 Stark. 69).

It seems that an averment in a declaration on a bill drawn in Ireland, and made payable in England, treating the sum mentioned in the bill as Irish currency, and stating it to be of the value of 232*l.* 4*s.* of lawful money of Great Britain, is material, and will prevent the plt. from recovering more than that sum; although, without such an averment, he would have been entitled to have treated the bill as of English currency (Taylor v. Booth, 1 C. & P. 286; Kearney v. Ring, supra; Sprowle v. Legge, 1 B. & C. 16; Smith v. Smyth, 10 Bing. 406).

Value received.] It has been held that the words "value received" are an essential part of the bill (Cramlington v. Evans, 1 Show. 5). *But [*461] they seem to be not at all material, and might be omitted from the declaration (Grant v. De Costa, 3 M. & S. 352, per Lord Ellenborough; see Coombs v. Ingram, 5 D. & R. 211; Ch. Bills, 67).

It has been questioned whether an action of debt will lie on a bill, unless the consideration be expressed (Bishop v. Young, ante, p. 447; Priddy v. Henbrey, ante, p. 447); but it is now decided that the action will lie, although the consideration be not expressed (Hatch v. Traves, 11 Ad. & E. 702; Watson v. Knightly, ib.; see ante, p. 447). If however they are stated, and a wrong meaning be given to the words, it is a fatal variance (Highmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S. 65). But it is no variance to state "value delivered in leather," to be "value received in leather" (Jones v. Mars, 2 Camp. 307). The following bill, "Pay to F. and Co., or order, 315*l.* value received," and signed by the drawer, may be declared on as a bill for value received by the drawer from the payee (Grant v. De Costa, supra; Highmore v. Primrose, supra). A note described to be "for value received," is not disproved by evidence of a note payable to the plt.'s order "for value received in Mrs. L.'s estate" (Bond v. Stockdale, 7 D. & R. 140). If, however, the bill be drawn payable to the drawer's own order, the words value received mean by the drawee, and the declaration alleges it as value received by the drawer, the variance is fatal (Highmore v. Primrose, supra). Value received in a note means value received by the maker, of the payee (Clayton v. Gosling, 5 B. & C. 361).

Though the nature or particulars of the consideration appear on the note or bill, it need not be stated in the declaration, or it may be stated generally as "value received" (Coombs v. Ingram, 4 D. & R. 211; Bond v. Sockdale, supra). The deft. may prove that the note was given for a different consideration, or without any consideration at all (Abbot v. Hendrick, 2 Sco. N. R. 183). But the deft. will not be allowed to contradict his written admission on the note of the nature of the consideration (Ridout v. Bristow, 1 Cromp. & J. 231; and see Edwards v. Jones, 2 M. & W. 414; 5 Dowl. 575).

Directions to place to Account &c.] This is unnecessary (Laing v. Barclay, 1 B. & C. 398; 2 D. & R. 530).

Before the commencement of this Suit.] Drawer against acceptor; allegation that the bill was made on the 29th March, payable four months after date, "which period has now elapsed:" held, sufficient, and that it was not necessary to aver that the four months had elapsed "before the commencement of the suit" (Owen v. Waters, 2 M. & W. 91; 5 Dowl. 324; 2 Gale, 208). But in a previous case, a demurrer to a count on a bill (in the exact form given by the rules T. T. 1 Will. IV.), for that the words "now elapsed" did not show that the bill was due before the action was commenced, was held not to be frivolous (Abbott v. Arlett or Aslett, 4 Dowl. 759; 1 M. & W. 209; 1 Gale, 405). The statement that the time elapsed before the commencement of this suit is still inserted in the books of pleading, and it may be advisable to adhere to it.

Where a count on a note was demurred to, for not stating whether the note was payable before the commencement of the suit, the court set aside the demurrer as frivolous, but allowed the deft. to plead on making an affidavit of merits (Gurney v. Hill, 2 Dowl. N. S. 936; 7 Jur. 834).

Where the allegation in the declaration is, that on the 25th of March, 1844, the deft. made his promissory note in writing, and thereby promised to pay the plt. on the 25th of March, 1845 (not *being laid under a vide licet), the sum mentioned in the note, "which day had expired before the commencement of this suit," the court held this allegation quite unnecessary, because they could see by the writ that the suit was commenced after the note was due, therefore that allegation may be struck out; Maule, J., observing that in Abbott v. Aslett, supra, Parke, B., says, in speaking of the old mode of declaring on bills of exchange, "If the date of the bill were stated with certainty, it was sufficient to show that it was payable a certain time after date; but if the day was laid under a vide licet, it was necessary to allege that the time for payment had elapsed before the commencement of the suit or the exhibiting of the bill" (Shepherd v. Shepherd, 3 D. & L. 200).

In assumpsit by indorsee against the maker of a bill of exchange, the second count stated that the deft. thereby required the acceptor to pay at three months' date, which period had then elapsed: held, that the averment was sufficiently certain, and was not ground of special demurrer (Maxwell v. Chambers, 8 Ir. Law R. 267).

In an action by indorser against drawer of a bill of exchange, the declaration contained the words "which period is now elapsed," and in the conclusion of the money counts the word "promise" was used instead of "promises:" held good, on special demurrer (Burret v. Daly, 8 Ir. Law R. 518).

Delivery of the Bill.] It is not necessary to state that the drawer or indorser of a bill delivered it to the payee, as it is implied in the allegation that he made or indorsed the bill, &c. (Churchill v. Gardner, 7 T. R. 596; Smith v. McClure, 5 East, 477; Sheldon v. Occason, Bayl. B. 349; Bind v. Hampshire, 1 M. & W. 371, per Ld. Abinger). A statement of the delivery to the acceptor is untechnical in an action against him, but not demurrable (Smith v. McClure, supra). In an action against the acceptor, it is not necessary to aver a re-delivery from him after acceptance; for, if a re-delivery, or something tantamount, to show the assent of the drawee to charge himself, be necessary to an acceptance, a demurrer by admitting the acceptance impliedly admits the re-delivery (Smith v. McClure, supra); although a statement of a delivery of a note or bill to a holder be not necessary, yet an allegation of delivery alone, without an indorsement, is not sufficient (Cunliffe v. Whitehead, 6 D. 63; Bing. N. C. 828; see Bromage v. Lloyd, 16 Law J. 257, Ex. post).

In an action by payee against maker of a note, it is not necessary to state a delivery of the note (Conway v. Lewis, 8 Ir. Law R. 4).

Acceptance.] The holder's right of action accrues immediately after refusal to accept (Whitehead v. Walker, 9 M. & W. 506). By the 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, s. 2, an inland bill must be accepted by writing the same on the face of the bill; but there is no necessity for stating in the declaration that it was so accepted (Charlie v. Belshaw, 6 Bing. 529; 4 Moo. & P. 275).

The word accepted written on the bill is sufficient, although there be no signature; but it is a question for the jury whether the acceptance be complete (Dufaur v. Oxenden, 2 Moo. & M. 90).

If the bill be payable after sight, the day when accepted should be expressed (Bayl. B. 173); but it seems a variance is not material (Forman v. Jacob, 1 Stark. 46; Young v. Wright, 1 Camp. 139). Where a declaration alleged that a bill was drawn on the 18th of August, payable 60 days after sight, and was afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, accepted by the deft., and the bill appeared to have been accepted on the 19th September: held, no variance (Forman v. Jacob, supra). Though *it has been considered that if the plt. allege in terms that the [*463] acceptance was made before the time limited by the bill for its payment, the plt. will be precluded from giving in evidence an acceptance afterwards (Jackson v. Piggott, Raym. 364; 12 Mod. 212; but see Bayl. B. 400; Leaper v. Tatton, 16 East, 420); but the drawee's name alone, written on any part of the bill, is a sufficient acceptance; so, without any name, the word "accepted," "presented," "seen," the month, or a direction to a third person to pay it (Anon. Comb. 401; Powell v. Monnier, 1 Atk. 611; Moore v. Whitby, B. N. P. 240; Dufaur v. Oxenden, supra).

Where one banker who held a check drawn on another presented it after four o'clock, and it was not paid, but according to practice a mark was put on it, to show that the drawer had effects, and that it would be paid; this was held to be an acceptance, payable next day at the clearing-house (Robson v. Bennett, 2 Taunt. 388).

An acceptance in blank, the bill being afterwards drawn in pursuance of the acceptor's authority, is good (Leslie v. Hastings, 1 Moo. & R. 119). An acceptance written on the paper before the bill is filled up, will charge the acceptor to the extent warranted by the stamp, and it is not necessary that the bill should be drawn up by the person to whom the acceptor handed the blank stamp (Schultz v. Ashley, 2 Sco. 815; 2 Bing. N. C. 544).

Although the acceptance be written first, it will be no variance, if the declaration state the drawing to have been first and the acceptance afterwards (Molloy v. Delves, 7 Bing. 428; 5 Moo. & P. 275).

A bill may be accepted after the period at which the bill was made payable has elapsed, and the acceptor will be liable on demand, and if it be stated that the acceptance was according "to the tenor and effect," these words are surplusage (Jackson v. Pigot, 1 Ld. Raym. 364; Mutford v. Walcott, ib. 573; Stein v. Eglesias, 5 Tyrw. 172; 1 C. M. & R. 565). It may also be accepted after a previous refusal to pay (Wynne v. Raikes, 5 East, 514; 2 Sm. 98).

The acceptance need not be stated, except in actions against the acceptor, or on bills payable within a limited time after sight (Bayl. B. 316; 4 Camp. 409). If unnecessarily stated, it need not be proved (Tanner v. Bean, 4 B. & C. 312; 6 D. & R. 338; overruling James v. Morgan, 2 Camp. 472).

A person is not liable as acceptor who accepts by procuration for the drawee, but without his authority, for no one can be liable as such but the person to whom the bill is addressed, unless he be an acceptor for honour (Polhill v. Walter, 3 B. & Ad. 122). John Hart drew an instrument payable to himself or order, addressed John Hart; Clarke wrote across it, "Accepted, H. J. Clarke:" held, that he could not be sued as acceptor of a bill of exchange directed to him (Davis v. Clarke, 6 Q. B. 16). An acceptance by an agent may be stated to be by principal (Heys v. Haseltine, 2 Camp. 604). A bill of exchange was drawn upon the plt., and accepted by his wife in her name, she having authority to accept for him: held, that the plt. was liable on the bill as acceptor. If a principal authorizes an agent to accept a bill, such principal is liable as acceptor, though wrongly described by his agent in the acceptance (Lindus v. Bradwell, 12 Jur. 230; 17 Law J. 121, C. P.). In an action by the indorsee against the drawer, it is not necessary to aver that the bill has been accepted (Parkes v. Edge, 1 C. & M. 429).

In an action against a party as acceptor of a bill of exchange, accepted in his name by another person, where evidence has been given of a general authority in that person to accept bills in the deft.'s name, an admission by the deft. of liability on another bill *so accepted is [*464] good evidence confirmatory of the former (Llewellyn v. Winkworth, 13 M. & W. 599).

In an action by indorsee against acceptor, allegation that one P. N. drew the bill, and required the deft. to pay to his order, &c., and that the deft. accepted, and N. P. indorsed it to the plt.; special demurrer, for that "his" was ambiguous, &c.: held, that his could not necessarily be referred to the last antecedent, and that it sufficiently appeared that it had reference to the drawee. (Spyer v. Thelwell, 4 Dowl. 509; 2 C. M. & R. 692).

Where a bill of exchange is drawn upon five persons, not a trading partnership, but jointly contracting for this particular occasion, and the bill is accepted by one of them only, in his own name, this is a sufficient acceptance to bind the others (Jenkins v. Morris, 9 Law T. 151, Ex.).

The acceptor cannot, in an action against him by the indorser, dispute the handwriting of the drawer, and if he do so by plea, the plt. may reply the acceptance by way of estoppel (Sanderson v. Collman, 4 Sco. N. R. 638; 4 Man. & G. 209).

A partner has no implied authority by law to bind his co-partners by his acceptance of a bill of exchange, except by an acceptance in the true style of the partnership; therefore, where a firm consisted of J. B. & C. H., the partnership name being J. B. only, and C. H. accepted a bill in the name of J. B. & Co., it was held that J. B. was not bound thereby (Kirk v. Blurton, 9 M. & W. 284).

It is improper to aver that the acceptor's handwriting was subscribed, as it can never help, and if the bill be accepted by procuration, it would be a fatal variance (Bayl. B. 402; Levy v. Wilson, 5 Esp. 180); but it would not be so if signed by one of a firm (Jones v. Marr, 2 Camp. 305; ante, 456); and it would seem that it would be obviated by a subsequent promise (Helmley v. Loader, ib. 150). Where the time of payment depends upon the presentment, and the action is against the drawer of a bill, or indorser of a bill or note, this should be the very day of presentment (Bayl. B. 405); in other cases, the exact day is not material.

Conditional Acceptance.] Where a bill has been accepted by the drawee, if another person accept it also, for the purpose of guaranteeing the first acceptor, the second acceptance is merely a collateral undertaking, and must be declared on as such (Jackson v. Hudson, 2 Camp. 447).

As to pleading specially that the acceptance was qualified, see Lyon v. Wall, 2 Moo. & S. 736. If the acceptance were in fact conditional, it will not support the allegation of an absolute one, though the condition be performed (Langston v. Corney, 4 Camp. 177; Ralli v. Sarrell, post, 165; Swan v. Cox, 1 Marsh. 176); if the condition have not been performed, a legal excuse must be averred and proved, if denied (Ros. Ev. 206).

Whether the acceptance be conditional or not is a question of law (Sproat v. Mathews, 1 T. R. 182). The following have been held to be conditional acceptances. When, on the presentment of bills for acceptance, the drawee said he would have accepted them if he had certain funds, which he had not been able to obtain from France, but that when he did he would pay the bill (Mendizabel v. Machado, 3 Moo. & S. 481). So, "to pay as remitted for" (Banbury v. Lissett, Stra 1212). So, that the bills would not be accepted until a money bill was paid (Bayl. B. 178; see Julien v. Showbrooke, 2 Wils. 9; Smith v. Abbott, 2 Stra. 1152).

When the acceptance is in writing, and absolute, it may be suspended *on a condition by another contemporaneous writing (Bowerbank [*465] v. Monteiro, 4 Taunt. 844; but see 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, s. 2; and see Spiller v. Westlake, 2 B. & Ad. 157; Gibbon v. Scott, 2 Stark. 286). But it cannot be available against an indorsee ignorant of such paper (Bowerbank v. Monteiro, supra); a mere verbal condition is inadmissible (Hoare v. Graham, 3 Camp. 57; Adams v. Wordly, 1 M. & W. 374; 2 Gale, 29).

Though, when a condition is performed, a conditional acceptance becomes absolute; yet in pleading it must be declared on as a conditional acceptance (Langston v. Corney, 4 Camp. 176; Ralli v. Sarrell, supra; Swan v. Cox, supra, where see a form). A bill having been accepted for the purpose of taking up other bills accepted by the same party, for the accommodation of the drawer, was held to be properly described as having been accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, (Thomas v. Fenton, 16 Law J., N. S., Q. B. 362; 2 C. B. 58).

Foreign Bills.] In case of foreign bills, a parol acceptance by collateral writing is still sufficient, according to the law of England. The following cases may therefore be taken to be applicable to such bills. A letter stating that such bill "shall meet with due honour" (Clarke v. Cock, 4 East, 57); so, that the holder "may rest satisfied as to such payment" (Wilkinson v. Lutwidge, 1 Stra. 649; Wynne v. Raikes, 5 East, 514). "What! not accepted? We have had the money, and the bills ought to have been paid. But I do not interfere in this business; you should see my partner" (Fairlee v. Herring, 3 Bing. 625).

A. having ordered goods of B. and C., a commercial house at Genoa, directed them to draw a bill of exchange for the amount upon a banking company in England, of which A. was a customer; A. having given notice of the drawing of this bill to the banking company, they wrote a letter to A. promising to accept it, which was the next day countermanded, with information that they would not accept the bill, to which A. assented afterwards. A. showed the letter, promising to accept to C., A.'s partner in the house of B. & C., resident in England, but suppressed the fact of his having received the second communication. In an action by B. and C. on this bill, as drawers, against the banking company as acceptors; held, that the first letter to A. operated as an acceptance, and enured to the benefit of the drawers, and could not therefore be affected by what subsequently passed between the banking company and A. (Grant v. Hunt, 14 Law J., N. S. 106; 9 Jur. 228; 1 C. B. 45).

Quære, whether it is essential that a promise to accept or pay on the face of the bill should be communicated to some party to the bill, or to the holder, or to some agent for such party or holder, in order to bind the party making it (Grant v. Hunt, 9 Jur. 228).

A promise to accept a non-existing foreign bill of exchange does not amount to an acceptance, there must be a bill in existence (Ireland Bank v. Archer, 12 Law J., N. S. 353; 11 M. & W. 383; 7 Jur. 379).

A merchant abroad, on the 21st of August, 1840, drew upon the defts., his London correspondents, a bill for 225*l.*, payable to plt.; they refused to accept it, and, on the 11th of September, refused to pay it; on the 13th the drawer died insolvent; on the 15th the defts., in ignorance thereof, wrote a letter, in which they said, "Respecting the drafts on us, we have to advise that we have paid, and are prepared to pay the following," mentioning the one in question. In a postscript they add, "We have been informed that the holders *of the bill above for 225*l.* had returned [*466] it to you; this they had no right to do, as already explained to you; they were bound to keep it until the following post day. The said bill we are almost sure was presented again on Saturday last, therefore we cannot conceive how it can have been sent back before this day. You ought to require proof that this bill had been returned by Friday's mail, otherwise the charge made thereon cannot be demanded of you." Held, that this contained an absolute promise to pay, which amounted to a valid acceptance of the bill, and that the effect of the letter was not destroyed or altered by the postscript (Billing v. Devaux, 3 Man. & G. 565; 4 Sco. N. R. 175).

As between the holder of a bill of exchange and the drawer or the indorser the lex loci contractus of the drawer, and of the indorser and not of the acceptor governs the liabilities of the drawer and indorser respectively. Therefore where A. (resident in Demerara), drew a bill of exchange in favour of B. (also resident in Demerara), upon C. resident in Scotland, and C. accepted it, making it payable in London; B. indorsed the bill to D., who afterwards became bankrupt. When C.'s acceptance became due, he held a bill of exchange accepted by D., D.'s assignees brought an action in Demerara against A. and B. upon the bill of exchange: held, reversing the decision of the Court of Demerara, (the Roman-Dutch law), and not the law of England must govern this case, and that according to that law, A. & B., the drawer and indorser of the first bill were at liberty to plead D.'s bill as compensation pro tanto of the first bill (Allen v. Kemble, 13 Jur. 287, P. C.).

Indorsement.] Every indorsement essential to a transfer should be stated, and unnecessary ones omitted (Bayl. B. 403; Peacock v. Rhodes, Vol. I.

Doug. 611, 633; see Waynam v. Bend, 1 Campb. 175; Critchlow v. Parry, 2 ib. 182; Mayer v. Jadis, 1 Moo. & R. 247). For it is not essential to state all the indorsements (Chaters v. Bell, 4 Esp. 210); but all that can be proved should be stated, and the plt. should not declare as immediate indorsee of the first indorser, when it may be material to make title through or from an intermediate indorsee (see Ch. Bills, 8th ed. 588; Stein v. Yglesias, 1 Gale, 98; see Davis v. Dodd, 4 Taunt. 602; 2 Ch. Pl. 76). Where, however, they are all stated they must be proved (Waynam v. Bend, 1 Camp. 175); unless proof be waived (Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 Esp. 43). But such as are not proved may be struck out at the trial (Mayer v. Jadis, 1 Moo. & R. 247; see Peacock v. Rhodes, Doug. 633). But then the payee's indorsement must be shown, and those whose indorsements are struck out will be discharged from liability. As an amendment will be allowed at the trial, the safer course will be, when any doubt exists as to the power of proving any of the indorsements, to state them. Where the declaration stated an indorsement by the first indorsee, on an issue whether the bill was so indorsed after it became due, it was held that the deft. proved the fact by showing that the plt. did not become indorsee until after the bill was due, though the intermediate indorsement (not stated) was before that period (Stein v. Yglesias, supra). The plt. must show an indorsement to himself; an omission would be fatal even after verdict (see Bishop v. Hayward, 4 T. R. 471). The declaration stated that the defts. made their promissory note, and promised to pay one H., since deceased, or order, 300*l.* on demand; that H. indorsed the note without making any delivery thereof; that H. died, having appointed his wife sole executrix, who afterwards transferred the note to the plt., to wit, by delivery thereof to him. Held, on general demurrer, that the word "transferred" meant a delivery only, and not an indorsement and delivery; and that the declaration was bad (Bromage v. Lloyd, 16 Law J. 257, Ex.).

A declaration by indorsee against acceptor of a bill of exchange, stated it to be drawn by certain persons using the name, style, and firm of M. & Co., and that the said M. & Co. indorsed it. Semble, this was not a sufficient description, as it did not show that M. & Co. drew or indorsed the bill in that name (Ball v. Gordon, 9 M. & W. 345). But where it was stated to be drawn by certain persons by and under the name, style, and firm of G. and Son, and that "these persons, by and under the said name, style, and firm of G. and Son," indorsed it, it was held sufficient (Tigar v. Gordon, ib. 347; see ante, p. 460). Where the deft. was sued by the initial of one of his christian names, the court refused to set aside a demurrer as frivolous (Nash v. Collier, 11 Jur. 1017, C. P.).

*A bill of exchange is a personal contract, entire in its nature, [*467] a part of it, therefore, cannot be assigned so as to entitle the indorsee to an action (Hawkins v. Gardner, 12 Mod. 213; Hawkins v. Cardy, Ld. Raym. 360; Carth. 466); unless he allege that the residue was paid (ib.).

The mark of a person who cannot write is a sufficient indorsement (George v. Surrey, M. & M. 516).

Where the indorsement is made by an agent, it is not necessary so to allege it; it suffices to state that the indorsement was made by the principal (Keys v. Haseltine, 2 Camp. 694; Bass v. Clive, 4 Camp. 78).

It is not necessary to state that one partner indorsed for himself and co-partners, it may be stated that all indorsed (Bass v. Clive, 4 Camp. 78; Keys v. Haseltine, 2 Camp. 604). The indorsement of one partner must be in the name of the firm, in order to bind the others (Kirk v. Blurton, 9 M. & W. 284). Where the declaration stated that a bill of exchange was indorsed by certain persons trading under the firm of H. & F., by procuration of J. D.: held, that this allegation was supported by evidence of J. D.'s handwriting, and that he, being the managing partner in a firm carrying on their business under the designation of H. & Co., was in the habit of indorsing bills in the manner above stated, although there was no such person as F. in the firm of H. & Co., and no direct proof that J. D.'s partners were privy to these transactions. One partner may act for the whole firm by procuration (Williamson v. Johnson, 1 B. & C. 146).

As to initials or contractions of the names of a firm, see supra. A variance in the description of indorser's name is sometimes immaterial (Forman v. Jacob, 1 Stark. 47). An indorsement made after the bill became due, may be stated as if made before; the date of the indorsement, therefore, if there be one, need not be alleged (Bayl. B. 402; Wright v. Young, supra; Purcell v. Macnamara, 9 East, 157). Blank indorsements are alleged in the same manner as those in full.

An affidavit to hold to bail stated the deft. to be indebted on a promissory note made by him, delivered to F., and indorsed by F. to the plt., whereas the declaration alleged that the indorsement was by F. to E., and by E. to the plt.: held, not a material variance (Lace v. Irwin, 3 M. & W. 27; 6 Dowl. 92). In an action by indorsee against acceptor, it is not necessary to aver notice to the acceptor of indorsement to the plt. (Skelton v. Halstead, 2 D. N. S. 69; Heald v. Johnson, 2 Sm. 44); nor in an action on a note by indorsee against the maker (Reynolds v. Davies, 1 B. & P. 625).

As to the words "their own proper hand," &c. see ante, p. 259. Where the word "delivered" was used, instead of "indorsed," the declaration was holden bad on general demurrer (Cunliffe v. Whitehead, 6 Dowl. 63; see Bromage v. Lloyd, supra).

The indorsee of a note cannot declare against his indorser as maker, even where the latter has indorsed a note, not payable, or indorsed to him, and where, consequently, his indorsee cannot sue the original maker (Gwinnell v. Herbert, 5 Ad. & E. 436; 6 Nev. & M. 723). The declaration stated that the deft. made his bill of exchange, and directed the same to J. B., and required him to pay to the deft.'s order 187*l.* 16*s.*, and then indorsed the bill to the plts. It appeared the bill was drawn by F., and indorsed by the deft. in blank, and having been delivered by the deft. to F., was by him taken to the bank of which the plts. were the managers, and given in renewal of another bill discounted by them and drawn and indorsed by the same parties. Held, that proof of indorsement by deft. did not support *the averment that he was the maker, and even assuming that an [*468] indorser might be treated as a drawer, still the present indorsement, being in blank, was equivalent to the drawing of a new bill payable to bearer, and therefore the bill was mis-described in the declaration, and that the plt. could not recover on the account stated (Burmester v. Hogarth, 11 M. & W. 97; 12 Law J., N. S., 178). Where there are several indorsers to a bill between the payee and the deft., the plt. may declare on an indorsement by the payee to the deft., and by the deft. to the plt., without stating those between (Charters v. Bell, 4 Esp. 210; Williamson v. Johnson, 1 B. & C. 146); and where the plt. sues a remote indorsee, it is usual to set out in the count every indorsement, and, where the first is in blank, it is prudent to add a count stating the plt. to be the immediate indorsee of the first indorser, and striking out before the trial all such intermediate indorsements, in order to avoid the necessity of proving the signature of the various indorsers (Peacock v. Rhodes, Doug. 633; Kyd, 206; Ch. Bills. 359). Where the plt. would omit an indorsement, he should represent that which precedes the indorsement to be omitted to have been made in favour of the person who is indorsee, upon that which follows: thus, if a bill payable to A.'s order be indorsed by him in blank, and delivered to B., and indorsed by B. to C., if C. would omit stating B.'s indorsement, he should state that A. indorsed it immediately to him, C. (Bayl. B. 403). As to the mode of improving an indorsement, and when it must be proved, see post, 515.

A promissory note payable by instalments is assignable within the stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9 (Oridge v. Sherborne, 11 M. & W. 374; see Carlton v. Kenealy, 12 M. & W. 139, post).

When the declaration against the indorsee of a bill of exchange alleges that A. made the bill and indorsed it to the deft., the latter is not estopped by his indorsement to deny these allegations, though it is very strong evidence of them (Armain v. Castrique, 13 M. & W. 443). By the law of France an indorsement in blank does not transfer any property in a bill of exchange. Held, that the holder of a bill drawn in France and indorsed there in blank cannot recover against the acceptor in the courts in this country (Trimbey v. Vignier, 1 B. N. C. 151). A foreign note is transferable in England by indorsement, by virtue of 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9 (Bently v. Northhouse, Moo. & M. 66; Miln v. Graham, 1 B. & C. 192).

Indorsement by an Administrator, &c.] In an action by indorsee of an administrator it is not necessary to make profert (Stone v. Linson, Willes, 559; nor, it seems, to state the letters of administration (Ib.), although in practice that form is adopted. H. indorsed a note, but did not deliver it; after the death of H., his executor delivered the note to plt.: held, that plt. had no title to sue on the note (Bromage v. Lloyd, 1 Ex. 52).

Delivery of the Bill.] The statement of a delivery of a bill or note to the holder is not necessary, as it is implied in the indorsement (Brind v. Hampshire, 1 M. & W. 371; see Churchill v. Godwin, 7 T. R. 596). On the other hand, an allegation of delivery alone without indorsement is not sufficient (Cunliffe v. Whitehead, 6 Dowl. 63; 3 Bing. N. C. 828; see ante, p. 462).

Notice of Indorsement.] An averment of this is unnecessary (Reynolds v. Davies, 1 B. & P. 625).

Presentment for Payment, &c.] In an action against the acceptor [*469] *of a bill the presentment need never be stated (Frampton v. Coulson, 1 Wils. 33). It is, however, averred in some of the forms prescribed by the judges, and should be used where it is so if it can be proved. If a bill be made payable at a particular place, according to the 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 58, ante, p. 458, it must be stated (Fayle v. Bird, 2 C. & P. 303). Where made payable at a banker's, it is not necessary to aver that the bill was presented to the bankers (Hawkes v. Borwick, 4 Bing. 135; Giles v. Bourne, 6 M. & S. 73); or that they did not pay (Ib.). If the necessary words are not in the acceptance of the bill, presentment at the bankers' need not be averred (Halstead v. Skelton, 5 Q. B. 86; and see Blake v. Beaumont, 1 D. N. S. 697). And if the holder neglect to present, and the bankers, at whose house it is made payable, fail with money of the acceptor in hand, he is not thereby discharged (Turner v. Hayden, 4 B. & C. 1); otherwise, if acceptance be qualified (Rowe v. Young, 2 B. & P. 165). Where a bill is drawn as well as accepted at a particular place, it is essential to state the fact, and aver presentment there, in an action against the drawer or indorser (Gibbs v. Mather, 8 Bing. 214). In an action by indorsee against drawer, where bill drawn and accepted at a particular place, it is not necessary to state a presentment to the acceptor (Skelton v. Braithwaite, 8 M. & W. 252). If an averment of presentment be unnecessarily stated, it need not be proved (Ch. Bills, 378). On a note payable on demand, it is advisable in one count in an action against the maker to aver a demand (Ib. 360). No objection can be taken on demurrer; at least, not assigning the cause specially, that after stating the day on which the bill was drawn, which was made payable at a future day, the count alleged that afterwards, to wit on the same day, &c., the demand of payment was made (Exon v. Russell, 2 M. & S. 505).

The promise must not be placed before the allegation of default by the acceptor, nor should it be alleged that the acceptor or the deft. did not pay, &c., when due; as, for aught that would appear, he might have paid afterwards (Hedger v. Stevenson, 2 M. & W. 799; 5 Dowl. 771; M. & W. 176).

In an action against the drawer or indorser, it is essential to state that the bill or note was presented, or that some sufficient excuse be shown, as that the drawer or maker could not be found; or that the deft. had he paid the bill, would have had no remedy against them (Bayl. B. 322; Mercer v. Southall, 2 Show. 180; Doug. 654; Rushton v. Aspinwall, ib. 659, 680; Heylyn v. Adamson, 2 Burr. 678; 2 H. Bl. 565). A subsequent promise by the deft. to pay is evidence of the presentment for payment, &c., and no special count is necessary to meet such promise (Lundie v. Robertson, 7 East, 231).

An averment, that when the bill became due according to the tenor, to wit, on the 31st of March, 1822, it was duly presented for payment, was held sufficient on a special demurrer, assigning for cause that the 31st of March was on a Sunday; it is sufficient to state that the bill was presented when it became due according to its tenor (Bynner v. Russell, 7 Moo. 267; 1 Bing. 23).

Where a person not party to a bill guarantees the payment by the acceptor, he is not entitled to require proof of presentment (Hitchcock v. Henfrey, 5 Man. & G. 559; 6 Sco. N. R. 540).

If a presentment by a certain person be alleged, presentment by another may be proved (Boehm v. Campbell, 1 Gow, 55).

Where it is ambiguous on the face of an instrument, whether it be a bill of exchange or promissory note, the payee may treat it as either, and presentment is unnecessary (Adis v. Bury, 6 B. & C. 433; Gray v. Milner, 8 Taunt. 739; Allan v. Mawson, 4 Camp. 615; Shuttleworth v. Stevens, 1 Camp. 407). Where a bill is drawn, *payable to the [*470] order of the drawer at a particular place, semble, that a declaration against the drawer or indorser, alleging a presentment generally, is sufficient after verdict (Lyon v. Holt, 5 M. & W. 250). In an action against indorser of a bill, though it is necessary to prove a presentment at the place pointed out by the acceptance, yet the declaration need not allege that the bill was accepted at that place; though, if so stated, there must be a corresponding allegation of presentment (Parker v. Ade, 1 Dowl. 643; Parker v. Edge, 1 C. & M. 429; Parkes v. Edge, 3 Tyrw. 364). In assumpsit on a bill of exchange drawn upon "P. P., No. 6, Budge Row," and accepted, &c., averment that the bill when due was presented, and shown to P. P. for payment, is supported by proof that the holder went to 6, Budge Row, to present it, but found the house shut up, and no one there (Hine v. Alleby, 4 B. & Ad. 624). In a declaration against drawer and acceptor of a bill payable for honour, it is necessary to aver that presentment for payment was made to the drawee, and, for want of such averment, judgment was arrested (Williams v. Germaine, 7 B. & C. 468; 1 M. & R. 394, 403). In a declaration by indorsee against indorser of a bill of exchange, drawn payable in London, the allegation of presentment for payment was general. The venue stated in the margin of the declaration was London. Held, there being no traverse of the presentment,—that, inasmuch as by the rule of court, H. T. 4 Will. IV., such venue shall be taken to be the venue intended by the plt., and no venue shall be stated in the body of the declaration, there was a sufficient allegation in the declaration that the presentment for payment was made in London (Boydell v. Harkness, 10 Jur. 476; 15 Law J. 233, C. P.; 3 C. B. 168).

The statute 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, relating to the acceptance of bills, making them payable at a particular place, does not extend to promissory notes (Emblin v. Dartnell, supra; per Parke, B.). Where a note is in the body of it made payable at a particular place, a presentment at a particular place must be averred (Roche v. Campbell, 3 Camp. 247, 304; Price v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 201; Sanderson v. Bowes, 14 East, 500); and an omission would be bad after verdict (Emblin v. Dartnell, 1 D. & L. 1011; 12 M. & W. 1010). Where, however, the place of payment is noticed only in the margin, or at the foot of the note, there the averment of presentment need not be made (Ch. Bills, 23); and, if stated, it is mere surplusage, and need not be proved (1b. 8th ed. 640, n. b.).

Day and Time of Presentment.] This should be alleged to be on the third day of grace, and if that should be on a Sunday, Christmas-day, or Good Friday, or on public days of fasts or thanksgivings, then it should be on the day previous (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 42; 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 15, s. 2).

Declaration by indorsee against acceptor of a bill of exchange averred the drawing, acceptance, and indorsement in the ordinary form. Breach: yet deft. hath disregarded his said promise, and hath not paid the said sum or any part thereof. Demurrer: for that the declaration does not show that the three days of grace had passed before the commencement of the suit: held, frivolous, upon motion to rescind a judge's order setting it aside (Padwick v. Turner, 11 Jur. 930, Q. B.).

Three days of grace are allowed on promissory notes as well as bills of exchange (Brown v. Harraden, 4 T. R. 148; and see Ward v. Honeywood, 1 Dougl. 61); even were payable to A. without adding or "to his order" or "to bearer" (Smith v. Kendall, 5 T. R. 123; 1 Esp. 231). Quere, [*471] whether days of grace are allowed on bills payable at sight * (Janson v. Thomas, 3 Dougl. 421). The presentment for payment on the day before the bill became due, allowing days of grace, is premature (Wiffin v. Roberts, 1 Esp. 261). The three days of grace are allowed on bills drawn and payable in Scotland (Ferguson v. Douglas, 6 Bro. P. C. 276). At Hamburg, the holder need not present it until the eleventh day after the time limited for its payment, when the eleventh day is a post day, and if it be not he must present it on the next preceding post day, unless the drawer reside at Lubeck or Bremen, or other places near Hamburg, which are in daily intercourse with it, in which case the holder need not present it until the eleventh day, although that day be not a post day (Goldsmith v. Shee, and Same v. Bland, Bayl. B. 199).

Where a bill is payable at a certain date, a presentment for payment must be proved to have been made on the last day of grace, whether the bill be an inland or foreign bill (Brown v. Harraden, 4 T. R. 152; Tassel v. Lewis, 1 Ld. Raym. 743; Anderton v. Beck, 16 East, 248).

Bills payable on demand have no days of grace (Ch. Bills, 146).

A bill payable after sight, having been refused acceptance and protested, was accepted eight days after, by a person for the honour of the drawer; when at maturity, according to that acceptance, it was presented for payment to the drawee and acceptor for honour: in actions against the latter and the drawer, held, that these presentments for payment were made at a proper time (Williams v. Germaine, 7 B. & C. 468; 1 M. & R. 394). A bill payable sixty days after sight becomes due sixty days after acceptance and after protest for non-payment (Campbell v. French, in error, 6 T. R. 200; 2 H. Bl. 163).

Before the new pleading rules, it was held that the declaration should contain an allegation of demand upon, and a refusal by the acceptor on the day when the note was payable, otherwise there was error, which was not cured by verdict (Rushton v. Aspinall, supra); unless the plt. alleged that "afterwards, and when the said bill became due and payable, according to the tenor and effect thereof, to wit, on, &c." which was considered the safer way (Bynner v. Russell, 1 Bing. 23; 7 Moo. 286; but see the forms, post, 485). Where, in an action against the acceptor of a bill payable a limited time after sight, the declaration alleged a presentment for payment, mistaking the day on which such presentment was made, it was held immaterial (Forman v. Jacob, 1 Stark. 46).

If a bill be payable on an event, it must be alleged that that event has taken place (Ch. Bills, 181, 356). In an action against an acceptor supra, protest, it was held, that the declaration should aver that the bill was presented at maturity to the original drawee (lb. 243). If, however, it could not be presented, the reason need not be stated if the declaration contained the usual averment that the bill was duly presented, according to the custom of merchants; for the reason might be given in evidence under this averment (Patience v. Townley, 2 Sm. 224). Thus, where a bill was drawn at Leghorn, but was not presented in due time, owing to the political state of the country at that time, which rendered it impossible to present it: held, that it being afterwards presented for payment, with due diligence, and refused for want of presentation at the time when it was due, the holder might recover against the antecedent parties, and evidence of this impossibility of presenting at the time of the maturity of the bill might be given on the ordinary averment, that it was duly presented (Patience v. Townley, 2 Sm. 223). Duly presented, means according to the custom of merchants, which implies an exception in favour of unavoidable *circumstances (lb.). So, under this averment, plt. may show deft. could not be found to give [*472] him the notice in the usual way (Firth v. Thrush, 8 B. & C. 387).

Payable by Instalments.] In declaring on a note payable by instalments, if any one of the days on which an instalment is made payable be incorrectly stated, the variance is fatal (Wells v. Girling, 3 Moo. 79; Gow, 21). A promissory note, payable by instalments, is assignable (Oridge v. Sherborne, 11 M. & W. 374; 7 Jur. 402).

Even, if subject to a condition that, on default being made in payment of the first instalment, the whole amount shall become immediately payable, the note is assignable within the 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9; and, on default being made by the maker in payment of the first instalment, an indorser is liable for the whole amount (Carlton v. Kencaby, 12 M. & W. 139; 1 D. & L. 331; 13 Law J., N.S. 64); and the maker is entitled to three days of grace on the falling due of each instalment (Oridge v. Sherborne, 11 M. & W. 374; 7 Jur. 402).

Mode of Presentment.] It need not be alleged who made the presentment, and if a particular person be stated, it need not be proved to have been made by him (Boehm v. Campbell, Gow, 55). The presentment should be stated to have been made, according to the tenor and effect of the bill, to the person who was to pay it; and it seems best always to insert the words, "according to the tenor and effect of the bill" (Huffman v. Ellis, 3 Taunt. 415). But these words have not been adopted in the forms prescribed by the judges. Where, however, the bill is payable at a particular place, in compliance with 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, it is usual to use the above words. The words, duly presented, &c., mean presented according to the custom of merchants (Patience v. Townley, supra). If a bill be payable at a banker's, or other person's, it need not be averred that it was presented to them (Giles v. Bourne, 6 M. & S. 73; 2 Chit. Rep. 300; Hawkes v. Borwick, 4 Bing. 135); or to the acceptor at the banker's, though the acceptance be general (De Bergareche v. Pillin, 3 Bing. 476; see Turner v. Hayden, 4 B. & C. 2). If a bill be made payable by the acceptor, at the house of S., an averment of presentment at the house of S. suffices (Hawkes v. Borwick, 4 Bing. 135). If a bill be accepted payable by certain persons, at a particular place, it suffices, in an action against the drawer, to state an averment of presentment to those persons generally, without saying at what place (Ambrose v. Hopwood, 2 Taunt. 61). An acceptance of a bill drawn payable to plt.'s order in London is a general acceptance within the statute 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78; and a special presentment need not be alleged or proved, nor need proof of averment of presentment, or payment in London, or of excuse for non-presentment in London, be given (Selby v. Eden, 3 Bing. 311; 11 Moo. 511; Fazle v. Bird, 6 B. & C. 531).

A note in the margin mentioning a place where payable need not be averred in the declaration, nor need the bill be proved to have been presented there for payment (Williams v. Waring, 10 B. & C. 2; see Price v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 200; Trecothick v. Edwin, 1 Stark. 468).

Where a bill drawn with the words "pay to my order in London" in the body of the bill, and directed to the drawees payable in London, was accepted at Messrs. J. L. and Co's., bankers, in London: held, that a presentment to J. L. and Co. was necessary to charge the drawer, though such acceptance is general, and the drawer having *negotiated it after such acceptance [*473] ance made no difference (Gibb v. Mather, in error, 2 Crompt. & J. 254; 8 Bing. 214).

In assumpsit by indorser against the indorsee of a bill, plt. declared that A. B. accepted, and by that acceptance appointed the money in the bill specified to be paid at the house of G. and Co., and averred that the bill was in due manner presented to G. and Co. and to A. B. for payment, and that G. and Co. and A. B. were then and there required to pay the same to plt., according to the tenor and effect of the bill, and the acceptance and indorsement. Upon special demurrer, for that it did not appear that the bill was presented at the house; held, that the averment was sufficient (Bush v. Kinnear, 6 M. & S. 210).

Where indorsee declared against the maker of a note, that he made the same payable at the house of Messrs. B. and Co., London; and at the trial it appeared that the address was not part of the note, but only a memorandum at foot thereof: held, that this was a variance (Exon v. Russell, 4 M. & S. 505).

If a particular house be mentioned in the body of a note, a presentment there is necessary, even to charge the maker (Anderson v. Bowes, 14 East, 500); and is not cured by an averment that the note was duly presented (Roche v. Campbell, 3 Camp. 247).

A note promising to pay on demand, at a particular place, must be presented, and a demand of payment made at that place, unless the makers discharge the holders from the presentment and demand; and the presentment and demand must be alleged, unless a discharge be shown (Bowes v. Howe, in error, 5 Taunt. 30; and see 3 Taunt. 399, n.). An allegation that the makers of a note became insolvent, and ceased, and wholly declined and refused, then and thenceforth, to pay at the place specified, any of their notes, does not suit such discharge, nor can it be intended, from the allegation of refusal, that there was a presentment (Bowes v. Howe, supra).

It has been held, at nisi prius, that if a bill is accepted payable at a particular place, in an action against the acceptor, this addition does not require to be noticed in the declaration (Lyon v. Sundius, 1 Camp. 423; Head v. Sewell, Holt, 363; Macbride v. Woodroffe, 2 Stark. 253).

Excuse for Presentment.] If the bill be not presented, and there be a sufficient legal excuse therefor, the same must be stated (Smith v. Bellamy, 2 Stark. 233; Lesson v. Pigott, Bayl. B. 409); as, that the drawee could not be found, or that the deft., had he paid the bill, had no legal remedy against him (Bayl. B. 408; Mercer v. Southwell, 2 Show. 180; Doug. 654; Rushton v. Aspinall, ib. 680; see Hine v. Allely, 4 B. & Ad. 624). It suffices to aver generally the drawee was not to be found, without stating that any inquiry was made after him; though it is now more usual to state, that diligent search was made, and which must be proved; but it is not necessary to state the reason why the bill was not presented at maturity (Patience v. Townley, supra).

Want of effects in the hands of the acceptor excuses the indorsee of an accommodation bill from presenting it for payment, as well as from giving notice of dishonour to the drawer (Terry v. Parker, 1 Nev. & P. 752; 6 Ad. & E. 502). A mere averment of the drawee's insolvency, &c., is no excuse (Bowes v. Howe, 5 Taunt. 30; Ch. Bills, 250); nor is a mere removal without an absconding (Parker v. Gordon, 7 East, 385).

In an action against the drawer when the deft. dispensed with presentment, it is necessary to state it in the declaration; it cannot *be given in evidence under an allegation that actual presentment or [*474] notice of dishonour was given (Bush v. Legge, 5 M. & W. 420).

In assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, the deft. pleaded that he delivered to the plt. certain promissory notes of A. B. payable on demand, and that the same were not presented within a reasonable time. The plt. replied, that at the time of such delivery, A. and B. were bankrupt and insolvent, and unable to pay their debts, although this fact was unknown to him, the plt.; and that within a reasonable time after such knowledge, and within reasonable time for presentment, he returned the notes to the deft.: held, upon demurrer, that a sufficient excuse for the non-presentment appeared, and that the plt.'s right of action revived upon the notice of such facts being given to the deft. within a reasonable time after the time for presentment. A plea that a note payable to bearer, and on demand, was given for and on account of the debt, and that the same was not duly presented, is prima facie a good answer (Robson v. Oliver, 16 Law J. 437, Q. B.; ante, p. 468, et seq.).

Indorsee against indorser of a bill drawn by W. C. upon, and accepted by, J. C., payable at the plt.'s bank, and subsequently indorsed by W. C. to the plts. On the day when the bill became due there were no assets of J. C.'s in the bank: held, not necessary to show a presentment of the bill to the acceptor (Bayley v. Porter, 14 M. & W. 44).

Non-Payment.] In an action against the acceptor of a bill, payable at a particular place, it need not be stated that payment was refused at such place, the usual breach at the end of the declaration being sufficient (Butterworth v. Le Despenser, 3 M. & S. 150; Benson v. White, 4 Dowl. 334; Giles v. Bourne, 6 M. & S. 73). In an action against the drawer or indorser, the non-payment must be averred. If a bill be payable at a banker's, it need not be averred they did not pay, though usual so to do (Giles v. Bourne, supra; S. C. 2 Ch. Rep. 300). It is a sufficient averment of non-payment of a bill accepted by the deft., payable at a particular place, to state that it was presented at his house, without showing that it was presented to him (ib.). In an action on a foreign bill, it is not necessary, though usual, to aver the non-payment of the other parts of the bill (Starke v. Cheeseman, Carth. 509; East v. Easington, Ld. Raym. 810; 7 Mod. 86; Wegersloffe v. Keene, 1 Stra. 214).

Notice of Dishonour.] In an action against the acceptor of a bill or maker of a note, it is not necessary to aver that he had notice of dishonour (Smith v. Thatcher, 4 B. & A. 200; Edwards v. Dick, ib. 212; Treacher v. Hinton, ib. 413; Butterworth v. Le Despenser, 3 M. & S. 150; Pearse v. Pemberthy, 3 Camp. 261). In an action, however, against the drawer or indorser, this averment, or a sufficient legal excuse for not giving the notice, must be stated, and an omission of such notice is bad, even after verdict (Bayl. B. 412; Rushton v. Aspinall, Doug. 679; Lundie v. Robertson, 7 East, 231). In an action by indorsee against indorser, the special facts rendering valid a deferred notice of dishonour need not be specially averred, the common averment of notice will be sufficient (Ferth v. Thrush, 2 M. & R. 359; 8 B. & C. 387; but see Bush v. Legge, 5 M. & W. 418; 7 Dowl. 84). Where a person, not a party to the bill, guarantees the payment by the acceptor, he is not entitled to notice of dishonour (Hitchcock v. Humfrey, 5 Man. & G. 559; 6 Sco. N. R. 540). Where the drawer of a bill had no notice of the *dishonour thereof, but subsequently promised to pay [*475] it; semble, such promise does not admit the notice, but merely waives it (Chapman v. Annett, 1 C. & K. 552, Pollock, C. B.).

A. drew a bill for 10*l.* on B., who owed him 20*l.* The bill was payable on Saturday, the 10th of August. On the following Wednesday A. was told by the bankers of C., the holder, that they understood that he, A., had received the money to take up the bill. He said he should keep the money, as B. still owed him 10*l.*, and that he wished the bankers would sue B. on the bill: held, evidence to go to the jury that A. had received due notice of dishonour (Jackson v. Collins, 17 Law J. 142, Q. B.; 12 Jur. 395; sed vide Burgh v. Legge, 5 M. & W. 418; and Croxon v. Worthen, ibid. 5).

Where notice of dishonour was sent by letter improperly directed, and consequently the letter did not arrive until the following day, but a few days afterwards the parties met, and in the course of conversation the deft. said that he wished the matter was settled, but declined to put his name to a new bill, although he should have no objection to write a letter: held to be sufficient evidence of the receipt of a former notice of dishonour (Goodall v. Lansfeld, 10 Law T. 376, Ex.).

Any acknowledgment by the drawer of a bill, of his liability to pay, or any promise to pay the amount, though conditional as to the mode of payment, is evidence to be left to the jury of due notice of dishonour; and, in the case of a foreign bill, of its having been duly protested (Campbell v. Webster, 1 C. B. 258; 15 Law J. 4, C. P.).

A notice from an intermediate party may be described as a notice from the plt. (Newen v. Gill, 8 C. & P. 367). In general, when the drawer would have any remedy over against the third party, as in the case of a bill drawn for the accommodation of an indorsee, notice, and not an excuse of notice, ought to be alleged and proved (Cory v. Scott, 3 B. & A. 623; Norton v. Pickering, 8 B. & C. 610; see Carter v. Flower, 16 Law J., N. S., Exch. 199).

A notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange should show directly, or by necessary implication—1st, that the bill has been presented; 2ndly, that it has not been paid; and 3rdly, that the party to whom the notice is given is looked to for payment (East v. Smith, 16 Law J., N. S., Q. B. 292; 11 Jur. 412, Q. B.; see Chapman v. British Guiana Bank, 11 Jur. 25, P. C.). The deft. drew his bill on Maclean, who accepted it; the deft. indorsed it to Day, and Day to the plt. The bill falling due on a Sunday, the plt.'s son presented it on the Saturday to the acceptor, and he refused to pay. The plt.'s son went and told Day and his foreman; on the same day, the foreman told the deft. of the dishonour. On the Sunday, Day also told him of it. Held, that there was no sufficient notice, there being no sufficient intimation from an authorized person that the deft. would be looked to for payment (ib.). Semble, that a tradesman's foreman is not to be presumed to have authority to give a notice of dishonour for his master (ib.). Semble also, that a simple statement of dishonour, made by the holder of the bill, might be good notice, although it would not be sufficient if made by any other person (ib.).

A bill of exchange was drawn by H., indorsed by him to B., and by B. to C., in whose hands it was dishonoured. C.'s attorney gave notice of dishonour in due time to A., but stated therein, by mistake, that he was directed by B. (from whence he had no authority) to apply for payment of the bill: held, that the notice of dishonour was sufficient, notwithstanding this misrepresentation, the only effect of which was to give A. every defence against C. that he *would have had if the notice had really been given by B. (Harrison v. Ruscoe, 15 M. & W. 231; 10 Jur. 142; 15 Law [*476] J. 110, Ex.).

In an action by indorsee against indorser of a bill of exchange accepted payable at the London Joint-stock Bank, it appeared that the notice of dishonour described it as payable at the London and Westminster Joint-stock Bank. The London Joint-stock Bank and the London and Westminster Joint-stock Bank were distinct banking companies in London: held, that the notice of dishonour was sufficient (Bromage v. Vaughan, 10 Jur. 982, Q. B.; 16 Law J. 10, Q. B.).

To prove notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange for 53*l.*, dated Dec. 19th, 1842, evidence was given that a letter was sent to deft., asking payment of 53*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*, due on your dishonoured note, date 19th Dec. last (1842): held to be a sufficient notice of dishonour, although the instrument dishonoured was a bill, and not a note, and was for 53*l.*, and not 53*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*, unless it appeared that there was some other instrument to which the notice could apply, and that the proof of the existence of such instrument lay on the deft. (Stockman v. Parr, 1 C. & K. 41).

Notice of Dishonour.] A notice of dishonour given by a party to a bill of exchange, other than the holder, should show that the party to whom it was addressed is looked to for payment (East v. Smith, 4 D. & L. 744, B. C.).

In action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill of exchange, it was proved that deft. called at C.'s, a party to the bill (but not the holder) to whom notice of dishonour had been given by the plt. the same evening that the bill became due, and on inquiry about it was told by C.'s foreman that it had been presented, and was not taken up; the next day the deft. called on C. about the bill, and was told that it had not been taken up, that it was not paid. There was no evidence of C.'s business, or that his foreman had any authority to give notice of dishonour; held, not sufficient notice (ib.). The holder of an indorsed bill is entitled to recover against the indorser if he has sent the bill in due time to the place of business of the indorser for the purpose of giving notice of dishonour, and found it closed and no one there, although no written notice of dishonour was left by him (Allen v. Edmundson, 17 Law J., Ex. 291). Such facts do not, however prove an issue that notice of dishonour was given; for their legal effect is not to give notice, but to dispense with the necessity of giving it, and the pleading must be according to the legal effect (Ib.). It seems that the holder may, if he pleases, elect to treat the absence of the indorser from his place of business as extending the time for notice; and that a notice of dishonour, given at the place of business, is in time, if given at the first reasonable opportunity afterwards, and that proof of its having been so given will support an averment of due notice having been given (Ib.).

The holder of a promissory note sent to the indorser, who was the father of the maker, and inquired where the son resided (he having changed his residence since the making of the note) and told him that the note had been presented and dishonoured: held sufficient notice (Chard v. Fox, 13 Jur. 960). Where the acceptor died before the bill became due, having appointed as his executor the drawee, who accordingly proved the will, and the bill when due was presented by the holder for payment to the drawer at the house of the deceased acceptor, when the drawer said that he was executor, and that as the acceptor was dead the bill must stand over for a few days: held, that this was sufficient notice to the drawer of the dishonour of the bill (Caunt v. Thompson, 13 Jur. 495; 18 Law J., C. P. 125): held also that the judge was right in allowing the plt. to amend his declaration by substituting for the allegation of presentment to the acceptor an allegation that he was dead, and that the bill was presented to his executor (Ib.).

Assumpsit by Charles Williams, as indorsee of a bill, against the indorser. The declaration averred, that one Charles Williams drew the bill on J. D.; that the deft. indorsed it to the plt., and that the drawer did not pay it when due. Plea, that deft. had not due notice of the non-payment. The plt. was proved to be the drawer, and to have given notice of the dishonour to the deft.: held, that, on these pleadings, the deft. could not object, that the plt. was not competent to give notice of dishonour, on the ground that the Charles Williams suing as indorsee and the Charles Williams stated in the declaration to be the drawer were the same person (Williams v. Clarke, 16 M. & W. 834).

A declaration by indorsee against drawer of a bill of exchange averred by way of excuse for want of notice of dishonour, that C. F. accepted the bill for the accommodation of the deft., and that at the time of making and accepting the said bill, and from thence until and at the time when the same was so presented for payment, C. F. had not any effects of the deft., nor had he received any consideration for the acceptance or payment of the said bill, nor had the deft. sustained any damage by reason of not having had notice of the non-payment thereof: held, on motion in arrest of judgment, that it was not necessary that the declaration should deny that the drawer had any reasonable expectation when he drew, or during the currency of the bill, that he would have assets at the time of its maturity in the hands of the drawee (Thomas v. Fenton, 5 D. & L. 28, B. C.).

The reasonable expectation of assets entitles to notice only on the ground that the drawer, under the circumstances which raise that expectation, may be damnified. To allege, therefore, that he has sustained no damage, removes the ground on which the necessity of notice arises; and there is no distinction in this respect between a bill of exchange and a banker's cheque (Ib.).

Excuse for not giving Notice of Dishonour.] Where the necessary notice has not been given, and there is a sufficient legal excuse for such an omission, such excuse must be averred; therefore, where the deft. told the indorsee beforehand not to send such notice, and that he would pay the amount, this is not evidence to support an averment of notice, but should have been pleaded as a dispensation of it (Burgh v. Legge, 5 M. & W. 418). Where, in an action against the drawer, a want of notice of dishonour was excused in the declaration, by an allegation that the bill was accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, it was held to be properly described as, having been accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, that he had no assets in the hands of the drawee, and that he sustained no damage by the want of notice: held, that the excuse was sufficient, and that it was not necessary to state that the deft. had no reasonable expectation of assets in the hands of the drawer at the maturity of the bill (Thomas v. Penton, 16 Law J., N. S., Q. B. 362; 2 C. B. 68).

In an action on a promissory note, by indorsee against indorser, to whom it had been indorsed by payee, the declaration alleged that neither at the time when the note was made, nor afterwards, and before it became due, and on presentment for payment, had the maker or payee any effects of the deft. in his hands, nor was there any consideration or value for the making of the note, of the payment thereof, and its indorsement by the payee to the deft., and that the deft. had not sustained any damage by reason of his not having had notice of the non-payment of the note: held, that as against an indorser, the declaration did not state a sufficient excuse of want of notice of dishonour, as it was consistent with the averments in the declaration that the note might have been indorsed by the deft. for the accommodation of a prior party, in which case the deft. would be entitled to notice of dishonour (Carter v. Flower, 16 Law J., N. S., Ex. 199; 4 D. & L. 529; 11 Jur. 313; 16 M. & W. 743).

The following are legal excuses. The drawer stated to the holder, a few days before the bill became due, that he would call and see if the bill had been paid by the acceptor; it was held that he had dispensed with notice (Phipson v. Kneller, 4 Camp. 285; see Burgh v. Legge, supra); so where the deft. acknowledged that the bill would not be paid (Brett v. Levett, 13 East, 214; but see Ex parte Bignold, 1 Deac. 728; Murray v. King, 5 B. & A. 165; Soward v. Palmer, *2 Moo. 274); so, where the drawer has countermanded payment (Hill v. Heap, D. & R. N. P. 57; [*477] Prideaux v. Collier, 2 Stark. 57; Legge v. Thorpe, 12 East, 171; so, the absence of effects in the drawee's hands, and that he will have no remedy against the acceptor, or any other person, if obliged to pay the bill (Bickerdike v. Dollman, 1 T. R. 406; Kemble v. Mills, 1 Man. & G. 758; Terry v. Parker, 6 Ad. & E. 502; Lafitte v. Slatter, 6 Bing. 623; Legge v. Thorpe, 12 East, 171; Cory v. Scott, 3 B. & A. 623; Ex parte Heath, 2 Ves. & B. 240; 2 Rose, 141). In an action by an indorsee against the drawer of a bill of exchange, a letter of the deft., saying, "You know I meant to call upon you immediately after the 24th with the money. E. G. (the acceptor) is an old and intimate friend of mine," is evidence of a waiver of presentment and notice of dishonour (Mills v. Gibson, 16 Law J. 249, C. P.). The common form will suffice, if the deft. subsequently promise to pay (Lundie v. Robertson, 7 East, 231; Gibbon v. Coggon, 2 Camp. 188). A promise of payment, &c., which will dispense with proof of notice of dishonour, may be given in evidence under the usual averment of notice.

Ignorance of a party's residence will excuse neglect to give notice of dishonour, so long as that ignorance continues without neglecting to use the ordinary means for requiring information (Bateman v. Joseph, 2 Camp. 463; 12 East, 433; Browning v. Kinnear, Gow, 81; Harrison v. Fitzhenry, 3 Esp. 240; Baldwin v. Richardson, 1 B. & C. 245).

The want of notice of the dishonour of a check on a banker is sufficiently excused, prima facie, by alleging that the banker had no effects of the drawer (Kemble v. Mills, 1 Man. & G. 757).

Protest.] The protest need not be stated in an action on an inland bill (Windle v. Andrews; Brough v. Parkins, Ld. Raym. 992; 6 Mod. 80; Salk. 131). But, in a foreign one, plt. must either state it (Rogers v. Stephens, 2 T. R. 713; Gale v. Walsh, 5 T. R. 239), or show that it was not necessary, as that the drawer had no effects in the hands of the drawee (Legge v. Thorpe, 12 East, 171). But the omission can only be taken advantage of by special demurrer (Bayl. B. 327; Salomons v. Stavelly, cited 2 Dougl. 684, n.). If the plt. aver "that he protested the bill, or caused it to be protested," it will be bad on demurrer; but it is unobjectionable if the deft. plead over (Witherby v. Sarsfield, 1 Show. 125; Salomons v. Stavelly, 3 Dougl. 298, n.). If the protest be omitted when necessary, it seems to be involved in the allegation of notice when that can only be legally given though a protest (Rosc. Ev. 219; see Salomons v. Stavelly, supra). Any acknowledgment by the drawer of a bill of his liability to pay, or any promise to pay the amount, though conditional as to the mode of payment, is evidence to be left to the jury of due protest (Campbell v. Webster, 1 C. B. 258). In the case of a foreign bill, notice without protest is not sufficient, unless the party to whom notice is given reside in this country (Robins v. Gibson, 1 M. & S. 288), though he should happen, at the time of the dishonour, to be absent (Cromwell v. Hynson, 2 Esp. 511). A protest is necessary in the case of the acceptor of a foreign bill for honour (Hoare v. Cazenove, 16 East, 391).

A bill is an inland bill where the drawer and acceptor reside in England, or where, although the drawee reside abroad, the drawer resides in England, and draws the bill payable here (Amner v. Clark, 2 C. M. & R. 468); but a bill drawn in England upon a person residing out of it and payable out of it, or by a person abroad upon a person residing in England, is a foreign bill.

A bill drawn or payable, *or both, abroad, or drawn in one realm [*478] of the United Kingdom and payable in another, is a foreign bill.

Bills drawn in England, and payable in Scotland or Ireland, or vice versa, are foreign bills, for they were so before the union between the countries, and the union does not make them inland bills (Mahony v. Ashlin, 2 B. & Ad. 478). But bills drawn and payable in Scotland, or in Ireland, are inland bills within 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, to which an acceptance in writing is necessary (Ib.).

Notice of Protest.] When a foreign bill is refused acceptance or payment, it is necessary, in order to charge the drawer, that the dishonour should be attested by a protest (Gale v. Walsh, 5 T. R. 239; Rogers v. Stephens, 2 T. R. 713; Orr v. Magennis, 7 East, 358; Poth. 217; Brough v. Perkins, 1 Salk. 131; Trimleur v. Vignier, 1 Bing. N. C. 151). Inland bills, though they may be protested for non-payment (9 & 10 Will. III. c. 17), and non-acceptance (3 & 4 Anne, c. 9), yet a protest was held to be unnecessary, except for the recovery of interest (Harris v. Benson, 2 Stra. 910); but it is now held to be unnecessary for that purpose (Wardle v. Andrews, 2 B. & A. 696; 2 Stark. 425). In an action against the drawer of a foreign bill, protest must be averred (the want of it is matter of form only; Salomons v. Stavelly, Dougl. 683) as well as proved, and it has been held that if protest of an inland bill be set forth in pleading, it must be proved (Boulager v. Tal- leyrand, 2 Esp. 550; but see Wardle v. Andrews, supra). When a bill is refused acceptance it should be protested, a protest afterwards for non-payment not being sufficient, it seems (Orr v. Magennis, supra), although it would seem unnecessary to protest it for non-payment if it had previously been protested for non-acceptance (De la Torre v. Barclay, 1 Stark. 7). Where a foreign bill is accepted for honour, it must be presented for payment to the drawee and protested, before payment can be demanded of the acceptor for honour (Hoare v. Cazenove, 16 East, 391; Mitchell v. Baring, 10 B. & C. 4); and if the acceptor for honour pay it before protest, he cannot afterwards recover the amount from the party for whose honour he accepted it (Vandewall v. Tyrrell, M. & M. 87). A protest for non-acceptance is made in the place where the drawee carries on his business: for non-payment where the bill is to be presented, as to the place and how a bill should be protested, which is payable at a different place to that in which the drawee resides, see 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 98. The same circumstances which will excuse a notice of dishonour will also excuse a protest. Where, in an action by indorsee against drawer, it appeared that there were no effects of the drawer in the drawee's hands, and that he said he should pay the bill; it was held, not necessary that the protest should be made or notice given (Rogers v. Stephens, 2 T. R. 713; Legge v. Thorpe, 12 East, 171). So, a promise to pay the bill after it is dishonoured will dispense with the necessity of proving protest, or notice of dishonour (Gibbon v. Coggan, 2 Camp. 188; Hopes v. Alder, 6 East, 16; Patterson v. Beecher, 6 Moo. 319). A bill must be noted on the day on which acceptance or payment is refused (B. N. P. 272); and protest may be drawn up afterwards, dated on the day of noting (Ib.); but it must be drawn up before action commenced upon the bill (Chaters v. Bell, 4 Esp. 48; Bayl. B. 266). It is not necessary to send the protest, or a copy of it, with a notice of dishonour, nor to mention it in the notice (Cromwell v. Heynson, 2 Esp. 511; Robins v. Gibson, 1 M. & S. 288). The protest need not be proved, it suffices to produce it (Anon. 12 Mod. 345; Bayl. B. 487).

If the deft. is prima facie entitled to notice, it is essentially necessary to prove that he had it, or to show that he was not entitled *thereto (Rushton v. Aspinall, Doug. 680). Under an allegation of notice, [*479] it may be questionable whether evidence could be given of what would excuse notice (Cory v. Scott, 3 B. & A. 619; Legge v. Thorpe, 12 East, 171); or whether, to let in such evidence, the facts to excuse notice should not be pleaded specially (Bayl. B. 413).

Payment supra Protest.] This should be averred according to the fact. In an action against the acceptor by a plt., who became a party supra protest for the honour of the second indorser, it was held not necessary to state in the declaration that the party for whom the payment was made by the plt. was the party having title to the bill, the declaration stating that the plt., according to the usage and custom of merchants, paid the bill under protest (Cox v. Earle, 3 B. & A. 430).

Re-exchange.] Where a foreign bill is dishonoured, the holder is entitled to recover of the drawer not only the value which he formerly gave for the bill, but also the re-exchange (De Tastet v. Baring, 11 East, 265; 2 Camp. 65); though the bill pass through never so many hands (Mellish v. Simeon, 2 H. Bl. 378). But the acceptor is not liable to the re-exchange (Napier v. Schneider, 12 East, 410; Woolsey v. Crawford, 2 Camp. 445). Other damages, not necessarily arising from the dishonour, as noting, postages, &c., are not recoverable, unless specially stated in the declaration (Kendrick

v. Lomax, 2 Crompt. & J. 410. Quere, whether expense of noting inland bill not protested can be recovered, ib.). But it has been held that postage is recoverable under a count for money paid (Dickenson v. Hatfield, 1 M. & R. 41; 5 C. & P. 46).

Bills taken up by Drawer.] Where the drawer sues on a bill payable to a third person, in order to show his interest therein, it is necessary to state that it was dishonoured, and taken up and paid by plt. (post, p. 486).

Promise of Payment.] The action being founded on a legal liability no promise need be stated, though it is usually inserted (Starkey v. Cheeseman, 1 Salk. 128; Carth. 509; Hardr. 486). It seems doubtful whether a promise should be stated; the omission, however, if it can at all, must be taken advantage of on special demurrer (Griffiths v. Roxbrough, 2 M. & W. 734); if the promise be stated, it should correspond with the statement of the liability (Ballingalls v. Gloster, 3 East, 481). In an action by indorsee against the drawer of a bill, the omission of a promise by the drawer to pay is at most mere matter of form, which can only be taken advantage of on special demurrer (Stericker v. Baker, 9 M. & W. 321). It seems it is altogether unnecessary in such cases (ib.). But it is said that a declaration by indorsee against the drawer is bad on special demurrer, for not alleging a promise to pay by the deft. (see Heny v. Barbridge, 3 Bing. N. C. 501; 4 Sco. 296, infra; and the point has been decided in Smith v. Cox, 12 Law J. 307, Exch.). A declaration containing counts on bills of exchange by the indorsee against indorser, in the form prescribed by R. G. T. T. 1 Will. IV., stated that the deft. promised to pay the bills, and commenced and concluded in the form of a declaration in debt. It contained the indebitatus counts in debt: held, that there was no misjoinder (Esdaille v. Maclean, 16 Law J., N. S., Exch. 71).

An averment that deft. was indebted on a bill, and that plt. having lost the bill, had, at his request, given him a bond, *acknowledging pay-[*480] ment, and conditioned to indemnify him against the bill, states a good consideration for a promise by the deft. to pay the contents of the bill (Williamson v. Clements, 1 Taunt. 523).

The day on which a promise to pay a bill of exchange is alleged, is matter of form only, and no objection can be raised on error that the day stated is more than six years before the action is brought (Hankey v. Borwick, in error, 1 Y. & J. 376; 4 Bing. 135; 13 Moo. 478).

A declaration on a note stated that the deft. thereby promised to pay to the plt. 10*l.* on account of W. H. D. fourteen days after the date thereof, which period had elapsed, and then averred that the deft. in consideration of the premises, "then and there promised to pay the amount of the note to the plt. according to the tenor and effect thereof:" held, sufficient on a special demurrer (Banks v. Camp, 2 Moo. & S. 734; 9 Bing. 604). A similar promise in a special declaration in K. B. was held to be bad on special demurrer (Price v. Easton, 4 B. & Ad. 433; 1 M. & M. 303).

The rule of T. T. 4 Will. IV. as to the averment of a promise when there is a count against the maker of a note or acceptor of a bill, and also the common counts, only applies to the latter (Wainwright v. Johnson, 5 Dowl. 317). Declaration by indorsee against drawer of a bill, with a count on an account stated, and a promise to pay the last-mentioned several moneys on request; special demurrer, for that there was no promise to the count on the bills which was set aside as frivolous (Chevers v. Parkington, 6 Dowl. 75). Declaration against maker of a promissory note, with counts for goods sold, &c., and a general promise to pay on a day long after the note became due.

Plea, non assumpsit Held, unnecessary to allege any promise to pay the bill, and that the plea was bad on demurrer (Donaldson v. Thompson, 8 Dowl. 209; 6 M. & W. 316; see Fraser v. Newton, 8 Dowl. 773).

In a declaration against a drawer of a bill, a promise to pay should be alleged, since the action against him is founded upon the promise implied by law (Henry v. Burbridge, 4 Sco. 296; 3 Bing. N. C. 484; 3 Gale, 16; 1 Jur. 215); and the want of such allegation makes the count bad on special demurrer (Smith v. Cox, 11 M. & W. 475; 2 Dowl. N. S. 1035; semble, the allegation of a promise in such case is altogether unnecessary (Stericker v. Barker, 9 M. & W. 321; see Griffith v. Roxborough, infra); at all events the omission is mere matter of form (lb.).

As the note itself contains a promise, one to pay the amount of the note according to the tenor and effect thereof would seem to be unnecessary; such a statement, however, would be proper, even where the plt. relies on a promise after the note was due (Leaper v. Tatton, 16 East, 420; Ballingalls v. Gloster, 3 East, 481).

A note, "I promise to pay, or cause to be paid," may be declared on in the common form (Lovell v. Hill, 6 C. & P. 238).

Averment that deft. (who had made a note, promising to pay the plt. 10*l.* fourteen days after date, and had delivered it to the plt.) promised, when it was due, to pay plt. according to the tenor thereof; held sufficient on special demurrer (Banks v. Camp. 9 Bing. 604; 2 Moo. & S. 734; but see Price v. Easton, 4 B. & Ad. 433). The promise, however, contained in the note is sufficient, and any other would be informal (Donaldson v. Thompson, 8 Dowl. 209; 6 M. & W. 319; see Shepherd v. Shepherd, 14 Law J. 230; 1 C. B. 849). In debt on a promissory note by payee against the maker, the declaration, after showing that the writ issued on the 17th of May, 1845, alleged that the deft., on the 25th of March, 1844, made his note in writing, and thereby promised to pay to the plt., or order, 690*l.* on the 25th *of March, 1845, which day had expired before the commence- [*481] ment of the suit, and then delivered the note to the plt.; and that thereupon the deft. then agreed to pay the amount of the said note to the plt. on request: special demurrer, for that the declaration was double and inconsistent, and uncertain whether the plt. intended to rely on an express or implied agreement: held, that the declaration was sufficient, duplicity being no objection to a count (Shepherd v. Shepherd, 1 C. B. 849).

Assumpsit by indorsee against indorser: held, after verdict, that an averment of a promise to pay was unnecessary (Griffith v. Roxborough, 2 M. & W. 734; 6 Dowl. 133; 1 Jur. 846).

Indorsee against indorser of a promissory note; declaration alleged a promise to pay the note "according to the tenor and effect thereof," and assigned as a breach that the maker did not pay the note, nor did the deft. nor any other person, although the note was duly presented when it became due, whereof the deft. had notice: held, that the promise was not incorrectly laid, and that the breach was sufficient after verdict (Hedge v. Stevenson, 5 Dowl. 771; 2 M. & W. 799).

Indorser against acceptor; declaration alleged that after the bill became due, the deft. promised to pay it "according to the tenor and effect of the said acceptance thereof:" held, on special demurrer, that this was in effect a promise to pay on request, and therefore sufficient (Christie v. Peart, 9 Dowl. 291). A declaration, on a bill of exchange by indorsee against acceptor, was in the form settled by the judges in the new rules, except that in stating the breach of the promise to pay, it omitted the words "when due." A demurrer on that ground was set aside as frivolous by order of a learned judge, and the court refused to rescind that order (Parry v. Turner, 10 Law T. 110, Q. B.). In a declaration by payee against maker of a promissory note, the first count averred that, whereas the deft. made his promissory note in writing, and thereby promised to pay the plt. 45% three months after date, which period is now elapsed: held, on special demurrer, that the promise to pay was sufficiently averred (Conway v. Lewis, 1r. Law R. 4).

Common Counts.] Where the action is brought between the immediate parties to the bill, it is usual to subjoin such counts as will embrace the consideration for which the bill was given; for, as the bill does not merge the original demand, if the plt. fail in substantiating the special count, he may resort to evidence on the general counts, under the New Rules. Counts upon a bill or note, and for the consideration in goods, money, or otherwise, are considered as founded on distinct subject-matter of complaint. Where a promissory note was given for money lent, which when produced in court was unstamped, Lord Kenyon permitted the plt. to recover on a count for money lent, by proving that, when the money for which the note had been given was demanded of the deft., he acknowledged the debt (Tyte v. Jones, 1 East, 58, n.).

But at all events, unless there be evidence to prove such additional counts, neither should be added; and if there be certainty of proving the first count, it is better not to add any other. A count upon a supposed account stated is rarely of any utility (1 Ch. Pl. 88).

If the consideration of a bill be stated in the particulars, plt. may prove it to avoid a verdict being entered against him on the common counts (Ryder v. Ellis, 8 C. & P. 357). But, in general, plt. can only recover on one count, if he have only one cause of action, and the plt. will, after he has closed his case, be allowed to recall a witness, and prove the consideration to prevent these issues being found for the deft. (Ryder v. Ellis, supra).

*Postage is recoverable under a count for money paid (Dickinson v. Hatfield, 1 M. & R. 41; 5 C. & P. 46).

In an action by the payee, who is a third party, against the acceptor, it may be advisable not to add a count on an account stated, where the bill is the only question of dispute between the parties, for it would seem that as between these parties the bill would not be evidence of an account stated; besides, if deft. should pay into court what is really due upon the bill, this will entitle him to a verdict upon both counts (Early v. Bowman, 6 B. & Ad. 889; see Churchill v. Day, 1 M. & R. 71); unless indeed there be an express promise by the deft. to pay the plt. (Ib. See cases cited in Wells v. Girling, Gow, 22, in notis). It seems, that, in an action by an indorsee, the bill is evidence, under the common count for money paid, only when it is produced dishonoured in the hands of the holder (Lewin v. Edwards, 9 M. & W. 720; 6 Jur. 401). A post-dated check is altogether void, and cannot be received in evidence for any purpose, therefore the plt. cannot, in an action on such an instrument, resort to the count for money paid, because he cannot prove it without producing the check (Serle v. Norton, 9 M. & W. 309). A promissory note, "Five months after date I promise to pay to L. P.'s order the sum of 23*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, being the amount of interest due on a promissory note from the undersigned to the late J. N. for 117*l.* dated 6 July, 1838, up to 6 July, 1844," is evidence of a debt of 117*l.* being still due, and will support a count on an account stated with L. P. as executor of J. N. (Perry v. Slade, 10 Jur. 31).

The plt. in the first count declared on a bill of exchange, drawn and indorsed to him by the deft., and in the second for money alleged to be due from the deft. upon an account stated—concluding, that, "in consideration of the premises respectively, the deft. promised to pay the said several last-mentioned moneys respectively to the plt. on request." The deft. demurred to the second count, on the ground that it contained an incorrect statement of the consideration for the promise; or, if "the last-mentioned moneys" included the money in the first count, then the second count was bad for duplicity. The court set aside the demurrer as frivolous (Lomax v. Wilson, 2 C. B. 763).

Several Counts.] A declaration contained twenty-five counts; the first fifteen were on bills of exchange drawn at Paris; the next five, which related to the same bills, were special counts, founded on the law of France, and the last five were on a special agreement to pay the bills in consideration of the plt. procuring their discount: application having been made to strike out the last set of counts; held, that they were not in apparent violation of R. G. H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 5 (Gilbert v. Hales, 2 D. & L. 226).

In a declaration containing several counts on the different bills of exchange, each count, after describing the bill, referred to it as "the said" bill of exchange. Held, sufficiently certain, even on special demurrer, for that the words "the said" ought to be referred to the last antecedent (Esdaile v. Maclean, 15 M. & W. 277).

The declaration contained a count on a note, and on an account stated. It appeared that the note had been altered by the addition of another maker. In support of the second count an I O U was given in evidence which had been signed by the deft. before the making of the alteration in the note. Held, the note was rightly received in evidence to show the circumstances under which the I O U was given (Gould v. Combs, 9 Jur. 494; 1 C. B. 543); and that A. assenting to a verdict being entered against him upon the count on the note, he was entitled to a verdict for 200*l.* on the *account stated, although the particulars of demand merely alleged [*483] that the action was brought to recover the amount of a promissory note (Ib.).

In assumpsit by executors of the payee of a note against the maker, the plt. produced the note with the following indorsement upon it signed by the deft. and one of the plts.: "Hull, 1838. Memorandum that the sum of 1*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, one quarter's interest, was paid on the within note." Held, that this was sufficient evidence of an account stated with the executors without any proof of the time of the testator's death (Purdon v. Purdon, 10 M. & W. 562).

A declaration, commencing and concluding in the form of a declaration in debt, contained counts on bills of exchange by indorsee against indorser, in the form given by the rule of T. T. 1 Will. IV., and also indebitatus counts in debt. Held, not a misjoinder (Esdaile v. Maclean, 15 M. & W. 277).

Particulars of Demand.] Where there is a special count on a bill or note, and common counts on the original consideration, and the deft. calls for particulars of demand, the causes of action in the general counts ought to be stated in the particulars; otherwise the plt. will not be permitted to go into evidence of them (Wade v. Beasley, 4 Esp. 7). If the particulars convey the requisite information, however inaccurately they may be drawn, they are sufficient, unless the deft. will undertake to swear that he has been misled by the inaccuracy (Day v. Bower, 1 Camp. 69, n.); and although the rule is that a plt. who has delivered an imperfect particular shall be restricted in his evidence, and shall not be permitted to recover anything not in the particulars delivered, yet, if the deft. in attempting to defeat the restricted claim, gives him a better case than he was at liberty to make for himself, he will be entitled to a verdict for all that is proved due to him (Hunt v. Wat kings, 1 Camp. 69, n. See "PARTICULARS OF DEMAND"). Where the particulars of demand made a claim on a promissory note only, which could not be given in evidence for want of a stamp, it was held that the plt. could not give evidence of the consideration of the note (Wade v. Beasley, 4 Esp. 7).

The declaration contained three counts: first, on a note for 50*l.*; second, on a note for a like amount; third, on one for 100*l.* The particulars were as follow: "This action is brought to recover the sum of 50*l.*, being the amount of a promissory note in the first count of the declaration mentioned, and also the further sum of 50*l.*, being the amount of a promissory note in the second count mentioned: above are the particulars of the plt.'s demand, for the recovery whereof he will avail himself of the whole or any part of the declaration." No evidence of the promissory note was given at the trial, but a conversation with the deft. was proved, in which he acknowledged he owed the plt. 100*l.* Held, that the particulars were insufficient to enable the plt. to recover, and that in order to do so he was bound to prove an admission on an account stated with reference to the promissory notes (Roberts v. Elsworth, 10 M. & W. 653).

Pleas, &c.] We shall hereafter see, under the respective heads, what defence may be set up to the action (see post, "EVIDENCE FOR DEFENDANT"). By the New Rules, H. T. 4 Will. IV. r. 2, in all actions on bills or notes the plea of non assumpsit or nunquam indebitatus is inadmissible. In such actions, therefore, a plea in denial must traverse some matter of fact, ex. gr. the drawing, making, indorsing, accepting, presenting, [*484] or notice of dishonour of *the bill or note. So that, in pleading to a declaration which contains a count on a bill and indebitatus counts, the plea should be confined to the count in the bill to which it is meant to apply (see Worley v. Harrison, 3 Ad. & E. 689; Hughes v. Pool, 6 Man. & G. 271); and then the general issue, or other plea, to the residue.

If an executor declare on a bill or note payable to his testator, laying a promise to pay the executor, such promise may still be denied by non assumpsit, for the action is not on the bill simply, but on a promise not implied by it (Timmis v. Platt, 2 M. & W. 720; 5 Dowl. P. C. 748; Rollston v. Dixon, 2 D. & L. 892). So, if the instrument in fact be not a note or bill, though the words "note of hand" be used in the body of it (Worley v. Harrison, 3 Ad. & E. 669; but see Hay v. Fisher, 2 M. & W. 722). Non assumpsit by statute (5 & 6 Vict. c. 122) may be pleaded to an action on a bill of exchange or promissory note. The 40th section enacts, that any contract or security by any bankrupt, or other person, in trust for any creditor, or for securing the payment of money due by such bankrupt at his bankruptcy, as a consideration, or with intent to induce such creditor to forbear opposing, or to consent to the allowance of his certificate, shall be void, and the money secured not recoverable, and though the party sued may plead the general issue, and give the act and special matter in evidence (Weeks v. Argent, 16 Law J., N. S., C. P. 209; see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ante, "BANKRUPTCY"). If, notwithstanding the above rule, non assumpsit be pleaded, all the facts from which the promise resulted will be put in issue, and the plt. can only object to it by special demurrer (Ib.; Finlayson v. Mackenzie, 3 Bing. N. C. 824; 6 Dowl. P. C. 71; Hay v. Fisher, supra). When the deft. pleads non assumpsit to the whole of a declaration, consisting of a bill of exchange and money counts, the plt. cannot sign judgment generally, but must demur (Eddison v. Pigram, 16 M. & W. 131); and the court will not allow him to amend the judgment by confining it to the count on the bill, and entering a nolle prosequi on the other counts (Eddison v. Pigram, ib.). In an action by indorsee against acceptor, plea non assumpsit, held, that the cause could not be tried on this plea, and the jury being sworn, the plt. took a verdict for the amount of the bill and interest, without adducing any evidence, and without putting in the bill (Neale v. Proctor, 2 C. & K. 456). If the defence be that the bill or note was drawn, indorsed, or accepted by way of accommodation, or that it was obtained by fraud, or under any circumstances which disentitle the plt. to sue upon it, such defence must be specially pleaded (Passenger v. Brooks, 7 C. & P. 110; 1 Bing. N. C. 587). Infancy, coverture, tender, set-off, payment, bankruptcy, insolvency, Statute of Limitations, and, in fact, all defences to an action on a bill or note must now be specially pleaded.

When the declaration contains a count on the bill and the common counts, the plea which applies to the cause of action on the bill must be confined to the count setting it out (Worley v. Harrison, supra; Hughes v. Poole, 6 Man. & G. 271); and then the general issue, or whatever plea is intended to be relied on in answer to the common counts, must be pleaded to the residue of the declaration. If, however, the general issue be pleaded to the count on the bill, and the deft. be under terms to plead issuably, the plt. may either sign judgment on the whole declaration, unless it be also pleaded to another count, or on that count (Arch. Pr., 8th ed., 219, 222; Eddison v. Pigram, supra; Sewell v. Dale, 8 Dowl. P. C. 309; Kelly v. Villebois, 3 Jur. 1171; see Panet v. Goddard, 9 M. & W. 458); but, where he signs judgment on the special count, *he should enter a nolle prosequi to the common [*485] counts (Frazer v. Newton, 8 Dowl. P. C. 773). If the general issue be pleaded to the special count, and the deft. be not under terms, such plea is demurable (Donaldson v. Thompson, 6 M. & W. 319; Morse v. James, 11 ib. 458; see Arch. Pr., 8th edit. 226). When the deft. pleaded that the bill of exchange in the first count mentioned was paid when due, and also as to the first count that he did not promise, and as to the other counts that he put himself upon the country: held, that the plt. might treat such as a separate plea, though the second was declared inadmissible by the New Rules, and the last put nothing in issue, and that the plt. was right therefore in signing judgment, there being no signature to the pleas, and rule to plead double (Hockley v. Sutton, 2 Dowl. P. C. 700).

Demurrer.] If there be any misstatement or defect apparent in the declaration of the cause of action, or in the right of action itself, the same may be taken advantage of by general or special demurrer; by a general demurrer when the misstatement is substantially bad, and by a special demurrer when it is informally so.

Precedents in Assumpsit.

ON INLAND BILLS.

Declaration in assumpsit on a bill, drawers (being payees) against acceptor.

In the Q. B. (or C. P., or Ex. of P.) On the day of A. D. 1846, ante.

[Commencement as post, "DECLARATION"]. For that the plts. (ante, p. 225) heretofore, to wit, on &c. (date of bill) made their bill of exchange in writing (and directed the same to the defts. by the name, style, firm, and addition of Messrs. Twis and Co., Merchants, Birchin Lane, London, ante, p. 450. 466), and thereby required the defts. to pay to the plts. or their order fifty pounds (ante, p. 460), two months (days or weeks) after the date (or after sight) thereof, which period had elapsed before the commencement of this suit and the defts. then accepted the said bill and then in consideration of the premises promised the plts. to pay them the same according to the tenor and effect thereof and of their said acceptance thereof but did not pay the same when due or at any time before or since (if there be no other count conclude), to the damage of the plts. of £ (enough to cover principal and interest), and therefore they bring suit, &c. (A count upon the consideration of the bill, if any, between the plts. and defts., and on an account stated, may be added, and if so state the general promise and breach thus:) And the defts. afterwards to wit on the day and year last aforesaid in consideration of the last-mentioned premises respectively promised the plts. to pay them the last-mentioned (this only extends to the last counts, there must be a promise to each of the special counts, or else this must be made to apply to all) sum or sums of money on request, yet the defts. have disregarded their last-mentioned promise (this breach only applies to the last counts: if there be no breach in the special counts, say, "their said several promises"), and have not paid the said last-mentioned sum or sums of money or any part thereof to the plts. to the damage of the plts. of £ (enough to cover the whole claim: if the breach refer to the special counts, say, "and have not paid any or either of the said several sums of money or any part thereof to the, &c."); and therefore they bring suit, &c. See "DECLARATION.")

Payee against acceptor.

[Observe the references in preceding precedent.] For that certain persons designated in the bill hereinafter next mentioned by the name style and firm of Hall and Sons, did, under that name style and firm, heretofore, to wit on &c. make their bill of exchange in writing, and direct the same to the deft., and did thereby require the deft. to pay to the [486] plt. (or order) fifty pounds, two months after the date (or after sight) thereof, which period had elapsed before the commencement of this suit; and the said persons so designated by the name style and firm of Hall and Sons did then deliver the said bill to the plt. and the deft. then accepted the said bill. And then in consideration of the premises promised the plt. to pay the same according to the tenor and effect of the said bill and the said acceptance thereof but did not pay the same or any part thereof when due. (Conclude as in the preceding precedent; as to the propriety of adding the common counts, see ante, p. 481.)

Indorsee against acceptor.

[Observe the notes and references supra, first precedent.] For that one J. H. on &c. made his bill of exchange in writing and directed the same to the deft., and thereby required the deft. to pay to one W. B. (or to the said J. H.) or order fifty pounds two months after the date (or after sight) thereof, which period had elapsed before the commencement of this suit, and the deft. then accepted the said bill. And the said W. B. (or J. H.) then indorsed the said bill to the plt., and the deft. then in consideration of the premises promised the plt. to pay the amount of the said bill according to the tenor and effect thereof and of the said acceptance and indorsement but did not pay the same when due. (Add other counts, if necessary, and conclude as in first precedent.)

The like where there are several indorsements.

It is usual, as we have seen, to strike out all the indorsements after that of the drawer; but, if they be stated, they may be shortly, thus:—"And the said W. B. then indorsed the said bill of exchange to one G. H., who then indorsed the same to one I. K., who then indorsed the same to the plt.," and so on.

Against acceptor, where bill payable at a particular place, and not elsewhere.

For that, &c. (The statement of the bill is the same as in other cases, ante, p. 485, until deft.'s acceptance, which is usually stated thus:) And the deft. then accepted the said bill, payable at P. and Co.'s, Lombard Street, London, and not otherwise or elsewhere, and the said E. F. indorsed the same to one J. H., who then indorsed the same to one T. K., who then indorsed the same to the plt., and the deft. then promised the plt. to pay him the amount of the said bill according to the tenor and effect thereof and of the said acceptance and indorsements; but neither the deft., nor the said P. and Co. (ante, p. 474), nor any person or persons on behalf of the deft., did or would pay the said bill or any part thereof, although the said bill was duly presented for payment (ante, p. 468) at the said P. and Co.'s, Lombard Street, aforesaid, when the same became payable according to the tenor and effect thereof, of all which the deft. had due notice. (Add common counts, and conclude as ante, p. 485.)

Drawer against acceptor, where bill payable to a third person, and drawer has been obliged to take it up.

For that the plt. heretofore, to wit, on &c., made his bill of exchange in writing and directed the same to the deft. and thereby required him to pay to one J. D., or order £ , two months after date (or after sight) thereof, which period had elapsed before the commencement of this suit; and the deft. then accepted the said bill, and then promised the plt. to pay the said bill according to the tenor and effect thereof, and of the said acceptance thereof, yet the deft. did not pay the amount thereof, although the said bill was presented to him on the day when it became due, and thereupon the same was then returned to the plt., of all which the deft. then had notice. (Conclude as ante, first precedent.)

Indorsee against drawer on default of payment.

[Observe the notes and references, ante, p. 445.] For that the deft. heretofore, to wit on &c. (ante, p. 455) made his bill of exchange in writing and directed the same to one John Twis, and thereby required the said John Twis to pay to the deft. or order 50*l.* two months after date (or sight) thereof, which period had elapsed before the commencement of this suit (ante, p. 46), and the deft. then indorsed the said bill to one T. R., who then indorsed the same to the plt., and the said John Twis did not pay the bill although the same was presented to him on the day when it became due, of all of which the deft. then had due notice, and then in consideration of the premises promised the *plt. to pay him the same on request. (*Add a count on an account stated, if requisite, and con- [487] clude as ante, p. 485.)

Indorsee against drawer on default of payment.

Averment that the drawee could not be found, see Chit. jun. Pl., 2nd ed. by Pearson, 88; averment where drawee was dead, ib. 89; averment where deft. dispensed with presentment, ib.

Averment of want of effects, to excuse notice of dishonour.

[After stating the dishonour, and omitting to state the notice thereof to deft., say:] And the plt. avers, that neither at the time when the said bill was drawn, nor at any time afterwards from thence until at the end of the day when the said bill became due according to its tenor and effect, nor from thence until and at the time when the same was so presented for payment thereof as aforesaid had he the said J. T. (drawee) any effects of the deft. (drawer), nor had the deft. ever any reasonable or probable cause for expecting that he had or would have any effects in the hands of the said J. T. (drawee), or that the said J. T. would accept the said bill, or pay or discharge any part of the amount of the said bill or be provided with funds wherewith the said J. T. ought to or could pay the said bill or any part thereof; nor was there at any time any consideration or value for the deft. drawing the said bill or for the acceptance or payment by him the said J. T. (drawee) of the amount of the said bill or any part thereof, nor hath the deft. sustained any damage by reason of his not having had notice of the dishonour by the said J. T. of the said bill. (Add count on consideration, and conclude as ante, p. 485.)

Against drawer on default of acceptance.

For that, &c. (As in other declarations against drawer, ante, p. 486, as far as statement of acceptance, which should be omitted. The indorsement should be stated, after which conclude thus:) And the same was then presented to the said J. T. (drawee) for acceptance; and the said J. T. (drawee) then refused to accept the same; of all which the deft. then had due notice, and then in consideration of the premises promised the plt. to pay him the amount of the said bill on request, but hath not paid the same or any part thereof. (Add count on the consideration, and conclude as directed, ante, p. 485.)

Indorsee against indorser.

For that one E. F. heretofore, to wit on &c. made his bill of exchange in writing and directed the same to G. H. and thereby required the said G. H. to pay to the said E. F. or order £100, two months after the date thereof, which period had elapsed before the commencement of this suit. And the said E. F. then indorsed the said bill to the deft., who then indorsed the same to one J. K., who then indorsed the same to the plt.; and the said G. H. did not pay the said bill although the same was presented to him on the day when it became due; of all which the deft. then had due notice; and then in consideration of the premises promised the plt. to pay him the said bill on request. (Add count on the consideration, and conclude as directed, ante, p. 485.)

In debt. Drawee against acceptor.

[Commence as post, "DEBT."] For that the plt. heretofore, to wit on &c. made his bill of exchange in writing and directed the same to the deft. and thereby required the deft. to pay him the plt. or order £ , two months after the date thereof, which period had elapsed before the commencement of this suit, and the deft. then accepted the said bill and then in consideration of the premises agreed with the plt. to pay the said bill according to the tenor and effect thereof, and of his said acceptance thereof; but the deft. did not pay the amount thereof when due, whereby an action hath accrued to the plt. to demand of the deft. the said sum of money in the said bill specified, parcel of the said sum above demanded. (If there be a count on the consideration for the bill, commence thus: And also, and conclude with a breach, as post, "DEBT.")

*FOREIGN BILLS.

Drawer against acceptor of foreign bill.

For that the plt. (ante, p. 449) heretofore, to wit on, &c. in parts beyond the seas, to wit, at Paris (or Dublin in Ireland), made his bill of exchange in writing and directed the same to the deft. (by the name and addition of, &c., ante, p. 456), and thereby required the deft. to pay (that his second of exchange (according to the bill), first and third of the same tenor and date not paid) to the plt. or order £ sterling (or francs), two months after date thereof (or at two usances), that is to say, at two calendar months after the date thereof (as in the bill), which period had elapsed before the commencement of this suit (if necessary state any indorsement in the common form); and the deft. then accepted the said bill, and then promised the plt. to pay the same according to the tenor and effect thereof and of the said acceptance thereof, but did not pay the same when due (if payable in foreign money, say:) And the plt. avers that the said sum of francs in the said bill mentioned at the time of making of the said bill and when it became due was and is of great value, to wit of the value of £ of lawful money of Great Britain. (Add any other necessary count, and conclude as ante, p. 485.)

[Payee or indorsee against acceptor of foreign bill.

For that certain persons, designated in the bill of exchange hereinafter next mentioned by the name, style and firm of James Hall and Co. (or, one J. H.), did under that name, style and firm on &c. in parts beyond the seas, to wit at Malta, make their bill of exchange in writing and direct the said bill of exchange to the deft. and thereby required the deft. to pay (that their first of exchange, second and third of the same tenor and date not paid) to the plt. or order the sum of 10,000 livres tournoises, at two usances, that is at two months after the date thereof; which period &c., and the said deft. then accepted the said bill. (If action be by indorsee, state indorsement, as ante, p. 485; conclude as ante, p. 486.)

Payee or indorsee against drawer, on refusal to accept.

For that the deft. (same as first form down to "before the commencement of this suit," then add:) And the deft. then indorsed the said bill of exchange (state the indorsement in the common form down to "that") to the plt. and the said bill was then presented to the said J. T. for acceptance and the said J. T. then refused to accept the same (if drawn in sets, say), nor did nor would accept the said second or third of exchange in the said bill mentioned (if payable at usances, see first form). Whereupon the said bill was then duly protested for non-acceptance thereof, of all which the deft. then had due notice; and the plt. avers that by reason of the promises he hath incurred sundry expenses, to wit, to the amount of £5 in and about noting, protesting and re-exchange of the said bill and for commission and postages incidental thereto, and the deft. then, in consideration of the premises, promised the plt. to pay him the amount of the said bill on request, but hath not paid the same nor any part thereof.

Payee or indorsee against drawer on refusal to pay.

For that defts. on &c. in parts beyond the seas, to wit at Jamaica, made their bill of exchange in writing and directed the same to John Twis and thereby required the said John Twis at two usances, that is to say, at two months after the date of that their first of exchange, second and third of the same tenor and date not paid, and which period had elapsed before the commencement of this suit, to pay to the said plt. or order 10,000 livres tournoises, and then delivered the said bill of exchange to the plt., which said bill the said John Twis then accepted. (If the action be at the suit of an indorsee, insert the indorsements accordingly, ante, p. 486.) And the said John Twis did not pay the said bill, although the same was presented to him on the day when it became due, and thereupon the said bill was then duly protested for non-payment thereof, of all which the deft. then had due notice, and then promised the plt. to pay him the amount of the said bill on request. (Add averment of English currency, and conclude as ante, p. 485.)

Excuse for not giving notice of dishonour.

See form of want of effects, ante, p. 487.

Evidence for Plaintiff.*

[*489]

General Proofs—Production and Proof of Bill.] It is not necessary to produce the bill at the trial, unless some issue be joined which renders it requisite, for otherwise the plea admits the bill; and, where that is the case, there is no necessity to prove it (Shearne v. Burnam, 10 Ad. & E. 593, per Patteson, J.; see Lane v. Mullins, 2 Q. B. 254; 1 Gal. & Dav. 712; 11 Law J., 51). The deft. can neither compel the plt. to produce a bill at the trial, nor go into secondary evidence of its contents, if he plead only pleas in confession and avoidance, and give no notice to produce it (Goodered v. Armorer, 3 Q. B. 956; Lawrence v. Clarke, 15 Law J. 40, Exch.), unless on a plea, impeaching the bill on the ground of alteration (Barker v. Malcolm, 7 M. & W. 101). It need not be produced when the count on the bill or note is demurred to, so that it is only necessary to assess the damages upon it (Lane v. Mullins, supra; nor, it seems, upon a writ of inquiry (Ib.); nor before master, on a reference to compute, &c. (Davis v. Barker, 16 Law J., N. S., C. P. 86). To an action on a check, the deft. pleaded that it was given for money won at an unlawful game at dice; issue thereon; the deft. did not give notice to produce the check: held, that on this issue the plt. was not bound to produce the check, either as part of his own case, or, when called upon to do so at the trial, as part of the deft.'s (Read v. Gamble, 10 Ad. & E. 597); and a notice served at half-past eight o'clock the evening before the trial is too late (Lawrence v. Clark, 3 D. & L. 87). When the deft. pleaded fraud, it was held that the plt. was not bound to produce the bill without notice (Lawrence v. Clark, ib.). The payee of a note, not negotiable, may require payment without producing it (Wain v. Baily, 10 Ad. & E. 616). In the case of foreign bills drawn in sets, both sets should be produced (Ch. Bills, 378).

To a declaration on a bill of exchange, the deft. pleaded an agreement to give credit, and that the period of credit had not expired. A witness proved the agreement by an admission: but the bill was not produced, and no notice to produce had been given. Held, that upon that issue the production of the bill was unnecessary (Ingram v. Webb, 9 Law T., Q. B. 147).

So the production of a bill may be dispensed with when in the possession of the deft., or where destroyed; but, in these cases, plt. should show sufficient probability to satisfy the court that the original note was genuine (1 Atk. 445; Anon. 1 Ld. Raym. 731).

Where the bill is in the deft.'s possession, the plt. must prove such possession, and that he gave notice to deft., or his attorney, to produce the bill: as to proof of service of notice, post, "SECONDARY EVIDENCE." Where an acceptor improperly detains a bill in his hands after acceptance, the drawer may sue him on it, and give notice to produce it; and on his default, give parol evidence of it (per Lord Ellenborough, Smith v. McClure, 5 East, 476). Without giving such notice, plt. cannot recover interest on the instrument itself, though he may give it, on an admission of the debt, in evidence, and recover on the money counts (Fryer v. Brown, R. & M. 145; see post, "INTEREST"). In trover for a bill, no notice to produce is necessary (How v. Hall, 14 East, 274). Notice to deft. to produce a check drawn by him, and paid by his banker, is sufficient to let in secondary evidence, though the check remains in the banker's hands, as the banker being deft.'s agent, the check, while in his hands, is considered in the possession of the deft. (Partridge v. Contes, R. & M. 156). A post-dated check is altogether void, and cannot be received in evidence for any purpose (Searle v. Morton, *9 M. & W. 309). As to the copy, offered [*490], as secondary evidence, plt. must prove that it is an accurate one, or transcript of it, by having compared it with the original. The draft of the declaration, in which the bill is set out, will be a sufficient copy, if the bill was not attested by a subscribing witness (Glover v. Thompson, R. & M. 403).

When a bill is destroyed, a copy may be given in evidence; but, if the bill or note were of a negotiable nature, evidence of its having been actually destroyed, as by fire or otherwise, must be given, for the purpose of showing that deft. will not be compelled to pay it again; and, without proof to that effect, the plt. cannot recover (Pierson v. Hutchinson, 2 Camp. 211; Mayor v. Johnson, 3 Camp. 324; Davis v. Dodd, 4 Taunt. 602; Bayl. B. 378; see and consider Hansard v. Robinson, 7 B. & C. 90).

When the bill is lost or mislaid, the plt. cannot recover by merely proving the loss, and giving a copy in evidence, as no action at law can be supported against a party to a bill of exchange, note, or check, transferable to a bona fide holder, and lost before or on the day it is due, although a bond of indemnity have been tendered to the deft., and notice given (Pierson v. Hutchinson, 2 Campb. 211; S. C. 6 Esp. 126; Hansard v. Robinson, 7 B. & C. 90); or even after it became due, and after action brought (Poole v. Smith, Holt, C. 144; Powel v. Roach, 6 Esp. 76; Toulmain v. Price, 5 Ves. 238; Hansard v. Robinson, supra). An acceptor would not be liable on a lost bill, if the loss was before the bill was due, though he promised to pay it, without a fresh consideration (Davis v. Dodd, 4 Taunt. 602). And it has been decided, that when a bill has been lost after it was due, it having been indorsed by the payee, the indorsee losing it cannot, in an action, recover the amount from the acceptor, though he had promised to pay a renewed bill (Hansard v. Robinson, 7 B. & C. 90; 1 R. & M. 404, n.; and Dart v. Hinks, ib.). But it was ruled at nisi prius, in an undefended cause, that an action might be maintained on a lost bill, if the loss did not happen till after the bill became due (Glover v. Thompson, ib.); but this decision seems questionable, and, according to the cases above referred to, could not be maintainable. The deft., being indebted to the plt. for goods sold, gave him a bill not due, drawn and accepted by two other persons, to a greater amount than the price of the goods, and the plt. gave the deft. the difference in money, who indorsed the bill in blank; the plt. lost the bill before it was paid: held, that he could not sue the deft. upon it, nor recover the price of the goods, as the deft. had given full value for the bill, and might still be compelled to pay its amount to a bona fide holder (Champion v. Terry, 7 Moo. 130; 3 B. & B. 295). A check given for stock sold, is lost by the vendor; the purchaser is immediately informed of this fact, but refuses to pay without an indemnity; four months after, the bankers, on whom the check was drawn, stopped payment, with sufficient money of the drawer's in their hands to answer it: held, that, under these circumstances, an action would not lie for the price of the stock (Bevan v. Hill, 2 Camp. 381). If a bill or note, transferable by delivery, is cut in halves, and half lost, the holder cannot sue at law upon the other half, as plt. must produce the entire instrument, or prove that the part wanting has been destroyed (Bayl. B.

299; Mayor v. Johnson, 3 Camp. 324). But, if the bill were in such a state, when lost, that no person but plt. could have acquired a right to sue thereon; as, if the bill were not negotiable (Mossop v. Eadon), or has not been indorsed, or has been only indorsed specially (Long v. Bailie, 2 Camp. 214; Bayl. B. 297; Rolt v. Watson, 4 Bing. 273), plt. may give evidence of its contents (Ib.). *The bearer of a bill, which was lost, may maintain an action on it against the drawer (Grant v. Vaughan, 3 [*491] Barn. 1516; 1 Bla. 485). The note purported to be for value received in Penzance shares, pursuant to annexed contract; no contract was in fact annexed. Held, that this did not render it necessary for the plt. to put in any contract or other document besides the note itself (Fox v. Frith, 1 Car. & M. 502, Erskine).

Variance.] The bill or note must be proved, as stated; and any variance in the statement of it in the declaration will be fatal (see ante, p. 449), unless the judge at nisi prius will allow an amendment. Where a bill has been altered, it lies upon the party producing it to show that the alteration was not improperly made (Henman v. Dickinson, 5 Bing. 183). As to variance in the different parts of the bill, see ante, 491.

Averments in General.] If there are any explanatory averments or circumstances connected with the instrument necessary to be proved, whether to rectify a mistake or remove any apparent ambiguity, as where plt. sues upon a bill, &c., purporting to be payable to a person of a different name, and there is an averment to that effect, it must be proved (Willis v. Barrett, 2 Stra. 29); or, where the bill has been incorrectly dated by mistake, and there is an averment to rectify such mistake, it will be incumbent on the plt. to prove it, and show that it was justifiable (Ch. Bills, 376); and, where the indorsee sues the acceptor of a bill, the date having been altered, plt. must prove that the alteration was made by the acceptor, previous to the indorsement by the drawer (Johnson v. Marlborough (Duke of), 2 Stark. 313); and, if there have been any erasures, the circumstances under which they were made should be proved (Ib. ante, 491). Where plts. have no title upon a bill or note, unless they constitute a particular firm, they must prove that they constitute such firm, as where they sue upon a bill or note payable to that firm, without specifying its members (Bayl. B. 470, 471, post). If the bill were in foreign money, it should be proved what was the rate of exchange, and the value of such money, when the bill fell due, and, if the bill were payable at usances, the duration of such usances should be proved (Ch. Bills, 377).

Handwriting in general, Proof of.] The name of the party to the note must appear in some part of it, signed by himself or his agent (Bayl. B. 31). Where the only evidence against one of the defts. was a signature, bearing his name to a joint retainer by him and the other defts. on which the attorney had acted in defending the action, without having seen C., or having other means of knowledge of his handwriting: held insufficient (Drew v. Bryer, 12 Law J., N. S., 144). Where the only proof of the handwriting of the deft. was that by a banker's clerk, who stated that, two years ago, he saw a person calling himself by the deft.'s name sign a book; that he had never seen him since; but that he thought the handwriting was the same, and had since seen checks bearing the same signature: held, that this was evidence to go to the jury (Warren v. Anderson, 8 Scot. 384). As to the manner of proof, post, "HANDWRITING."

Subscribing Witness to Bill, &c.] If the bill, or the indorsement to it, or any other material part, be attested by a witness, it must be proved by him, or some sufficient reason for his absence shown, as that the witness is abroad, or out of the process of the court, as, in Ireland* (Hadnet [*492] v. Forman, 1 Stark. 90); or, that he cannot be found on diligent inquiry (Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 East, 183; Burt v. Walker, 4 B. & A. 697). See further, as to what is a sufficient reason for such absence, post, "DEEDS, SUBSCRIBING WITNESS TO." If a subscribing witness to a note swear that he did not see it drawn, it may be proved by evidence of the handwriting of the maker (Simon v. Dean, 2 Camp. 636, n.). Where there are several subscribing witnesses, it suffices to call one, if he can prove the signature (Holdfast v. Dowsing, Stra. 1254). If the subscribing witness, when called, cannot prove it, &c., the plt. may proceed to prove it by other means (per Le Blanc, J., Pea. 23; ante, p. 236). If the subscribing witness be dead, proof of his death and handwriting, and that the deft. was present when the note was prepared, is sufficient (Nelson v. Whittal, 1 B. & Ad. 19); and, where the subscribing witness has become insane, blind, &c., proof of his handwriting has been held sufficient proof of the note (per Bailey, J., ib.; Wood v. Drury, Raym. 734; see Crank v. Frith, infra). He must be called, even though the attestation be on the back of the bill (Richards v. Frankrum, 9 C. & P. 221); and though he be blind (Crank v. Firth, 2 M. & R. 262). But it is most prudent to prove both the handwriting of the maker and of the witness, in order to establish the identity of the maker, for proof of the handwriting of the attesting witness alone establishes, merely, that some person assuming the name which the instrument purports to bear executed it, and does not establish the identity of that person (Nelson v. Whittal, per Bailey, J., 1 B. & A. 21). It should seem that proof of the subscribing witness's handwriting alone would not be sufficient (Ray v. Brookman, M. & M. 286).

Where there is no attesting witness, the signature of the bill may be proved by any person who has seen the party write, or has received letters from him: there must also be some identity of the person whose signature is proved with the deft.; mere correspondence of christian and surname is no evidence of identity (Whitelock v. Musgrave, 1 C. & M. 511; Jones v. Jones, 9 M. & W. 75; Bell v. Gunn, 11 Law J. 57).

In an action against Henry Thomas Ryde, as acceptor, it appeared that a Henry Thomas Ryde had kept cash at the bank, where the bill was made payable, and had drawn checks which the cashier had paid. The cashier knew the parties' handwriting by the checks, and swore that the acceptance was in the same writing, but he had not paid any checks for some time, did not know the party personally, and could not further identify him with the deft.: held, a sufficient prima facie case. (Roden v. Ryde, 4 Q. B. 626).

If a bill or note be signed or indorsed with a mark, such mark may be proved by a person who has seen the party so execute instruments, and can recognize some peculiarity in the mark (George v. Sarny, M. & M. 516). Where an acceptance is by the christian and surname of the drawer, a witness who has seen him sign his surname only, is competent to prove the acceptance (Lewis v. Sapio, M. & M. 39; overruling Powell v. Ford, 2 Stark. 164).

When signed or accepted by Agent.] If the bill or note be not signed by the deft. himself, but by another person in deft.'s name (Helmsey v. Loader, 2 Camp. 450), or by procuration in his name by an agent, the handwriting of such person, and his authority as agent, must be proved (Attwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278); and this may be done by calling the agents, or by showing any act of the deft.'s which amounts to a knowledge of the act, or that he consented to it or permitted it (see Smith v. Strange, Pea. 116; Curtis v. Barrs*, ib.). But in order to charge an agent personally on a bill thus drawn, it will be requisite to prove that he [*493] had no authority to draw it, or that he had not acted bona fide (Wilson v. Barthrop, 2 M. & W. 863). An authority by parol is sufficient: this may be proved, either by showing an express authority or a general one, derived from the usual course of the agent's employment (10 Mod. 110; 12 ib. 346); or an implied one, by proving that the deft. knew of it, or consented to it, or paid other bills accepted in the same way (Bayl. B. 488; Comb. 450; Barber v. Gingell, 3 Esp. 60; Bayl. B. 487; see Lay v. Pyne, 1 Car. & M. 453). A farm bailiff has no implied authority to bind his employer by drawing or indorsing bills in his name by procuration; it must be shown that the latter knew, or had the means of knowing the acts done in his name (Davison v. Stanley, 2 Man. & G. 721). A general authority is supposed to continue, until its determination is notorious. Therefore, after the discharge of a servant usually employed, a man will be bound by his signature, until his discharge is generally known (Bayl. B. 488, citing Beawes, s. 231, p. 445; Mol. b. 2, c. 10, s. 27). The agent himself is a competent witness (see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), and should in general be subpoenaed; but his authority or handwriting may be established by other testimony; as, where the principal has used an affidavit of the agent, in an application to the court in which it is admitted, the affidavit of the agent may be used as evidence of it (Johnson v. Ward, 6 Esp. 47). A declaration of an agent can only be evidence against the principal, where it accompanies the transaction about which he is employed, and, if made at another time, it is not admissible (Betham v. Benson, 1 Gow, 489). If the authority was in writing, the instrument must be produced, and proved (Johnson v. Mason, 1 East, 90, 115).

When a bill is drawn by an agent without mentioning the fact of agency, the action must be against him (Sowerby v. Butcher, 2 C. & M. 368; Lead-bitter v. Farrow, 5 M. & S. 345; Lefevre v. Lloyd, 5 Taunt. 749; Ducarry v. Gill, Moo. & M. 450).

If an order to admit a bill of exchange is made where the notice describes it as having been accepted by one H. B., for the defts., it is not competent to the defts. to dispute the authority of H. B. to accept as their agent (Wilkes v. Hopkins, 3 D. & L. 184).

The deed of association of a mining company provided that its affairs should be managed by a committee of seven shareholders, called managing directors, and that they should vote by proxy; B. was appointed resident director and manager, to superintend the mine and local concerns, hire workmen, provide machinery, subject to instructions from managing directors to whom he was to transmit monthly accounts of ore raised, wages paid, &c., and a full statement of all debts and liabilities due from the company, with a proviso that he should not engage or expend the credit of the company for any sum exceeding 50*l.* in any one month without express authority in writing of three managing directors: held, that B. was not thereby authorized to draw or accept bills in the name of the company without the express authority of the managing directors. Held also, that such directors who were represented at a meeting by proxy, were not bound by a resolution of the directors present at such meeting, authorizing the resident director to accept bills for the company (Brown v. Byers, 16 M. & W. 252; see ante, "AGENT," and post, "PUBLIC COMPANIES").

Proof of Handwriting by Admission of Party.] It will be sufficient if plt.

prove that deft. acknowledged the signature to be his (Cooper v. Le Blanc, Stra. 1051; Leach v. Buchanan, 4 Esp. 226); *and this, though [*494] the acknowledgment were made pending a treaty for a compromise (Waldrige v. Kennison, 1 Esp. 143). The admission by an indorser of his handwriting is evidence against the maker (Maddocks v. Hankey, 2 Esp. 647). In an action by payee of a note, who was also indorser: held, that his indorsement was an admission of the handwriting of the maker (Free v. Hawkins, Holt, 550). In an action on a note, a declaration made by the plt. before he became the holder will invalidate the note (Williams v. —, 5 M. & R. 121). An offer from the deft. to the plt. after a note is become due, to give another instead of it, will amount to an admission of deft.'s signature and plt.'s title (Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 Esp. 43). A promise to pay the amount of the bill, or a part payment of it after it is due, is an admission of the acceptance (Jones v. Morgan, 2 Camp. 474); so is an offer by deft. to compromise the action (see Harding v. Jones, 1 Tyrw. & G. 135); and of the other party's handwriting (Helmsley v. Loader, 2 Camp. 450); and payment of money into court generally also admits deft.'s signature (Gutteridge v. Smith, H. Bl. 374; Middleton v. Brewer, Pea. 16). It admits everything which the plt. must have proved to recover it (Dyer v. Ashton, 1 B. & C. 4, per cur.). It is an admission that the plt. has a legal demand to the extent of the money brought in (Blackburn v. Scholes, 2 Camp. 341), but not beyond that extent. Therefore, payment of money into court, in an action on a promissory note, payable by instalments, is only an admission that money to the amount paid in was due on it, and does not bar the Statute of Limitations, as to a further sum claimed on the same note (Reid v. Dickens, 5 B. & Ad. 499). In an action against an indorser, proof that the deft. admitted to have received a bill corresponding with that upon which the action was brought, that after issue joined he had declared that he came to town to hasten the trial of a cause brought against him on an indorsement he had made upon a bill, and that he carried the cause down by proviso, was held sufficient (Dale v. Lubbock, 1 Barn. 199; Bayl. B. 486). If an acceptor is sued, and he give plt. a notice to produce papers relating to a bill described therein "as accepted by the said defendant," it is an admission of deft.'s acceptance (Holt v. Squire, R. & M. 282). If deft. speak of having been arrested for a debt, and offer a bill, proof of this admission will entitle the plt. to a verdict (Braithwaite v. Churchill, 2 C. & P. 341). Where an admission was made before the bill was due, and the holder received the bill on the faith of such admission, the party making it was held precluded from afterwards disputing the fact, on the ground that the signature was a forgery (Leach v. Buchanan, 4 Esp. 226); and, where deft. is sued as acceptor, though the plt. fail in proving his handwriting, and it appear to be a forgery, yet proof that deft. had paid several other bills accepted in like manner, will establish his liability (Barker v. Gingell, 3 Esp. 80). Where an acceptance is signed by the wife for the husband, and he, with a knowledge of the circumstance, promises to pay the bill, it will be an admission of his signature, and no proof will be required (Helmsley v. Loader, 2 Camp. 450). But, in an action on a bill, which has been shown to the drawer, with the name of the payee indorsed on it, and he merely objected to pay it because he had drawn it without consideration, it was held, in an action against him by the indorsee, that this admission did not dispense with regular proof of the indorsement (Duncan v. Scott, 1 Camp. 101). An admission of the party's signature will not operate against any other party than the one making it (Bayl. B. 483); therefore, in an action against several drawers, indorsers, or acceptors, an admission upon the pleadings by one, of his signature, will not exempt the plt. from proving it against the *others

(Esp. 125; Barnes, 381); and proof that one of the indorsers had confessed his signature is not admissible in evidence in an action by an indorsee against the drawer of a bill (Ib.; Bayl. B. 487). The admissions of a prior holder of a bill are not evidence against a subsequent one, if the bill is not proved to have been in his possession at the time he made the admission (Pocock v. Billings, 2 Bing. 269; Barough v. White, 4 B. & C. 328; see Woodbury v. Row, 1 Ad. & E. 114). A note was dated 10th November: an admission was put in, made by the deft., of the handwriting of a note, dated 10th October: held, evidence of handwriting not necessary; for it is evident that the deft.'s intention in the admission was to admit the handwriting of the note declared on, and that the mis-description could not have misled him (Field v. Fleming, 5 Dowl. 450; 1 Jur. 24; see ante, "ADMISSIONS").

Evidence under the Common Counts.] If the plt. cannot substantiate in evidence the facts necessary to support the count on the bill or note, or such count should be defective, he can go into evidence of the consideration for which he received it, and may recover on the common counts, if adapted to such consideration (see Ch. Bills, 363, and cases there referred to; Thompson v. Morgan, 3 Camp. 101, 102; Tyte v. Jones, 1 East, 58, n. a; Alves v. Hodgson, 7 T. R. 241; Tatlock v. Harris, 3 T. R. 174; Wilson v. Kennedy, 1 Esp. 245; see ante, p. 481); provided the particulars of his demand state the consideration of the bill, &c. (Wade v. Beasley, 4 Esp. 7; Ryder v. Ellis, 8 C. & P. 857); and his counsel notices such demand in opening the case on the trial (Paterson v. Zachariah, 1 Stark. 72; see the cases in Wells v. Girling, 1 Gow, 22, 23; S. C. 3 Moo. 79). It is not necessary to declare on a promissory note, for, in an action for money lent, the note may be given in evidence (B. N. P. 137, 138; Storey v. Atkins, 2 Stra. 719). Where, however, the party is discharged by alteration of the bill, &c., or by the laches of the holder, the plt. will not be allowed to go into evidence of the common counts (Long v. Moore, 3 Esp. 155); and, where a promissory note has been given for money due from the deft. to the plt., who declares thereon, together with the money counts, he must prove the note to have been destroyed before he can have recourse to the money counts, if it appear that the money so claimed was that for which the note was given (Dangerfield v. Wilby, 4 Esp. 159; Hadwen v. Mendisabel, 2 C. & P. 20; ante, p. 481). The above rule does not, in general, apply when there is no privity between the plt. and deft., as between the indorsee and the acceptor of a bill, and the indorsee and the maker of a note (Johnson v. Collins, 1 East, 98; Barlow v. Bishop, ib. 434, 435; Whitewell v. Bennett, 3 B. & P. 559; Houle v. Baxter, 3 East, 177); between whom, if the plt. cannot succeed on the count upon the bill, and there be no express promise to pay the amount, the common counts are in general of no avail (Waynam v. Bend, 1 Camp. 175; Ch. Bills, 364; Bentley v. Northhouse, M. & M. 66; Eales v. Dickin, ib. 324; but see Ch. Bills, 9th ed. 581). And a person who becomes a party to a bill or note, as a mere surety, is not liable under the common counts (Wells v. Girling, 3 Moo. 79).

The instrument itself, will, it is said, when duly stamped, in certain cases, be evidence in support of the counts for money lent, paid, had, and received, and that founded on an actual or supposed account stated (Wells v. Girling, 1 Gow, 22; S. C. 3 Moo. 79; Gould v. Coombs, 1 C. B. 435). But, according to Waynam v. Bend, 1 Camp. 175, such instrument is only evidence under the money counts, as between the original parties to it. Thus, a bill *is prima facie evidence of money lent by the payee [*496] to the drawer, and a note, of money lent by the payee to the maker (Clarke v. Martin, Raym. 758; 1 Burr. 373); and an indorsement is prima facie evidence of money lent by the indorsee to his immediate indorser (Bayl. B. 164, 286); and a promissory note in such cases is admissible as a paper or writing, to prove the receipt of so much money from the plt., and that, though it has been invalidated as a note by alteration (Sutton v. Toomer, 7 B. & C. 416; Tomkins v. Ashby, 6 ib. 541; Gould v. Coombes, 1 C. B. 543). Where plt. cannot recover on a count for want of a stamp, he may on a count for money lent, on proof of an acknowledgment on demand made (Tyte v. Jones, 1 East, 58, n.; see Alves v. Hodgson, 7 T. R. 241; Kennedy v. Wilson, 1 Esp. 345; see Jardine v. Payne, post, p. 497). A bill which never was properly stamped is not admissible in evidence for collateral purposes, though formerly held to be so (Jardine v. Payne, 1 B. & Ad. 670, post, p. 496; Jones v. Ryder, 4 M. & W. 32). A check, not presented, has been held not to be evidence of money lent by the drawer to the payee (Pearce v. Davis, 1 M. & R. 365). When the deft. had admitted that he owed the money due upon a bill which was in his possession, Abbott, C. J., held, that such an admission might be given in evidence under the common counts, without a notice to produce the bill (Fryer v. Brown, R. & M. 145). Quære, whether a note which is misdescribed is receivable in evidence under the common counts (Wells v. Girling, infra; and see Gibson v. Minet, 3 T. R. 481; 1 H. Bl. 569). When a bill is given in payment of goods sold, which is refused acceptance, such bill may be treated as a nullity as against the drawer, and the holder may recover his demand on the common counts, although the credit on the bill has not expired (Hickling v. Hardy, 1 Moo. 61; 7 Taunt. 312). The payment of interest is evidence to show that a principal sum, corresponding with and bearing such interest was due; and a note bearing such interest may be looked to, to see the terms on which the deposit was made (Sutton v. Toomer, 1 M. & R. 125; 7 B. & C. 416).

A count for money lent is supported by evidence acknowledging the receipt of it, on behalf of the deft.'s grandson, and promising to be accountable for it on demand; and a count for money laid out and expended at the deft.'s request is proved by evidence of a note of hand requesting the plt. to pay it to a gardener for the workmen's use (Harris v. Huntack, 1 Burr. 371; 2 Ld. Raym. 28).

A bill or note is prima facie evidence of money paid by the holder to the use of the drawer of the one, and maker of the other; and a bill, when accepted, is evidence of money paid by the holder to the use of the acceptor; and, if an indorser has taken up a bill, he may, having failed in his first count against the acceptor, on account of a variance, recover under the count for money paid (Pownal v. Farrand, 6 B. & C. 439; Le Sage v. Johnson, Forr. R. 23; S. C. Bayl. B. 164; sed vide Gibson v. Minet, 1 H. Bl. 602; Howle v. Baxter, 3 East, 177; Cowley v. Dunlop, 7 T. R. 572; Buckler v. Buttavant, 3 East, 72; Simmonds v. Parminter, 1 Wils. 186; Ch. Bills, 365). If the drawee, without having effects of the drawer in his hands, accept and pay the bill without having it protested, he may recover the amount in an action for money paid, laid out, and expended, to the use of the drawer (Smith v. Nissen, 1 T. R. 269; Cowley v. Dunlop, 7 T. R. 576). But, if he has not actually paid the bill in money, and has only given security for it, or he has not sustained any costs or damage, he cannot recover, unless the declaration be special (3 East, 169; 8 T. R. 610; 7 T. R. 204).

In an action on a note, and also for goods sold and delivered, if [*497] *plt. prove the delivery of the goods before the note was given, and do not show the consideration to have been distinct from the goods, the deft must have a verdict on one of the counts; the plt. cannot take a verdict on one, and have the jury discharged from giving one on the other (Mutrie v. Harris, M. & M.).

A bill, as well as a note (Vin. Abr. Evidence, A. b. 36; Ford v. Hopkins, 1 Salk. 283), is prima facie evidence of money had and received by the drawer or maker, to the use of the holder (Bayl. B. 487, 4th ed., cites Grant v. Vaughan, 3 Burr. 1516; sed vide Waynam v. Bend, 1 Camp. 175, ante, p. 195). And an acceptance is evidence of money had and received by the acceptor to the use of the drawer (Thompson v. Morgan, 3 Camp. 101; Bayl. B. 163). A bill will also be evidence under the count for money had and received, in an action by the payee, who is also the drawer, against the acceptor (Ib.). It has been supposed, that, in an action by an indorsee against an acceptor, the bill may be given in evidence under the count for money had and received (2 Phil. Ev. 50; sed vide Waynam v. Bend, 1 Camp. 175; Enon v. Russell, 4 M. & S. 507; Wells v. Girling, Gow, 22; S. C. 3 Moo. 79; Ch. Bills, 366; Eales v. Dickon, M. & M. 324). An instrument promising payment on condition is not admissible in evidence to sustain the money counts, or on an account stated (Morgan v. Jones, 1 Crompt. & J. 162).

A bill will be evidence under the account stated in an action by the payee, who is also drawer, or by the drawer against the acceptor (per Abbott, C. J., Rhodes v. Gent, 5 B. & A. 245). It has been said, an acceptance is evidence of an account stated by the acceptor with the holder of the bill (Israel v. Douglas, 1 H. Bl. 239; sed vide Taylor v. Higgins, 3 East, 169; Whitwell v. Bennett, 3 B. & P. 559). An admission of the debt. may be proved as evidence of an account stated under that count (Highmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S. 65; Wade v. Beasley, 4 Esp. 7). So, it seems, in an action by payee against acceptor the bill would not be evidence of an account stated (Early v. Bowman, 1 B. & Ad. 889). Indorsee against indorser of a bill: evidence of an acknowledgment of an existing debt, and of a promise to pay by the debt. is admissible, and sufficient to support a count upon an account stated (Wagstaffe v. Boardman, 9 D. & R. 248). Count on bill by indorsee for 57*l.* 10*s.*, and an account stated against acceptor, and the bill was on an insufficient stamp; and the plt. in order to recover on an account stated, produced two letters of the debt.'s after the dishonour of the bill; in the first, dated the day the bill became due, and addressed "To the gentleman who calls with the bill," the debt. expressed his regret that it was not in his power to take up the bill for 57*l.* 10*s.* In the second, in answer to one from the plt.'s attorney requiring payment of the debt.'s acceptance by Tilbury for 57*l.* 10*s.*, the debt. said if he had had the money he should not have let his acceptance be dishonoured, and proposed that Tilbury should draw upon him in a month. Held, that these letters did not amount to an acknowledgment that the sum of 57*l.* 10*s.* was due to the plt., but merely that it was due to the person legally entitled to the bill; that it was necessary, therefore, for the plt. to prove an indorsement of the bill, and that the bill, not being on a sufficient stamp, could not be looked at by the jury for the purpose of ascertaining this fact (Jardine v. Payne, 1 B. & Ad. 663). "Received of A. B. 150*l.*, which I promise to pay on demand, with interest," is a promissory note, and requires to be stamped as such. Where, therefore, an instrument in these words on being produced in evidence, was stamped with a receipt stamp; held, that an acknowledgment by the debt. that he owed the party to whom it was given the sum mentioned in the note was held sufficient to entitle the executors of the latter to recover on an account *stated, although the consideration for which the note was given was goods [*498] sold and delivered, for which there was no count in the declaration (Ashby v. Ashby, 3 Moo. & P. 186). On the death of one of the parties to a note one of the makers got possession of it, for the purpose of adding another party to it, and as a guarantee for its re-delivery gave I O U for the amount of the note: held, in an action by the payee against the maker, that assuming the note to be void by reason of the alteration, inasmuch as the note was free from objection, an I O U which was given before the alteration was admissible in evidence in support of a count upon an account stated by the I O U (Gould v. Coombs, 1 C. B. 543).

Evidence in Answer to Defence, of defect of stamp, incapacity to contract, illegal consideration, want of consideration, improper presentment, laches of holder, giving time to parties, plt. an outlaw, bankruptcy, award and satisfaction, &c. The answers which plt. should be prepared to show, in making out his case against the intended defence, will be found interspersed amongst the various defences which it will be hereafter seen deft. may set up (post).

Damages.] See "DAMAGES." Plt. may, in most cases, recover, 1st, the principal sum due; 2nd, interest; 3rd, all incidental expenses occasioned by the non-acceptance or non-payment, re-exchange, costs of dishonour, provision, &c.

With respect to the Principal Sum, plt. will in general be entitled to recover it to its full amount; and in an action by the indorsee against the drawer of a note, although the indorser had paid the indorsee a part of the note, it was held that the indorsee was entitled to recover the whole as against the drawer, he being merely a trustee of the indorser as to the part received from him (Johnson v. Kennion, 2 Wils. 262; but see Bacon v. Searles, infra). Where a bill was sent to get it discounted, and a bank upon getting a guarantee advanced 100% upon it, the party obtaining the advance having no other interest in the bill; upon the bill being dishonoured, he paid the 100% to the banker, and then sued the acceptor on the bill: held, entitled to recover the amount of the bill, and that he would be trustee for the 200% to the party entitled to it (Reid v. Furnival, 1 C. & M. 538). In an action by second indorsee against acceptor, where the pleadings admitted that the acceptance and first indorsement were without consideration, and the issue was whether the plt. gave value for the indorsement to him, and he proved a debt of 57% due to him from the first indorser, and one of 20% from the second indorser, it was held that he was entitled to recover 20% only (Simpson v. Clarke, 3 C. M. & R. 342). So, if the party who had received the accommodation pay part of the amount the holder can recover only the balance from the party accommodating (Bacon v. Searles, 1 H. Bl. 88).

The acceptor is liable to the full amount of the bill as between himself and third parties, but only as to the sum for which the acceptance was given as between himself and the drawer (Darnell v. Williams, 2 Stark. 166); he may therefore show that he accepted it for value as to part, and for accommodation as to the rest (Ib.); and the liability of the maker of a note given to secure the debt of a third party, is the same as that of one who gives a regular guarantee (Stone v. Compton, 1 Wil. 436). A partial failure of the consideration will, in general, be no defence of the quantum to be deducted on that account, as it is matter, not of definite computation, but of unliquidated damages (post). Where the holder or indorsee of an *ac-[*499] commodation-bill takes it, knowing it to be such, and advances on it but part of the amount, he can only recover as much as he has really paid (Wiffin v. Roberts, 1 Esp. 261); and where the deft. accepted a bill of 415% to accommodate P. and Co., P. and Co. indorsed it to their bankers for value and became bankrupts, the bankers knew it to be an accommodation acceptance, and their demand against P. and Co. was 205*l.* only, in an action by them upon this acceptance, it was held, that they could only recover the 205*l.* (Jones v. Hibbert, 2 Stark. 304; and see Solomon v. Turner, 1 ib. 51). If, in an action by the indorsee against the drawer or acceptor, he has received any part from the acceptor or drawer, he can only recover the balance, as it operates, so far, as a satisfaction (Bacon v. Searles, 1 H. Bl. 88; and see Beck v. Robley, 1 ib. 89, n.; Bayl. B. 167); but, if the part-payment be received from the first indorser, he may recover the whole amount against the drawer or acceptor (Walwyn v. St. Quintin, 1 B. & P. 638; 2 Wils. 262; 1 Rose, 10). However, "where a bill is given for money really due from the drawee to the drawer, or is drawn in the regular course of business, in such case the indorsee, though he has not given to the indorser the full amount of the bill, yet may recover the whole, and be the holder of the overplus above the sum he has really paid to the use of the indorser" (per Lord Kenyon). But this rule only applies where there is some person to receive the overplus (Pierson v. Dulop, Cowp. 571). If a bill be given in consideration of the deft. entering into partnership with the plt., and the treaty be afterwards broken off, the plt. is entitled to recover a verdict on the bill to the amount of the damages he has sustained, and not to the full amount of the bill (Lager v. Ewer, Pea. 216). Where an indorser paid part of the amount of a bill to the holder, it was held, that he might recover the same against the acceptor as money paid to his use (Pownall v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 439). The sum mentioned in the body of the bill is that only which can be recovered, and where it differs from the figures at the top, parol evidence is not admissible to explain the intention of the parties (Saunderson v. Piper, 8 Law J. 227; 5 Bing. N. C. 425).

Interest.] See "INTEREST." As to when interest is recoverable see 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, ss. 28, 29. It was so before the act in an action on a bill or note, as a debt, when stipulated for in the bill, and as damages, when not specified (Ex parte Marlan, 1 Atk. 151; Cameron v. Smith, 2 B. & A. 305); and if the delay of payment arose from the holder's neglect, it might be withheld (per Bailey, J., ib. 308; Laing v. Stone, 2 M. & R. 561; Upton v. Ferrers (Lord), 5 Ves. jun. 808; Murray v. East India Company, 5 B. & A. 204). So, where the note had been overdue thirty years the jury withheld it, and the court, on motion, could not increase the verdict by giving it (De Belloni v. Waterpark (Lord), 1 D. & R. 16). It ought not to be allowed for any time that it was in the hands of an alien enemy (ib.); and after a tender, it has in some cases been withheld (Dent v. Dunn, 2 Camp. 296). Plt. held a bill of exchange drawn by deft.; at its maturity the deft. asked for time; in about three months after the acceptor gave another bill for the same sum, plt. telling him that something was due for interest, and continuing to hold the first bill; the second bill was paid after it became due. Held, that plt. was entitled to sue the drawer of the first bill as well as the acceptor for interest due on it (Lumley v. Hudson, 4 Bing. N. C. 167; 5 Sco. 238; Lumley v. Musgrove, 4 Bing. N. C. 9; 1 Jur. 799).

The plt. must produce the bill to entitle him to recover it (*Fryer v. Brown, R. & M. 145). But plt. need not prove a protest to entitle him to interest, whether against the acceptor or maker of the [*500] bill or note, or the drawer or indorsers (Walker v. Barnes, 5 Taunt. 240; 2 B. & A. 305, 696). Nor does it seem essential that he should have declared on it (Paine v. Pritchard, 2 C. & P. 558). And he may recover under a particular, merely stating the action to be brought "to recover the amount of a note, &c., of 100*l.*" (Blake v. Lawrence, 4 Esp. 147). If the bill or note be expressly made payable with interest, it is payable from the date (Doman v. Dibdin, Ry. & M. 381; Kennerly v. Nash, 1 Stark. 452; Hopper v. Richmond, 507), and the jury are bound to give it. If it be silent as to interest it is to be computed in general from the time the bill or note would regularly have been payable (Bayl. B. 352; Orr v. Churchill, 1 H. Bl. 227; Roffey v. Greenwell, 10 Ad. & E. 222). Thus, if the bill or note be payable after date, in an action against the acceptor of the bill and the maker of a note, payable at a given time after date or sight, interest is recoverable from the day on which they became due, without proof of any demand (3 Ves. 134; 3 Bing. 353). Where a note is payable by instalments and on failure of payment of any instalment the whole is to become due, the interest is to be calculated on the whole sum remaining unpaid, on default of any instalment, and not on the respective instalments at the respective times when they would become payable (Blake v. Lawrence, 4 Esp. 148).

In an action against the drawer interest is only recoverable from the time of his receiving notice of dishonour (Walker v. Barnes, 5 Taunt. 240). Interest is given on a note of hand from the time of its becoming payable (Lithgow v. Lyon, Coop. C. C. 29). When a note is regularly indorsed with acknowledgments of receipt of interest up to a given time it is prima facie evidence of interest being due from that time (Braley v. Greenslade, 1 Pri. P. C. 144). Interest was given from the date of the following note: "I promise, for myself and my executors, to pay F. M. H. or her executors, one year after my death, the sum of 300*l.*, with legal interest" (Roffey v. Greenwell, 10 Ad. & E. 222). In order to entitle a party to interest on a bill accepted payable at a particular place, it must be presented there (Phillips v. Franklin, Gow, 196); unless it appear that it would be unavailing (Bayl. B. 350; see 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78).

An engagement to give a bill will create a liability to interest where otherwise the contract would not carry it; thus, where goods are sold to be paid for by a bill which is not given, interest may be recovered as part of the contract, even in an action for goods sold and delivered (Marshall v. Poole, 14 East, 98; Farr v. Ward, 3 M. & W. 26).

To a declaration in debt on a promissory note for 40*l.* payable on demand "with lawful interest for the same," without alleging that any interest was due, with counts for money lent, and money due, and on an account stated, the deft. pleaded "as to the said debts in the declaration mentioned, except as to 5*l.* which he paid into court, payments to a larger amount, which the plt. accepted in full satisfaction and discharge of the said debts, except as aforesaid, and of all damages by the plts. sustained by reason of the detention." Replication traversed the acceptance in satisfaction. Held, that the interest was part of the debt, and also that it was recoverable as such upon the pleadings (Hudson v. Fawcett, 7 Man. & G. 348). So, upon a bill or note payable on presentment, interest must be computed from the presentment (Bayl. B. 279; Blaney v. Hendricks, 2 Bl. R. 761; Ex parte Cocks, 1 Rose, 317; Pierce v. Fothergill, 2 Bing. N. C. 167; 2 Scott, 334); the issuing of the writ is a demand *(Ib.; see Barough v. White, 4 [*501] B. & C. 327; King v. Taylor, 5 Ves. jun. 808). And if, at the time a bill falls due, there is no person to recover on it, as where the holder dies intestate, and administration be not taken out, the acceptor will be liable only from the time the administrator demands payment of the principal (Murray v. East India Company, 5 B. & A. 204); but interest is payable from the date of the bill or note, if it appear to have been for money lent (Bayl. B. 352); or it promise to pay on demand (Ib.; Weston v. Tomlinson, per Abbott, C. J., cited Ch. Bills, 686, 9th ed.; Hopper v. Richmond, 1 Stark. 508). Where the action is against the drawer of a foreign bill, dishonoured for non-acceptance here, and where plt. is allowed a percentage, as of ten per cent., he is only entitled to interest from the day the bill ought to have been paid (Garth v. Mackenzie, 3 Camp. 51); but, where there is no such allowance, the plt. is entitled to interest from the day the bill was dishonoured for non-acceptance (Harrison v. Dickson, ib., n.). A party who guarantees the due payment of a bill of exchange by the acceptor is liable for interest upon it if it be not paid when due (Ackermann v. Ehrensherger, 16 M. & W. 99).

As to bills payable by instalments, ante, 472.

As to the Rate of Interest.] Five per cent. is usually allowed in this country (5 Ves. 803); but the jury may allow either four or five, according to their judgment of the value of money (per Bailey, J., Cameron v. Smith, 2 B. & A. 308). Where a note was made payable with interest at 6l. per cent. the judge told the jury in allowing interest up to the time of signing judgment, to allow it at 5l. per cent. only (Ward v. Morrison, 1 Car. & M. 368); and, in the case of a foreign bill, it may be regulated by the rate of interest established in the country where the bill is drawn; so, upon a bill drawn in Bermuda on England, which ought to have been paid in England, the plt. recovered seven-and-a-half per cent. interest, such being the rate of interest at Bermuda (Congan v. Banks, cited Ch. Bills, 423); but the acceptor can never be liable to pay more than the legal rate of interest in the place where the bill is due (Worsley v. Crawford, 2 Camp. 446). Where a bill is payable by instalments, the plt. is only entitled to recover the instalments due at the time of the trial, and the interest thereon (Ashford v. Hand, Andr. 370; Robinson v. Bland, 2 Burr. 1085; 1 H. Bl. 547; contra, Beckwith v. Nott, Cro. Jac. 505); unless it contain a clause that they shall all become due, and the interest is to be calculated on the whole sum remaining unpaid, and not on the respective instalments, when they would become payable (Blake v. Lawrence, 4 Esp. 147). Interest ceases in general at the time when final judgment may be signed (Bayl. B. 352; Robinson v. Bland, Burr. 1088). Interest was refused beyond the time of verdict, even where plt. had been unjustly delayed more than two years (Jarold v. Rowe, 8 Pri. 582). Where money is paid into court on a security carrying interest, interest must be paid to the time of payment into court (Mercer v. Jones, infra); or plt. may proceed for the difference (Kidd v. Walker, 2 B. & A. 705). Interest ceases to run after tender (Dent v. Dunn, 3 Camp. 296). Interest has been allowed in trover for bills, from the date of the final judgment upon all such as had been received before the judgment, and upon all such as had been received afterwards, from the time of the receipt (Atkins v. Wheeler, 2 N. R. 205); but it was held at nisi prius, that interest could not be recovered after the time of conversion (Mercer v. Jones, 3 Camp. 477). But now by the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, the jury may give damages over and above the value of the goods at the time of the *conversion. With regard to usurious interest, see 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 98, [*502] s. 7; 1 Vict. c. 80; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37.

Expenses of Dishonour, Protest, &c.] The expense incurred by the holder of a bill, at the time of its dishonour, is the charge for noting and protesting; but the antecedent parties are liable for re-exchange, or the usual damages, postage, &c. (Bayl. B. 355; De Tastet v. Baring, 11 East, 265).

Re-Exchange.] See ante, p. 479. When a foreign bill is dishonoured in the country in which it was payable, and returned to that in which it was drawn, and there taken up by the payee or other party, he is entitled to recover re-exchange. But plt must prove that there was at the time a course of re-exchange between the countries through which the bill has been negotiated (De Tastet v. Baring, 11 East, 268; 2 Camp. 65), as well as the amount of such re-exchange (Cullen, 172). But it is not necessary for him to prove that he has actually paid it (Ib.); and plt. may recover against the drawer the whole amount of the re-exchange occasioned by a circuitous mode of returning the bill through the various countries in which it has been negotiated, and different hands upon each return; and that, though the non-payment of the bill arose from a law of the country on which it was drawn, passed to prohibit such payment (Mellish v. Simeon, 2 H. Bl. 378). Plt. when holder of a note, by which he has the option of being paid either at the place where it was made, or, "according to the course of exchange, may insist upon being paid according to such course of exchange as exists between them when the note became due" (Bayl. B. 357; Pollard v. Herries, 3 B. & P. 335). Though, between this country and India, there appears to be no distinct course of re-exchange, yet, "on the return of a bill drawn here for the payment of pagodas in the East Indies, the practice is to allow for the sum payable by the bill, interest, and all incidental charges, after the rate of 10s. for each pagoda, and five per cent. thereon, from the expiration of 30 days after notice of the bill's dishonour" (Bayl. B. 357; Auriol v. Thomas, 2 T. R. 52). An acceptor is never liable for re-exchange (Napier v. Shneider, 12 East, 420; Woolsey v. Crawford, 2 Camp. 445). In an action on a bill or note, the expense of noting cannot be recovered (Kendrick v. Lomax, 2 Cr. & J. 405); nor can the plt., who has had an action brought against him, and been obliged to pay costs, recover those costs in an action by him against the acceptor, for the custom of merchants does not make an acceptor liable for the costs of all actions against subsequent holders (Dawson v. Morgan, 9 B. & C. 618). Upon the subject of damages on the protest and dishonour of a bill, where it appeared that a bill drawn in Demerara had been sent back dishonoured and protested, and the plt. claimed damages to the amount of 25*l.* per cent., which was considered to be the amount of the loss, but, as the bill for 500*l.* had been sent back dishonoured, protested for the whole, as 400*l.* had been paid on it, and that the usual practice, in such cases, was to retain the dishonoured bill here, and send a protest to Demerara, where, upon the arrival of the protest, security was demanded and given by the drawers, and that the whole of the loss from the dishonour was not incurred, unless the bill in the result was not paid, only 25*l.* damages were allowed on the 100*l.* which had not been paid (Laing v. Barclay, 3 Stark. 42).

[*503] *DRAWER, WHO IS ALSO PAYEE, AGAINST ACCEPTOR.

Proof of Bill.] The bill, where requisite (see ante, p. 489), must be produced and proved, as directed ante, 489 to 491. But the proofs will depend upon the pleadings; if the acceptance be intended to be put in issue, it must be traversed by the plea; and then it must be proved: if not, it is admitted since the New Rules, and need not be proved.

Proof of Acceptance.] See ante, p. 462. By 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, s. 2, every acceptance of an inland bill must be in writing upon the bill, or, if there be several parts of the bill, on one of such parts. An inland bill cannot be protested for non-payment, unless it has been accepted in writing (8 & 9 Will. III. c. 17, s. 1). By an inland bill is meant, a bill drawn in England, Wales, or Berwick-upon-Tweed; in London, or some other place within these parts of the realm (Mahony v. Ashlin, 2 B. & Ad. 478). Therefore, a bill drawn in Ireland upon one in England, is a foreign bill (Ib.); so is a bill drawn in Scotland upon one in England, Berwick-upon-Tweed, or Wales (Ib.).

In the case of foreign bills, a valid acceptance may be by parol, or by writing on the bill itself, or on another paper, as by letter, undertaking to accept bills already drawn (Clarke v. Cock, 4 East, 71; Ex parte Dyer, 6 Ves. 9; see ante, p. 465). A letter from the drawees of a foreign bill here, to the drawer in America, stating that, their prospect of security being better, they would accept, or certainly pay the bill, is a valid acceptance, though they had previously refused to accept the bill, and again refused payment of it, when presented for payment, and though the letter was not received in America till after the bill became due (Wynne v. Raikes, 5 East, 514). A collateral writing, saying that a foreign bill, "shall meet with due honour" (Clarke v. Cock, 4 East, 57; Powell v. Monnier, 1 Atk. 611; Wynne v. Raikes, 5 East, 520), or "that the holder may rest satisfied as to payment" (Wilkinson v. Lutwich, Stra. 648; Wynne v. Raikes, 5 East, 514; Clarke v. Cock, 4 East, 57), or a direction by the drawer to a third party to pay the sum in the bill out of a particular fund (B. N. P. 270), is a sufficient acceptance. So, transcribing the word "accepted," "presented," "seen," or even the day of the month (Comb. 401), or writing upon it an order upon another to pay it (Moor v. Whitby, B. N. P. 270), amounts to an acceptance of a foreign bill (Pillans v. Van Mierop, 3 Burr. 1663); and it is sufficient acceptance if the party write "Accepted, C. N." (3 Moo. 91; 5 East, 520; Pierson v. Dunlop, Cowp. 571); or the words "not accepted" will, in some instances, amount to an acceptance; as, where it is accompanied by circumstances which may show an intention to deceive the party presenting it (Bayl. B. 185). But it is no acceptance if the drawee apprize the party at the time, that what he had written was no acceptance (Ib.). A verbal acceptance of a foreign bill is, as we have seen, sufficient; but it is no acceptance where the drawer, on presentment, said, "There is your bill—it is all right" (1 Esp. 17); and the words, "Your bill shall have attention," were deemed too ambiguous to admit of an acceptance, unless evidence be adduced to show that these particular words denoted an acceptance between the parties (Rees v. Warwick, 2 B. & Ad. 113). A verbal promise to accept, though the party expressly defer a written acceptance, as, where he says, "Leave the bill, and I will accept it," is a complete acceptance; and a verbal promise to *accept a returned bill when it shall come back is binding, if it [*504] do come back (Cox v. Coleman, Bayl. B. 192). Saying, "Send ^{part} the bill to my counting-house, and I will give directions for its being accepted," is not, of itself, an acceptance: the bill must be sent to the counting-house (Bayl. B. 147; Anderson v. Hick, 3 Camp. 179).

Indorsee against three defts. as acceptors of a bill of exchange drawn on "E. M. and others, trustees of the Clarence Temperance Hall, Liverpool," and accepted thus—"Accepted, E. M." The three defts., with E. M. and another, were the five trustees of a body of persons associated together for the purpose of building the Temperance Hall. E. M. had authority from all the trustees to accept the bill on their behalf; held, that the defts. were bound by the acceptance, though it did not show on the face of it that E. M. intended to accept not individually, but for himself and four others (Jenkins v. Morris, 16 M. & W. 877).

The acceptor of a bill payable to the order of the drawer cannot deny the authority of the drawer to draw and to indorse (Halifax v. Lye, 18 Law J., 197, C. P.; see Smith v. Marsack, 6 C. B. 486).

The declaration alleged that the Governor and Company of Copper Miners drew a bill upon the deft., payable to their order; that the deft. accepted the same; and that the drawers inclosed the same to the plts. Plea, that the Governor and Company of Copper Miners are a body corporate; that the bill was made by them, and accepted by the deft. as a bill so made by the said body corporate, and that the said body corporate had no authority to indorse any bill of exchange: held bad, on special demurrer (Ib.).

Constructive Acceptance.] A constructive acceptance will, in some cases, render the acceptor liable on foreign bills; as, where a bill is left for the express purpose of being accepted, and the bill is kept, under particular circumstances, an unreasonable length of time, or other act, which induces the holder not to protest it, or which is intended to surprise him, and induce him to consider the bill as accepted (Clavey v. Dolbin, Rep. t. Hard. 278). Where the drawee, as soon as he received the bill, transmitted it to the acceptor, desiring him to accept and hand it over to plt.'s agent in London, which was the usual mode of dealing between the parties; plt. hearing nothing of his bill from his agent, wrote to deft. as to the delay, who replied that he had retained the bill because he once meant to accept it, which he now declined doing, Lord Ellenborough said, such a retention was as much an acceptance as if he had written his name upon the face of it (Harvey v. Martin, 1 Camp. 425, n.); so if he destroys it (Bayl. B. 194). The question of reasonable time will necessarily depend upon the facts of each particular case, and the conduct of the parties (per Abbott, C. J., Mason v. Barff, 2 B. & A. 36). The mere non-return of the bill, unaccompanied by any other act, or the disfiguring or even destroying the bill, will not of itself constitute an acceptance (Jeune v. Ward, 1 B. & A. 653; S. C. 2 Stark. 326; see supra, Ellenborough, C. J., diss.); and the drawee may erase an acceptance previous to any communication of his having accepted the bill (Cox v. Tory, 5 B. & A. 474; but see Thornton v. Dick, 4 Esp. 270). But he cannot revoke or cancel it after he has parted with it (Bayl. B. 204); as to cancellation by mistake, see Warwick v. Rogers, 12 Law J., 113, C. P. By the usage of trade in London, it is usual for bankers on whom checks are drawn to retain them till five o'clock in the afternoon of the day they are presented for payment, and they may then be returned any time before that hour, though previously cancelled by mistake (Fernandez v. Glyn, 1 Camp. 426). The acceptance of a foreign bill, if written on the bill, is proved in the usual way (post, p. 509); if implied only, then on proof of the facts from which it is to be implied.

An acceptance, being an absolute undertaking to pay, may be made even after the time appointed by the bill for payment (per Lord Ellenborough, in Wynne v. Raikes, 5 East, 521; Chit. B. 169); and even after a prior refusal to accept (Ib.), so as to bind the acceptor, who would, in such case, be liable to pay the bill on demand (Ib.; see Bayl. B. 183; Jackson v. Pigott, 1 Ld. Raym. 364; Mutford v. Walcot, ib. 574). The acceptance may be written before the drawer has signed the bill (Molloy v. Delves, 7 Bing. 428), or before it is drawn, if drawn pursuant to acceptor's authority (Leslie v. Hastings, 1 Moo. & R. 119).

Absolute Acceptance.] An absolute acceptance is an engagement to pay the bill according to its tenor (Ch. B. 173). Such acceptance is usually made by writing on the face of the bill "Accepted," and subscribing the acceptor's name, or by doing either alone. However, on a written acceptance by any other person than the drawee, it would seem essential [*505] that his name should appear (Bayl. B. 181). *If the acceptance were in fact conditional, it will not support the allegation of an absolute one, though the condition have been performed (Layton v. Corney, 4 Camp. 177; Ball v. Sarell, D. & R. N. P. C. 33; Swan v. Cox, 1 Marsh. 176); if the condition have not been performed a legal excuse must be averred and proved if denied (Rose, Ev. 205). When the bill is payable at sight, the day of the acceptance should be also written (Beawes, Pl. 266); but, if the acceptance appear to have been written by the deft. under a date which is not in his handwriting, the date is evidence of the time of acceptance; as it is the usual course of business for a clerk to write the date, and for the party to write his acceptance under it (Glossop v. Jacob, 4 Camp. 227). A mark put on a check by a London banker to show that the drawer has effects in his hands, and that it will be paid, amounts to an acceptance; as it is the practice of London bankers, if one banker holds a check drawn on another, and presents it after four o'clock, not then to pay it, but to put such a mark on it, and it is in consequence paid next day at the clearing-house (Robson v. Bennet, 2 Taunt. 388; see further, Ch. B. 173 to 178).

Conditional Acceptance.] A conditional acceptance of a bill is good (Julian v. Shobrooke, 2 Wils. 9; Smith v. Abbott, 2 Stra. 1152; Stevens v. Hill, 5 Esp. 247; Mendizabel v. Machado, 3 Moo. & S. 841; see Solomon v. Rougemont, 9 Law J. 158, C. P.): it depends on a contingency, and is an engagement to pay according to the tenor of such acceptance, and, as it seems, becomes absolute so soon as the conditions of it are performed. The plt. cannot recover on it unless he prove that the condition has been performed (Swan v. Cox, 1 Marsh. 176; Miln v. Prest, Holt, 181; Banbury v. Lisset, 2 Stra. 1211), or prove a sufficient excuse for the non-performance (Leeson v. Pigot, Bayl. B. 187; Bowes v. Howe, 5 Taunt. 30). If A. accept a bill payable on a condition to be performed by B., the performance of this condition by C. will not support an action by the holder of the bill against A. (Swan v. Cox, supra; and see Harrison v. Hannel, 1 Marsh. 319; 5 Taunt. 780). Any act which evinces an intention not to be bound unless upon a certain event, is a conditional acceptance; as, where the drawee of a bill on account of a cargo consigned to him writes that it will not be accepted till a cargo of wheat arrives, the deft. is liable as acceptor on such arrival (Miln v. Prest, 4 Camp. 393). Saying, "Send the bill to my counting-house, and I will give directions for its being accepted," is not of itself an acceptance; the bill must be sent to the counting-house (Bayl. B. 192; Anderson v. Hick, 3 Camp. 179). So an "acceptance to pay when remitted," is a conditional acceptance (Bayl. B. 153); and plt. must give evidence to show that he had remitted (Banbury v. Lisset, 2 Stra. 1211). So, an answer by a drawee, who lived in London, that a ship was consigned to him and a person in Bristol, and that, till he knew to which port the ship would come, he could not accept, connected with a subsequent answer, that the bill was a good one, and would be paid, though the ship should be lost, was held a conditional acceptance only; it being clear that the drawee looked for an opportunity of reimbursing himself, and had three events in contemplation—the ship's arrival at Bristol, her arrival at London, and her loss: in the two latter he should have the opportunity, and therefore accepted, and in the former he should not, and did not accept (Bayl. B. 153; Sproat v. Matthews, 1 T. R. 182). So, an answer by the drawee that he could not accept until a navy bill should be paid, will operate as an absolute acceptance upon the payment of the navy bill (Pierson v. Dunlop, Cowp. 571). If the drawee say he cannot accept without further directions from J. S., and J. S. afterwards desires *him to accept, and draw upon A. B. for the [*506] amount, the mere drawing upon A. B. will not make this an acceptance, although the actual payment of the bill drawn upon him may (Bayl. B. 199; Smith v. Nissen, 1 T. R. 269). And a promise to accept in future, made on an executory consideration, will not bind while the consideration remains executory, unless it influence some person to take or to retain the bill (Bayl. B. 174; Pillans v. Van Mierop, 3 Burr. 1669). On the presentment for acceptance of certain bills of exchange, the drawee said he would have accepted them if he had had funds (meaning the funds on account of which the bills were drawn); that he had not been able to obtain these funds from France, but that when he did he would pay them: held, that this amounted to a conditional acceptance of the bills, and that the deft. having become possessed of the funds in question was bound to pay the bills (Mendizabel v. Machado, 2 Moo. & S. 841; 6 C. P. 218). Whether an acceptance be conditional, or absolute is a question of law (Sproat v. Mathews, supra). If a man purpose making a conditional acceptance only, he should be careful, if he make it in writing, to express the conditions therein; for it may at least be doubtful whether parol evidence of such conditions would be admissible: if it were, the onus of proving them would be upon the acceptor, and the proof would be of no avail if the holder, or any person under whom he claims, took the bill without notice of such conditions, and gave a valuable consideration for it (Bayl. B. 197). Nevertheless the holder of a bill who presents it for acceptance is not bound to take a conditional acceptance; he may strike it out, and treat it as a nullity (Boehm v. Garcia, 1 Camp. 125, n.); Gammon v. Schmoll, 5 Taunt. 344; see Sproat v. Mathews, 1 T. R. 182).

The acceptance may be general, to pay any where, or special, to pay at a particular place. By act 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, an acceptance stating the bill to be payable at a banker's or particular place, is not a special acceptance, unless it expressly state the bill to be payable at that place only, and not otherwise or elsewhere (ante, p. 469). As to presentment of such bill, post.

Partial or varying Acceptance.] A partial acceptance varies from the tenor of the bill; as, where it is made to pay part of the sum for which the bill is drawn (Wegersloff v. Keene, 1 Str. 214; Ch. B. 182), or to pay at a different time (Molloy, 283; Bayl. B. 178; Walker v. Atwood, 11 Mo. 190), or place (see the cases of Sebag v. Abitol, 4 Moo. & S. 462; Gammon v. Schmoll, 5 Taunt. 344, post; per Abbott, J., Cowie v. Halsall, 4 B. & A. 198-9; Ch. B. 182). An acceptance may also vary from the tenor, in the manner in which the acceptor undertakes to pay the bill (Petit v. Benson, Comb. 452); as, for instance, part in money, and part in bills, or payable at a banker's, &c. Where an acceptance varies in a material respect from the tenor of the bill, if the holder intend to resort to the other parties to the bill in default of payment, he should immediately give notice to them of such conditional or partial acceptance (Marsh. 68, 85; Patton v. Winter, 1 Taunt. 482-3; per Bayley, J., in Sebag v. Abitol, 4 Moo. & S. 466; Ch. B. 182), and should, if he meant to avail himself of the acceptance, express in his notice the nature of it; for any act from whence it may be collected that the holder does not acquiesce in the acceptance, such as a general notice of non-acceptance, will be a waiver of it (Sproat v. Mathews, supra; Bentinck v. Dorrien, 6 East, 200; Bayl. B. 202; Ch. B. 182). The holder who presents the bill for acceptance is not bound to take a partial acceptance; he may treat it as a nullity, and proceed for want of an acceptance (Bayl. B. 202). But he cannot after protest of a foreign [*507] bill for non acceptance, in such case, treat the offer of a partial or conditional acceptance as an acceptance, and sue upon it, (Sproat v. Mathews, 1 T. R. 182). So, if he acquiesce in the acceptance, he cannot afterwards repudiate it (see Paton v. Winter, 1 Taunt. 420).

An acceptance in blank is sufficient to charge the acceptor when the bill is afterwards drawn in pursuance of his authority. The 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, s. 2, does not affect such acceptances (Leslie v. Hastings, 1 M. & R. 119). A. having signed his name to a blank paper duly stamped, and delivered it to B., for the purpose of drawing a bill in such manner as B. should think fit, B. drew a bill payable to a fictitious payee, or order, and indorsed it over for a valuable consideration to C., who was ignorant of the transaction between A. and the indorser: held, that C. might maintain an action against A. as the drawer of a bill payable to bearer on a count to that effect (Collis v. Emmet, 1 H. Bl. 313); or on a count stating the special circumstances (Ib.). The deft. gave a blank acceptance on a bill stamp, and a person who was quite unknown to the acceptor afterwards wrote his name as drawer and indorser of the bill, and it was subsequently filled up as a bill of exchange for 500*l.*: held, that it does not lie in the mouth of the acceptor to say that such drawing and indorsing of the bill was irregular (Schultz v. Astley, 2 Bing. N. C. 544; 2 Sco. 815; 7 C. & P. 99). In an action by indorser against acceptor it is no objection that the acceptance actually took place before the drawer's name be signed, although the declaration be in the usual form, viz., that the bill being drawn, the deft. afterwards accepted, and that the transaction was according to the custom of merchants, and it is not necessary to offer any evidence to show that it is the custom of merchants so to transact business (Molloy v. Delves, 7 Bing. 428; 5 Moo. & P. 275).

If a servant, clerk, or agent, accept a bill by procuration of the drawee, and so express it upon the acceptance, if he had authority he will not be personally liable (Hays v. Haseltine, 2 Camp. 604: on the other hand, if the bill be drawn upon the drawee as servant, &c., of another, and he accept it generally, he becomes personally liable (Bayl. B. 181; Thomas v. Bishop, Stra. 955; and see Sowerby v. Butcher, 2 Cr. & M. 368). If the agent had not authority to accept, the drawee is not liable, although the bill be passed to an indorsee for value (Atwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278); the assumed agent however is Polhil v. Walter, 3 B. & Ad. 114). In such cases inquiry should be made as to the extent of authority, for if a bill be improperly accepted by procuration, the acceptor will not be liable (see Atwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278); and Williams v. Thomas, 6 Esp. 18).

A third person may accept a bill for the honour of the drawer, or of any of the indorsers (Bayl. B. 178; see, where deft. accepted specially after acceptance by the drawee, Jackson v. Hudson, 2 Camp. 447); but such acceptor is only liable in the event of the drawee not paying the bill when due (Hoare v. Cazenove, 16 East, 391; see Mitchell v. Baring, 10 B. & C. 4). So that the plt. must prove, in addition to the acceptance, presentment to the drawee for payment, a refusal by him, and if requisite a protest (Ib.). The holder is not bound to acquiesce in such acceptance; if he do he is not bound by it (Mutford v. Walcott, 1 Ld. Raym. 575; Pillans v. Van Mierop, Burr. 1674).

But the acceptor may be discharged from liability by an agreement to waive the acceptance; thus, where it is agreed not to sue the acceptor if he will make an affidavit that it is a forgery, which is complied with (Stevens v. Thacker, Pea. 187). So, where a message *was sent to the acceptor that the matter had been settled with the drawer (Black [*508] v. Peele, Doug. 236). So, where it is agreed that the acceptance should be at an end (Walpole v. Pulteney, ib.). But telling the acceptor that he should not be troubled about the bill, though he knew him to be an accommodation acceptor, will not operate as a waiver (Adams v. Gregg, 2 Stark. 531); nor saying that the party would look to the drawer, and that all he wanted from the acceptor was another debt not connected with the bill (Parker v. Leigh, 2 Stark. 228); nor by protesting a bill for non-acceptance after an implied acceptance of it (Fairlee v. Herring, 3 Bing. 625); nor from giving time to the drawer (Fentum v. Pocock, 5 Taunt. 192; Raggett v. Axmore, 4 Taunt. 730; Kerrison v. Cooke, 3 Camp. 362; see Laxton v. Peat, 2 Camp. 185; Anderson v. Cleveland, 13 East, 430; Dingwall v. Dunster, Doug. 235; Farquhar v. Southey, Moo. & M. 14).

With respect to the effect of the acceptance, Mr. Chitty observes, that, if absolute, the acceptor is liable to pay it, according to the tenor of the bill (Poth. Pl. 164; Lefley v. Mills, 4 T. R. 174), and, if conditional or partial, he is liable to pay according to the tenor of the acceptance (Poth. Pl. 115—117). A drawee, having accepted a bill after a condition annexed thereto by the indorser, is bound thereby, and need not pay the bill until the condition be performed (Robertson v. Kensington, 4 Taunt. 30). He is primarily liable to pay the bill (Laxton v. Peat, 2 Camp. 187, n.). If he accepted the bill without value, and for the accommodation of the plt., he may resist the payment, and show that the acceptance was partly only for value, and, as to residue, that it was for the plt.'s accommodation (Darnell v. Williams, 2 Stark. 166; Ch. Bill, 69). As the interests of third persons are generally involved in the efficacy of a bill, an acceptance will, when the bill is in the hands of a third person who has given value for it, and who became the holder before it was due, be obligatory on the acceptor, though he received no consideration, and that circumstance were known to the holder (Simmons v. Parminster, 1 Wils. 187, 188; Knox v. Smith, 3 Esp. 46; Ch. Bills, 183); as the object of an accommodation acceptance is to enable the party accommodated to obtain money or credit from a third person; the want of consideration, therefore, furnishes no defence to one who has advanced money on the credit of the acceptor, though he may have been defrauded by the drawer (Ib.; Ex parte Marshall, 1 Atk. 231). See further, as to defence of want of consideration, post; as to how far acceptance is revocable, see post; and when the acceptor is discharged, post.

Effect of Acceptance.—Admission of Drawer's Handwriting.] The acceptance admits the drawer's ability, and the acceptor cannot set up as a defence the want of it, as, that he was an infant (Taylor v. Croker, 4 Esp. 187; see vide 4 Price, 300). It admits the drawer's handwriting to the bill, and, if drawn by procuration, the procuration (Robinson v. Yarrow, 7 Taunt. 455; Porthouse v. Parker, 1 Camp. 82); and it is no defence for an acceptor in an action by a bona fide holder, that the drawer's name has been forged (Price v. Neal, 3 Burr. 1354; S. C. 1 Bla. 390; Smith v. Chester, 1 T. R. 655; and see further, infra). If the bill be drawn in the name of a firm, the acceptor cannot object that it was drawn by a single person (Bass v. Clive, 4 M. & S. 15). An acceptance by an executor on account of debts due from his testator is an admission of assets, and will therefore make him personally responsible in case there be no effects of the testator in his hands (semb. King v. Thom, 1 T. R. 487; Ch. Bills, 7th ed.). If the holder of a bill, the acceptance of which *turns out to have been forged by an in-[*509] dorser, deliver it up to him, and receive a fresh bill, he may recover upon the latter, unless there was an agreement between him and such indorser to stifle a prosecution for the forgery (Wallace v. Hardacre, 1 Camp. 45).

As to the Mode of proving Acceptance.] The written acceptance must be proved by evidence of the handwriting (Drew v. Bryer, 12 Law J. 144, C. P., ante, p. 503); if not admitted under a judge's order (R. G. H. T. 4 Will.

IV. r. 1, s. 20; 1 Arch. Pr. 391); or otherwise (see Holt v. Squire, Ry. & M. 282); or, if there be a subscribing witness, by calling him (ante, p. 491), or by the party's admissions (ante, p. 493). If the deft. acknowledges his handwriting, or promises to pay (Jones v. Morgan, 2 Camp. 474), or pays part (Vaughan v. Fuller, 2 Stra. 1246), it is a sufficient admission to dispense with any further proof (Ib., ante, p. 150). In an action on a bill of exchange, alleged to have been accepted by the defts. under the style and firm of A. and Co., an order was made by consent, to admit the handwriting of the acceptance. The notice to admit was as follows:—"Bill of exchange for 121*l.* 10*s.*, drawn by the plt. upon and directed to the defts. as A. and Co., and accepted by B. for the defts. as A. and Co., payable, &c., and indorsed, &c." held, that this admission precluded the defts. from denying the authority of B. to bind the firm of A. and Co. by such acceptance, and was not a mere admission that he signed an acceptance purporting to bind that firm (Wilkes v. Hopkins, 1 C. B. 737). If a party to a bill, on being asked if it be his own handwriting, answer that it is, and will be duly paid; or if he has paid several other bills, accepted in the same handwriting; proof of either of these facts will preclude him afterwards setting up as a defence the forgery of his name; for he has accredited the bill, and induced acceptor to take it (Leach v. Buchanan, 4 Esp. 226; 3 Esp. 60; 1 Marsh. 159). Where, in an action against the acceptor of a bill, his attorney gave a notice to produce all papers relating to a bill described as the bill in question, "accepted by the said deft.," the notice was held to be prima facie evidence of the acceptance (Holt v. Squire, 1 Ry. & M. 282). If the acceptor, on being applied to for payment, desire the party to call again, it will not preclude him from proving the acceptance to be a forgery; otherwise, if he adopted the acceptance by paying bills accepted by the same party, or by acknowledging the handwriting to be his (Barber v. Gingell, 3 Esp. 60; Leach v. Buchanan, 4 Esp. 226; see Griffiths v. Payne, 11 Ad. & E. 131). In the case of a conditional acceptance, if the terms of it be ambiguous, parol evidence may be resorted to, to explain them (Swan v. Cox, 1 Marsh. 179).

If the acceptance of a foreign bill were by parol, it should be proved by calling the witness who heard the drawee accept; and, if the answer or undertaking to accept were given to a clerk, he must be subpoenaed. If the acceptance were by an agent, his authority and handwriting must be proved, and the agent himself is competent to prove the authority. If it be in writing, it should be produced and proved (Johnson v. Mason, 1 Esp. 90). It will not be enough to prove that the deft.'s name was subscribed with the sanction merely of his wife, who usually conducted his business, and signed promissory notes in his name, and applied the proceeds of the bill in payment of his debts (Goldstone v. Tovey, 6 Bing. N. C. 98). The declaration stated that the deft., by T., his agent, accepted; plea, non accepit. It appeared to have been accepted by T. on behalf of the directors of a mining company, of whom the deft. was one: held, no variance (Ferth v. Buckingham, 2 Dowl. N. S. 555).

Agents.*] In an action against a party as acceptor of a bill ac- [*510] cepted in his name by another person, where evidence of a general authority in that person has been given to accept bills in the deft.'s name, an admission by the deft. of liability on another bill so accepted, is good evidence confirmatory of the former (Llewellyn v. Winkworth, 13 M. & W. 598; 14 M. & W. 329).

Acceptance may be proved by any person who has seen the deft. write (Garrills v. Alexander, 4 Esp. 37), or from having corresponded (Gould v. Jones, 1 Bla. 384), or having acted upon letters received from him (Thorpe

v. Gisbourne, 2 C. & P. 91; R. v. Slaney, 5 C. & P. 213); and where a witness had seen the deft. write once, and swore that the acceptance was like his handwriting, but that he could not form any belief upon the subject; held, evidence to go to the jury (Garrills v. Alexander, supra); indeed, all that is required is to swear to the best of his belief (Lewis v. Sappio, M. & M. 39; overruling Powel v. Ford, 2 Stark. 164). The evidence in one case was, that the witness had not seen the party write, but had corresponded with one of that name residing at Plymouth Dock, and the letters produced he believed to be in that person's handwriting; and another witness proved that the deft. was a shipowner, residing at Plymouth Dock, and that there was not any other person of that name there: held, sufficient evidence to go to the jury (Harrington v. Fry, Ry. & M. 90). But where the belief is derived from a mere comparison of hands, it is not evidence: thus, where the plt.'s attorney swore to his belief of the handwriting of the deft., from having seen other papers in the master's office, which the deft.'s attorney admitted to be in deft.'s handwriting, and upon which the witness had acted (Greaves v. Hunter, 2 C. & P. 477; but see contra, Smith v. Sainsbury, ib. 196); nor can the acceptance be compared with other writings, which are admitted to be the deft.'s, even where the comparison is made by one who had seen the deft. write (Strange v. Searle, 1 Esp. 14; Garrills v. Alexander, supra). Where the witness has a document which he has seen the deft. write, he may refresh his memory as to the character of the handwriting (Burr v. Harpur, Holt, 420). But the court or jury may compare the handwriting when the documents are properly in evidence (Griffith v. Williams, 1 C. & J. 47; Saliter v. Barrow, 1 M. & R. 133; and see Allesbrook v. Rouch, 1 Esp. 351). The witness's accuracy cannot be tested by putting into his hand other writings, which are not evidence in the cause (Griffith v. Young, 11 Ad. & E. 322); and should he answer that they are in the deft.'s handwriting, no evidence can be given afterwards with respect to the handwriting of them (Hughes v. Rogers, 8 M. & W. 123).

Proof merely that some person at the house of the drawee said that the bill would be taken up when due, without any evidence of such person's having authority to give the answer, would be insufficient (Sayer v. Kitchen, 1 Esp. 209).

The identity of the deft., as the person who accepted the bill, must be proved. Slight evidence will suffice; but it is not enough merely to prove that a person calling himself by the same name accepted the bill (B. N. P. 171; Middleton v. Sandford, 4 Camp. 34; Parkins v. Hankshaw, 2 Stark. 239). It has, however, been held, that it is not necessary for the plt. under ordinary circumstances, if the handwriting of the acceptor be proved, to give evidence of his identity with the deft. on the record (Roden v. Ryde, 12 Law J., N. S. 276; 7 Jur. 554; Sewell v. Williams, ib.; Sewell v. Evans, 4 Q. B. 626). Where the name was a very common one, it was held necessary (Jones v. Jones, 9 M. & W. 75). So, where the acceptance *was [*511] by that of a mark (Whitelock v. Musgrave, 1 Cr. & M. 511). If the witness speak of the same name and description further evidence of identity must be given (Barber v. Stead, 3 C. B. 946).

Where the acceptor was described as "C. B. Crauford, East India House," proof that the signature was that of a person of the same name, a clerk of the East India House, was held to be sufficient (Greenshields v. Crawford, 9 M. & W. 314). The sufficiency of proof is a question of fact (Ib., per Lord Abinger, C. B.); but whether there be any evidence of identity, one of law (Corfield v. Parsons, 1 Cr. & M. 730).

In an action against several acceptors of a bill, or makers of a note, the handwriting of each must be proved (ante, p. 491; Gray v. Palmer, 1 Esp.

135); one of whom is competent to prove the handwriting of the others (Ib.; York v. Blott, 5 M. & S. 71). An acceptance by one will bind him alone, and not the others (Bayl. B. 52; B. N. P. 279). If the defts. are partners, plt. must prove the partnership at the time of the acceptance (post, "PARTNERS"). If a bill be accepted by one of several partners, proof of the partnership, and the party's handwriting, will be evidence to charge the firm (Mason v. Rumsey, 1 Camp. 384), except it appear that the plt. had notice that the firm would not be bound by the party's acceptance (Gallway v. Smithson, 10 East, 264); or the bill was not accepted for partnership purposes, or that there was covin between the party accepting and the plt. (Skirreff v. Wilks, 1 East, 48; Ridley v. Taylor, 13 East, 175; Green v. Deabin, 2 Stark. 347; Stevens v. Steel, 7 East, 210); and it will not be binding, even though the other partner be a dormant one (Lloyd v. Ashley, 2 C. & P. 138). But where the partner has subscribed in the name of the firm, slightly differing from the real name, it is a question for the jury whether he had authority to do so, or whether he must be taken to have issued the bill on his own account (Faith v. Richmond, 11 Ad. & E. 339); and it seems that no partner has any implied authority to bind in any but the true style of the firm (Kirk v. Blurton, 9 M. & W. 284). But if they be partners in a business, which does not necessarily require the acceptance of bills, and one partner accept in the name of the partnership, or in his own, the other will not be liable unless it appear that that other gave authority, either generally or specially, to accept the particular bill for the partnership; thus, in the case of joint occupiers of a farm (Greenslade v. Dower, 7 B. & C. 635); or where the partners are attorneys (Levy v. Pyne, 1 C. & M. 453). But an acceptance of one partner in the name of the firm, in fraud of the others, will not bind them in the hands of one who was privy to, or had notice of, the fraud (Bayl. B. 180). Where A. and B. who had been partners in trade, took in C., and afterwards accepted a bill in the name of the new firm for a debt due partly by the old and partly by the new firm, in an action by the drawer against the new firm, held, that plt. was entitled to recover only the amount due from the new firm (Wilson v. Bayley, 9 Dowl. 18); and if the trade of the partnership be not of such a nature as necessarily to require the acceptance of bills, the plt. must prove the authority of the partner who accepted it in the same manner as he would in case of the acceptance of an agent by procuration (see Levy v. Pyne, 1 C. & M. 453; Greenslade v. Dower, 7 B. & C. 653). Indorsee against indorser; allegation that the bill was accepted, "payable at T. S.'s, King's Yard, Whitechapel, and not elsewhere;" the latter words were not on the acceptance: held, a variance, although there was no traverse of the acceptance (Higgins v. Nichols, 7 Dowl. 551; see Blake v. Bowman, 4 Sc. N. R. 617; 1 Dowl. N. S. 697). After one of two partners has become bankrupt, the solvent one may *bind the firm by accepting bills in the hands of a bona fide indorsee for a debt previously due from the firm [*512] (Ex parte Robinson, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 18). The director of a joint-stock company has no implied authority to accept bills of exchange on the part of the directors of the company, such company not being a trading partnership (Bramah v. Roberts, 3 Bing. N. C. 972; Dickinson v. Valpy, 10 B. & C. 128; see "PUBLIC COMPANIES"); and where the declaration states the acceptance to be by A., B., and C., which A. and B. deny, and C. allows judgment to go by default, if A. and B. prove that the bill was drawn on the directors of a company, and accepted by them as such, but only signed by C. as a manager, and not as a director, they will be entitled to a verdict (Bult v. Morrell, 12 Ad. & E. 745). The admission of a partner concerning a partnership transaction, though made after dissolution, is sufficient evidence to charge the firm (Wood v. Braddick, 1 Taunt. 104); and, after the partnership has been established, an admission by one partner, in an answer to a bill filed, will bind the firm (Grant v. Jackson, Pea. 268; Hodenpyl v. Vingerhoed, Ch. Bills, 489, 5th ed.; 2 Phil. Ev. 26); but, where there is no partnership, an admission by one party to a bill will not bind the other (Gray v. Palmers, 1 Esp. 135). In an action against three persons as acceptors of a bill, the circumstance of two of them having been outlawed, will not dispense with proof of their joint liability, although the deft., who alone pleaded to the action, was in justice liable to pay the debt, (Skirreff v. Wilks, 1 East, 48); but an admission by one partner of his partnership with his co-defts., who had been outlawed, was sufficient proof of the partnership as against him (Sangster v. Mazzarredo, 1 Stark. 161). In an action against three partners, as drawers of a bill of exchange, drawn by an agent of the firm upon one of the partners, it was held that the acceptance by the drawer was evidence against the three partners of the bill having been regularly drawn (Porthouse v. Parker, 1 Camp. 82). The admission of one of several makers of a promissory note, is sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations in a separate action against the others (Ch. Bills, 374). Where one of two defts., makers of a note, suffers judgment by default, his signature must be proved on the trial of the other (Ch. Bills, 381, n. g).

In an action by an executor against the acceptor of a bill, on a promise laid to the testator, the plt. must prove that the bill was accepted in the testator's lifetime (Anon. 12 Mod. 447; Sarel v. Whine, 3 East, 409).

Proof of Presentment.] In an action against the acceptor, if the acceptance is a general one, as where no place is specified for payment, or where a particular place is mentioned, without any further expression (Bayl. B. 157), it is not necessary to prove presentment (Turner v. Hayden, 4 B. & C. 1), even though such presentment has been unnecessarily averred (Freeman v. Rennell, cor. Abbott, C. J., May, 1826; cited Ch. Bills, 402; Fayle v. Bird, 6 B. & C. 531); and though the acceptor has sustained damage from the want of presentment (Turner v. Hayden, supra; Ch. Bills, 7th ed. 192); and an acceptor of a bill payable generally is not discharged, though the holder neglect to present it for three or four years (Farquhar v. Southey, 2 C. & P. 497; S. C. 1 M. & M. 14; Turner v. Hayden, supra; and see Williams v. Waring, 10 B. & C. 2). But, if the acceptance be a qualified one, payable at a particular place only, and not otherwise or elsewhere, under 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78, or if it be made payable in the body of it at a particular place, and the contract is thereby qualified, the plt. must prove that it was *presented at the place specified in the acceptance [*513] (Rowe v. Young, 2 B. & B. 165; Lyon v. Walls, 9 Bing. 660); and a demand at such particular place is a demand on the acceptor (Saunderson v. Judge, H. Bl. 509; De Bergareche v. Pillin, 3 Bing. 476). It is not necessary that a bill so accepted at a place named, should be presented there on the very day it becomes due, provided the money is not lost by such neglect (Rhodes v. Gent, 5 B. & A. 244); and although a presentment must be proved, yet it is not necessary to show a notice of dishonour (Burrell v. Lonsdale, coram Littledale, 1826; Rose. Ev. 125). Where a promissory note is expressed on the face of it to be payable at a particular place, it is necessary to aver and prove presentment there (Emblin v. Dartnell, 1 D. & L. 1010; 12 M. & W. 830). See further, as to the mode of, and time for presenting a bill for payment, post.

Proof under Common Counts.] As to this, see ante, p. 495.

Proof in Answer to Defence.] As to this, see the defences, post.

DRAWER, WHO IS NOT PAYEE, AGAINST ACCEPTOR.

Proof of Return and Payment of the Bill.] When the drawer of a bill, payable to the order of a third person, and returned to and taken up by him, sues the acceptor, he must, if denied, prove the acceptance, as ante, 493, 503; and also the presentment to the deft. and his refusal to pay, which may be done by calling the person who presented the bill, or else by proving a promise by the deft. to pay, as that will dispense with proof of the presentment; as well as the return to him, and his payment of the bill, in order to show that the right of action is vested in him (Simons v. Parminster, 1 Wils. 185). The payment of the bill may be proved by the payee or indorsee, who returned the bill; but plt. must adduce some direct evidence of payment by him, as a general receipt, on the back of the bill, is prima facie evidence of its having been paid by the acceptor, and will not of itself be evidence of payment by the drawer, though it is produced by him (Scholey v. Walsby, Pea. 24; Pfiel v. Vanbatenberg, 2 Camp. 439).

Proof of Acceptance.] This is necessary, as in other actions against acceptors, and as to which see ante, p. 503. It is not necessary to prove that the acceptor had effects in hand, as the acceptance is itself prima facie evidence that the acceptor received value from the drawer (Veré v. Lewis, 3 T. R. 183). The bankruptcy of the acceptor is no defence against the drawer, who has paid the bill since the bankruptcy (Mead v. Braham, 3 M. & S. 91).

PAYEE, WHO IS NOT DRAWER, AGAINST ACCEPTOR.

The evidence in this case will be similar to that required in an action by the drawer, who is also payee, against acceptor (ante, p. 503). If a bill or note, however, be payable to the firm of A. B. and Co., and A. B. and C. D. sue thereon, they must prove that they were, at the time the bill or note was given, the component members of such firm (Ch. Bills, 389).

*INDORSEE AGAINST ACCEPTOR.

[*514]

Proof of Defendant's Acceptance.] If the deft. by his plea put it in issue, the plt. must prove the acceptance which creates deft.'s liability, as ante, p. 503. Assumpsit on a bill payable to the order of C. Plea, that, before the making and accepting of the bill, C., being a trader, became and was adjudged bankrupt, and that the assignees of his estate and effects were appointed; that C. had never obtained his certificate; that the bill was made and accepted after the bankruptcy of C., and that, after the commencement of this suit, the assignees required deft. to pay to them the said bill of exchange, by reason whereof they were entitled to the amount of the bill: held, that the deft. was estopped, by his acceptance of the bill payable to the order of C. from saying that C. was incapable of transferring the bill by indorsement (Braithwaite v. Gardner, 10 Jur. 591, Q. B.).

In an action on a bill of exchange by second indorsee against acceptor, the deft. pleaded that he accepted for the accommodation of the drawer and first indorsee, upon condition that the same might be negotiated for their use only, before the same became due, and not afterwards; and that the bill was indorsed to the plt. without the consent, privity, or default of the deft., after the same became due; and that the plt. did not become the holder of, or entitled to the bill until after it so became due. On motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, held, a bad plea (Carruthers v. West, 10 Law T. 160, Q. B.).

Declaration in assumpsit stated that E. drew a bill of exchange on defts., payable to order of O.; that defts. accepted, that O. indorsed to "The Treasurer-General of the Royal Treasury of Portugal," and that C., then being the treasurer-general as aforesaid, indorsed to plt. Pleas—2. That the said treasurer-general of the Royal Treasury of Portugal did not indorse to plt. and issue thereon. 3. That the said treasurer-general by whom the indorsements were alleged to have been made, at the time when he indorsed, was not such treasurer-general as was designated and intended by the indorsement of O., but minister of a hostile government, and had no title or authority to indorse. Replication, that the treasurer-general who indorsed was the treasurer-general designated (not adding, at the time, &c.), and issue thereon. It was proved that the bills were indorsed for the use of M., then king of Portugal, and received by C., being then, and at the time of the first indorsement, his treasurer; but that, after M.'s government had been subverted by a hostile one, and C. removed from office, C. indorsed: held, that C., by the indorsement and delivery to himself, acquired an absolute title to the bills, and a power to indorse, which could not be qualified by any intention of O. not expressed in the indorsement, even if such qualification could be annexed to an indorsement at all, and semble, that it could not. And that it was immaterial whether C. was treasurer-general at the time of his endorsing over or not; and that the words "at the time," &c., were therefore properly omitted from the issue taken (Soares v. Glyn, 8 Q. B. 24).

In assumpsit by indorsee against acceptor, if it appear that there are words not in the acceptor's handwriting, making the bill payable at a particular place, it is incumbent on the plt. to show that the words were written by the acceptor's authority, and it seems that an addition of such words is a material alteration of a bill, since and notwithstanding the passing of the stat. 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 78 (Desbrow v. Weatherby, 6 C. & P. 758; 1 Moo. & R. 438).

Count on a bill of exchange drawn by C. W., payable to her order, accepted by the deft., and indorsed by C. W. to the plt. Plea, that C. W., before and at the time of the indorsement, was and still is the wife of one E. W., and that he never authorized or consented to the indorsement by her: held, that the plea was bad, on the principle that a person shall not dispute the power of another to indorse an instrument, when he asserts by the instrument that the other has such power (Smith v. Marsack, 12 Jur. 1050; C. P.; 6 C. B. 486; see Halifax v. Lye, 18 Law J. 197, C. P.).

Proof of Drawing.] The handwriting of the drawer to the drawing is considered as admitted by the acceptance, and need not be [* 515] *proved, and cannot be contradicted by the deft.; and the circumstance of its having been forged constitutes no defence, unless it appear the bill was accepted before the drawee, deft., had sight of the bill; in which case, it appears, the drawer's handwriting must be proved (Tree v. Hawkins, Holt, C. 550; Pea. Ev. 248; sed quere; see Ch. Bills, 389, n. a).

Proof of Indorsement, when Necessary.] In an action against the acceptor of a bill, all the indorsements stated, though some may have been unnecessarily so, must be proved, if denied (Bayl. B. 476; Waynam v. Bend, 1 Camp. 175; Bosanquet v. Alanson, infra; Critchlow v. Parry, 2 Camp. 182; Ch. Bills, 391; see ante, p. 466). None of the indorsements are admitted by the acceptance (Smith v. Chester, 1 T. R. 654; Cooper v. Lindo, 1 Selw. N. P. 380); and if the bill be negotiable in the first instance only by indorsement, the indorsee plt. must prove the bill was indorsed by the person to whose order it was intended to be made payable (Ib.; McFerson v. Thoytes, Pea. 20); and such first indorsement must be proved, though the bill be payable to the drawer's own order, and indorsed by him (Ib.; Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 Esp. 43). Where the first indorsement is in full, directing the acceptor to pay the bill to a certain person, who has indorsed the same to plt., he must, in an action against the drawer or acceptor, prove that person's indorsement (Potts v. Read, 6 Esp. 57; Mead v. Young, 4 T. R. 28; Ch. Bills, 186, 187). Even the circumstance of the deft.'s having accepted the bill after it was indorsed, does not dispense with the proof of such indorsement (Ib.; Robinson v. Barrow, 7 Taunt. 455; Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 Esp. 43; Smith v. Chester, supra). And, where the bill was shown to the drawer, with the name of the payee indorsed on it, and the drawer objected to the want of consideration only, it was held not to supersede the necessity of proving the indorser's handwriting (Duncan v. Scott, 1 Camp. 100; see also Sidford v. Chambers, 1 Stark. 326). And, though the drawee deft., by the terms of his acceptance, make it payable at a banker's, in an action by the latter, as for money paid for deft.'s use, the first indorser's handwriting must be proved (Foster v. Clement, 2 Camp. 17). An offer to pay a bill, with certain names on it, is sufficient admission of the plt.'s title to dispense with proof of each indorser's handwriting (Bosanquet v. Anderson, supra). If the indorser admit his handwriting it is not evidence of indorsement in an action against the acceptor (Hemmings v. Robinson, Barnes, 426; but see Maddocks v. Hankey, 2 Esp. 647).

Where the bill is payable to the order of a fictitious person, proof that the deft. knew of that circumstance when he accepted the bill, will dispense with the proof of the supposed indorser's handwriting (Ch. Bills, 64). Where a bill is drawn in the name of a fictitious person, payable to the order of the drawer, the acceptor is considered as undertaking to pay to the order of the person who signed as the drawer, and therefore an indorsee may bring evidence to show that the signature of the supposed drawer to the bill and to the indorsement are in the same handwriting (Cooper v. Meyer, 10 B. & C. 468).

With respect to the proof of indorsements subsequent to the first, if the first indorsement was in blank, it will be unnecessary, in any action, to state or to prove any of the subsequent indorsements, although they were in full (Walwyn v. St. Quintin, 1 B. & P. 658; Charters v. Bell, 4 Esp. 210; Smith v. Clarke, 1 Esp. 180); they may be struck out from the bill at the time of the trial: if, however, they be stated in the declaration they must be proved if denied (Smith v. Chester, 1 T. R. 654; Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 Esp. 43; Cocks v. Borrodaile, Ch. Bills, 392, 7th ed.). Indorsements may be struck out *even after the bill has been read in evi- [*516] dence, and objected to on the ground of omission to state them in the declaration (Mayor v. Jadis, 1 M. & R. 247). By striking out intermediate indorsements, the plt. loses the security of these indorsements. The indorsement must be in writing (Moxon v. Pulling, supra); if written in pencil it will suffice (Geary v. Thisick, 5 B. & C. 234).

If the indorsement be by procuracion, the indorsement, as well as the authority to make it, must be proved (Robinson v. Yarrow, 7 Taunt. 455;

S. C. 1 Moo. 150). An authority to draw does not imply an authority to indorse. It is, however, a question for the jury. The payees of a bill authorized their clerk to draw bills and checks for them, and in one instance to indorse a bill, and in two others he indorsed bills that had been discounted by the payees at their bankers': held, the jury were warranted in finding a general authority to the clerk to indorse (Prescott v. Flynn, 9 Bing. 19). Nor has a farm bailiff, who merely receives and pays money for his principal, any authority to indorse bills in his name (Davidson v. Stanley, 2 Man. & G. 721). An indorsement by a feme covert, of a bill payable to her order, conveys no interest, although circumstances may raise a presumption that she has authority to indorse in her husband's name (Barlow v. Bishop, 1 East, 432); unless, indeed, the jury can infer that she had authority so to indorse, which they may from a promise by the husband to pay the bill (Ib. 434; Cotes v. Davis, 1 Camp. 485; Prince v. Brunatte, 1 Bing. N. C. 435). A note payable to a feme sole, or order, who afterwards marries, cannot be indorsed by her during coverture (Conner v. Martin, 3 Wils. 5). An indorsement by a married woman, with her husband's consent, of a bill drawn by her, will pass the interest to the indorsee (Prestwick v. Marshall, 5 Moo. & P. 513; 7 Bing. 565; post, "PRINCIPAL AND AGENT").

If the bill or note be payable to the order of several persons, not in partnership, the right to transfer is in all collectively, and they must all indorse the bill (Bayl. B. 57); and the handwriting of each must be proved (Carvick v. Pickery, Doug. 663, n.: and, per Lord Ellenborough, Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 East, 57); and though it was held, in a case at N. P., that an acceptance after the indorsement by one of the payees admitted the regularity of the indorsement (Jones v. Radford, 1 Camp. 83) this decision seems questionable (Ch. Bills, 393; Bosanquet v. Anderson, supra). In an action by the indorsee against the acceptor, where there was no actual proof of the handwriting of one of the indorsers, but it appeared that the indorsement was upon the bill when the deft. accepted it, and that he promised to pay it, it was left to the jury, who found for the plt., and the court refused a new trial, and thought it a question for the jury, whether the acceptance and promise did not amount to an admission, that the name of every indorser was authentic (Hankey v. Wilson, Say, 223). An offer made by the acceptor to pay the bill with certain names on it, is a sufficient admission to supersede the necessity of proving the different indorsements (Lidford v. Chambers, 1 Stark. 326; Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 Esp. 43).

If the bill be payable to the order of several persons in partnership, it is in general necessary to prove the partnership and handwriting of some member of the firm, or of an agent acting in their name (Carvick v. Vickery, supra). Where several persons sue as indorsees of a bill of exchange, if the bill be indorsed in blank, that is, generally, the holders, whoever they may be, are, as such, entitled to recover, and there is no necessity for their proving that they were in partnership together, or that the bill was indorsed or delivered to them jointly (Rordasz v. Leach, 1 Stark. 448; Ord v. Portal, 3 Camp. 239; Atwood v. Rattenbury, 6 Moo. 579); but, *when a bill is indorsed specially, the promise being only to pay a [*517] certain firm, strict evidence must be given that the firm consists of the persons who are plts. (lb.). And, if a note be payable to a firm of A. B. and Co., and A. B. and C. D. sue thereon, they must prove that they were the component members of the firm at the time the note was given (Waters v. Paynter, cited Ch. Bills, 389). Where plts. sue in a particular capacity, they must show that the bill was indorsed to them in that character (Bernasconi v. Argyle (Duke), 3 C. & P. 29). Where a bill of exchange is, by the direction of the payee, indorsed in blank, and delivered to A. B.

and Co., who are bankers, on the account of the estate of an insolvent, which is vested in trustees for the benefit of his creditors, A. and B., two of the members of the firm, and also trustees, cannot, conjointly with a third trustee, who is not a member of the firm, maintain an action against the indorser, without some evidence of the transfer of the bill to them, as trustees, by the firm, by delivery or otherwise (Machell v. Kinnear, 1 Stark. 499). On the dissolution of a partnership, the power given to one of the partners to receive and pay debts, does not authorize him to indorse and pay a bill in the name of the partnership (Kilgour v. Finlayson, 1 H. Bl. 155; Lacy v. Woolcott, 2 D. & R. 458). But a retiring partner may give to his late partners parol authority to indorse existing securities, and such authority may be inferred from circumstances (Smith v. Winter, 4 M. & W. 454). In proving partnership, the plt.'s counsel may suggest to the witness the names of the firm (Acerro v. Petroni, 1 Stark. 100). The deft. may show, that though the indorsement be in blank, it was never delivered to the plt. as indorsee, but only as agent for a particular purpose (Adams v. Jones, 12 Ad. & E. 455); or that it had been obtained by fraud from the real holder (Marston v. Allen, 8 M. & W. 494). Deft., however, cannot show on this traverse that a prior indorsement was fraudulent, if plt. be a bona fide holder for value (Hayes v. Caulfield, 5 Q. B. 81). As by the law of France an indorsement in blank does not transfer any property in a bill, the holder of a bill drawn in that country, and indorsed there in blank, cannot recover against the acceptor in the courts in this country (Timbey v. Vignier, 1 Bing. N. C. 151; 4 Moo. & S. 595; 6 C. & P. 25). An indorsement in blank by the maker, and a delivery by his executor to the plt. is no indorsement to the plt. so as to give him a title to sue (Bromage v. Lloyd, 1 Exch. 32).

Indorsement by Procuration—Agents.] An indorsement "per procura-tion," imports that the indorser acts under a special authority; and the person who takes a bill so indorsed does it at his own risk: he is bound to satisfy himself as to the extent of that authority (Alexander v. McKenzie, 13 Jur. 346; 18 Law J. 94, C. P.). A power of attorney having been given by the payee of notes, to agents, empowering them to sell, indorse, and assign, they, under the power, indorsed the notes to a bank, by way of security for a loan to them. The agents failed: held, that the transaction was valid, and that the payee could not recover from the bank (Bengal (Bank of) v. McLeod, 13 Jur. 945, P. C.).

A bill of exchange, having been indorsed [in blank, was afterwards indorsed by the deft. specially to "Barber and Walker and Co." The plts., who carried on business under the respective firms of "Barber and Walker and Co.," and "The Eastwood Company," indorsed the bill by the name of "The Eastwood Company." The bill was duly presented, but payment refused for want of an indorsement by "Barber and Walker and Co.:" held, that the bill, having been indorsed in blank, its negotiability could not afterwards be restrained by a special indorsement; and that the presentment was such as to render the deft. liable on his indorsement to the plts. (Walker v. McDonald, 2 Exch. 527).

Mode of Proof of Indorsements.] The indorsements should be proved by evidence of the handwriting of the parties (ante, 491), and the indorser may be called for that purpose (Richardson v. Allan, 2 Stark. 334; Hobson v. Rich, Ch. Bills, 396); as also to prove the consideration given by the plt.; and he may be called after other witnesses for the plt. have negatived it (ib.) If there was a subscribing witness to the indorsement, he should be called (Stone v. Metcalf, 1 Stark. 53). If the indorsement have been by procuration, it must be proved, as ante, p. 466.

A promise by deft. to pay (Jones v. Morgan, 2 Camp. 474; Lundie v. Robertson, 7 East, 231; Hankey v. Wilson, Say. 223; Hodge v. Hills, 3 Camp. 463); or offer to renew (Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 Esp. 43), made to the indorsee, is a sufficient admission to dispense with proof of the indorsement (Sidford v. Chambers, 1 Stark. 326; ante, 466, 491). An admission by the indorser himself of his indorsement, will not suffice (Bosanquet v. Anderson, 6 Esp. 43; Sidford v. Chambers, 1 Stark. 326). The payment of money into court generally, on the whole declaration, amounts to an admission of the indorsement, and dispenses with the necessity of proving it (Gutteridge v. Smith, *2 H. Bl. 374), after proving the payment [*518] into court (Israel v. Benjamin, 3 Camp. 40. See "RULE OF COURT"). If the payee of a bill deliver it with the name indorsed upon it to another, no proof is required of the handwriting of the indorsement (Glover v. Thomson, Ry. & M. 443).

A bill is presumed to be issued when dated; but the date of an indorsement, when material, must be proved, either directly, or by circumstances (Anderson v. Weston, 6 Bing. N. C. 296). A bill was dated before the dissolution of a partnership, but the indorsement was not dated, and a question arose, whether the indorsement was before or after the dissolution; and it was held that this was a question for the jury, and that, as it was drawn payable to the partnership, the jury might infer that it was indorsed shortly after the drawing (Anderson v. Weston, 6 Bing. N. C. 296).

Where the deft. pleaded that the bill was drawn by a partner, but not for partnership purposes, and was indorsed to the plt. after it became due, and the plt. replied that it was not indorsed after it became due, but was indorsed to and taken and received by him before it became due: held, sufficient to put in the bill, and not necessary that the plt. should show that the bill was indorsed to him before it became due (Parkin v. Moon, 7 C. & P. 408).

Identity.] In general, it is unnecessary to prove the identity of the persons by whom the indorsements were made; and proof that the bills were indorsed by a person of the same name as the person intended, will, prima facie, suffice (Bulkeley v. Butler, 2 B. & C. 444; Mead v. Young, 4 T. R. 28). But, if there be any doubt whether the transfer were made by the proper party, the witness who is to prove the indorsement, or some other person, should be prepared to prove the identity of the party (Ch. Bills, 391). In an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, whereof E. S. was the payee, the plt. proved, that a person, calling himself E. S. came to C., having in his possession the bill in question, and also a letter of introduction (proved to be genuine), which was expressed to be given to a person introduced to the writer as E. S., and also another bill of exchange, drawn by the writer. The bearer of these documents, after remaining ten days at C., during which time he daily visited the plt., indorsed to him the bill in question, and received value for it, and also a letter of credit. Held, that this was evidence of the identity of this person with E. S., the payee of the bill, and, in the absence of any evidence, an answer sufficient to justify a verdict for the plt. (Bulkeley v. Butler, 2 B. & C. 434). Proof of indorsement by a person who professed to be and called himself by the name of the indorser and drawer, and whose handwriting resembled that on the bill, is evidence of the identity as against the acceptor (Smith v. Money Penny, 2 M. & R. 317).

INDORSEE AGAINST DRAWER.

The declaration in an action between these parties alleges as well the indorsement to the payee as subsequent ones, and also the usual allegations, in an action between the payee and drawer: it will be necessary to prove the same facts as in an action between these parties, together with the indorsements.

Proof of Drawing the Bill.] Plt. must produce and prove the bill, as ante, 489. The deft.'s handwriting to the drawing must be *proved if traversed (ante, 491); and, as to proof when drawn by an agent, [*519] or partnership, see ante, 492).

Proof of Indorsement.] The plt. must prove his title by evidence of the indorsement of the deft. or the payee; and, as to such proof, see ante, 466, et seq.

Proof of Acceptance.] In an action against the drawer or indorser, for default of payment by the drawee, his acceptance of the bill need not be proved, and this, although it has been stated unnecessarily in the declaration (Tanner v. Bean, 4 B. & C. 312; S. C. 6 D. & R. 338. overruling Jones v. Morgan, 2 Camp. 474).

Proof of Presentment for Acceptance, and Default of Acceptance.] See ante, p. 462, 472.] When a bill is payable at so many days after sight, the plt. must prove a presentment for acceptance (O'Keefe v. Dunn, 1 Marsh. 616; 6 Taunt. 305; S. C. 5 M. & S. 28; Bayl. B. 182). But, in other cases, it is sufficient to prove a presentment for payment when the bill becomes due, and a refusal to pay (B. N. P. 269; 3 East, 483; Ch. Bills, 405). If the bill has been refused acceptance, though it was unnecessary to present it (Ib.), the holder cannot, in general, recover, unless he give notice, &c. (see post, p. 521).

No certain time is fixed within which a presentment for acceptance of a bill payable at sight, or so many days after sight, must be made; but it should be made with due diligence, and within a reasonable time (Muilman v. D'Eguino, 2 H. Bl. 565; Fry v. Hill, 7 Taunt. 397). What shall be deemed a reasonable time must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case: keeping it a whole day, exclusive of the day of receiving it without negotiating it, or sending it for acceptance, is not necessarily an unreasonable delay (Fry v. Hill, supra). No delay warranted by the common course of business is improper; nor is any delay which is occasioned by keeping the bill in circulation at a distance from the place where it is payable; but a delay by locking it up for any length of time is (Muilman v. D'Eguino, supra). If a bill payable abroad at a certain time after sight is taken in a course of negotiation, it is not necessary to send it by the first opportunity to the place where it is payable (Ib.). Upon a presentment for acceptance, the bill should be left with the drawee twenty-four hours, unless, in the interim, he either accept or declares a resolution not to accept (Ld. Raym. 281; Bayl. B. 228). The reasonableness of the time appears to be a mixed question of fact and law (Darbishire v. Parker, 6 East, 3; Shute v. Robins, Moo. & M. 133; Mellish v. Rawdon, 9 Bing. 423); though in Fry v. Hill and Muilman v. D'Eguino, it was left to the jury. The question in these cases is, whether looking at the interest and situation of both holder and drawer, the former has been guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting the bill for acceptance, or putting it into circulation (Mellish v. Rawdon, supra). A bill drawn at one month after sight on London was delivered at Windsor on the 9th to the plt., who presented it on the 12th; the jury found a verdict for him, and the court refused to disturb it (Fry v. Hill, supra).

Lord Tenterden has drawn a distinction between bills payable after sight, which are drawn by country bankers on their correspondents in London, his lordship being of opinion, that such bills do not require immediate presentment, but may be retained by the holders for the purpose of using them for a moderate time, as part of the circulating medium of the country (Shute v. Robins, supra).

When bills drawn here upon India, dated 5th. March, were on [*520] *that day purchased by the plt. for a house in Paris, and on the 30th April he sent them to India, which they reached on the 3rd October, and on the 5th were presented to the drawee for acceptance, who, being from home, gave no answer until the 17th, when he refused to accept them; the case was left to the jury, Eyre, C. J., expressing his opinion that they were sent to India in time, and were there presented in time: and the jury found accordingly (Muilman v. D'Eguino, supra). A bill drawn in London upon Lisbon, at 31 days after sight, was sent by the deft. in Paris to the plt. on the 12th May, who sent it to a house at Genoa, who negotiated it. It was presented for acceptance on the 22nd of August, but refused; the deft. insisted that it should have been sent direct to Lisbon for acceptance; but the judge held otherwise, and the jury said that such a bill might be sent round the world before presentment, and found a verdict for the plt. (Goupy v. Harden, 7 Taunt. 159). Where the plt. purchased of the deft. in the London market a foreign bill, drawn by himself upon a merchant at Rio Janeiro, but in consequence of the exchange falling immediately after, the plt. kept the bill, and in five months after sold it to another; when the bill was presented it was refused, the drawee having become bankrupt, and was protested, returned, and taken up by the plt. It was proved that foreign bills were bought and sold in the market for speculation, and it must have been known to the deft.; some witnesses stated that they conceived the bill should have been forwarded by the first or second packet after the receipt of it, whilst, on the other hand, others stated that such bills were usually kept without being forwarded for acceptance, so long as it suited the convenience of the holder; but that, if the drawer wished to limit the period of his responsibility, he either sent one part forward for his acceptance, and brought the other to the market for sale, with the time indorsed on it at which the first one had been forwarded, or he made it the subject of express stipulation with the purchaser that the bill should be sent forward for acceptance within a limited time; but all the witnesses said, that if the bill had been once circulated, it might be sent to any part of the world, and kept a reasonable time by each successive holder. The judge told the jury that they were to determine upon the evidence before them, whether there had been unreasonable delay in the plt. in sending the bill forward for acceptance, or putting it into circulation, and that they must take into their consideration the situation and interests, not merely of the drawer or holder, but of both: the jury found for the plt., and the court held that the question had been properly left to them, and that their attention was properly not confined as to whether due diligence had been used by the plt. with reference to the interest of the deft. only (Meluish v. Rawdon, 9 Bing. 416).

But in Graham v. Straker (4 M. & W. 721), the court held, that the jury had properly found that the bill had not been presented for acceptance within a reasonable time; in that case, it appeared that a bill drawn in duplicate on the 12th of August, at C., in Newfoundland, on a house in England, at 90 days after sight, for the freight of a vessel from Liverpool to C., was not presented for acceptance until the 16th of November; that C. was only 20 miles from St. John's, with a daily communication between them, and that there was a post-office packet from St. John's to England three times a week; but the delay was not explained.

A presentment for acceptance should be made at a seasonable time, and if, by the known custom of any place, bills and notes are only payable within limited hours, a presentment there out of those hours is unreasonable; and so is a presentment out of the hours of *business to a person of a particular description, as a banker, in a place where, by the [*521] known custom of that place, all persons of his description begin and leave off business at stated hours (Parker v. Gordon, 7 East, 385; Elford v. Teed, 1 M. & S. 28). But, to a drawee not so circumstanced, eight o'clock in the evening is not an unseasonable hour for making a presentment (Barclay v. Bailey, 2 Camp. 527; Morgan v. Davison, 1 Stark. 114, post), nor half-past seven o'clock, though no one is there (Wilkins v. Jadis, 2 B. & Ad. 188). And no objection can be made to a presentment on the ground of its being at an unseasonable hour, if a person is stationed there at the time to give an answer (Garnett v. Woodcock, 1 Stark. 476; Henry v. Lee, 2 Chit. Rep. 124; see Whittaker v. England (Bank of), 1 C. M. & R. 744). Therefore, a presentment at a banker's out of the usual hours will be unobjectionable, if the banker, or any agent on his behalf, is there at the time of such presentment (Ib.; Bayl. B. 180). A presentment to a banker's clerk at the clearing-house is a presentment at the banker's (Reynolds v. Chittle, 2 Camp. 596; Harris v. Packer, 3 Tyrw. 370, n.). A neglect to make a presentment in proper time may be excused by illness, or by the circumstance of war having been declared, or from the political state of the country, or by other reasonable cause or accident not attributable to the laches or misconduct of the holder (Ch. Bills, 163).

Where proof of presentment for acceptance is necessary, it should be shown that such presentment was made to the drawee himself; or to his authorized agent (Check v. Roper, 5 Esp. 175; Brown v. McDermott, ib. 265). The bill may be left with him twenty-four hours, unless, in the interim, he refuse to accept (see Ingram v. Forster, 2 Sm. 243; Com. Dig. Merchant, F, 6; Bellasis v. Hester, 1 Ld. Raym. 281); or unless, in such interim, a post go out (Ib.; Mar. 62). If the drawee has left the kingdom, a presentment at his house will suffice (Cromwell v. Hyrison, 2 Esp. 511; 4 M. & S. 48); unless he have a known agent, when it should be presented to him (Ib.; 2 Taunt. 206). On the death of the drawee, the bill should be presented to his personal representatives, if they live within a reasonable distance; if there be none, at the house of the deceased (Molloy, b. 2, c. 10, s. 34; Ch. Bills, 5th ed. 317). If the drawee has absconded, or cannot be found at the place addressed to him, the bill is dishonoured, and, upon due notice given, the drawer and other parties may sue (infra; 1 Ld. Raym. 743); but a mere removal of the drawee, without diligent and continued search to find out where he has gone, will not be deemed a default of acceptance. Plt. must show that every possible inquiry was made (Collins v. Butler, Stra. 1087; Gow, 81). See further, as to what will excuse a presentment, post, p. 522. It is sufficient for the plt. to show that the drawee refused to accept the bill generally, or according to the tenor of the bill (Boehm v. Garcias, 1 Camp. 425, n.). It will not suffice to show that the bill was presented to some person on the drawee's premises who refused to accept it, without connecting that person with the drawee (Check v. Roper, 5 Esp. 175); unless there be no one else on the premises where the acceptor is described as living (Brown v. McDermott, ib. 265). The refusal may be proved by a person who presented the bill for acceptance.

Notice of Default of Acceptance.] If a bill, whether it were necessary to present it or not, have been presented for acceptance, and the drawee have refused acceptance, or made a conditional, partial, or varying one, a notice of that fact should be proved to have been given, within a reasonable time after, to the persons to whom the *holder means to resort for payment, or they will be discharged (Bridges v. Berry, 3 Taunt. 130; Rucker v. Hiller, 16 East, 43; Ch. Bills, 197; Blesard v. Hirst, 5 Burr. 2670; Goodall v. Dolby, 1 T. R. 712; Orr v. Maginnis, 7 East, 359); and in such case, it will not suffice for the holder to wait till the time mentioned in the bill for payment has elapsed, and then to give notice of non-acceptance as well as non-payment (Roscow v. Hardy, 2 Camp. 458; S. C. 12 East, 434; Ch. Bills, 197): though the drawer is not discharged by want of notice where the bill has passed into the hands of a bona fide indorsee for value who has no notice of dishonour (Dunn v. O'Keefe, 5 M. & S. 282). If no notice, or an insufficient one be given, and an indorser, through ignorance of the fact pay the amount of the bill to the holder, this does not revive the liability of the previous indorser or drawer (Roscow v. Hardy, supra). A bona fide holder, however, to whom a bill has been transferred after a refusal to accept, is not affected by the neglect of any previous holder in giving notice of that fact (Crossly v. Han, 13 East, 498). As to the mode of giving a notice of dishonour (post, p. 534). A want of effects of the drawer in the drawee's hands, at the time of the making of the bill, till presentment and dishonour, will excuse the want of a notice of dishonour (and see further, infra). The bill being on a wrong stamp will also excuse it (4 Taunt. 288); and the drawer may, by his conduct or agreement, dispense with it. And see further as to what will do so, post, p. 523. As to what is a waiver of presentment and notice, post, p. 524.

Protest for Default of Acceptance.] Whenever notice of non-acceptance of a foreign bill is necessary, a protest is so likewise (Rogers v. Stephens, 2 T. R. 713). The presentment of a foreign bill in this country must be proved as if it were an inland bill, and the protest is not evidence of it (Chesman v. Noyes, 4 Camp. 129; and see further as to proof of protest, post, p. 527). By 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, s. 4, inland bills of 5*l.*, and upwards, may be protested for non-acceptance (and see, post).

Presentment for Payment.] When the drawer is sued for default of payment of the bill by the drawee or acceptor, a presentment for such payment must be proved, and that at the time when the bill fell due, according to the time specified in the bill, or, if no such time be specified, then within a reasonable time after receipt of the bill (Poth. Pl. 129; Cowley v. Dunlop, 7 T. R. 581; Tassell v. Lewis, 1 Ld. Raym. 743; Bayl. B. 198; Cocks v. Masterman, 9 B. & C. 902). A neglect to do this discharges the drawer or indorsers, whose implied contracts are to pay only on default of the drawee (2 Burr. 669); and it discharges them, not only from payment of the bill, but even from the original consideration for indorsing it (Ch. Bills, 245).

Proof of Excuse of Presentment for Payment.] Evidence in excuse for non-presentment is inadmissible when due presentment is traversed (Burgh v. Legg, 5 M. & W. 421). Where, therefore, a presentment for payment is excused, it must be specially averred, and cannot be shown upon an issue joined upon presentment, (ante, p. 469). When issue is joined on the want of effects in the drawee's hands, the required proof will be sufficiently indicated by the terms of the averment in the declaration. In order to excuse the presentment on the day the bill becomes due it suffices to show that the drawee had not effects of the drawer in his hand from the time of drawing the bill to the time it became due *(Cory v. Scott, 3 B. & [*523] A. 619; Claridge v. Dalton, 4 M. & S. 229; 12 East, 171; Leach v. Hewitt, 4 Taunt. 733; Perry v. Parker, 6 Ad. & E. 502); and had no reason to expect that it would be paid. But the acceptor's saying so is not sufficient proof (Prideaux v. Collier, 2 Stark. 57). If, at any time between the drawing of the bill and its becoming due the drawee had some effects of the drawer in his hands, though insufficient to pay the amount, or though the drawer has afterwards withdrawn such effects, there will be no excuse for laches in presenting for payment, &c. (Orr v. Maginnis, 7 East, 359). And, if the drawer of a bill, when presented for acceptance, have effects in the drawee's hands, though he is indebted to them in a much larger amount, and they, without his privity, have appropriated his effects in their hands to the satisfaction of their debt, he is discharged by the holder's laches (Blackman v. Doren, 2 Camp. 503). Nor is it essentially necessary that the drawee should have actual value from the drawer in hand; for circumstances may exist which would give a drawer good ground to consider he had a right to expect payment from the drawee (Ch. Bills, 208; Legg v. Thorpe, 16 East, 43; S. C. 3 Camp. 217, 334; Claridge v. Dalton, 4 M. & S. 228; Spooner v. Gardiner, Ry. & M. 84; 2 Esp. 515; 2 Ves. & Bea. 240). It is enough if the drawer had effects on the way to the drawee (Renken v. Hiller, 3 Camp. 217; 16 East, 43). Although no consideration passed between the payee and drawer, it is not an accommodation bill as to the latter, if there was a valuable consideration as between the payee and acceptor (Scott v. Lifford, 1 Camp. 246). It has been held, that where a bill has been drawn for the payee's accommodation, and the drawer had no effects in the drawee's hands, though the payee had, the drawer is not discharged by laches (Walwyn v. St. Quintin, 1 B. & P. 652; S. C. 2 Esp. 515; sed quære, see Ch. Bills, 200; and cases there cited; and see further, as to how a party guaranteeing a bill is discharged by laches, Ch. Bills, 203, 204, &c.).

If the acceptor cannot be found, so that no presentment can be made, this must be specially averred, and cannot be shown on issue joined upon presentment (Leeson v. Piggott, Bayl. B. 324).

When, however, the presentment is merely informal, and the want of strict compliance has occurred through the acceptor's fault, as when he had changed his residence, and the plt. had presented the bill to a servant at the late residence, there the averment of due presentment is supported (Buxton v. Jones, supra). So, where presentment is prevented from circumstances which constitute a legal excuse; thus, where the place of presentment is in the hands of the Queen's enemies (Patience v. Townley, 2 Sm. 224).

The bankruptcy or known insolvency of the drawee will constitute no excuse for not presenting for payment (see Russell v. Langstaffe, 2 Doug. 514; Esdaile v. Sowerby, 11 East, 114; Ex parte Wilson, 11 Ves. 412; 2 B. & P. 279; and see Camidge v. Allenby, 6 B. & C. 373; Beeching v. Gower, Holt, 313; Rohde v. Proctor, 4 B. & C. 523); nor will the circumstance of his being in prison (Haynes v. Birks, 3 B. & P. 601); nor will his death (Poth. Pl. 146). In general, in the case of country bank-notes payable on demand, although the bank has stopped payment, and been shut up, and declared that they will not pay any notes, yet a presentment for payment at the bank must be formally made, unless dispensed with (Bowes v. Howe, 5 Taunt. 30); but it may be dispensed with (see Ch. Bills, Addenda to p. 246, n.). The circumstance of the drawer having notice, before the bill is due, that it will probably not be paid, and promising the holder that he will endeavour to provide effects, and see him again, will not excuse the neglect to *present the bill for payment to the drawee on the day [*524] the bill is due (Prideaux v. Collier, 2 Stark. 57); though it might excuse the notice of dishonour (Ib.; and see Hill v. Heap, Dow & Ry. N. P. 57; Phipson v. Kneller, 4 Camp. 285). The circumstance of the holder having received the bill very near the time of its becoming due, constitutes no excuse for presentment of it at maturity (Anderton v. Beck, 16 East, 248).

Proof of an acknowledgment by the drawer of his liability, or a promise by him to pay, will dispense with the proof of presentment (Croxon v. Worthen, 5 M. & W. 5). See post, 529, as to when such acknowledgment or promise will supersede the necessity of proving a notice of dishonour. The deft. may, by agreement, waive the necessity of a presentment (post, p. 532).

Proof by and to whom Presentment for Payment was made.] The presentment should in general be proved to have been made by the holder of the bill, &c., or some agent competent to give a legal receipt for the money (per Lord Kenyon, Coore v. Callaway, 1 Esp. 115). If the holder, at the time the bill becomes due, is dead, his executor, though he have not proved the will, must present it (Poth. Pl. 146; Molloy, b. 2, c. 10). A presentment by a person in possession of a bill payable to his own order is sufficient (10 Mod. 286).

The presentment must be in general to the person on whom it is drawn. But it is not necessary that the demand should be personal; it is sufficient to make it at the house of the acceptor (Brown v. McDermont, 5 Esp. 265, 266); or place appointed by him for payment (Giles v. Boune, 2 Chit. Rep. 300; Saunderson v. Judge, 2 H. Bl. 509); or at the place at which, by the acceptance, it is made payable (Wilmot v. Williams, 7 Man. & G. 1017; or, in some cases, to his agent; as, if the drawee of a bill go abroad, leaving an agent here, with power to accept bills, and he do so, it must be presented to the agent for payment if the drawee continue absent (Philips v. Astling, 2 Taunt. 206). If a bill be payable at a particular place, it is not necessary to present it at any other (Philpot v. Bryant, 3 C. & P. 244). If a note or bill is payable at a particular house, it should be there presented (Ambrose v. Hopwood, 2 Taunt. 61; Garnett v. Woodcock, supra; Bayl. B. 174). We have seen what acceptance of a bill renders it necessary to present it at a particular place, ante. Although the holder of a bill accepted payable at a banker's is not bound to present it there in order to charge the acceptor, yet a presentment there and refusal will be sufficient to charge the drawer (McIntosh v. Haydon, R. & M. 363). If the particular place be mentioned in the body of a note, a presentment there is necessary, even to charge the maker (Sanderson v. Bowes, Bayl. B. 218; 14 East, 500; Dickinson v. Bowes, 16 East, 110; Exon v. Russell, 4 M. & S. 505; Callaghan v. Aylett, 2 Camp. 551; Prior v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 200; Williams v. Waring, 10 B. & C. 2; see Gibb v. Mather, 8 Bing. 214); and so, if it be printed on the note, by way of memorandum only (Ib.; Dickinson v. Bowes, 16 East, 110). But, where a particular house is mentioned in the note by way of marginal memorandum only, presentment at that house may not be necessary to charge the maker (Bayl. B. 219; Wild v. Rennards, 1 Camp. 425). If a banker's note be made payable in the country or in London, the holder may present it at either; and, if payment be refused at London, it is no defence to show, that, if payment had been demanded in the country, the note would have been paid (Beeching v.

Gower, Holt, 313). Where a bill or check is payable at a banker's, a presentment *to their clerk at the clearing-house is sufficient (Reynolds v. Chettle, 2 Camp. 596; 2 H. Bl. 509). And, if the banker [*525] is himself the holder, it is sufficient for him to see whether he has effects in his hands (Ib.). If the drawee has merely removed from the place in which the bill represents him to reside, it is incumbent on the holder to use every reasonable endeavour to find out whether he hath removed, and to present it at that place (Bateman v. Joseph, 2 Camp. 461; S. C. 12 East, 433; Stra. 1087). Under the general averment, that the bill was duly presented (without stating an acceptance), the plt. may prove a presentment at the place mentioned in the acceptance (Parks v. Edge, 1 C. & M. 429). The handwriting of the acceptor must be proved, if the presentment be at the place mentioned in the acceptance (Sedwick v. Gager, 5 C. & P. 199; see Smith v. Bellamy, 2 Stark. 228). Where the averment in a declaration on a bill drawn on P. P. at No. 6, Budge Row, was that the bill was presented and shown to P. P. for payment, and the evidence was that the holder went to No. 6, but the house was shut up, and no one there: held, that the proof was sufficient, for the words and shown are surplusage, and notice of dishonour may be given on the same day (Hine v. Allely, 4 B. & Ad. 624). If the bill be directed to the acceptor by a certain address and accepted generally, it is enough to present it to an inmate of the house at such address, though the acceptor have in the mean time removed (Burton v. Jones, 1 Man. & G. 83). But, if the drawee have absconded, or never did live at the place of address, that will be a sufficient excuse to the holder for not making further inquiries after him (Anon. 1 Ld. Raym. 743; Bayl. B. 216). If, on a presentment, it appear that the drawee or maker is dead, the holder should inquire after his personal representative, and, if he lives within a reasonable distance, present the bill or note to him (Bayl. B. 286; 521, ante). If there be no representative, payment should be demanded at the house of the deceased (Poth. Pl. 146; Mar. 134). The bill, unless paid, must not be left with the acceptor; and, if it be left, the presentment is not considered as made until the money is called for (Hayward v. England (Bank of), 1 Stra. 550; Russell v. Hankey, 6 T. R. 13).

Proof of Time of Presentment for Payment.] We have already seen at what time a presentment for acceptance should be proved to have been made (ante, p. 470), and much of what is there stated will apply here. The question as to the correct time for presentment is for the opinion of the court, and not of the jury (Bayl. B. 103; Ch. Bills, 262). The time of presentment for payment must depend on the time at which the bill is made payable. When a bill is payable at usance, or at a certain time after date or sight (Bayl. B. 248, n.), or after demand, it is not payable at the precise time mentioned in the bill, three days of grace being allowed; and presentment should, in such cases, be made on the last day of grace (Brown v. Harraden, 4 T. R. 141; Lettley v. Mills, ib. 170; Tassell v. Lewis, 1 Ld. Raym. 743; Bayl. B. 241). Bills due on a Sunday, Christmas-day (Tassell v. Lewis, supra), or on a Good Friday (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 42), or on a fast-day (7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 15, s. 2), are to be presented on the days previous. In bills payable on demand, no days of grace are allowed (Ch. Bills, 263). As to when bills fall due, see Ch. Bills, 263 to 276, a. A presentment before the bills fall due is a nullity (Wiffen v. Roberts, 1 Esp. 262). When a bill is payable on demand, the presentment must be made in a reasonable time after the receipt of it, in order to charge the drawer or indorser (Bayl. B. 229—239); and payment must be made on presentment. What is reasonable time seems not to be defined with any degree of certainty. *It is a question for the court (Ch. B. 270, &c.; post). If given in payment and payable in the place where it is given, it should be presented on the next morning; and if payable elsewhere, it should be sent to be presented by the next post (see Bayl. B. 237; Ward v. Evans, 2 Ld. Raym. 928; Williams v. Smith, 2 B. & Ad. 496; Warr v. Warren, Stra. 415; Rogers v. Langford, 1 Cr. & M. 637; see ante; Ch. Bills, 270, &c.).

Where a check drawn on a country banker, dated 19th March, was not presented until 6th April, and no cause was assigned for the delay, but the drawer had not sustained loss by the non-presentment at an earlier period, the drawer was held liable to be sued on the check (Serle v. Merton, 2 Moo. & R. 401). The plts. sold horses to the deft. on the 10th of March, 1840, and were paid by a check on the deft.'s bankers, which the plts. crossed to their own bankers, and paid in to them on the 11th of the same month. The deft.'s bankers did not use the clearing-house in Lombard Street, and accordingly the plts.' bankers presented that check to the deft.'s bankers on the 12th, whereas, otherwise, they would have presented it at the clearing-house on the 11th. The deft.'s bankers had stopped payment on the 12th. Held, that the plts.' bankers had acted in strict accordance with the rules of mercantile law, but the plts. themselves had been guilty of laches in not paying the check to their bankers on the 10th, if they received it within banking hours (Alexander v. Burchfield, 3 Sco. N. R. 555).

Three days of grace are also allowed on promissory notes (Brown v. Harraden, 4 T. R. 148). A promissory note payable by instalments is assignable within 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, and the maker is entitled to days of grace upon the falling due of each instalment (Oridge v. Sherborne, 11 M. & W. 374).

A bill accepted for honour must be presented to the drawee for payment on the third day of grace (Hoare v. Cazenove, 16 East, 391; see Williams v. Germaine, 7 B. & C. 468). Where the deft. accepted for the honour of the drawer, "if regularly protested and refused when due;" held, in an action against the acceptor for honour, that by the special form of the acceptance a presentment for payment by the drawee in Liverpool, a refusal by him and protest there were necessary; and, therefore, that the bill was properly presented there on the day when the bill became due (Mitchell v. Baring, 10 B. & C. 4). In foreign bills, the time of presentment for payment is regulated by the law of the country where the bill is payable. In Hamburg, the holder is not bound to present the bill until the eleventh day after the time limited for payment, when such day is a post-day, or, if not, then upon the post-day immediately preceding (Bayl. B. 246, n.). But, in Lubeck and Bremen, or other places near Hamburg, which are in daily intercourse with it, the drawer need not present it until the eleventh day, although that be not a post-day, and although the bill be accepted payable in Hamburg (Goldsmith v. Bland, ib.). In France, the bill must be presented the very day it becomes due (Rothschild v. Currie, 1 Q. B. 43).

The holder of a check is bound to present it within reasonable time, and it is a question for a jury on an issue of due presentment whether this rule has been complied with (Seale v. Norton, 2 M. & R. 401); and if he comply with this rule, it must be presented in the course of the day succeeding that on which he received it from the drawer, whether he presents it himself, or through his bankers (Alexander v. Burchfield, 3 Sco. N. R. 555).

As to the time of the day when the presentment should be made, it must be a reasonable time before the expiration of the day the bill falls [527] . due. By the known custom of any place or trade, a bill must be
